Edwards drew 300 people to a University of Toledo rally, three times fewer than a crowd that recently welcomed Kerry to the same venue. Drawing even smaller crowds in Dayton, Ohio, and Cleveland later yesterday, Edwards seemed listless and indifferent, stumbling over signature lines in his stump speech.

Edwards pledged to stay in the race "until I'm nominated," but declined to predict victory in Ohio, virtually a must-win state for him, as he acknowledged Kerry's dominance.

"There's no question that national momentum has an impact on those races," Edwards said.

He held out hope for an election surprise, noting that he defied polls by finishing just 6 percentage points behind Kerry in New Hampshire and Wisconsin. But he also had more time to court those voters than he did for today's races.

Edwards' only victory came in his birth state of South Carolina, four weeks and 11 defeats ago.

He ended his day with a rock-concert rally in Macon, Ga., telling his audience: "This is such an important night. Tomorrow is an important day. And we're going to change America together, you and I."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantanatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Sernoh
CAMPUS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
FEATURES EDITOR SJ Port
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salniker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lugaric
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Riggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ASSISTANT PRODUCTION Lisa Lynch
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Page Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lorley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC YEAR. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED AND OPERATED. ADVERTISING REVENUE PROVIDES THE PAPER'S MAJOR SOURCE OF INCOME. THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LIBRARIAN IN 1890. THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED CONTINUOUSLY SINCE THEN, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED MORE THAN 600 NATIONAL AWARDS. OFFICE HOURS ARE 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

New constitution in Iraq delivers system of checks and balances

By Jim Krane
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Under the interim constitution approved yesterday, Iraq will be a federalist state with two official languages, a prime minister who runs the country's daily affairs and a president who can launch a war — but only with the approval of parliament.

"No one has absolute power," said Entifadh Qanbar, spokesman for Governing Council member Ahmad Chalabi. "After what we've been through, we're afraid of that."

Iraq's U.S.-picked Governing Council spent two months wrestling with the interim constitution, which will become law of the land for a year or more, until an elected national assembly writes a replacement.

"For the next 100 years this day will be mentioned as one of the most important in Iraq's history," said council member Samir Shaker Mahmoud. "This will be remembered in the annals of history as a turning point in relations between the state and citizens in this country and in the region."

The precedent-setting constitution, which is to be signed by top American administrator L. Paul Bremer and made public tomorrow, has been described as one of the most liberal in the region. Some aspects, such as the goal of a parliament with women as 25 percent of its members, were declared even more progressive than those in the United States.

The charter has a 13-article bill of rights, including protections for free speech, religious expression, assembly and due process. It enshrines Islam as the state religion, but not the sole basis for law. The Kurdish language becomes an official language alongside Arabic.

The document envisions Iraq as a federalist state along the lines of Canada, Brazil and India, with considerable authority handed to individual regions.

Iraq will be governed by a directly elected national assembly whose members then choose a president, a prime minister and a pair of deputy presidents, Qanbar said.

The president will make decisions on the advice of two vice presidents, and will share power with a prime minister and Cabinet, Qanbar said.

The prime minister will be vested with executive power, but not over the armed forces, which will be commanded by the president. The president will also wield a veto over the national assembly's resolutions, Qanbar said.

Nationwide elections to select an Iraqi national assembly are supposed to take place before Feb. 1, 2005. Iraqis are expected to vote on a permanent constitution drawn up by the national assembly.

"I am sure that some principals included in this law will also be in the permanent constitution," Council member Adnan Pachachi said.

The charter does not say what kind of government will run the country after June 30, when the U.S.-led coalition hands over power. Pachachi said the form of the new administration will be included in an annex to the interim constitution once agreement is reached.

KARIM KADIM/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Five members of the Iraqi Governing Council address the media following a marathon session to finish the new Iraqi interim constitution in Baghdad, Iraq, yesterday.

Fight leads to two arrests

Two University of Massachusetts students were arrested Sunday morning after a fight broke out near the edge of campus, with officers from both the Amherst Police Department and UMass Police responding.

Joshua Hulme, 21, of 14 Marilyn Rd., Situate, was arrested on charges of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and disorderly conduct, UMass spokesperson Patrick Callahan said. His brother, Jason Hulme, 21, 14 Marilyn Rd., Situate, was arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct.

UMPD was responsible for both arrests.

Joshua Hulme's charge of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon was related to his use of a shoed foot in the fight, Callahan said.

Police told Callahan that the disturbance involved several fights occurring at the same time. A statement from the first UMPD officer to arrive on the scene suggested that two white males were kicking another white male, Callahan said.

According to Callahan, a spokesman for UMPD said the Hulme brothers had allegedly gone to a party in the Sunset Avenue area, where they were not welcome. When they left, they created a disturbance that moved with them, police told Callahan. At Patterson Hall, the incident became larger, Callahan said.

UMPD officers used pepper spray to disperse the crowd, he said.

According to information from APD, four APD officers gave assistance while dispersing the fight. The officers cleared the scene without incident, the department said.

UMPD declined to comment directly on the incident.

— Morris Singer

Chancellor responds to new fee

LOMBARDI from page 1

ly bring increased demand to the campus's problem areas.

"The number of students we're talking about adding will not likely make a major transformation of the space."

The University is considering building dormitory space for an additional 1,500 beds, Lombardi said, with the construction of the facilities set to start next year.

Lombardi's plan is to move students into the new space once it is completed, and then renovate the old dormitories. After this, the University can utilize the additional space, he said.

Lombardi also spoke about his plans for recovering from a loss of faculty due to acceptance of early retirement packages. About 10 percent of the faculty was lost from acceptance of these packages, he said, and new faculty is being recruited to fill in the gaps.

"It'll take us three years ... before [this process] completes," he said. "The good news is we lose very few faculty [members] to competitive offers from other places."

Students protest new $65 international fee said Dahlstrom-Hakki.

FEE from page 1

GEO also opposes the fee on a larger level as opposition to the federal government's Patriot Act. It hopes campuses will work together up the chain of command to complain to the federal government.

"It's chipping away at it [the Patriot Act]," Dahlstrom Hakki said. "We're not willing to pay for keeping ourselves under surveillance."

GEO wants UMass to pass a resolution opposing the fee, Dahlstrom-Hakki said. Currently, GEO has over 200 graduate students who have promised to not pay the fee when billed. In solidarity, Dahlstrom-Hakki says some undergraduate international students have said that they will not pay the $65 fee to show solidarity with their graduate peers.

"We're trying to put some pressure on the University by taking a direct action approach," Dahlstrom-Hakki said. "The University really has two options. They can kick us all out ... they don't get the $65. There's not much they can do."

9-11 TIES

SEVIS is directly connected to the Department of Homeland Security, enabling the government to easily and quickly access visa information on an international student. Prior to the introduction to SEVIS, Hugus said, the information was not as easily accessible.

SEVIS, according to Hugus, collects information the Immigration and Naturalization Services gathered before SEVIS was established. What was once was on paper "in big boxes in some warehouse in Tennessee" is now in a computer database, but the information international students give is the same, he said.

UMass Amherst international

- 1490 international students on campus
- 1202 of them are graduate students
- about 1,000 are members of GEO
- 453 more international visitors teach or perform research

The difference, from Hugus's perspective, is in accessibility — the student's information is now more available to the government, and easy to monitor. The information input to SEVIS is what international students give to the IPO: their F-1 student visas and I-20, their "Certificate of eligibility for non-immigrant F-1 student status" form.

The federal government became concerned with monitoring international students in the mid-'90s, Hugus said. In 1997, there was legislation to move SEVIS into action. It stalled, however, in the legislature until the events of Sept. 11 and the ratification of the Patriot Act, he said.

The inclusion of SEVIS into the Patriot Act was assisted by reports that terrorist pilots who flew planes into the World Trade Center Towers had attained their pilot's licenses while in the United States on M-1 student visas sponsored by a Florida flight school, Hugus said.

All educational institutions with international students enrolled are responsible for participating in SEVIS, this includes private secondary or elementary schools as well as higher educational facilities. At first, the IPO staff was flooded with concern about the implementation of SEVIS, as well as what it would mean to international students' status in the University. Hugus said at first IPO was worried that "with a simple electronic glitch a student could be quickly deported." However, Hugus is unaware of any technical errors with the program causing student deportations anywhere in the United States, and says no UMass international student's visa has been challenged due to SEVIS.

"We've had much fewer problems than we anticipated at first," said Hugus.

International universities and governments have a long history of monitoring American students studying abroad in the same way that the American government today monitors international students in the United States, Hugus said.

"Whether it's cause or effect, I don't know," he said. " ... In Italy, for example, in many places students pay their visas directly to the police," Hugus said.

While studying in France in 1957, Hugus recalls he was required to travel to a World War II army barracks used by police to have his passport stamped every few months. In the 1970s in Denmark and Germany, if you stayed in a hotel, you were required to complete a form for the police "to let the police know you were there."

A TOUCH CHOICE TO MAKE

Before this semester, IPO had not charged international students any fees. American students going abroad were charged fees to apply abroad to pay for the program to process their applications, visas, and the overheads the international university the student was attending charged to IPO, Hugus said.

The fees charged to American students leaving to study abroad from 1969 to the present built a revenue surplus for the IPO. However, the surplus declined, Hugus said, until it ceased to exist sometime in the last five years.

After Lombardi cut IPO funds from $600,000 to $120,000, Hugus says the program knew it could no longer absorb the cost of bringing in international students without charging them, especially with the additional cost of complying with SEVIS.

The program's "sizable surplus" began to dwindle rapidly due to a drop in the dollar's value, perpetually increasing costs, and the program's income not keeping pace with its expenditures, Hugus said.

" ... There was a perception of money up here — and there was. There was more than enough with the state's funding and the program's surplus accumulated over the years when [former International Programs Director Barbara] Burn was director," Hugus said.

By the time Hugus stepped into office, he said there were hints from some at the program that things were heading downward. The department began to worry about finances, and finally in July of 2003, Hugus said Lombardi — still in the mindset that the program had money or could fund itself through charging involved student fees — chose to cut 80 percent of the program's funding from the University General Operating budget given by the state as the University was slashed 18 percent overall.

Between 2002 to 2004, Hugus said the IPO's budget has dropped from $600,000 plus the salaries of eight full-time senior staff members, to $120,000. That $120,000, according to Hugus, is what the department was left with to pay 12 full-time and eight-part time salaries.

After Hugus and his two bookkeepers analyzed the program's budget in July of 2003, he said they found that the changes would force the department to charge international students.

" ... Nobody in the office really liked the ideas of the fee," Hugus said. "We want to have international students on campus. Looking at the larger picture of what is going on in the world today, we need to welcome international students to campus."

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

Ibrahim Dahlstrom-Hakki, secretary/treasurer of GEO.

IPO made an off-cycle request immediately in July for the $65 fee to be implemented following the Chancellor's budget cuts, Hugus said. Lombardi and Interim University President Jack Wilson eventually approved it, and it was announced in December. Since the fee was not a uniform campus-wide fee, it did not have to be approved additionally by the Board of Trustees, Hugus said.

In addition to all other money woes, IPO also learned SEVIS requires a database program that allows you to input information in batches. Hugus said — a program the office found out through research costs an additional $30,000. OIT heard about the IPO's $30,000 dilemma and offered help, saying the University's new Peoplesoft system has a batch program, Pass, which SEVIS can operate under.

"We've really appreciated their help," Hugus said. "With their technical support the instillation [of SEVIS] has gone much more smoothly. We exceeded our goals. We were supposed to have everyone into SEVIS by August 2003, but we did it with a month to spare."

Hugus believes that a larger concern for international students is on the horizon. The federal government has in the works a new $100 fee that all international students will be required to pay in order to apply for a visa, he said. As Hugus understands the legislation, if the student applying for a visa does not receive the visa the fee is refunded, but if the visa is approved the money is not returned.

"We're not a very inviting country anymore — we're upset about it too," Hugus said. "IPO has always prided ourselves on being an advocate of international students."

win a trip to europe! contiki.com/campus
>save $150 to europe

>looking for a good time?
>8 day berlin/prague getaway explore the czech republic and germany!
>10 day london/paris getaway experience the best of england and france!
>13 day simply italy
florence, venice, rome, pisa and more!
>14 day european discovery explore eight european countries!
must new tour "save $150" at time of booking. visit or call new bookings for contiki europe "fly-in tours" 10 days or longer. tour must start on/before and start on/after 14 day march 31, 2004 by travel from april 1, 2004 to october 31, 2004. flights must be confirmed on select airlines in select class of service from all u.s. gateways to select european gateways. x-taxes are non-refundable and non-changeable. offer subject to availability other restrictions apply.
contiki VACATIONS for 18-35 year olds
for a free brochure or to book see your travel agent call 1-888-CONTIKI visit www.contiki.com
» europe » australia » new zealand » america

ELEANOR BATEMAN
SCHOLAR IN RESIDENCE
WINTER 2004
R. Perry Harris, III '61
Founder and President of Sterling Resort Group
Public Lecture
Entrepreneurship...
One man's story of success and failure on a profitable business journey.
Wednesday, March 3
Memorial Hall - 4:30 – 5:30 p.m.
Reception to follow - Memorial Hall
Free to Public
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Organized by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Tour Operator
JAMAICA
SPRING BREAK 2004
LAST MINUTE DISCOUNTS!
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

policelog

compiled by tom cordle

Student arrested for assault and battery of police officer

FridayFebruary20

10:05 a.m. UMPD executed an arrest warrant in John Adams Hall. Jacob Miller, 20, of 282 Puritan Rd., Swampscott, Mass., was arrested for receiving stolen property that valued over $250.

8:14 p.m. Andrew Pepyne, 18, of 25 Kelleher Drive, South Deerfield, Mass., and Mitchell Parker, 19, of 151 Wilder Hill Rd., Shelbourne Falls, Mass., were arrested in Lot 33 following a reported liquor law violation. Both were charged with being minors in possession of alcohol.

8:29 p.m. Kevin O'Grady, 19, of 7 Partridge Circle, Townsend, Mass., and Nicholas Fusco, 19, of 6 St. James Place, West Townsend, Mass., were arrested in Lot 33 following a reported liquor law violation. Both charged with being minors in possession of alcohol.

SaturdayFebruary21

12:27 p.m. Following a liquor law violation, Gregory Forfa, 19, of 500 Bakerswill Rd., Dartmouth, Mass., was arrested at Van Meter Hall. He was charged with assault and battery of a police officer and being a minor in possession of alcohol.

ThursdayFebruary26

8:58 p.m. Following a report of a domestic disturbance in Melville Hall, UMPD arrested Jonathan Muollo, 23, of 26 Mocking Hill Rd., Widham, N.H. He was charged with violating a restraining order.

FridayFebruary27

12:31 p.m. UMPD arrested Frederick Plett, 25, of 41 S. Walnut St., Apt. 2, Quincy, Mass., following a traffic stop. He was charged with operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license, operating with a license plate violation, operating an uninsured vehicle and receiving stolen property valued under $250.

9:17 p.m. UMPD responded to a report of an injured animal at French Hall on Stockbridge Road. A rabid or injured rabbit was found and Emergency Health Services was notified.

9:24 p.m. Brian Roussel, 18, of 194 Grove St., Somerset, Mass., was arrested for being a minor in possession of alcohol as a subsequent offense. He was in Lot 33.

SaturdayFebruary28

12:39 a.m. Following a traffic stop, UMPD arrested Aaron Morse, 27, of 220 Plumtree Rd., Sunderland, Mass. He was charged with a light violation and operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license.

9:18 p.m. Following a liquor law violation, Matthew Eckel, 19, of 145 Brighton St., Belmont, Mass., was arrested near Cance Hall. He was charged with being a minor in possession of alcohol.

SundayFebruary29

2:03 a.m. Following an earlier reported assault and battery, two people were arrested in Patterson Hall. Joshua Holme, 21, of 14 Marylln Rd., Scituate, Mass., was charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and disorderly conduct. Jason Holme, 21, of 14 Marylln Rd., Scituate, Mass., was charged with disorderly conduct.

4:46 p.m. Following a traffic accident on Kennedy road, UMPD arrested Chang Liu, 22, of 38 Greenleaves Drive, Hadley, Mass. He was charged with operating a vehicle with a suspended license and operating a vehicle with a suspended registration.

Haitian rebels greeted in capital

By Paisley Dodds
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Thousands of people cheering the ouster of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide greeted a rebel convoy in the capital yesterday with shouts of "Liberty!" as U.S. Marines and French troops secured key sites in the capital.

Dozens of insurgents packing an eclectic array of weapons dating to World War II swaggered around a posh hotel, where rebel leader Guy Philippe met with members of the political coalition that opposed Aristide. He was joined by rebel commander Louis-Jodel Chamblain, who is a former army death squad leader and a convicted assassin.

With U.S. military forces on the ground and more on the way, U.S. critics questioned whether Aristide resigned of his own accord Sunday.

After being flown aboard a contracted U.S.-government plane to the impoverished Central African Republic, Aristide yesterday reportedly called members of the U.S. Congress and an African-American activist, Randall Robinson, and told them he had been kidnapped by U.S. troops.

U.S. officials called the allegation "nonsense" and "absurd." And Charles Wenezoui, minister of foreign affairs for the Central African Republic, denied that Aristide was in any way a prisoner.

Philippe said he planned to make preparations for the new president, former Supreme Court Chief Justice Boniface Alexandre, to assume office, as called for in the constitution.

"We're just going to make sure the palace is clean for the president to come ... that there is no threat there," he said as his convoy of 70 rebels approached the capital. However, Haiti's constitution also calls for parliament to approve Alexandre as leader, and lawmakers' terms expired early this year.

In the capital, there were reports of reprisal killings of militant Aristide supporters accused of terrorizing people. An Associated Press reporter saw four bodies at Carrefour, on the outskirts of the capital, three of them with hands tied behind their backs and shot in the head execution-style.

The fourth body was that of a man allegedly shot by police, said witness Charlie LaPlanche. "He ran out of the (police) pickup truck and then it became a manhunt. He went into a house. They found him. And then they took him out and executed him," he said.

Secretary of State Colin Powell said U.S. forces "will have a lead role" initially in restoring order to Haiti following the three-week rebellion that swept Aristide from power. The U.N. Security Council late Sunday approved the deployment of a multinational force to Haiti.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld estimated that between 1,500 and 2,000 U.S. troops would go to Haiti for a "relatively short period." They would participate in an interim force, which could include as many as 5,000 troops from several countries that would stay until replaced by a U.N. peacekeeping force.

There were no clashes between the rebel force and the U.S. and French troops, who were establishing security at diplomatic missions and other sites. Philippe earlier said he welcomed the peacekeepers.

Powell said he did not want certain rebel leaders to take any role in a new government. Philippe was an officer in the army when it repressed dissident politicians.

"Some of these individuals we would not want to see re-enter civil society in Haiti because of their past records, and this is something we will have to work through," Powell said.

Amnesty International called for international peacekeepers to arrest Chamblain and Jean Pierre Baptiste, also a rebel, who escaped from jail after being convicted in the 1994 massacre of 15 Aristide supporters.

As Aristide spent his first day in exile, his home in the Port-au-Prince suburb of Tabarre was looted and trashed. Pictures, documents and a grand piano were dragged out onto the courtyard of the three-story villa, then abandoned.

Family and school pictures lay among the disorder. Broken plates littered the area by the pool. Books strewn about included several written by Aristide and one about Marcus Garvey, a black nationalist leader from Jamaica.

In the Haitian capital, thousands converged on the plaza outside the National Palace, shouting "Liberty!" and "Aristide is gone!" when the rebel convoy arrived from the western town of Gonaives, where the rebellion erupted on Feb. 5.

Not everyone was happy to see the rebels in the capital. Some residents watched indifferently, their arms folded, as their convoy passed. At one point, the convoy stopped and rebels jumped out, sweeping their weapons from side to side, then moved on.

Philippe, the rebel leader, went into police headquarters at the plaza, and his men did not approach a half-dozen armed U.S. Marines on the grounds of the palace.

Among those at the hotel meeting with the rebel leader was Evans Paul, a former mayor of Port-au-Prince and a top opposition figure. Paul said Philippe "has played an important role."

Industrialist Charles Henry Baker, an opposition leader, said Philippe offered his troops to help maintain order amid reports of continued looting in the capital. Baker said his group welcomed the offer.

One young rebel told a reporter he shot people.

"I shot some looters yesterday. They have to be shot," the rebel who goes by the nom-de-guerre "Faustin," said as he stood outside the meeting in a black flak vest, cradling an M-4 assault rifle.

Col. David Berger, head of the U.S. Marine contingent, said 150 Marines had arrived overnight from 8th Battalion, based in Camp Lejeune, N.C., to "secure key sites in the capital."

"People who interfere with that mission, we will handle with appropriate force," Berger told AP.

At the airport, U.S. and French military commanders huddled over a map of Port-au-Prince as a French military attache pointed out locations where armed pro-Aristide militants have been known to gather.

U.S. Marines set up a security perimeter at the airport, kneeling in the grass as about 80 French Marines arrived in C-160 transport planes. The French Marines' supplies included crates of bottled Evian water.

An AP reporter traveled with the rebels, including Philippe, when their convoy set out before dawn from Gonaives. In St. Marc, a town which had been contested during the uprising, the convoy passed three charred bodies on the road.

AP reporters Mark Stevenson and Joseph B. Frazier in Port-au-Prince, and Joseph Benamsse in Bangui, Central African Republic, contributed to this report.

KIM JAE-HWAN/AFP/GETTY IMAGES

Opponents of former President Jean-Bertrand Aristide celebrate in front of the presidential palace in Port-au-Prince, Haiti, yesterday.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 2, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

PETA protest crosses nudity boundary

The right to protest is an important part of America. Sometimes the best way to get a voice heard is to strongly object to an issue by holding demonstrations. As the "land of the free," Americans have a right to contest topics of concern.

As protesters wore next to nothing in yesterday's cool temperatures, police arrested six who staged a nearly naked pillow fight outside Harvard University in Cambridge to promote animal rights. The members, who were arrested on criminal misdemeanor charges, were part of the group People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals.

The protest was not meant as a criticism of Harvard. Instead, the demonstration came hours before PETA Vice President Dan Mathews was set to address Harvard professor Brian Palmer's popular "Personal Choice and Global Transformation" class.

PETA has done a lot of great work in the past. The group believes that animals deserve to live a free life without suffering and without facing death — even if they are useful to humans.

In this case, however, the group representing PETA seems to have gone too far. Protests are a fine way of stimulating discussion and debate and shedding light on important topics, such as this one. But protests must be carefully done.

The protest brought out a large crowd, including several blue-collar workers, who watched the event with broad smiles. They must not become three-ring circuses for onlookers. While events like this create headlines and certainly fulfill their mission as publicity events, they should not walk the line of shamelessly tacky.

The PETA group has been increasing their use of publicity stunts and their efforts can be described as noble. Supporters, who include former "Baywatch" star Pamela Anderson, have also increased the visibility of PETA.

In the future, the PETA group must be careful about staging protests and the types of headline-grabbing tactics it employees. Other organizations fighting for a positive cause, should also exercise caution when staging these types of demonstrations.

Failure to make a clear and sophisticated point can end up backfiring. Organizations may unwillingly invite mockery and the issue a group is backing, may go unnoticed. Even worse, the organization may end up alienating people who were formerly participants of a certain cause.

Finally, protests can end up making impressions on young children. Stripping down to practically nothing will only confuse children and will do little to nothing to convince them of joining the crusade of a good cause in the future.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The reality of the black pearl

Yousef Munayyer

Haiti, a nation about the size of Maryland located in the Caribbean, has both one of the most interesting and at the same time, ugliest histories of any other nation in the western hemisphere. Today, as you read on, another chapter of that history is being written with the blood of many. And the U.S. reaction has been extremely cautious.

We don't have a clear policy towards the current crisis, just as we didn't have a clear policy towards Charles Taylor in Liberia, ironically a nation founded by freed slaves, when that crisis erupted last summer. We don't have any particular interests in common with their population. They do not have any natural resources for us to exploit. Therefore, policy makers only act when the sabers rattle too loudly. The news out of Haiti is getting too loud and our position is not clear. It's time for an American reaction.

The United States has been a major role player in the history of Haiti though few here realize that. Haiti unfortunately is one of the most ignored nations in the western hemisphere.

Haiti is absolutely fascinating. Its culture is very rich and its past is romantic. On a tiny island we see a microcosm of all the good and bad that can result from political struggles. For centuries Haiti had been different and in many ways still is. When native populations were killed off by invading conquerors, the island was re-populated with slaves from Africa to keep production at sufficient levels for demanding Europeans. The infusion of African culture mixed with the many centuries of interaction with French and Spanish colonizers resulted in the creation of one of the richest cultures conceivable. The small nation became the first independent black republic in 1804 when It declared its independence from France. It was to become the idol of black populations everywhere who aspired for freedom from colonization. Haiti was the first to abolish slavery. Here in the United States the dark history of slavery would continue to be written for 60 more years and the effects of that system linger on till today.

The reality is we have a problem accepting immigrants in this country and we pick and shoose who we want.

Today, more than any other place in the western hemisphere, Haiti needs help. The president of the nation has relinquished power, for the second time now. Rebels are asserting that his election in 2000 was tampered with, and this is becoming more evident with every new report out of Haiti. Many of these rebels have blood stained hands. Some of the leaders of these groups were responsible for coups that overthrew the government several times after the end of the Duvalier rule in 1986.

The west has not been fair to Haiti and this must change. If there is one word to describe Haiti's history with western powers, it would be exploitation. From being the richest colony in the world Haiti has become one of the poorest nations on earth. President Jean-Bertrand Aristede disbanded the military and was only being kept in power by a police force in Port-au-Prince. Everyone but the Haitian people has profited from Haiti. For the past century, the nation has experienced American military occupation and one of the most brutal dictatorial regimes in the western hemisphere. Not to mention harsh economic circumstances that were both due to internal corruption and external influences. Historians estimate that up to 60,000 Haitians lost their lives to the Duvalier regimes and countless others have been injured.

Perhaps the pinnacle of hypocrisy in American foreign policy is the standards used to determine political asylum. Every years Cubans who make it to American shores receive political asylum because they are coming from communist Cuba. As politically repressive as Castro's regime might be, no one will be able to convince me that Cubans deserve political asylum more than Haitians. Anyone who has studied recent Haitian history will see that the Duvalier regimes, which went about enforcing policy by using machete-wielding secret police, will realize that quality of life in Haiti is much worse than in Cuba. Sure, political freedoms in Cuba are repressed but Haiti has experienced governments that make Castro look like a benevolent saint.

Sure, Cuba is communist, and here we don't like communists, but Haitians have it much worse since almost 80 percent live in abject poverty.

So what's the reality?

The reality is we have a problem accepting immigrants in this country and we pick and choose who we want. The reality is Haitians deserve to be welcomed. The reality is over 90 percent of Haitians are black, and this has played a major role in its history. The reality is racism and racist policies are still evident here In the United States, and it continues to be the plague that Haiti has overcome and we, in the "developed" world, have yet to cure.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

Sometimes war is the only proper solution

Zach A. Oelschlegel

I supported the war.

In fact, I still do support the war, but this really isn't why I'm writing. A lot of my friends, professors, and co-workers have expressed their discontent at our troops being stationed in Iraq, and they all have their reasons. They're usually arguments I disagree with, but they can be construed as valid. The favorites of today are along the lines of "Bush lied!," something I dispute but nevertheless, understand the principle.

There is one statement, however, which I have read on bumper stickers, seen across campus, and cringe every time I hear someone say it. It's when people chalk up the events in Iraq as proof that "war is never the answer."

Whether you like what we are doing in Iraq or not, that phrase still stands as one of the more unintelligent things I have heard. I always snicker to myself when I pass the Dennis Kucinich "abolish war" knuckleheads by the escalators in the Campus Center. I've had urges to converse with them on the issue of war not ever being the answer, but have passed on the chance knowing that debating the stupidity of pacifism is a fairly futile endeavor.

It's a great idea, of course. We all wish for a world where peaceful solutions are the norm, diplomacy and compromise are always the way to solve problems, and guns, bazookas, and nukes never need to be used.

Unfortunately, we have to step into reality sometime. People are always prone to conflict, even those who love each other (consider the divorce rate), and when you couple that with countries antagonizing each other with rhetoric, imposing their ideology (both sides of the Cold War), or outrageous trade tariffs, and disaster will find a way into the world somehow.

Like it or not, war sometimes has to be an answer. Nations must have a way to defend themselves, or attack others when necessary. The fundamental fault with pacifism isn't its ideology, but the fact that not everyone is a pacifist.

It's a prisoner's dilemma. If everyone were to throw away all of their guns, missiles, and bombers, a rebel country could easily take over a larger and previously more powerful country by keeping a few rifles here and there. In the ideal world, no one would want to use guns, but unfortunately, we don't live in that world. Human beings are selfish, petty and stupid, and to think it could happen otherwise is to deny everything we have read about humans throughout history. Ensuring that everyone stays disarmed would have to mean that someone would have to be armed, an extremely flawed idea in itself.

Woodrow Wilson thought it could work. He saw his Fourteen Points and the League of Nations as the answer to solving all of the world's problems, but he failed to recognize an inability to back up diplomacy rendered the League as kaput. We see the same problems today with the United Nations, a better solution and set up more properly than its predecessor. Yet it is still lacking the force to back up its will, and is therefore typically useless when the time comes to enforce "international law."

What is hilarious is that many argue that pure diplomacy will solve many of the world's problems, and they actually point to Qaddafi in Libya as Wilsonian-style diplomacy working. They fail to realize or ignore Bush declaring war in Iraq as the reason for Qaddafi's surrender of his weapons programs. In reality, it is proof that America's new tougher mentality is truly the reason as to why a country would willingly disarm its weapons program.

What happens if someone is afraid to back himself up with force? He gets taken over, or he gets attacked, and he becomes dominated by the aggressor. The world we live in is one tailor-made for pistol-packing cowboys, and not peace-loving hippies.

As an example, I will choose a war that the vast majority of Americans wanted, the one in Afghanistan. Where would we be in regard to the Taliban if the use of force was never an option? Do some people really think that the terrorist camps would still be defunct had there not been a president in office not afraid to use force? Does anything you bring to the negotiation table matter when there's no substance behind it? History and our own personal experience will tell us that humans are looking out for number one, and aren't willing to "take one for the team" for some greater common good.

The reason we don't live in complete anarchy is the assurance of destruction on one side (like in Afghanistan), or what many call mutually assured destruction. The only thing that keeps the people in my building from breaking into my room and stealing my TV set is that they know there might be some retribution involved on my part, whether that be from the police or from my fists. This assurance is the reason as to why we didn't have any nukes sent in our direction during the Cuban Missile Crisis, and it's why we were willing to obliterate two Japanese cities, knowing that no form of retribution would be possible (it's also the reason why Hitler didn't try to use poison gas on the Allies during the war).

So what happens if someone doesn't protect himself militarily? What happens if someone is afraid to back himself up with the use of force? He gets taken over, or he gets attacked, and he becomes dominated by the aggressor. The world we live in is one tailor-made for pistol-packing cowboys, and not peace-loving hippies. You can agree or disagree with what we're doing in Iraq, as there might be some logic behind either argument. But please, don't ever try and tell me or anyone else that war is never the answer. You just end up sounding silly.

Zach A. Oelschlegel is a Collegian columnist.

Religion and politics: the contradiction

Ben Duffy

Leave it to Massachusetts. No other state in the union would be so "progressive" as to say that the joining of a man and a man, or a woman and woman, is as legitimate as the joining of man and woman.

Debate ensued. The overwhelming sentiment on this campus is that religious views have no place in politics because of a certain "separation of church and state" that leaves no room for people who want to push their religious beliefs on others. Ergo, any argument against gay marriage that's rooted in religion should be immediately thrown out as illegitimate.

Right. Well let's examine that for a second, within the context of American history. I can think of two particularly "progressive" movements in our history that were both deeply rooted in Christianity — the civil rights movement of the 1950's and 1960's, and the movement to abolish slavery. In case you've forgotten, both movements quoted the Bible at length and both movements were largely spearheaded by ministers and various other religious people. Segregation was attacked as inhumane and incompatible with the teachings of Jesus Christ, who came for all people, regardless of color. The same was applied to the concept of one man owning another.

The truth is that most of our laws are founded in a fairly generic Judeo-Christian ethic. What exactly makes murder immoral, if not because the Bible says so? How about polygamy?

Furthermore, most of the people, who claim that condemnation of gay marriage is an "imposition" of one person's morals upon another are really hiding behind a patently false interpretation of the First Amendment. What does the First Amendment have to say about religion?

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

The "Congress" referred to is the Congress of the United States, and should not be read as "any body of government existing within the United States," as it is popularly misinterpreted today. In no way does it prohibit individual citizens, or even public figures, from voting their consciences. It's a good thing we don't either, or we might still be a divided nation —

Once again, we find that hypocritical liberals change their policies like they change their underwear: when it's convenient.

half slave, and half free.

Once again, we find that hypocritical liberals change their policies like they change their underwear: when it's convenient. They'll get behind a moral crusade to rid the world of an evil of their choosing, and when it's convenient, they say that religion has no place in the public forum.

It's no surprise, of course, that the only politicians in this country who can talk about religion without being crucified by the liberal elite are Democrats. Some may forget, but we've had an ordained minister in the White House in recent history. His name is Jimmy Carter. It's a good thing that Jimmy was on the "right side" of all the important issues, and that he was a registered member of the "right" party, or else he would have surely been dead in the water. Just imagine for a moment, a conservative Republican running for office who was also a man of the cloth. The liberals would have open season on the guy. They'd accuse him of trying to establish a theocracy.

Howard Dean may be old news, but it wasn't too long ago when he seemed to be the man to beat in the Democratic primaries. His disparaging remarks about Southern voters who would probably vote according to "God, guns, and gays" lost him a lot of support in the South. Quite suddenly, Howie found Jesus. I'm deeply suspicious that Dean's religion wasn't a religion at all, but rather a "Southern strategy." In fact, he went as far as to say that his views on gay marriage were actually because of his Christian beliefs, not de-spite them.

Sounds a bit like Dean wants to "impose" his religious beliefs on the public. The Left was silent on that one, in case you were wondering. Apparently they didn't see the blinding contradiction, but I did. So long as he was a liberal, Dr. Dean wouldn't have to hide his candle under a bushel, as conservatives are expected to do.

No, I don't believe that any American has the right to transform another American's conscience. I'm the first one to cry out whenever I feel the foul breath of the Thought Police breathing down my neck, as is often the case on this campus. I'm fearful that we're becoming a nation increasingly concerned with "thought crime," which is in fact not a crime at all. Even though you have the right to think anything you want to think, you do not have the right to do anything you want to do. Society has the right to hold individuals to moral standards, even those grounded in religion. If you don't like it, move to France.

Ben Duffy is a UMass student.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 2, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Dread' stirs up a few laughs ...

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"Club Dread," the third film from the collegiate-bred, five-man comedy troupe known as the Broken Lizards, lies in the middle ground somewhere between "Scream" and "Scary Movie."

That's not a good thing. A slasher movie spoof-cum-slasher movie homage, the film — which has been alternately titled "Broken Lizard's Club Dread" — Is a fitfully amusing bit of winking piffle, but it lacks both the ginsu-edged intelligence of Wes Craven's self-aware, mad killer nightmare and the free-wheeling insanity of the Wayans brothers' parody.

COURTESY LACEY TERRELL/FOX

From left) Steve Lemme, Jay Chandrasekhar, Paul Soter, Kevin Heffernan and Brittany Daniel.

'Club Dread'
Directed by Jay Chandrasekhar
Starring Kevin Heffernan Bill Paxton
Fox Searchlight
Rated R
103 mins.
Grade C

What it really lacks, however, is the sophisticated stupidity of "Super Troopers," the last film to have been directed by, written by and starring the Lizard team. That film wasn't the most promising of concepts — a revisit to the hoary old world of "Police Academy" — but the group's blend of raucous, ribald frat guy humor and sharp absurdist wit buoyed the film.

There's no such wit evident in "Club Dread." The Broken Lizard's frat boy shenanigans lack the glee, sophistication and memorable jokes of "Super Troopers." It's another hazy, fitfully amusing comedy that disappears behind the curtain of its own innocuousness.

There are some good jokes here, but to get to the them the Lizard's ask us to wade through a lot of the cut-rate slasher horror that should have been retired with the demise of the "Urban Legend" franchise. "Club Dread" is too gory and violent to qualify as a spoof; there are the decapitations, machete slicings and vivisections that are par for this course. Yet the movie is too goofy to take seriously as a thriller. There's a sense that the movie wants to be another "An American Werewolf in Paris" or "Tremors," but the balance between horror and comedy is off. This Is more like another "Student Bodies" or "Dr. Giggles."

"Club Dread" is a slipshod riff on "I Still Know What

See DREAD on page 6

... while 'Eurotrip' takes a wrong turn

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

The DNA strands that run through the slapdash sex comedy "Eurotrip" are less than subtle — this is a movie that could have been called "National Lampoon's American Pte on a European Vacation."

COURTESY ZUBNER VAVRAK/DREAMWORKS

Travis Wester, Scott Mechlowicz and Jacob Pitts star in "Eurotrip."

'Eurotrip'
Directed by Jeff Schaeffer
Starring Scott Mechlowicz Michelle Trachtenberg
Dreamworks
Rated R
93 mins
Grade B-

But that's not necessarily a bad thing. Crude but not gross, affable rather than offensive, this genial, runty little teen smut-com is better than anyone has any reason to expect it to be.

Comic inspiration goes along way in a movie that desperately tries to mimic the success of others, and "Eurotrip" — a kind of mongrel kid brother to recent doofus flicks "Old School" and "Road Trip" — offers up enough inspired, even original, silliness to keep from flagging in the long run.

Cast with no name actors, and made by the same gentleman who wrote the insufferable "Cat in the Hat," the movie's pedigree lacks promise. And the film isn't a total success; it takes a while to get out of the gate and the movie seems rather quickly tossed together. Laughs don't flow into one another so much as careen and crash into the next one.

"Eurotrip" lurches from one gag to another without anything approaching a rhythm, but the inventiveness of the jokes does enough to dispel that lack of momentum. I know it's not saying much, but the film is far superior to that Dr. Seuss bastardization.

The flimsy excuse for a storyline has high school graduate Scotty (likeable Scott Mechlowicz) being dumped by his slutty girlfriend for being "too predictable." She takes up with a headed-shaven rocker (Matt Damon, in one of the film's many cameos) who proceeds to document Scotty's cuckolding in the hit song "Scotty Doesn't Know."

After a drunken Scotty disses his German pen pal Mieke online for coming on to him, he discovers that his friend is not a guy but a beautiful blonde babe. To make amends, Scotty and his sex-crazed friend Cooper (Jacob Pitts) — who wants to get back in touch with his sexual (i.e. lacking in American prudishness) heritage — head off on a trip to Berlin.

Along the way there are stops in London, Paris — where the duo link up with a set of twins played by Travis Wester and "Buffy the Vampire Slayer's" Michelle Trachtenberg —

See EUROTRIP on page 6

"Eurotrip" lacks originality, but gets laughs anyway. The movie follows the cross-continental adventures of a group of teens.

A new Phantom Planet

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

When a band evolves, that tends to be a good thing (see Radiohead going from "Pablo Honey" to "The Bends"). When a band transforms, that is very often a good thing (see Radiohead going from "OK Computer" to "Kid A"). However, when a band changes to suit commercial needs, that is always, well, a bad thing.

Look no further than Phantom Planet's latest, self-titled disc, which finds the former pop-rockers entering the ring of generic garage-rock, (a.k.a. the latest 'hip' trend). The band is best known for their slightly generic alt-pop track "California" which has brought the band modest fame, especially since it was chosen as the theme song for the hit Fox show "The O.C."

Phantom Planet
'Phantom Planet'
Epic

Still it seems they have traded in their Weezer and Beatles CDs, whose influences were so apparent on 2002's "The Guest," in exchange for a heavy dose of The Strokes, The White Stripes, The Hives — any of the current, 'cool' bands. In fact, perhaps the band should look into changing their name to 'The' Phantom Planets.

"Phantom Planet" is also getting attention, as it is the band's first album without drummer Jason Schwartzman, the actor of "Rushmore" fame who was the source of much of the band's press attention. It would be nice to say whether or not there is a noticeable difference, whether the band's new drummer, Jeff Conrad, is an improvement or a burden. It's safe to say he does a pretty nice drumroll at the start of the opening track, "The Happy Ending" (although the ending wouldn't come until half an hour later).

Unfortunately, the opening drum roll is about the only thing on the disc that even comes close to mustering up enthusiasm. Said drum roll is followed by a bit of 'aren't-we-edgy' feedback and by about 34 seconds, when quote-unquote singer Alex

See PHANTOM on page 6

The sun isn't going down on Kenny Chesney

By Joe Piedrafite
Collegian Staff

Much has been made recently that Amherst is not much of a place for fans of country music. When people think about the music scene in Amherst, they usually think more of artists like Guster, Stephen Kellogg, Ben Folds and Howie Day. The average University of Massachusetts student is probably more inclined to listen to Gavin DeGraw rather than say, Tim McGraw.

However last month, Toby Keith certainly proved that stereotype wrong, playing to a packed house at the Mullins Center on a stop of his "Shock'n Y'all" tour. While Keith tailors more to a hard-core, older type of country crowd, young country fans hold a special place in their heart for a boy from the back hills of Tennessee — Kenny Chesney.

Chesney has developed a rabid fan base following the release of his 1995 debut album "All I Need to Know," but he rode the skyrocket to fame and fortune with his multi-platinum album, 2002's "No Shoes, No Shirt, No Problem." His follow up album, "When the Sun Goes Down" shows a more comfortable Chesney, who, stylistically, is a fantastic mix of Jimmy Buffett and Garth Brooks, and proves that he is a bona-fide country superstar.

If "No Shoes, No Shirt, No Problem" was a look back at adolescence and a child growing up in the 80's, "When the Sun Goes Down" focuses more on the transition to adulthood, and the joys, as well as problems, that come with entering into that world. "When the Sun Goes Down" runs the gamut of styles, from up beat, pop-country, to ballads to live songs from shows.

Country rocker Kenny Chesney triumphs with his latest album "When the Sun Goes Down.'"

The first radio single, and first track on the disc, "There Goes My Life," about an unwed father watching his daughter grow old, is the most powerful and moving song on the disc. "All he could think about was 'I'm too young for this/ Got my whole life ahead/ Hell I'm just a kid myself/ How'm I gonna raise one?' ... A couple years of up all night and a few thousand diapers later/ That mistake he thought he made covers up the refrigerator/ Oh yeah, ... he loves that little girl," Chesney laments, and the song almost brings tears to the eyes of the listener.

Kenny Chesney
'When the Sun Goes Down'
Bad

"When I Think About Leaving" is also a quite powerful track, about standing at a crossroads in life, and deciding which road is the right one, even if it means that the right path is the most difficult.

Not all the songs on this 17-track compellation are as serious, Chesney knows how to let loose and have a good time. "I Go Back" is a light and pop-infused memoir, and Chesney is in top form with "Keg In the Closet" (comparable to "No Shoes..."'s "Young"), an anthem for college folk everywhere, both young and old. "A white frame house, a college town/ A bunch of people always hanging around/ No real problems we need to drown but we tried our best anyway/ We went to class just to pass the time/ We had a keg in the closet, pizza on the floor left over from the night before/ Where we were going we didn't really care we had all we ever wanted/ In that keg in the closet" he reminisces about his days in college, to which most undergrads past and present can instantly relate.

Chesney is allowed to flex his muscles as a writer on this disc. "Keg in the Closet", "I Go Back", "Being Drunk's A Lot Like Loving You" and "Old Blue Chair" are gems. They showcase Chesney's growth and maturity, not only as a musician, but as a songwriter as well.

The flavor of the Caribbean also finds its way to "When the Sun Goes Down," in the form "Outta Here," an escapist piece about being whisked away to a tropical island beach with a drink in hand.

The title track, also southern influenced, is a breezy and often witty duet with genre defying artist Uncle Kracker. Both dream and reminisce of their days on a Caribbean island, "All day long just takin' it easy/ Layin in the hammock where it's nice and breezy/ Sleepin off the night before/ Cause when the sun goes down, we'll be back for more." The listener can't help imagining the scene and placing himself right there with the country singers, partying all night and sleeping all day. Sun, sand, alcohol and women, who could ask for anything more?

The album is being touted as a "limited edition" — thanks to the three live tracks at the end of the disc, taken from various performances last year. The live tracks include "Live These Songs" from "No Shoes," "What I Need To Do" and "Please Come to Boston," a love letter home to those he loves, and misses while touring rigorously (Chesney has been on the road for the better part of 12 years).

"Boston" also showcases some of Chesney's most poignant and romantic lyrics on the disc. Gentleman, if you're on the outs or in trouble with your woman, play this one for her over a candle-lit dinner and all will be forgotten.

Chesney's growth and maturity as an artist are evident on this disc. Seriousness and fun are melded perfectly here with "There Goes My Life," "When the Sun Goes Down" and "Please Come to Boston" being three standouts in a disc of first-rate material. The other tracks are well put together, but they cannot hold a candle to these three.

There's a song for every emotion on this disc, no matter what your mood. Happy, sad, depressed, joyous, whatever it is — you can be sure to find a song to match it here. We can only hope that Chesney will continue to grow and offer that signature humor and humanness that he has been known for, that perfect blend that has made him the bright shining star he is. This one's a keeper folks. Don't be afraid to tell your friends you're a country nerd. Chances are, so are they.

Phantom Planet try The Strokes on for size

PHANTOM from page 5

Greenwald's newly Julian Casablancas-esque vocals enter, you'll think the joker at the record store gave you The Strokes CD instead of Phantom Planet's. As luck would have it, by the end of the album, you'll still be pretty convinced that the guy gave you The Strokes CD.

Usually an album review will track through most of the songs, describing them, listing the stand-outs and the let-downs. Well, the entire CD sounds pretty much the same; the bass-driven "Badd Business" sounds like The Strokes with a bit of ska guitar and punk shout-alongs thrown in. "You're Not Welcome Here" is probably what would happen if The Strokes attempted to do a Shellac-style noise rock track. "Knowitall" even sounds like it has a drum machine! How unconventional! And just wait until it explodes into a real rocker! The rest of the disc pretty much just sounds like, you guessed it, The Strokes, which is pretty sad since even The Strokes don't want to sound like The Strokes anymore.

"Big Brat" might be the closest thing to an exception from the comparison, if only because it's such a terrible mess it's dubious that The Strokes would even put their name on garbage of this level.

As if there weren't enough reasons for music fans to loathe and despise the garage-rock trend, which with luck should be dying any minute now, Phantom Planet have thrown their generic hat into an already too-crowded and unexciting ring. Greenwald never used to sound like Casablancas; the band's guitars never had the distinct garage-rock sound heard on "Phantom Planet;" and it's clear by the sheer lack of quality and zeal that this isn't a "Kid A" mutation, but more of a straight cash-in.

"Phantom Planet" is one of the saddest and most blatant attempts to bank on a trend since Vanilla Ice went rap-metal.

'Eurotrip' entertains audiences with typical teen movie fare

EUROTRIP from page 5

Jessica Boehrs and Scott Mechlowicz cannot save "Eurotrip'" from the script's unoriginal plot and uninventive writing.

Rome, Amsterdam and eastern Europe. Each stops come complete with the generally expected targets (soccer hooligans, sex clubs and destitute cities), and every European comes across as a compendium of clichés about their nations.

Every European fits into a type: the French are pretentious, the English are ruffians, the Italians are sleazy. Of course, in "Eurotrip" the Americans are self-centered and boorish, so I guess there is something being said here about how nationalities are perceived.

"Eurotrip" misses every chance it has to truly take-on Europe in clever, maybe even illuminating ways, instead falling back on the easiest of old jokes and as many bared breasts it can fit into its running time. But every once in awhile a sex joke connects, or there's a truly weird, unexpected scene, such as Scotty's street fight with a silver gilded mime or a confrontation with a nude beach full of men that turns into a spoof of zombie films. There are the oddball sight gags (the dog holding the severed hand in Bratislava) and creative ideas (the map detailing Scotty and Co.'s trip) that hint at an intelligence lurking within the movie's numbskull approach to comedy.

The filmmakers avoid the trap of gross, unfunny bathroom humor, relying instead on some (slightly) more sophisticated sexual humor. And there's plenty of that to go around. There hasn't been a teen film so obsessed with T&A in years, and it's sort of refreshing to see after the whole Janet Jackson Imbroglio swept the nation. But like any old fashioned teen comedy, the hang ups aren't centered around sex but around homosexuality, and there are the requisite jokes about being gay, typified by "Saturday Night Live's" Fred Armisen's appearance as a creepy Italian-wannabe casanova.

The homo- and xenophobic jokes aside, "Eurotrip" is a harmless, slight and usually funny entertainment. The young actors throw themselves into their movie with utter, unabashed commitment, not willing to let themselves get embarrassed by embarrassing material, and there's something to be said about the movie's unwillingness to let anybody off the hook. "Eurotrip" is too amiable to be offensive, and as cheap and lacking in production values as it is, it offers up enough laughs to be spared cinematic deportation.

Comedy quintet turns the movie theater into 'Club Dread'

DREAD from page 5

You Did Last Summer," which was already a slipshod sequel that seemed more like a parody of itself. The setting, Pleasure Island, is the kind of hedonistic, spring break nirvana that makes "The Real Cancun" look like Amish country. The island is presided over by Coconut Pete (a scraggly Bill Paxton, in a role that may be the film's most clever turn) — a burnt-out good-time rocker who encourages his guests to drink, drug and engage in the libertine pleasures his resort offers. He's also the singer of "Piña Coladaburg," a hit that preceded — but was overshadowed — by "Margueritaville."

Into this tropical paradise comes a costumed, machete-wielding killer who begins to pick off the resort staff in grisly ways, one by one. The killer bases his attacks on the lyrics of a Coconut Pete song so obscure that even he doesn't remember recording it, and the staff is warned to go about there business and not tell their guests, lest they all die.

Among the film's myriad potential suspects/victims are Penelope (pronounced 'Peen-o-lope' in the movie), a mysterious, gymnastically inclined guest (Jordan Ladd, fresh off the grisly horror of "Cabin Fever"); the tanned, tawny aerobics instructor Jenny (Brittany Daniel) and the five guys of Broken Lizards, who all have roles as the hotel's staff.

There's the uptight, dreadlocked British tennis instructor Putman (director Jay Chandrasekhar, in a distractingly phony, choked Brit accent); Juan (Steve Lemme), the handsome dive instructor/ self-appointed ladies man; the on-edge island drug dealer (DJ Dave (Paul Soter); fun police Sam (Eric Stolhanske) and the island's newest employee, the spiritual, very handy masseur Lars (Kevin Heffernan.)

The movie is as overloaded on cast as it is on bad jokes, but it comes into focus as the supporting cast gets winnowed down to the central Lizards. There are a few bright gags here and there (in a nicely idiot touch, the guys host a live action Pac-Man maze game complete with sound effects), but for every one that works there are three that do not. Chandraskehar is, at best, a basic director; there's no rhythm to the movie's scattershot vacillations between splatter and humor.

The guys themselves are an engaging bunch of doofuses, but they don't exactly give themselves the best showcase for their assorted 'talents.' The whole episode comes off like a group of frat boys attempting to perform improv; it's all very amateur hour. There are all the hallmarks of frat humor — beer and pot jokes, breasts for no reason other than to have bare breasts — but the elements never coalesce into a something resembling a real whole. "Club Dread" never becomes a vacation worth checking into.

TAMALES
Great Mexican food that's good for you!
Extended Hours at The Hatch
Due to overwhelming demand, the Pizza and Tamales stations at the Hatch will

GOLD'S GYM
NOW OPEN!
Bring in this coupon and receive:
$100 OFF OR FREE TRIAL
COMPETITION, PLEASE!
THERE'S A REASON WHY WE'RE #1
BEST EQUIPMENT, BEST RESULTS
COME CHECK US OUT!
GOLD'S GYM
10 UNIVERSITY DR.
(413) 549-6565

Prior out five to 10 days

When the Chicago Cubs start spring training games, Mark Prior will be resting his right foot instead of firing fastballs.

The hard-throwing right-hander will be out five to 10 days because of an inflamed Achilles' tendon, soreness he first felt last September.

"When I started working out again in January on the mound, it started back up, and I got here and it got inflamed," Prior said Monday in Mesa, Ariz.

"They just want to get rid of it. They don't want me to change anything to favor it, so I'm going to take some time off."

An MRI showed no structural damage or tear. Both Prior and Cubs trainer Dave Groeschner said the 23-year-old star will be ready for opening day.

But it could be nearly two weeks before he can pitch in an exhibition game. After he is cleared to throw again, Prior will have to build his arm strength back up. The Cubs begin exhibition play Thursday.

"It's early in the spring, and we can nip this in the bud and make sure he's ready for the season," Groeschner said.

Prior is slated to be the No. 3 starter in Chicago's stellar rotation behind Kerry Wood and Greg Maddux, but is already considered the ace of the staff by some.

He's confident he can catch up quickly, even if he doesn't get as much work in spring games as he planned.

"There is no real timetable on it," Prior said. "The first two starts, anyway, we only throw like two or three innings. I'm not really worried about that. As long as I can get on the hill a few times and see some hitters in game situations, I feel like that's all I need."

Prior was 18-6 with a 2.43 ERA and 245 strikeouts last year, his first full season in the majors. He made the NL All-Star team and finished third in voting for the CY Young Award.

He helped pitch the Cubs to the NL Central title, going 10-1 over the final two months of the season. In the playoffs, he was 2-1 with a 2.31 ERA in three starts.

"It's my push-off foot, and when I drive, it just pinches. It's a minor thing, but it's something I don't want to get serious," Prior said. "I just hope it's not a nuisance like it was last year. But if it is, it's something we'll take care of and push through."

In Vero Beach, Fla., Jose Canseco struggled through an open tryout with the Los Angeles Dodgers and looked nothing like the slugger who intimidated opposing pitchers in the late 1980s and '90s.

"It could have gone better — technique's a little off," Canseco said. "I wish I had a little more time to get ready. I'm not going to hold my breath on it. It's basically out of my hands — just being realistic."

Matt Slater, the Dodgers' director of professional scouting, said Canseco was told several days ago there was a 99 percent chance the team wouldn't sign him.

"This is probably going to be my last attempt — see you in the movies," Canseco told reporters afterward as he signed autographs.

In Scottsdale, Ariz., Giants owner Peter Magowan said he thinks the deal that sent Alex Rodriguez to the New York Yankees is bad for baseball.

"The Rodriguez trade moves us back to where we're escaping. The team with the highest payroll can add the highest-salaried player. It's good that A-Rod is playing in a big market, but it should be another big market," Magowan said.

"I think all of us in baseball would prefer to get a salary cap if we could. The Yankees are probably the only ballclub that would not want to have one. They have a payroll of $185 million. We'll probably start the season at $80 million," he said.

In Phoenix, Athletics pitchers Rich Harden and Chad Bradford each took a step forward in returning from minor injuries.

Harden, who said he hurt his left (non-throwing) shoulder turning off an alarm clock, threw 40 pitches on the side. Bradford, recovering from back spasms, played catch for the first time in more than a week.

In Tampa, Fla., Yankees right-hander Mike Mussina was scratched from his first spring training start following the death of his father-in-law.

Mussina was scheduled to pitch the spring opener Thursday against Philadelphia. He is the probable starter for the regular-season opener March 30 in Tokyo against Tampa Bay.

— Associated Press

C's coach vows to keep trying

BOSTON (AP) — Boston Celtics interim coach John Carroll said Monday he will keep trying to win even though it might hurt the team's draft position.

"It would be very difficult to walk out the door here and down that hallway and not try to win games," he said outside the Celtics' locker room before the game against the Orlando Magic. "I would be kind of a fraud."

Despite a 25-36 record heading into the game, Boston was just one-half game behind eighth place Miami in the race for the final spot in the Eastern Conference playoffs. Asked over the weekend whether the team would be better off with a high draft pick or an early exit from the playoffs, basketball boss Danny Ainge looked to the future.

"I think the playoffs are great for the players, coaches and fans, but I'm not going to lie about it. For the long-term part of this it's obviously better for us to get a higher draft pick," Ainge told the Boston Herald. "That's just the truth."

Ainge's comments stopped far short of suggesting the team was not trying to win, a position that would likely get him in trouble with the NBA office. Many believe the Celtics tanked the 1996-97 season to improve their chances of landing Tim Duncan; the Celtics had the best chance heading into the draft lottery that year but drew the third pick instead and Duncan went to San Antonio.

Boston wound up with Chauncey Billups.

Carroll, who is 3-12 since taking over when Jim O'Brien resigned, agreed a high draft pick would be nice. But he said his job was to try to win.

"It would be great if you could finish first and have the No. 1 pick," he said. "As crazy as it is, we're still in contention."

— Associated Press

Getting a little Love

Tiger Woods gets a pat on the back from Davis Love III after Woods won their championship match at the World Golf Championships Accenture Match Play Championship Sunday in Carlsbad, Calif.

Cloninger finds a new role

CLONINGER from page 10

cer," he said, "but it's very curable."

He even found time amid his own problems to counsel reliever Scott Williamson, who was going through a very difficult time last season.

Williamson's first child, Scott Reece, was born July 25 in Cincinnati and his wife, Lisa, had serious problems that drove her blood pressure to a dangerously high level. And just four days later, with her still hospitalized, Williamson was traded by the Reds to the Red Sox.

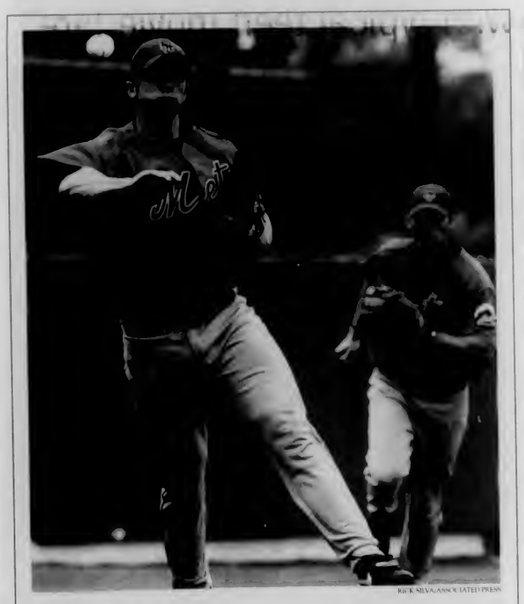
Distracted, he struggled early then had a heart-to-heart discussion with Cloninger over lunch.

"Tony definitely has a big spot in my heart. He put a lot of stuff in perspective for me," Williamson said. "He gave the confidence to me with just a few words and I went out there and had some success. I couldn't wait to get to spring training so I could see him."

Cloninger, 63, worked on Williamson, 28, to regain his feeling that he could dominate all hitters.

"I explained that I'd been through adversity. Everyone goes through it," Cloninger said. "He had a new baby and he was trying to do well and I think he was just overwhelmed with everything. He felt comfortable talking to me."

Cloninger also has made a potentially awkward relationship comfortable for Wallace.



"He's got special relationships with certain pitchers so you use that as a source," Wallace said. "He's been so professional. He's gone way beyond the call of duty."

Cloninger's regular-season duties haven't been determined but he will work at the major-league level, attending many home games and some road games. He doesn't want to step on the toes of Wallace or manager Terry Francona.

"Tony's a tremendous person," Francona said. "It was a unique situation. You had two guys that are qualified."

Cloninger thinks he had cancer late in the 2002 season, his first with Boston, and wasn't diagnosed until six months later. He worked until early June then went home to North Carolina, rested and worked on his farm.

"I feel very fortunate that I was able to work as much as I did last year, maybe worked too long," he said. "I went home after the season, and I feel good now."

Wright on the money

New York Mets third baseman David Wright, left, throws a man out at first base as shortstop Joe McEwing, right, backs him up in the fourth inning of an intrasquad game yesterday in Port St. Lucie, Fla.

NEW THIS WEEK!
COLD CREEK MANOR
DUPLEX
GOOD BOY!
LOONEY TUNES
SCHOOL OF ROCK
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

As an engineer in the U.S. Air Force, there's no telling what you'll work on.
(Seriously, we can't tell you.)
United States Air Force applied technology is years ahead of what you'll touch in the private sector, and as a new engineer you'll likely be involved at the ground level of new and sometimes classified developments. You'll begin leading and managing within this highly respected group from day one. Find out what's waiting behind the scenes for you in the Air Force today. To request more information, call 1-800-423-USAF or log on to airforce.com.
U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

Wrapping up

Senior Judit Zsedenyi (Budapest, Hungary) played her final regular season game at UMass on Saturday, a 55-50 loss to Rhode Island. Zsedenyi played all 27 regular season games for the Minutewomen, averaging nine points and 2.4 rebounds per game.

Eagles clinch 9th title

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

It wasn't exactly in doubt, but the Boston College Eagles (26-4-4, 17-2-3 Hockey East) clinched their ninth regular season conference title Friday night with a 4-2 win over New Hampshire (18-11-5, 10-7-5 HEA).

The Eagles will travel to Orono, Maine this weekend for a two game set against the Black Bears (24-7-3, 15-5-2 HEA), but are playing the waiting game to see who they'll entertain in the Hockey East quarterfinals. The candidates for that dubious position could be any of four teams, as Merr-imack, UMass Lowell, Boston University, and Northeastern are all in a fight for playoff position.

10 YEAR HOCKEY EAST ANNIVERSARY

Notebook

In the slot

Three teams solidified their playoff spots last weekend. BC clinched the top spot, Maine will come in second thanks to the two points they gained over UMass and New Hampshire, and Providence (15-11-7, 7-10-6 HEA) is pegged for fifth place. The Friars will now await the weekend's results to see if they'll be playing UNH or UMass.

The Wildcats are two points behind the Minutemen heading into the final weekend of the regular season, and go up against eighth-place BU (9-15-6, 5-13-4 HEA) twice to finish it off.

UMass, meanwhile, will have no easy task in holding on to those two precious points that keep it from falling into fourth place. The Minutemen (16-9-6, 12-7-3 HEA) play a home-and-home series with Northeastern this weekend, and the Huskies (9-16-7, 3-13-6 HEA), just two points out of the playoff picture, will certainly be ready for war.

With a Jimmy on top

Maine has plenty of people to thank for climbing up to the second spot in Hockey East, after the spot was held by UMass for much of the season. But perhaps the greatest praise is owed to goaltender Jim Howard. The sophomore sensation has been a headline-grabber for the Black Bears all season, and put up a real beauty last weekend in Lowell. Howard stopped all 20 shots Lowell took Saturday, leading Maine to a 4-0 win one night after dropping a 3-2 decision to the River Hawks.

Howard earned Hockey East Defensive Player of the Week honors for his work, and his 1.27 goals against average and .949 save percentage put him first in the nation in both categories.

Armageddon goes to the Huskies

There's nothing like a late-season matchup between two teams hunting for a spot in the playoffs. BU and Northeastern played a home-and-home set last weekend, and the Huskies, who entered the weekend five points out of the playoffs, notched a tie Friday night at home, and then downed the Terriers at Walter Brown Arena 6-3 on Saturday.

Okafor saves his best for last

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

STORRS, Conn. (AP) — Emeka Okafor closed out his career at home with an impressive performance.

The 6-foot-10 junior center had 25 points and 15 rebounds to lead seventh-ranked Connecticut to an 89-67 victory over Seton Hall last night.

Okafor, the AP's preseason player of the year, was honored along with the Huskies' seniors because he will graduate in May and although he hasn't officially announced he will leave early for the NBA, he should be one of the first picks in the draft.

Seton Hall	67
Connecticut	89

He played his last home game in obvious pain from back spasms. During timeouts, and for the few minutes he was out of the game, Okafor was on the floor in front of the bench stretching.

The win gave the Huskies (24-5, 12-3) sole possession of first place in the Big East for one day. In a matchup of the teams tied with Connecticut when the night started, No. 3 Pittsburgh is at No. 12 Providence on Tuesday night.

Ben Gordon had 23 points for the Huskies, who won their fifth straight and ninth of 11. They finished the season 15-1 at home, 8-0 in Gampel Pavilion and 7-1 in the Hartford Civic Center.

John Allen had 17 points for Seton Hall (19-8, 9-6), which had won three straight. Andre Sweet had 12 points and 15 rebounds, and Andre Barrett had 11 points although he was limited by first-half foul trouble.

The double-double was Okafor's national-best 19th of the season and the 48th of his career. He was four points off his career high, 29 against North Carolina earlier this season, but no one in the sellout crowd of 10,167 in Gampel seemed to mind when he came out of the game for the last time with 2:55 to go and the Huskies ahead 81-62. He waved to the crowd and he went to the bench and they roared back at him.

Okafor, who leads the country in blocked shots, had four of Connecticut's 12 Monday night. The Huskies entered the game with 251 and shattered the school record of 253 set last season.

Okafor was a force inside at the start of the second half when the Huskies pulled away from a 41-34 lead. He scored on four straight possessions as Connecticut went up 54-42 with 14:06 to play.

Gordon, second to Okafor on the team in scoring, took over when the Huskies blew the game open.

He scored on three straight possessions, then Okafor scored on the next two in an 11-2 run that made it 76-57 with 5:25 to play.

Barrett, who leads Seton Hall in scoring and assists, picked up his second foul with 8:27 left in the first half and went to the bench. The Pirates went on a 7-2 run when he first left the game to tie the score at 30, but Connecticut closed the half with an 11-4 run.

It also final the last home for senior point guard Taliek Brown, who had seven points and five assists.

Men are fifth, women 15th at New Englands

TRACK from page 10

with the performances.

"[Therren, Shams, and Creel] did really well in general; it was their best meet of the year," O'Carroll said.

Troyanah Evans and Kishana Hudson represented the team in the 200-meter dash. Evans placed fourth in her heat with 26.66 and Hudson placed second in her heat with 26.79, but neither qualified for the finals. Shannon Jackson and Atlantic 10 Champion Elisabeth Budd competed in the 500-meter dash, where Jackson ran an impressive 1:19.58 to place third in her heat, but did not qualify for finals. Budd placed second in her heat with 1:16.44. She went on to place third in the finals with 1:16.66, in her third race of the meet.

One of the best UMass performances came from Kristen Ford in the 800-meter preliminaries. She set a season record and personal best of 2:15.81 placing fifth in her heat, and qualifying for the finals. But the next day in the finals, no one runner would take the lead, and as a result the pace was uncharacteristically slow.

"Nobody would take charge so Kristen had to switch up but by the time she figured out everyone was going so slow, she was already behind," LaFreniere said. "All the athletes were way off pace."

Ford took the lead but by then it was too late. She tried to make up for the lost seconds, but could not fully compensate in the end, running 2:17.98 to take sixth place.

The 55-meter hurdles marked Jackson's second event of the day. She placed third in her heat in the preliminaries with a season best time of 8.56, qualifying for the semifinals, where she placed fourth in her heat with a qualifying time of 8.56. Jackson's time of 8.74 in the finals was significantly slower however.

Another stellar performance came from Kate Markopoulos. Markopoulos showed what she was made of in the open mile, running 5:07.34, a season and personal best. She placed sixth, shattering her former record of 5:11. She ran the mile twice, both the open event and in the distance medley relay as well.

The distance medley relay team of Alexis Anzelone, Budd, Ford, and Markopoulos ran a 12:15 last week at the A-10s, which seeded them in the fast heat at New Englands. Unfortunately, a combination of factors, including lead leg Anzelone's injury, prevented the team from doing as well as LaFreniere had expected. The relay placed ninth.

Hawks prepare for history

By Dan Gelston
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — No, Saint Joseph's isn't going Hollywood, even though this small school has played a blockbuster season. The bright lights have been on the Hawks for most of the year, so turning Alumni Fieldhouse into a soundstage hardly fazed them.

The buzz surrounding the second-ranked Hawks (26-0, 15-0 Atlantic 10) shifted into hammering and drilling Monday at the Fieldhouse as extra lights were erected and nearly two dozen seats were lost to the makeshift construction of an added broadcast platform.

Saint Joe's senior-night game Tuesday against St. Bonaventure will be the first from the cozy gym this year on national television, so proper accommodations were needed to put the spotlight on Jameer Nelson and the rest of the senior class one final time in front of the home crowd.

"It's going to be a little weird because it's the last time," Nelson said. "I'm going to have fun with it. To my understanding, I still have to play a game."

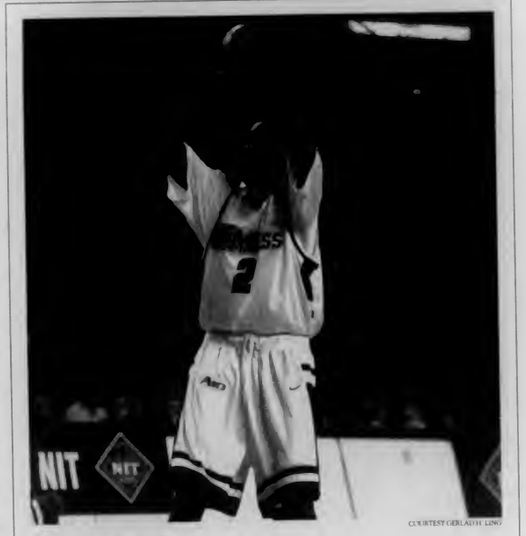
The outcome against the Bonnies (6-19, 2-12) seems a mere formality for the Hawks, which would then have only the Atlantic 10 tournament standing in the way of a perfect regular season. (The NCAA considers the conference tournament to be part of the regular season.)

Still, coach Phil Martelli feels it coming.

"For it to be this close, it's now palpable," he said. "We have felt it for about a week. I knew last week when we started in preparation for UMass that we were eight days away from something that just isn't ordinary. It's extraordinary because it's an unusual event."

Martelli has preached to his players to catch their breath and enjoy the moment. He acknowledges that's easier said than done, saying after Monday's practice he wished it was already tipoff.

He then taped his weekly television show and planned to finish his pregame speech. For Martelli, the hardest part of Tuesday will be getting through the ceremonies honoring Nelson and Tyrone Barley, the winningest senior class in team history.



"I'll be a lot emotional," Martelli said. "Part of my brain races to, 'What's it going to be like when these two kids are introduced and they receive their jersey before the game? What's it going to be like when Jameer is introduced for the last time as a starter in this building?'"

The Hawks considered moving the game out of the 3,200-seat Fieldhouse to the larger Palestra, home of the Big 5. Nelson quickly swatted down the idea.

"This is where I started my career," he said. "The Palestra is good, but it's for the Big 5. This is a home game for me. I guess this little gym holds some type of significance for me."

Nelson will eventually have his No. 14 jersey retired, joining the No. 44 worn by Mike Bantom, the No. 30, worn by Cliff Anderson, and the No. 4, worn by George Senesky, Paul Senesky, Jim Lynam and Bill Oakes.

"No one has done more for this program and no school has done more for a player and a person than this community of Saint Joe's has done for Jameer," Martelli said.

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

Absentee ballot

Junior Gabe Lee has not played since suffering an injury in UMass' 77-71 loss to St. Bonaventure on Jan. 14. The Minutemen travel to Temple tomorrow night.

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1. Savings on eyeglasses from the on-site Optical Services at UHS
2. A great place to get contact lenses
3. Convenient hours and location
4. FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5. Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services

For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

Seniors GET A JOB!

Get "The Edge" for your career transition:

- The Edge – The inside scoop from hiring managers
- The Edge Workbook – Your Quick Start Guide
- Internet Resource CD – Save surfing time for fun

Get The Edge – It's your future!

The Deal: All 3 for $24.95

Save 15 bucks ... go buy a pizza!

Order: www.transitionstrategy.com

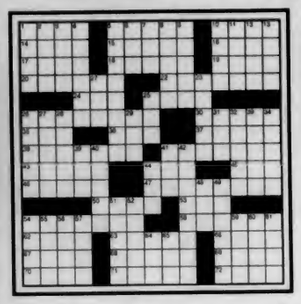
On the Rocks School of Bartending

- Become a certified bartender in a weekend
- The course is held on campus
- Anyone 18+ may bartend in New England
- Bartending is a great summer job

Call us toll free at 866-MIX-5600 for more information or to register.

www.otrbartending.com

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 Coup d'—
5 Watering place
10 Hwys.
14 Mock tertiary (Prefix)
15 Seize the throne
18 Flying prefix
17 Gator kin
18 Less exciting
19 Shade tree
20 Shade-loving plants
22 Bleachery treatises
24 Tarnet
25 Poison out
28 Lobby lumbering
30 Deadly ornament
35 Mother rabbit
36 ER staffers
37 Bugs Bunny's burrow
38 Some copies
41 Missing coffee
43 Well-formed bird
44 Superman foe — Luthor
45 Prism maker
48 A Muppet
47 Be quiet (2 wds.)
50 9 to 5, primarily
53 Lou Dobbs's channel
54 "Scientific" palmist
58 Comment
62 Crumbly soil
63 — Sound, Wash.
66 What George wouldn't tell (2 wds.)
67 Dug, as fleas
68 Draw forth
69 Belgian event
70 Skip a turn
71 Defiant reply
72 Potter's oven

DOWN
1 Work with acid
2 South Seas tuber
3 Uproars
4 Strategy
5 Be loser
6 Film speed init.
7 Grand total
8 Roman goddess
9 Horror
10 Magazine stand
11 Actress — Hatcher
12 Emerald Isle
13 Cries audibly
21 Bonds shucks
23 Talk or
25 Ferment
26 Farm agronomic
26 Proverb
27 Turbine part
29 Honeydew
29 — — nutshell
31 Type
32 Jose's friend
33 Buy another subscription
34 Light bulb filler
39 "A Fool Such — —"
40 Requires
41 Can store
42 Gripping form
45 Tax shelters
46 Night before
49 Fragrant rose
51 Rockies ski resort
52 "— done it this time!"
54 Dripping sound
56 Finish
57 Ballet
57 Major Hoople
59 Asian mountains
60 Little creek
61 Intelligent
64 Admin. head
65 Make do with

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
February Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"start your own tradition"

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- BBQ Pulled Pork Sandwich
- Chicken Pesto Pasta with Walnuts
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
- Chicken Pot Pie
- Blackened Catfish
- Harvest Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast
For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 53
- Low: 36

WEDNESDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 31

THURSDAY
- High: 53
- Low: 37

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andrew Tamulynas
COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Glen Straub, Nikolas P. Markantonatos

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Put the lime in the coconut and mix it all up.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Put gel in your hair, it looks better that way.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
If you're single, stay that way, if not, dump your significant other.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Cut your nose hairs. They look like cobwebs.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Make a waxing appointment. You seriously need one!

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Go fake tanning. You look nice in orange.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Switch cereals. The one you eat always gets soggy.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Make out with someone random today!

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Don't buy scratch tickets. You'll never win.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Stop being so moody. You're really annoying some people.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Eat cheesecake. It's yummy!

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Put some antiseptic goo on your cut.

Quote for the Day

"Don't knock the weather; nine-tenths of the people couldn't start a conversation if it didn't change once in a while."
-Kin Hubbard

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

If you see this Stud, Be sure to wish him a Happy Birthday and buy him a drink!

Happy 21st Birthday, Peter!

$1 off previewed movies at campus ministore and Worcester munchie store with this coupon 1 per customer good until March 31st

Apartment for Rent

N. Amherst, 1 Bdrm 1 1/2 mi UMass deck $625 Pets OK Hdwd floors Avlb 4/1 maybe sooner 549-2062

Apartment for Rent

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Apartment for Rent

Brandywine 1 Bedroom. On bus line, gas water included. Immediate occupancy 978-835-4571

Auto for Sale

1996 Jeep Grand Cherokee, Maroon, 8 Cyl., AT, Fully Loaded, CD/Cass 75K, Tinted, Fabulous condition $9600.00 or B/O 413-256-3478 Ask for Justin

1993 Mercury Tracer 147K, 5Shift Manual Good Condition, $990 Call 413-627-1432

96 Accord Runs great Excellent CD $4300 256-1505 or 896-0017

1991 Acura Integra-RS 136K Excellent, White, Detailed, 1 owner. 2,250.00 OR BO 413-502-9684

Auto for Sale

1998 Honda Civic Ex Coupe 69,000 miles. Very Good Condition $8500.00 alvarob@cs.umass.edu 413-221-8835

$500!!! Police Impounds, Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. For listings 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

Employment

Marketing Director Growing Co Looking for energetic, motivated personable phone supervisor to assist in managing sales staff Mon-Fri 5:00-8:30p.m. Must be proficient on phones to do Customer care Apt. setting No Telemarketing. $250.00 a wk. to start. Plus bonuses Call 413-253-6652

Employment

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272; www.around-campus.com

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

Employment

Live in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet, Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

For Rent

Spring Break Rental Dayton Beach Resort Studio Sleeps 4 1 Wk March 14th-21st Price neg. 1321-724-5965 alwilson01@aol.com

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

Services

Philosophical Counseling; Amherst philosophydialogue.net

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Travel

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

Travel

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

Wanted

EGG DONORS NEEDED! Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.robertnichols-esq.com.

Collegian Classifieds: 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 2, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Molinari grabs first rookie nod

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

Freshman Candice Molinari received her first honor as a Massachusetts softball player yesterday, being named Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week. The outfielder/designated hitter's .375 batting average and base stealing ability helped the Minutewomen finish with a respectable 3-3 record at the NFCA leadoff classic, one of the most prestigious national tournaments.

The Glendora, Calif. native registered a hit in four out of six games during the Columbus, Ga. tournament. Molinari was 6-for-16 at the plate including a perfect 3-for-3 in an 8-0 rout over Army. She also had three runs, two walks, one run batted in and reached safely on 3-of-5 stealing attempts.

Molinari did not put up typical rookie numbers against some of the best programs in the nation such as DePaul, Florida Atlantic and Ohio State.

The entire UMass roster struggled at the plate against the Blue Demon's All-American Sarah Martz, but Molinari managed a single and a walk, to finish with a .500 on-base percentage against one of the best pitchers in the nation. Besides Molinari, only two other Minutewomen, sophomore Kristi Stefanoni (walk, hit) and senior Nicole Wilson (two walks), were able to reach base twice against the high profile pitcher.

Against Florida Atlantic, Molinari was one of only two UMass players to put the ball against the Owls' Amanda Morin. The other was captain Jaime Cahalan.

However, the 5-foot-2-inch rookie saved her best performance for the bottom of the sixth inning against the Buckeyes in the consolation finals. Down by a run with one out, Molinari smacked a single to open the rally. After K.I. Kelley struck out, Molinari stole second, quickly scoring off senior K.C. Budrewicz's single to left. The run by Molinari gave the Minutewomen the opportunity to win the extra innings, 4-3.

Only 10 games into her collegiate career, Molinari has showcased why her coach, Elaine Sortino, regarded her as big-time hitter during the preseason. She is the most reliable Maroon and White player at the plate, leading the team in batting average (.333) and on-base percentage (.440). She also ranks second in hits with seven, only one shy of junior Hilary Puglia who has had 11 more at-bats than Molinari.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Freshman Candice Molinari (Glendora, Calif.) earned the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week award.

COURTESY GERALD M. LING

Full speed ahead

Sophomore Stephen Werner and the Massachusetts hockey team will play a home-and-home series with Northeastern this weekend, starting Friday night in Boston. The third-place Minutemen will play their final regular season game Saturday at home against the Huskies.

Lax meets Hartford

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The 2004 Massachusetts men's lacrosse season didn't quite begin the way the Minutemen intended. Injuries to a couple of key players came at the worst time, as No. 7 UMass traveled to Baltimore to meet up with No. 8 North Carolina. Safe for a few minutes in the second quarter, the game was all Tar Heels, and the Minutemen were sent home with a 12-7 loss.

Today, they've got a second chance to get things started, as the Hartford Hawks come to town (3 p.m., Garber Field). The Hawks come to Amherst after dropping their season opener as well, a 17-6 slugging at the hands of Harvard. However, no previous result will change the minds of the Minutemen, as Coach Greg Cannella explained.

"You look at some of the other scores, and if I'd told you that Air Force was going to beat Virginia, you would have thought I was crazy," Cannella said. "As I said at the beginning of our season, anyone on our schedule can beat us. This is a good game to go back out there and play the way we can play."

Air Force shocked defending national champion Virginia with a 7-6 win Saturday at the Pioneer Face Off Classic in Denver. The stunning win, coupled with an 8-4 victory over Vermont in the second tournament game, gave the No. 18 Falcons their first national ranking under Coach Fred Acee.

That's the type of thing Cannella would like to avoid today, although the injury troubles that plagued his team on Saturday have continued. While Cannella couldn't specify any particular injury information, he said, "I don't think anything's going to change from Saturday," when the Minutemen were without the services of sophomore midfielder Sean Morris (mono), and didn't have senior attackman Jeff Zywicki at 100 percent. The Nepean, Ontario native played for much of Saturday's game in Baltimore, but was clearly hampered by a lingering back injury.

To make matters worse, junior defenseman Matt Garcia was injured in the third quarter of the game, and is still fighting the effects.

"Matt was pretty sore yesterday when we saw him," Cannella said. "and a little bit better [Monday], but for [today] we're not sure.

"It changes us because of who they are as players. Other teams are going to have to stop those guys when they're healthy. When you gear up to stop certain people, it's gonna allow some other people to step up. Now that they're not there, the next guys get the top guys. Having those people in there will help us."

The injuries are also keeping Cannella from solidifying the lineup, as the three anchor players are still uncertain for today's game.

"We won't know until everybody comes back, not until we have everybody back, and everybody's healthy and able to practice," he said. "We're not going to hang on that; we're confident in the guys we've got on the team. We're not going to use that as a crutch; we'd love to have them back, but we're confident in the guys we've got."

The Minutemen will be playing their first official game at home, and Cannella said that the comforts of Garber Field should be a boost for his team.

"Playing on Garber Field gives us confidence anytime," he said. "We're pretty comfortable here. I'm hoping that we find that we're comfortable here, and we'll go out and play that way. But you've got to play seven home and seven away."

As for signs of a letdown today, against the first of two America East opponents — UMass travels to Stony Brook, N.Y. to face the Seawolves on Saturday — Cannella doesn't expect it.

"We talked about it right after [North Carolina], when we got home, we talked about it on the bus, that, 'hey, we're preparing for the biggest game of the year on Tuesday.' If they don't get that message, we're going to struggle. Hopefully they got that message."

Coach finds his role

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) — Two weeks before his next cancer checkup, Tony Cloninger knelt on his right knee behind the mound and flipped balls to Tim Wakefield during batting practice.

One day later, on Monday, he worked with another Red Sox pitcher, Mike Timlin.

Cloninger's energy is back, and he's finding his role with Boston even though he was disappointed when he lost his job as pitching coach and Dave Wallace took over.

"I've always been a person to be able to pick up and know my duties and do them to the best of my ability," Cloninger said. "Everyone's treated me great this spring."

He was diagnosed with bladder cancer last March 12 but stayed with the team until June 6 when he took a leave of absence. Wallace became interim pitching coach on June 9 and held that job after a still weak Cloninger returned on Aug. 30.

Cloninger, who pitched 12 seasons with the Braves, Reds and Cardinals, is a favorite of pitchers for his father-figure attention to their personal concerns as well as his pitching knowledge.

His future was uncertain after last season, especially after Terry Francona became manager and kept Wallace as pitching coach. But the team gave him some good news.

"The Red Sox told me I had a lifetime job. That was very big," he said. "I understand the Red Sox now more than probably I did when I was at home wondering what's going on. I understand that the Red Sox probably we're saying, 'We want to make sure this guy is healthy.'"

Now in his new role as senior pitching adviser, Cloninger said his last two checkups showed he was free of cancer. He expects to return to his oncologist in North Carolina on March 12 for X-rays. If they turn out OK, he will have three chemotherapy maintenance treatments one week apart.

"Bladder cancer can come back like any can-

See CLONINGER on page 7

Tracksters shine at New Englands

By Leah Wyner
Collegian Staff

The New England Championship meet was a definite success for the Massachusetts men and women indoor track teams last weekend. The men placed fifth out of 30 teams with 45 points, and the women placed 15th out of 30 with 16 points.

For the men's team, it was truly a day of triumph. All 20 performances were either seasonal or best performances, and on top of that, there was a slew of Eastern College Athletic Conference qualifying performances.

Senior standout Kwesi Frimpong-Boateng recorded a 6.31 in the dash, earning him a ticket to ECAC's next week. Frimpong-Boateng won his heat in the preliminaries, the semi-finals, and the finals, with times of 6.34, 6.36, and 6.31.

Not only did John O'Neill and James Godinho qualify in the 500-meter, they also recorded the two fastest times in the event in UMass history. In the preliminaries, O'Neill came in second in his heat with 1:03.65, and Godinho won his heat with 1:04.16, and for finals, O'Neill won Section 1 with 1:03.65, and Godinho placed second in section 2 with 1:03.76.

The relay teams that qualified for ECAC's were the 1,600 team of Dave Falvey, O'Neill, Godinho, and Joe McCormack, the 3,200 team of Dave McMenamy, Matt Clark, Jon Korhonen, and John Jacobson, and the distance medley relay of Clark, McCormack, McMenamy, and Korhonen. The 1,600 squad placed fifth with a time of 3:16.76, the 3,200 placed third with 7:44.04, and the DMR placed second with 10:00.46.

In the 1000-meter race, Corbett clocked a remarkable 8:40.23, a season and personal best, while Henry Smith placed sixth in the triple jump with a season best of 45-9.

Coach Ken O'Brien was unbelievably proud of every performance on his team, and cited the meet as one of the best meets the team has had at the New England level. His goal is usually for about two-thirds of the athletes recording personal bests at a given meet, and this meet's performances exceeded his hopes by far.

"In this meet we had 100 percent of the people who competed register a personal best for the season. I didn't expect any more, and was hoping for something in that ballpark," O'Brien said.

He was also extremely satisfied by the team's overall sixth-place finish.

"By and large a perfect day would have been fifth, and we could have fallen as far back as 10th," O'Brien said. "I guess you could say it was an across the board outstanding performance by everybody involved … We got off to a great start in the first couple of events in the meet, and I think everybody just loosened up and responded to that. The result was the best meet of the year."

The Minutewomen had some truly superb performances at the meet. Early Friday morning, multitalented Crystal Thierren, Nastaran Shams, and Ashley Creel competed in the heptathalon. Thierren came in first for the team and third overall, equaling her personal best of 3,180 points. Fourth going into the last event, she was able to beat a competitor from Boston College by less than a second to take third place. Shams earned sixth place overall, with a personal best of 3,002 points.

"For Nastaran [Shams], the event that really made the difference was the hurdles," assistant coach Antoinette O'Carroll said.

Creel took seventh with her best score of the season, 2,884 points. Creel's best event is the high jump, and Friday was no exception as she tied for first with the winner of the overall event.

O'Carroll was very pleased

See TRACK on page 8

A smooth finish

Tennis reloads for a win after dropping pair

By Leah Wyner
Collegian Staff

It was a busy weekend for the University of Massachusetts tennis team (5-5, 2-0 A-10).

The Minutewomen played against Columbia on Friday, but were defeated 5-2. On Saturday, Army defeated them as well, with a score of 5-2, but the Minutewomen ended the weekend on a good note by overcoming St. Bonaventure with a score of 7-0.

The Maroon and White didn't have much luck with the first two opponents, Columbia and Army. On Friday, Columbia won with 5-2, shutting out all the Minutewomen except junior Stephanie Price and sophomore Dorothy Iwanowicz. Price won the No. 2 match with a score of 6-3, 6-4, 10-7, and Iwanowicz took the No. 4 position with a score of 6-3, 6-4. Columbia won the doubles point as well.

The match against Army the next day didn't prove any easier. Iwanowicz and Price fell at the No. 1 doubles spot with 8-5, and No. 2 doubles team of senior co-captain Susan Hyams and junior co-captain Sasha Edelstein lost 8-4. Sophomore Jana Bartoloni and Freshman Christine Liehr were swept, 8-0.

Liehr fell at the No. 1 singles spot, 6-2, 6-2, and Price lost in the No. 2 position with a score of 6-2, 6-3. Junior co-captain Sasha Edelstein recorded the first win for the Minutewomen against Army's Megan Noble, 6-3, 6-3, but then Iwanowicz fell in the No. 4 position, 6-0, 6-1. Senior co-captain Susan Hyams brought up the team's spirits with her No. 5 spot win over Army's Amanda Paluch, 6-4, 0-6, but unfortunately Bartoloni fell in the No. 6 position with a score of 6-1, 7-5.

Army swept all three of the doubles matches.

Riding on the coattails of two shutouts, UMass headed into its third match of the weekend, St. Bonaventure however, never got a chance. The match started off well when the Minutewomen earned the doubles point. Iwanowicz earned a score of 8-1 to claim the No. 1 doubles spot, and Liehr and Bartoloni won with that same score. In her season debut, freshman Sadie Sandquist defeated the No. 3 doubles opponents along with Edelstein to earn a score of 8-5.

Once they got started, the Minutewomen proved unstoppable. Price won at the No. 1 singles position, 6-1, 7-5, and Edelstein stole the No. 2 match with 6-2, 6-1. The No. 3 opponent was no match for Iwanowicz, as she won with a score of 6-0, and 6-2, while Hyams overpowered the opposition in the No. 4 position, 6-2, 6-1. Bartoloni won the No. 5 match with 6-3, 6-0, and Sandquist was victorious in the No. 6 position with a score of 6-2, 6-4.

The Minutewomen remain undefeated in the Atlantic 10 as they approach their next set of matches in New York this weekend. In Ithaca they play University of Maryland Baltimore County on Saturday, and Cornell on Sunday.

Passion gives way to brutality
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 6

UMass downs Hartford for first win of young season
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 94

Anti-Patriot Act group pushes for resolution

By Sara-Megan Walsh
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Rights Coalition and UMass American Civil Liberties Union had an organizational meeting to discuss ways to gain student support in order to pass an Anti-Patriot Act Resolution through the Student Government Association in upcoming weeks.

The Anti-Patriot Act Resolution would be a defensive statement on behalf of the UMass student body against USA Patriot Act, which was signed into law by President George W. Bush on October 26, 2001.

The Anti-Patriot Act Resolution "… is a statement by the student body saying we don't like this [the USA Patriot Act] and don't want it upheld on campus," said Aaron Israele, founder and president of the UMass ACLU.

The reason for passing the Anti-Patriot Act Resolution would be to halt the current acts of the University administration that are infringing on students individual rights.

According to Rachel Szyman, leader and organizer of the UMass Rights Coalition, the USA Patriot Act allows law enforcement officials to infringe on students rights in various ways. The Act expanded the definition of terrorism in a way that by its current definition, resident student organizations that protest and perform acts of civil disobedience can now be considered terrorists. Law enforcement officials, under the Act, have unrestricted access to student's educational records even if no criminal charges are involved. These same officials are permitted to conduct "sneak and peek" searches, allowing them to enter a residence, take pictures and withhold objects without informing the resident that a warrant has been issued.

"Professors are being targeted as well as graduate students and students in activist groups," said Szyman. Both Szyman and Israele believe this crackdown on terrorism has led to a peaked level of intrusion on student privacy and law enforcement on campus. This includes the regular operation of an FBI agent on UMass campus. The Anti-Patriot Act Resolution would request the administration to take actions to end this.

The possibility of suggesting the resolution is not a new idea. "I think the problem is that people don't understand what the Patriot Act really is," said Syzman. Israele said the act had been considered over a period of several months.

The Anti-Patriot Act Resolution, if passed by the SGA, would be part of a larger nationwide movement by the Bill of Rights Defense Committee. This national movement has spread primarily via the Internet. According

See ACT on page 2

Kerry captures nomination

JULIA CHENG/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Karen A. Keese, of Clinton, Mass., left, is seen casting her Massachusetts Primary day ballot, yesterday, at Clinton Town Hall, as her daughter, Emily, waits with her stuffed toy.

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

John Kerry cemented the Democratic presidential nomination, driving rival John Edwards from the race with a string of Super Tuesday triumphs that left the Massachusetts senator standing alone against President Bush.

"Change is coming to America," Kerry said, capping a remarkable six-week run that began with his candidacy on the brink of extinction in Iowa and New Hampshire.

Dominating all comers, Kerry won 25 of 28 elections as each victory fed on the next in a swell of momentum that persuaded Democrats he could beat Bush. From Edwards' Southern strongholds to the jobs-poor Midwest states of Ohio and Michigan to the growing Southwest battleground of Arizona and to his own New England base, Kerry racked up victories in a primary season that amplified Democratic criticism of the Republican incumbent.

In state after state, Democrats said their top priority was a candidate who could defeat a wartime president with a $100 million-plus campaign treasury. Kerry, a decorated Vietnam veteran, won an overwhelming number of their votes, and now leads a relatively united party against Bush.

"I am a fighter, and for more than 30 years I have been on the battle lines, on the front lines, for fairness and mainstream American values," Kerry told cheering supporters in Washington, D.C., promising to close tax loopholes, offer new incentives for manufacturers, protect the environment, raise the minimum wage and cut health care costs.

The crowd shouted along with him as Kerry delivered his signature line: "If George Bush wants to make national security the central issue of 2004, I have three words that I know he understands — Bring. It. On."

Strategists in both parties say the general election may be one of the nastiest in memory, with both camps seeking to energize their core supporters. In a polarized nation, there are fewer swing voters to be courted with warm-and-fuzzy politicking, they say.

His poll ratings slipping, Bush begins a multimillion-dollar TV ad blitz Thursday designed to bolster his political fortunes. Kerry is prepared to dip into Democratic Party coffers to pay for his own ads, but Bush has a huge cash advantage.

Briefly setting aside their differences, Kerry took a congratulatory call from Bush.

"You had an important victory tonight," the president told Kerry, adding that he looked forward to a "spirited fight."

Hours earlier, Bush had dispatched Vice President Dick Cheney to TV studios to criticize the presumptive foe.

"He very clearly has over the years adopted a series of positions that indicate a desire to cut the defense budget, cut the intelligence budget, to eliminate many major weapons programs," Cheney said of Kerry, a 19-year Senate veteran.

Kerry called Edwards, whose lone win before Super Tuesday was South Carolina, "A great voice for our party." He commended another fallen rival, Howard Dean, in an effort to unite the party.

Calling Kerry "my friend," Edwards told supporters in Atlanta.

"He's been an extraordinary advocate for causes that all of us believe in."

See more PRIMARY coverage on page 3

The freshman senator from North Carolina stopped just short of conceding, but two Democratic officials said on condition of anonymity that Edwards would step aside Wednesday in Raleigh, N.C.

Kerry rolled up huge Super Tuesday triumphs in New York, Ohio, Maryland, Connecticut, Rhode Island and his home state of Massachusetts, as well as a razor-thin win in Georgia. The four-term senator also was favored in the late-poll closing states of California and Minnesota. Vermont went to Dean, the state's former governor who dropped out of the race last month.

In all, 10 states with a combined population of 94 million — one-third of the U.S. total — awarded 1,151 delegates, more than half of the 2,162 needed to seize the nomination. Kerry, a 60-year-old senator, had 854 delegates to Edwards' 269. Dean had 176.

"The issue that drove me is getting rid of Bush, and that led me to Kerry," said Ron Debry, 47, of suburban Cincinnati. "Maybe Edwards someday, but I don't think he's ready yet."

Exit polls showed Kerry dominated among Democrats of all philosophies and all stripes. No matter who they picked Tuesday, voters seemed comfortable with Kerry as the nominee: About eight in 10 voters said they would be satisfied if he won the Democratic race.

And his support came from across the landscape: from men and women, blacks, whites and Hispanics, and voters of all age and income groups, according to exit polls conducted for The Associated Press and TV networks by Edison Media Research and Mitofsky International.

Edwards made U.S. trade agreements a centerpiece of his campaign, and exit polls show voters were sympathetic to his arguments: Some 60 percent said trade takes jobs from their states.

Suicide bombers strike in Iraq, civil war may be coming

By Hamza Hendawi
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Suicide bombers carried out simultaneous attacks on Shiite Muslim shrines in Iraq on Tuesday, detonating multiple explosions that ripped through crowds of pilgrims. At least 143 people were killed and 430 wounded — the bloodiest day since the fall of Saddam Hussein. Unofficial casualty reports, however, put the toll in Baghdad and Karbala as high as 223.

U.S. officials and Iraqi leaders named an al-Qaida-linked militant, Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, as a "prime suspect" for the attacks, saying he seeks to spark a Sunni-Shiite civil war to wreck U.S. plans to hand over power to the Iraqis on June 30.

But some Shiites lashed out at U.S. forces. Iraq's most powerful Shiite cleric, Grand Ayatollah Ali al-Hussein al-Sistani, blamed the Americans for not providing security on the holiest day of the Shiite calendar.

The blasts fanned fear and anger at a time when leaders of the Shiite majority are pressing for more power in a future government after years of oppression under Saddam. The attacks forced the delay of a milestone in the path toward the U.S. handover — the planned Thursday signing of an interim constitution approved by the U.S.-appointed Governing Council.

"What we've seen today in these attacks are desperation moves by al Qaeda-affiliated groups that recognize the threat that a successful transition in Iraq represents," Vice President Dick Cheney told CNN.

The devastating explosions came on the climactic day of the 10-day Shiite mourning festival Ashoura commemorating the 7th century martyrdom of the prophet Muhammad's grandson Hussein.

The bombings also happened about two hours before an attack on a Shiite procession in Quetta, Pakistan, that killed at least 42 people — including two attackers — and wounded over 160.

Tens of thousands of pilgrims from Iraq, Iran and other Shiite communities were massed around the golden-domed Imam Hussein mosque in the holy city of Karbala and the Kazimiya shrine in Baghdad when the explosions went off about 10 a.m.

In Karbala, women tripped over their long, black robes as they ran. Police wept at the sight of the mangled and torn bodies of pilgrims, their blood pooling in the streets.

"I was walking away from the tea stand, when I heard someone shouting 'Allahu Akbar.' I turned my head and saw a tall, bearded man," said Ali Haidar. "A split second later, he exploded, his clothes flying upward. The sound was deafening. Bodies, feet, arms were everywhere. Pieces of flesh flew at me."

JOEN SWA'AN/ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. Army soldiers from the 1st Armored Calvary Division run to reinforce the gate of Camp Bonzai after a stone-throwing mob attacked U.S. forces in Baghdad, Iraq yesterday. Army medics had been treating Iraqi injured from multiple explosions at Muslim shrine.

In Baghdad, wooden carts for ferrying elderly pilgrims were used instead as impromptu gurneys, stacked with the wounded and dead. Torn bodies were sprawled across the mosaic-walled courtyard inside the Kazimiya shrine, and thousands of shoes — left at the shrine's doorstep as the faithful prayed inside — were blown across the square.

"I heard a deafening explosion and bodies began to fly and land next to me," said Amar Dawas, sitting atop a pile of tangled mattresses, head down and scratching his left heel.

"There were also hands and legs which we had to bring down from the roof," said the 24-year-old worker, whose white T-shirt was stained with blood.

Three suicide bombers attacked Kazimiya shrine, killing 58 and wounding 200, while at least one suicide attacker blew

See IRAQ on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Features Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
News Editor Fernot Salmiker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagatic
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Renee Brand
Assistant Advertising Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jachyna Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kuppin
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Assistant Production Lisa Lynch
Agency Account Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Crum
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marrelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian (USPS 325-340) is published Monday through Friday during the fall and spring semesters except for vacations and examination periods. The Collegian is published Tuesday through Friday during the summer. Periodicals postage paid at Boston, MA. Postmaster: Send address changes to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003. Subscription rates: $100 per academic year, $50 per semester. Printed by the Worcester Telegram & Gazette Corporation, 100 Front Street, Worcester, MA 01608. Periodicals postage paid at Worcester, MA 01613. Copyright © 2004 The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Weekly Calendar of events

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

March 3 - March 9 2004

Today

University of Massachusetts — R. Perry Harris III, 61, founder and president of the Sterling Resort Group, will present a public lecture as this winter's Elanor Bateman Scholar in Residents at 4:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall. For further information, call 545-2107.

Smith College — At 4:30 p.m., Paul Alpers, author of "The Poetry of the Faerie Queene," will give a lecture entitled, "Shakespeare and the Outer Isles: Macbeth and Barbarous Scotland" in the Neilson Library Browsing Room.

Amherst College — "Hedda Gabler", a play about breaking the confines of reality through fantasy, directed by Eric Vennemeyer, will show at 8 p.m. in Holden Theater. The play will run every night at 8 p.m. through March 6. Tickets are free, but reservations are recommended. Reservations can be made by calling the Box Office at 542-2277.

Tomorrow

Holyoke College — Eric J. Sundquist, UCLA Foundation Professor of Literature, will give a lecture entitled, "The Wounding Past: Diaspora, Holocaust, Slavery," discussing his current book-in-progress "Blacks, Jews, Post-Holocaust America" at 4:30 p.m. in the West Lecture Hall of Franklin Patterson Hall. The event is sponsored by the Jeremiah Kaplan Family Foundation, the Harold Grinspoon Foundation, Hampshire College Jewish Studies and HACU to honor the establishment of the Jeremiah Kaplan Visiting Assistant Professorship in Jewish American Literature and Culture.

Northampton — First Church in Northampton will host a panel lecture entitled, "Social and Spiritual Engagement During a Time of Empire" at 7 p.m. Speakers on the panel will include: Roshi Bernie Glassman, a Zen Buddhist master and founder of the Greyston Mandala; Paula Green, psychologist and director of the Karuna Center for Peacebuilding in Leverett, MA; and Sulak Sivaraksa, an activist-economist-philosopher from Thailan who has been twice nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize. These three social activists and leaders will address issues raised by the U.S. government's empire building policies from a spiritual and socio-political perspective.

Mount Holyoke College — At 8 p.m., the play "A Portrait of Dora" as directed by Deborah Philips will be performed in Rooke Theatre. The play is a feminist reconstruction of Freud's case study on hysteria. Tickets cost $3 for students and senior citizens, $5 general admission. Reservations are available by calling 538-2406. The play will run performances at 8 p.m. on Friday and Saturday, and 2 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday.

Amherst – Amherst Books will host a poetry reading featuring Eric Baus, author of "To The Sound," and Philip Nikolayev, author of "Monkey Time, at 8 p.m. Refreshments will be served. Amherst Books is located at 8 Main Street, Amherst.

Friday 5

Northampton – The American Red Cross will host a blood drive at Smith Vocational High School from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Amherst – Amherst Books will be host of Live Literature featuring graduate students in the University of Massachusetts Masters of Fine Arts program at 8 p.m. Selections will include both fiction and poetry featuring readings from Elizabeth Hughey, Juliana Leslie and Kami Westhoff. Refreshments will be served. Amherst Books is located at 8 Main Street, Amherst.

Saturday 6

Smith College — The annual Spring Bulb Show begins starting at 10 a.m. in the Lyman Conservatory. Admission is free. The Bulb Show will continue to run through March 21.
Smith College — The EKTA, the South Asian Students Organization, will put on its annual Jhalak Cultural Show at 6 p.m. in the John M. Greene Hall. Admission for the show is $4. A dinner and after party will follow afterwards in the Davis Ballroom. The dinner costs $3, or $6 when brought in combination with the show ticket.

Mount Holyoke College — At 7 p.m., a Jazz Concert featuring performances by the Mount Holyoke Jazz Ensembles will be held in the Blanchard Campus Center. For more information call 538-2306.

Mount Holyoke College — The "Links to Spring" flower show will open starting at 10 a.m. in the Talcott Greenhouse. Visitors can see hundreds of hyacinths, narcissus, pansies, crocus, and daffodils in bloom on display. For more information or directions one can call 538-2116. The "Links to Spring" flower show display will be open until Sunday, March 21.

Sunday 7

UMass — Hillel House will host its annual Latke vs. Hamantash debate at 12 p.m. at 388 N. Pleasant Street. The debate will feature four distinguished members of the UMass faculty, two for each of the Latke and the Hamantash. Speaking for the Latke will be Fred Cohen of the music department speaking on "The Pivotal Role of the Latke in History" and David Samuels of the anthropology department speaking on "Meta-Intexicality, Metanoia and Metapelot: Parsing the Culture of the Potato."
The debaters for the Hamantash are Debbie Felton of the classics department speaking on "How the Hamantash Caused the Fall of the Roman Empire"; and Doron Goldman of the School of Management speaking on "The Hamantash: Perception vs. Reality." Refreshments will be served. Following the date will be the culminating event of the Purim Student Food Drive.

Amherst – Amherst Books will host a party in celebration of the publication of "The Girl's Guide to Starting a Business" by authors Kim Yorio & Caitlin Connelly Friedman, two New York City publicists, at 2 p.m. Friedman grew up in Amherst and went to college at UMass. Refreshment will be served. Amherst Books is located at 8 Main Street.

UMass — The Opera Verdi will perform the Cavalleria Rusticana and I Pagliacci at 7:30 p.m. in Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. The Opera Verdi is based on the great traditions of opera in Bulgaria. Tickets costs range from $7 to $15 for Five College Students, and $15 to $40 for general admission.

Monday 8

Holyoke College — At 8 p.m., there will be a performance of Peggy Shaw's latest show, which was highly acclaimed by The New York Times, "To My Chagrin", in the Main Lecture Hall of Franklin Patterson Hall. The show explores Shaw's relationship with her mixed race grandson.

Tuesday 9

Mount Holyoke College — Dick Jaynes, a foremost authority on mountain laurel, will speak on "New, Rare, and Underused Woody Plants" at 7 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium. This lecture kicks off the Spring Lecture series that runs in conjunction with the Spring Flower Show. For more information or directions cal 538-2116.

Amherst – Amherst Books will celebrate the publication of "Sudden Thaw," a volume of poetry by Professor Peggy O'Brien of UMass at 8 p.m. O'Brien is editor of The Wake Forest Book of Irish Women Poetry from 1967 to 2000. Refreshments will be served. Amherst Books is located at 8 Main Street.

News meeting
Mondays at 4 p.m.

ACLU campaigns at UMass

ACT from page 1

to the group Web site, the committee encourages local communities to take an active role against anti-terrorism measures, such as the USA Patriot Act, that the committee feels may threaten civil liberties guaranteed by the Bill of Rights. It also seeks to educate people about the provisions of the USA Patriot Act and its ramifications in their everyday lives.

The Bill of Rights Defense Committee claims their movement has had success across the nation. The number of locations where resolutions against the enforcement of the USA Patriot Act have been passed has measured this success. Such resolutions have been passed everywhere from a state-wide levels in Alaska, Hawaii and Vermont, to city wide levels in New York City, Los Angeles and Chicago, to individual resolutions passed in towns and counties. Support of the Bill of Rights Defense Committee can be found locally in both Amherst and Northampton, both of which have adopted resolutions against the USA Patriot Act.

The newest push of the Bill of Rights Committee has been to get the movement underway on college campuses. They have proceeded to do so by finding student groups, or students like Szyman, who are willing to form their own student groups to call for a rally in defense of civil rights.

This push is the motivation behind Szyman's attempts to organize the UMass Rights Coalition and to push for the adoption of an Anti-Patriot Act Resolution, as well as holding forums to educating students about legislation that affects them." A lot of support that I've gotten is from the faculty, especially the sociology and political science departments," she said.

So far, 16 college campuses across the nation have rallied students to pass similar resolutions.

"It's just not safe to demonstrate and speak our minds as we want to. It's a part of our educational right," Szyman said.

Militants' attack on Iraq shrines kill at least 143

IRAQ from page 1

himself up at Karbala, where 85 were killed and 230 were wounded. U.S. Brigadier General Mark Kimmitt said.

However, council spokesman Hameed al-Kafaci, visiting Karbala, put the death toll there at 101, including 15 children, with more than 300 wounded. Hours later, a policeman at Karbala's only hospital reported 165 dead there. Some of the more than 200 wounded taken there "are very seriously wounded. Every hour, one or two dies," he said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Iran said at least 22 Iranians were among the dead. Iranians by the tens of thousands have flooded across the common border with Iraq since Saddam's ouster in April, able to visit the most important Shiite shrines for the first time in decades.

An Iranian vice president, Mohammad Ali Abtani, blamed al-Qaida for the attacks in Iraq and Pakistan. He wrote in a message posted on his personal Web site that al-Qaida considers Shiites more dangerous than their political enemy — the United States.

"The reactionary al-Qaida terror group reached a conclusion ... that they have two enemies: the United States as the political enemy and Shiites as the ideological enemy," Abtahi wrote.

The toll could have been worse. A fourth suicide bomber was captured at Kazimiya after his explosives failed to detonate. Police in the southern Shiite city of Basra discovered two women strapped with explosives marching in an Ashoura procession, and other bombs were found near Shiite mosques in Basra and Najaf, sources told The Associated Press.

LATE-NIGHT LINKER:
Someone who downloads and watches hit movies at all hours, just because they can.
THE NEWEST WAY TO GET HIT MOVIES. DOWNLOAD THEM.
STUDENTS GET 25% OFF* ALL MOVIES AT COLLEGE.MOVIELINK.COM
Movielink™ movies on demand

GOLD'S GYM
NOW OPEN!
Bring in this coupon and receive:
$100 OFF OR FREE TRIAL
COMPETITION, PLEASE!
THERE'S A REASON WHY WE'RE #1
BEST EQUIPMENT, BEST RESULTS

STSTRAVEL.COM
Asia America's #1 Student Tour Operator
JAMAICA
SPRING BREAK 2004
LAST MINUTE DISCOUNTS
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Rebel leader declares himself new militant chief

By Paisley Dodds
Associated Press

Ricardo Mazalan/Associated Press

Opponents of former President Jean-Bertrand Aristide celebrate in front of the presidential palace in Port-au-Prince, Haiti, Monday.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Rebel leader Guy Philippe declared himself the new chief of Haiti's military, which was disbanded by ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, and pledged yesterday that rebel forces will disarm.

Philippe then said he would arrest Prime Minister Yvon Neptune on corruption charges.

"The country is in my hands!" Philippe announced on Radio Signal FM.

Philippe, flanked by other rebel leaders and senior officers of Haiti's police force, told reporters, "I am the chief," then clarified that he meant "the military chief."

He said he was "not interested in politics" and was ready to follow the orders of interim President Boniface Alexandre, chief justice of the Supreme Court, who was installed Sunday.

Asked whether he would disarm if requested to, he said, "We will."

He then summoned 20 police commanders to meet with him Tuesday and warned that if they failed to appear he would arrest them. U.S. Marines guarded Neptune's office in the Petionville suburb, where Philippe was headed with hundreds of supporters in a convoy impeded by adoring and cheering crowds.

Neptune's whereabouts were not immediately known. Local radio reported that he was evacuated by helicopter. It was also unclear whether American or French marines — who arrived in recent days to secure diplomatic missions and other sites — would try to protect him. Neptune is a top member of Aristide's Lavalas party and his former presidential spokesman.

In a phone call to The Associated Press, Philippe said Neptune would face corruption charges. The rebels appear to be taking advantage of a power vacuum in the wake of Aristide's abrupt departure Sunday.

Shortly before that phone call, Philippe appeared on the second-floor balcony of the colonnaded former army headquarters before a cheering crowd of hundreds. A burly rebel standing next to Philippe urged them to accompany the rebel chief to Neptune's house.

"Arrest Neptune!" the crowd chanted.

In Washington, Assistant U.S. Secretary of State Roger Noriega said Philippe "is not in control of anything but a ragtag band of people."

The international military buildup in Haiti will make Philippe's role "less and less central in Haitian life. And I think he will probably want to make himself scarce," Noriega told the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

"We have sent that message to him. He obviously hasn't received it."

Philippe, who arrived in Port-au-Prince in a rebel convoy Monday, apparently plans to transform his fighters into a reconstituted Haitian army.

The army ousted Aristide in 1991 but then was disbanded by him in 1995, a year after he was returned to power by 20,000 American troops.

Meanwhile, killings continued in the seaside, fetid capital. At least two more bodies showed up Tuesday on streets still littered with charred barricades set up by Aristide supporters, who rampaged and looted the capital before he fled Sunday.

A young boy with a bullet hole in the head lay by a market square. Residents said he may have been shot for looting.

At the state morgue, six more bodies arrived overnight and more than two dozen had been recovered in recent days, according to a worker there.

The rebellion began Feb. 5 in Haiti's north. Aristide opponents accused him of breaking promises to help the poor, allowing corruption fueled by drug trafficking and masterminding attacks on opponents by armed gangs — charges the president denied.

More than 100 people died in the three-week insurgency and reprisal killings that, combined with pressure from the United States and France, prompted Aristide to flee. He currently is in the Central African Republic, trying to arrange asylum elsewhere.

The crisis was brewing since Aristide's party swept flawed legislative elections in 2000, prompting international donors to freeze millions of dollars in aid.

Politicians and rebels in Port-au-Prince have made no public comment on Aristide's charges Monday that the United States forced him out of power. He was Haiti's first freely elected president in 200 years of independence.

Secretary of State Colin Powell has called those claims "absolutely baseless, absurd." But American officials acknowledged privately that Aristide was told that if he remained in Haiti, U.S. forces would not protect him from the rebels who wanted to arrest him on corruption and murder charges.

Some 300 U.S. Marines and 140 French troops were in Haiti on Tuesday. In Washington, U.S. defense officials said the Marines would not act to stop looting or other crimes, but would return fire if fired upon.

Commanders of both forces said they also had no orders to disarm Haiti's armed factions and instead planned to secure key sites and protect their countries' citizens and government property.

Mayor weds gays illegally

By Michael Hill
Associated Press

NEW PALTZ, N.Y. (AP) — The village's mayor was charged yesterday with 19 criminal counts for performing marriage ceremonies for gay couples.

Jason West was charged with solemnizing marriages for couples who had no licenses, a misdemeanor under the domestic relations law, according to Ulster County District Attorney Donald Williams.

Although West could face a maximum penalty of a year in jail, the prosecutor said a jail term wasn't being contemplated at this point.

The 26-year-old Green Party mayor said he will plead innocent at his court hearing Wednesday and that he would still go through with his plans to marry as many as two dozen gay couples Saturday.

"I'm incredibly disappointed," West said. "Apparently, it's a crime to uphold the constitution of New York state."

West performed wedding ceremonies for 25 gay couples Friday, making him the second mayor in the country to perform same-sex marriages. It also made this small college village 75 miles north of New York City another flash point in the national debate over gay marriage.

More than 3,400 couples have been married in San Francisco and West has about 1,000 couples on a waiting list.

Absent jail, punishment for the misdemeanor could run from a $25 to $500 fine. Williams said he still did not know whether West performed the marriages of his own accord or after getting bad legal advice.

Baystate saw Kerry as possible president

By Martin Finucane
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts voters looked to John Kerry's electability and his experience as they voted overwhelmingly for the hometown favorite in yesterday's Democratic primary, according to an Associated Press exit poll.

About a third of voters said the candidate quality that mattered most to them was an ability to beat President Bush and nine out of 10 of those voters cast ballots for Kerry.

Another smaller group, one in seven voters, said a candidate's experience was key for them and nearly all of those voters cast ballots for Kerry, 60, who has represented the state in the U.S. Senate for nearly two decades while his closest opponent, North Carolina Sen. John Edwards, is only a freshman.

"I just like the way he handles himself. He's a Vietnam veteran. He's been there. He knows the ins and outs of Washington, that's for sure," said Al Brabant, 57, a retired firefighter who voted at a polling place at Burlington High School.

"I just think he's the man for the job," he said.

"He's the traditional old-fashioned Massachusetts Democrat and he stands by that. He has that old-style Kennedyesque view. I like that," said Jonathan Fine, 35, of Brookline, an occupational therapist.

"I'll vote for a cartoon character to beat Bush, seriously, anybody," he said.

The findings were from a poll of 654 voters conducted for AP and television networks by Edison Media Research and Mitofsky International. Results were subject to sampling error of plus or minus 6 percentage points.

Kerry also beat Edwards handily among voters who felt that other candidate qualities, such as caring about the average person, were most important.

Many voters put their faith in the abilities of Kerry, a long-time member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, to handle national security issues. More than eight out of 10 voters said they would trust him to handle that issue, compared with only about half trusting Edwards.

Kerry, who some say has an aloof personal manner but has won reelection three times, benefited from early support. More than half of the voters had made up their minds more than a month ago — before some of his competitors dropped out — and, among them, eight out of 10 supported Kerry.

Mary Godfrey, 79, of Burlington, a retired bookkeeper who voted for Kerry, said: "I really wanted to vote for Edwards, but I didn't think he'd make it. ... Kerry has been in the Senate almost 20 years so he should know most of the rupes."

In a state where his support was considered so strong he hardly made an appearance and his opponents generally didn't bother either, Kerry won by a wide margin across gender, age, income and educational-level groups.

One of the few areas where Edwards edged closer was among voters who described themselves as "somewhat conservative."

GOLD'S GYM
NOW OPEN!
Bring in this coupon and receive:
$100 OFF OR FREE TRIAL
COMPETITION, PLEASE!
THERE'S A REASON WHY WE'RE #1
BEST EQUIPMENT, BEST RESULTS
COME CHECK US OUT!
GOLD'S GYM
10 UNIVERSITY DR.
(413) 549-6565

HIPPODROME
The $10,000 Sexy Survivor Series
How far will you go?
The $10,000 Sexy Survivor Series
COLLEGE NIGHT

STRIPE TEASE
THE ONE YOU WANT
THE WAY YOU WANT IT.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

THE ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW
Every Saturday • Midnight
Featuring our live cast
The Come Again Players
(In)appropriate attire encouraged
Admission $5.75
prop kits $2.00, no outside props
Reservations Recomended
For more info Call (413) 533-FILM
South Hadley's Tower Theaters
The Village Commons
In South Hadley MA.
Call 533-FILM for reservations
Reservations accepted up to 6 days in advance
www.Towertheaters.com
Call 533-FILM to Make Reservations. Reservations Accepted up to 6 days in advance win a trip to europe! contiki.com/campus

get into a real greek week!
>we've got the ultimate toga party!
>new! mykonos resort 7 nights from $599 >aegean classic cruise 7 days from $579 >greek island hopping 14 days from $1289 >london to athens 23 days from $1799
prices are per person, land only, subject to availability.
>packages include accommodations, transportation, many meals and as much fun as you can handle! call now or go online to book the vacation of a lifetime!
contiki VACATIONS
for a free brochure or to book see your travel agent call 1-888-CONTIKI visit www.contiki.com >europe >australia >new zealand >america >canada

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

T-shirt discourages youth from voting

In the midst of an election year, the popular Philadelphia-based clothing chain Urban Outfitters came out with a rather inappropriate new design for a T-shirt. The logo on the shirt reads, "Voting is for Old People."

The shirt raised quite a stir among one Harvard political institute, which labeled the slogan as "the wrong statement at the wrong time." According to the Boston Globe, Dan Glickman, director of the Harvard Institute of Politics and Student Chairman Ilan Graff wrote a letter to the company expressing their disapproval for the new item.

"The shirt's message could not be further from the truth," they wrote. "We would be eager to work with you to suggest alternative products that send the right message to America's young people, and better reflect the considerable social conscience and political participation of today's youth."

Urban Outfitters defended itself by claiming that their T-shirt was not meant to actually discourage anyone from voting but instead was "meant to draw attention to the growing rift between politicians and their platforms and the concerns of young people in this country."

This dispute between the clothing chain and a few individuals at Harvard may seem insignificant, but it is an issue that becomes more and more important as November approaches.

The entire country is aware of the politically apathetic nature of today's citizens, but that in no way means that we should accept or especially encourage this trend.

In order to make the issues of the younger generation heard we must first convince the politicians that we are listening to the world around us. By voting, we can show that we're not only interested in politics, but also want to participate. Once our votes begin to carry some weight, we can get the issues that concern us addressed.

MTV is one large chain that is taking an opposite position to that of Urban Outfitters. This year's "Choose or Lose" campaign is encouraging more 18 to 24-year-olds to vote. While in 2000 only 18 million people in that age bracket voted, MTV has set its sights on getting at least 20 million out to the polls in November. Along with airing commercials regularly on its station, it also features polls and news updates on the MTV website.

It's important that MTV recognizes that it has major influence on America's youth and is attempting to use that influence for a positive purpose. We can only hope that Urban Outfitters and other major corporations that are popular today will do the same.

We, at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, would like to thank all those involved in the attempt to reverse the downward trend in political participation. Hopefully, the results of yesterday's primaries will show the effects of these constructive campaigns.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Religion: it is in your brain

Robert Carey

Religion is a place in the human brain. With the right patient as well as the proper brain wave measuring devices, you can detect it. Where it is exactly I'm not sure, but I'm sure any neurologist could probably point it out. It has in all likelihood always been there, since our pre-human ancestors danced behind waterfalls in a senseless frenzy, and since our antediluvian brethren made sacrifices of an endless amount of goods to self-created deities, all in an attempt to carry the favor of the random acts of fortune. For some, this part of the brain is vigorous, while in others the arteries seem to curve their flow around this area leaving it barren and unproductive.

The latter group excels at objectivity, while the former remains pinned down to their views of life everlasting and the reigning beneficence of an omnipotent universal force. Some can manage to be smart and escape the pitfalls of religions' primal evolutionary purpose as a distraction to logic, and succeed at keeping both their faith and sensibility in check.

There is, however, a vast contingency that fails to keep their religious brain centers in check. There results a sort of shocking madness as ministers dance with venomous adders, and guzzle strychnine in the name of their deity. In circles that are slightly less fanatic, though equally fanatic, are the televangelists. Their followers open their wallets and hearts to God while communicating in tongues, and convulsing on the floor in fits as if they had taken a heroic dose of some strong drug intravenously. Falling prey to their twisted inhibitions, these people look to amass followers to participate in their cathartic experiences of divine bliss.

In most churches or large organized religions the practice is less extreme, generally because people have no true theological beliefs of their own, and only abide a religious organization through an appreciation of tradition. These people drag themselves to every weekly holy day, quietly complying with whatever it is the man in robes and the microphone tells them to do.

Other members of organized religion are there for the strict adherence to the laws of an ancient code of ethics, which they proudly proclaim is out of faith, and is for no real convincingly particular purpose considered sacred. "The Book" is the pure and perfect instruction on how to live one's life, and generally it isn't quite the perfect book. There are some typical human mistakes and contradictions in it (Samuel 24.1-2 vs. Chronicles 21.1-2). But it isn't a bad way to live; there are things that need frequent updating, but overall most of the instruction will lead to better living. On a whole, these books and the religion attached to them do fill some necessary voids that while some lack entirely others have in spades.

What's the true problem with religion? In many circumstances the desire to fulfill a sensual urge becomes like dynamite when mixed with other forces.

But what's the true problem with religion? In many circumstances the desire to fulfill a sensual urge becomes like dynamite when mixed with other forces.

The right religion is a source of pride for many people, as much of a source as nationalism. When the universal tides of fortune are out on a loyal and devote zealot, then their beliefs are threatened.

The human beast is vain and more often than not, stubborn. Convinced they're destined for something higher than what they have received they become motivated to take things into their own hands. Faith then blinds the reactionary mind into action. This was the kind of deadly fuel, not so much for Hitler but which certainly drove on his followers. The crusades were a 300-year testament to this form of madness, and then of course more recently we have 9-11 as an example of this.

Admittedly, human atrocities are carried out without the help of religion, but the more organized and unified the greater the capacity they have for potentially committing violence. This is why the necessity for personalizing spiritual beliefs is most important, rather than casting aside religion, like Friedrich Nietzsche or Lord Bertrand Russell, whose opinions were that religion is a worthless crutch and in all ways detrimental to human society.

There is good in a lot of religious beliefs, but it has to be drawn out by the individual and not an organization. I think this philosophy is fortunately prevailing, a sign of which are the world's major religions beginning to subdivide into groups with vastly different beliefs. The smaller the groups the better off humanity is from religious persecution.

There should be a lot of thinking on the part of the individual on how they wish to go about treating the religious center in their brain; their own conclusion is the best religion.

Robert Carey is a Collegian columnist.

Why is Haiti in the news?

Vonel Lamour

In recent weeks, Haiti has been all over the news, from our own Daily Collegian to CNN, with reports of "rebels" and problems surrounding the Haitian government. This publicity, as sensationalized and negative as it tends to be, has raised the concern of my fellow friends, colleagues, and community at large. Typical of the nature of media, strong images of violence and controversy are what dominate the picture and story. These reports have led to the main, frank question, "What the heck is going on in Haiti?"

I do not make any claim of being an official spokesman or expert on Haitian politics. However, I do feel as a person of Haitian decent and a leader of a Haitian-American organization, I have some responsibility in offering some insight on the whole situation. Coming off of Black History month, I'd like to address a little of the historical aspect that has led Haiti to its current condition.

The overthrow of governments by violent means is commonplace in the history of Haiti. The nearly 34 coups d'etat throughout the 200 years of the second Republic in the Americas can easily attest to this fact. When our ancestors, former slaves for the most part, fought against their masters to create our nation, the economic and social structures did not change much. A new group of rulers replaced an old one keeping the status quo intact and brutally sustaining it.

Colonial Haiti under the French encompassed three social classes: the white masters, the enfranchised (mulattoes and freed blacks), and the slaves. The slaves were properties of white masters and the enfranchised. The 13-year war for independence only got rid of the white masters, while creating a new ruling class made of the already enfranchised, the army generals, and a few lower members of the army. The masses got nothing and were forced to remain in the plantations to continue to keep the system alive. Jean Jacques Dessalines made some efforts to help the former slaves, but was killed for that very reason. No comprehensive official programs have tried to correct this situation; as a result, every 25-35 years masses of people erupt to ask for equitable distributions of the wealth of the country.

What's going on is more than a Haitian issue, it's a human issue.

The rise of Aristide was a symbol of this long pursuit, until he too joined the political class that has traditionally exploited the masses. Currently, be it Aristide's Lavalas camp or the so-called opposition camp, no one has addressed the real issue of taking the country to the path that will lead to the distribution of the country's wealth to the masses in the forms of social justice, education, farming, and housing, etc.

I encourage everyone to continue to research and educate themselves on these issues. What's going on is more than a Haitian issue; it's a human issue. Similar situations have taken place all over the world, including Liberia, Uganda, and Guatemala.

If you would like to know more about the current situation in Haiti, you can come to a discussion, sponsored by the French department, on Tuesday, March 9 at 7 p.m. in Herter Hall 301.

Vonel Lamour is a UMass student.

A modern day "Tzaddik"

World Perspectives

Leah Vitale

"Tzaddik" (pl. "Tzadikkim"): A righteous man (for the female equivalent, see "Tzidkanit") - based on the Hebrew word "Tzedek," or "Justice." The Jewish hero is not the swashbuckling warrior, but rather the "Tzaddik," the "mighty warrior" who conquers his "evil inclinations," towards pride, power and oppression, and practices righteousness and humility, and who is, like God, always on "the side of the oppressed" ("Kohelet," or Ecclesiastes 3:15).

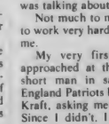
There is a very special man to whom I must pay tribute for all the positive work he has done to change the world. Predictably, he doesn't receive much credit for his actions, yet humbly continues to make a massive difference every minute of every day. It is quite likely that none of you have even ever heard of him because his work is done on another side of the world in a miniature-sized country called Israel. His name is Jeff Seidel.

The second I stepped foot in Israel about seven months ago, his name was everywhere. "Jeff Seidel this, Jeff Seidel that." "Don't let Jeff get you." "Oh Jeff Seidel is amazing!" After all of the hubbub, I needed to find out who everyone was talking about.

Not much to my surprise, I didn't really need to work very hard to find him. Actually, he found me.

My very first weekend in Israel, I was approached at the Kotel (Western Wall) by a short man in saddle shoes, wearing a New England Patriots baseball cap given to him by Mr. Kraft, asking me if I had a place to eat lunch. Since I didn't, I shook my head and before I could say a word, I was thrown into a group of people, all with just as a perplexed look on their face as myself and following a stranger to: destination unknown. We arrived at the door of some random family, who greeted us with open arms and a five-course meal. The kids, ages two and four, didn't seem the least bit confused as to the reason for our visit. It was then that I realized the power of Jeff Seidel.

After that day, I continued to see Jeff everywhere, no matter where I went, always approaching people and offering them anything from lunch to a trip to Russia. Before I knew it, I was getting paid to learn about Judaism and Israel, registered for a 10-day all-inclusive trip to Russia for Passover, and eating Friday night dinner with his whole family at his house. Now, not only have I benefited from Jeff, I can honestly say I feel like he is my friend.



After talking to him, I couldn't believe the amount of people he affects on a daily basis. Jeff has a goal. It is to bring people closer to their religion and heritage by providing them with as many opportunities as possible. By devoting his life to fundraising and programming, he has managed to change the lives of so many students yearning for a deeper connection to their traditions.

Recently I met Ranaan Gissin, the senior advisor of Israeli Prime Minister, Ariel Sharon. Later this week, I am going to go skiing in the north on Mt. Hermon, to feel a stronger sense of and connection to the land and its versatility. And next month, I am going to go to Russia as part of Jeff's Passover program in conjunction with the 'Chessed Project' to prepare a traditional Passover 'seder' (feast) for Russian children. Jeff even offers a program for Jewish students from abroad who would like to learn more about Judaism to come to Israel for free and study for three weeks during the summer.

In the midst of a place so convoluted with tension and discord, seeing someone like Jeff Seidel constantly at work making positive changes is incredibly refreshing. It is for this reason, I would like to commend and recognize Jeff Seidel as a righteous man of our time, in a little place I like to refer to as the island of democracy surrounded by a giant sea of tyranny.

Leah Vitale is a Collegian columnist studying in Israel.

A matter of survival

Rachel Farahbakhsh

Let me just say that I count myself among the first to appreciate international diversity. My parents are both immigrants from different parts of the world and I spent 11 months last year studying abroad. I value my study abroad experience so much that when I came back to the University of Massachusetts last fall I applied to work in the International Programs Office, and am currently a peer counselor in the advising center.

All students who study abroad pay IPO for their services. IPO also provides services to international students studying at UMass including (but not limited to) assisting students with their visa paperwork, admissions, and advising. Study abroad is an incredibly valuable experience not only academically, but also personally. I don't think I have to convince anybody of that, or the fact that international diversity on this campus is also a highly valued asset.

My concern is that certain information is being presented to the general public of this campus in a way that creates incorrect assumptions about the way that IPO and the administration is functioning. I am talking specifically about the current protests against the new IPO fee being charged to international students. The $65 fee is not a surveillance fee. I stress, it is not a surveillance fee. The fee is being used to help cover the operating costs of the office, a measure that was previously not needed until the recent budget cuts caused IPO to be nearly self-supporting. There is very minimal financial support from the University. Just like almost every other department and area of student life on this campus, IPO has been affected, and drastically.

It is true that part of the operation of the office includes compliance with Federal Law, including the Patriot Act and its new regulations regarding SEVIS. It is relevant to remember that the government has always collected information about international students. What worries me is that the larger picture is being ignored. Protesting the Patriot Act — its legality and its ethics — is one thing; protesting an office (and a University) that does not have enough resources to defend or even support itself is another.

IPO is trying just as hard as every other department on campus to find ways to fairly and practically to support itself and give services to the student body. But the money is not going to come out of thin air. A $65 fee charged to the students who are the primary beneficators of the services of the said office is not unreasonable — nor is it unheard of. Several of the other campuses in the UMass system (such as UMass Boston) as well as other private and public institutions across the country and the world charge fees to their international students. Everyone is aware that the University needs more money — if it doesn't come from the government or the students (unfair though it might be) there won't be any support services (like IPO) available at all.

Maybe IPO's $65 fee should be spread over the general student body, instead of just the population that uses that office. I don't know which is more fair, but it's not fair for students to continue being misinformed. If the vitality of UMass is going to survive, we should not be paralyzing the few resources that remain by yelling at each other among mounting aggression and frustration, but instead celebrate diversity on campus and find more constructive ways to solve the larger problem.

Rachel Farahbakhsh is a UMass student.

Dean is done

Rachel Smith

Former Vermont Governor Howard Dean is not seeking the Democratic Party's nomination for the upcoming national election. Oh, I'm sorry, maybe I wasn't clear. Dean isn't running for president. Oh, did those folks in the back with the "Dean for America" bumper stickers miss something? I'm sorry. Dean isn't running for president.

Did you hear me that time? Good.

I'm writing this column Monday night, on the eve of Super Tuesday, when New York, Massachusetts, California and several other states held their primary elections. Massachusetts Senator John Kerry is seeking the nomination. North Carolina Senator John Edwards is seeking the nomination. The Reverend Al Sharpton and Ohio Congressman Dennis Kucinich are seeking the nomination.

Oh, did you happen to notice who isn't actively seeking the party's nomination for the national election? That's right, Howard Dean. Then why, oh why, are Deaniacs plastering "Vote for Dean" posters and "Dean for America" bumper stickers all over the Campus Center? Why was a crowd of Dean supporters standing across the street from John Kerry supporters in downtown Amherst this past weekend?

Honestly, I don't know.

My best guess is this is an example of grassroots stupidity. The same well-meaning ideologues who voted for Ralph Nader during the ill-fated 2000 election are now rallying their support behind a candidate who isn't running. Voting for a nonviable candidate and splintering the DNC isn't that great of an idea, folks, no matter how great his health care plan is.

Maybe this is the aftermath of a campaign built around social events rather than coherent policy. Dean did such a phenomenal job building a grassroots organization around events like his famous "meetups," maybe the Deaniacs don't want to give up their Saturday night plans just because their candidate isn't a candidate anymore.

There's always the possibility that Dean is telling his supporters to keep the faith. Let's take a look at Mr. Dean's website.

"There are a lot of ways to make change," according to Dean's campaign website. "We are leaving one track, but we are going on another track that will take back America for ordinary people again."

This makes sense. He's not running for president anymore but he wants his supporters to stay involved with the political process. This is a great idea. So where are all of the Dean for President posters coming from? Maybe what Dean really means is that he will run as an independent rather than a democrat and his supporters can follow him to another party.

"We want everyone involved in 'Dean for America' to stay involved, stay together, stay with the Democratic Party, and support the democratic nominee," according to Dean on his website. "As I have said before, I strongly urge my supporters not to be tempted by independent or third-party candidates."

So, according to the man himself, Dean supporters should keep going to meetups, keep using the Internet in new and amazing ways, keep fighting for the issues they believe in, but they should stay in the DNC. This makes sense. So why are some of you Deaniacs still campaigning for a man who isn't running for office? You shouldn't be.

Democrats differ on a wide variety of issues including free trade, same-sex marriage, foreign policy and just about everything else. One goal that all Democrats and many independents and third party members carrally around is the burning desire to kick President George W. Bush out of office come November.

Unfortunately, Bush has more money and a tighter organization than his opponents. In case the 2000 national election didn't convince you, swing voters can have a huge impact on election outcomes. The only way we're going to beat Bush is by consolidating our votes and our money around the democrat nominee. Splintering off into the margins will only help Bush get re-elected. The sooner the DNC can put differences aside and start supporting our nominee, the more organized and effective our campaign will be this year. Even though Dean didn't win any primary elections, his campaign was one of the most effective in either party's history. Dean's supporters are incredibly valuable to the DNC, and even the former governor implores his former campaign volunteers to stay in the party and support the Democratic Party's nominee.

Dean doesn't want to be a splinter in the DNC but rather a catalyst for change. The party has a long way to go before it's unified around coherent platform, and active progressive democrats have an excellent opportunity to harness the momentum from Dean's campaign and use it to modernize and unify the Democratic Party.

Dean's done folks, but the fight has just begun.

Rachel Smith is a Collegian columnist.

Popular shocker finds himself under scrutiny

Adrienne Bossi

The self-proclaimed "King of All Media," Howard Stern, was taken off the air last week on six select radio stations that carried his program throughout the United States.

Howard Stern is now the victim of a tirade of decency complaints that have left the radio talent baffled. Nothing out of the ordinary has occurred on the show in recent days. Stern is upset that this indefinite suspension from Clear Channel Radio's stations sends the message that he has done something wrong. The only reason for this suspension that came to Stern's mind is that a recent caller used a racial slur. However, Stern responded by immediately hanging up on that person.

Clear Channel Radio, the nation's largest radio chain, suspended the shock jock for violating new on-air decency policies. On-air violations are a relatively undefined term left up to the Clear Channel Radio regulators to determine.

Clear Channel called the Feb. 23 broadcast "vulgar, offensive and insulting, not just to women and African Americans but to anyone with a sense of common decency." So, what's the difference from every other Howard Stern show ever aired?

I would like to know who the Clear Channel regulators are and what basis they determine on-air material to be in violation of decency regulations. There isn't evidence of increased listener complaints. Besides, it is very easy for an unhappy listener to change the station.

Stern admittedly has a history of indecency and pushing limitations. He cannot be blamed for breaking any rules or crossing any barriers he hadn't already crossed long ago.

Critics say this push ultimately comes from our Republican-led government that has shown support throughout Bush's term for restricting free expression (see the Patriot Act.) Stern hasn't done anything differently. It seems he is another victim, along with The Oscar's and other live programming, of Janet Jackson's breast.

Who knew a diva's breast could have such a stark domino effect, a "nipple-ripple effect" if you will, on the media and society. It's just a breast. Half the population has them.

If Viacom employs the same decency monitors as Clear Channel, there is no way Stern's show will remain on air. Viacom's Infinity Broadcasting controls the syndication of the program.

Stern admittedly has a history of indecency and pushing limitations. He cannot be blamed for breaking any rules or crossing any barriers he hadn't already crossed long ago.

"If Viacom enforces a similar code, I don't seen how the Infinity stations that carry Stern's show can keep him on the air—and if that Justin-Janet episode indirectly leads to the muzzling of Howard Stern, one of the great pioneers of free speech (and yes, bawdy programming), it will be a sad, sad day for this country," said Richard Roeper of the Chicago Sun-Times.

Although this technically isn't an infringement of the First Amendment rights, it is nonetheless an outrage. Clear Channel subscribes to Stern's show and made the move to suspend his program. Therefore, it is not a violation of free speech. They are practicing their rights to private censorship, the corporate equivalent of offended listeners changing the station.

"Howard Stern does have the right to say whatever he wants anywhere, but he doesn't necessarily have the right to say it on that station if the people who run the station don't want him to," said Democratic Presidential hopeful John Kerry while campaigning in New York.

Although Clear Channel only controls six stations airing Stern's show, the principle this action illustrates is more important than the action itself. Clear Channel's actions took the choice away from listeners to decide the decency of Stern's show themselves.

A survey taken by bostonchannel.com asked its readers, "Do you think that shock jock Howard Stern's radio show should be widely broadcast with his current content?" Of those pulled, 48 percent said yes, while 52 percent said no. Stern's show still appears on 40 stations across the nation and is heard by millions of viewers.

Controversy gave birth to our society and it is still a powerful force encouraging social change. Controversial thinkers of various time periods gave us freedom of religion, women's rights, desegregated schools, equal rights to vote across all sexes and races, among other things.

Howard Stern certainly isn't to be confused with Martin Luther King, Jr. or controversial thinkers of the like. Yet, we still need people like Howard Stern who confront issues and say things we are uncomfortable with. We cannot ignore the unpleasantries in society. If he is banned from the air, whose speech will be next? Where will the line be drawn? It seems to me like we are gradually being nudged towards conformity.

Adrienne Bossi is a Collegian columnist.

I was a teenage car-killer. Now I'm reformed

Thomas Naughton

Lara and I were listening to the oldies station in my blue Buick Skylark (affordable luxury), laughing hysterically, driving double the speed limit down a long back road in Foxboro, when all of a sudden during the chorus of "Mr. Postman", my beautiful blue Buick shimmied off the road and into some woman's forsythia bush — my first accident.

Yellow flowers adorned the hood and windshield of my car on the rainy summer day in 2000. Lara and I checked ourselves for injury and because I had never been in an accident where I was driving, I reasoned, "well, I didn't hit another car or someone's child, so I guess I'll just leave. The bush isn't destroyed, its just… bent."

I thought I was so clever.

"No one will ever know." No one would have known if I hadn't left my front license plate on the woman's yard. Five minutes later, my pager vibrated the harried vibrate that can only come from mother who has been contacted by the police concerning her son, Captain Clever. If she could have dialed a special code to my pager that read, "You are dead to me," she would have.

Apparently, the brush with the bush wasn't enough for me. Over the next year and a half, I would be cited and decorated on many occasions by various police officials for my "exemplary" driving techniques. This included, but was not limited to, driving into ditches, disregarding any notion of a so-called "speed limit," proud displays of my middle finger, use of the horn as communication device — all leading up to the demise of the 1980 Buick, which I had dubbed "The Justice-mobile." To this day, whenever I drive past the intersection on Blackstone Boulevard in Providence, R.I. where I slammed into the back of a nice Russian man's car, totaling the Justice-mobile, I cross myself as though in Church; a private gesture between God and I to ensure that such an event shall never occur again.

God had a different plan for me, a punishment plan, in fact. To pay for my sins while operating the Justice-mobile in all its mayhem, a curse of death had been put on the next two vehicles I inherited, causing my poor father to indulge in a prescription of Zoloft to quell the bouts of blinding rage which I inspired with my phone calls at 2 a.m. informing him, "Daddy, there's something wrong with the car."

I graduated high school with an honorable resume which included five moving violations, three accident reports, and one state-policeman's video tape which featured the officer ripping me out of my car and barking at me for unsheathing my glorious middle finger to a family of four.

My mother is still trying to get her hands on a copy of the video even four years later to show at family parties or to my new boyfriends.

I was preparing for my first semester at the University of Massachusetts when I was informed of my date with destiny. I signed up for the re-training session offered by the Department of Motor Vehicles at Smith College and on a brisk day in October of 2001, I entered the set of the exciting reality television show, "The Degenerates of Society."

I had met my competition for "most dangerous motorist" of my classmates at that fateful re-training session. They were drunks, drug dealers, prostitutes, gang members, and everything I have ever wanted in a talk show right there in a small classroom.

I was clearly the least dangerous out of all of them, or the most dangerous depending on how you look at it, for my infractions occurred while sober, making me the minority in the group. I sat next to a gang member named Tre, who I immediately fell in love with when he showed me his tattoos and switchblade; the thought of a boy in a full sweat suit walking me to class and calling me "shorty" sends shivers up and down my spine even now.

Our teacher arrived and broke up a fight between Tre and some really ugly guy in a suit and tie who was drinking Poland Spring Vodka from a flask and shouting racial slurs (I swooned as Tre spouted off slang I had never even heard). This was the best day of my life, or the worst depending on how you look at it. I didn't want to spend eight hours talking about driving and reliving my driver's ed classes from high school, but when I met Yolanda, Tre, Robert, Xou, Susie from Southwest and all of my fellow dangers to the community, my heart was full. The icing on the cake was Morty, the ringmaster of our circus of evil.

Morty was a good old boy from the north end of Boston who didn't give a crap about any of us, and we loved him for it. Morty was a no nonsense guy, he cared about two things: driving and giving us 20 minute breaks every five minutes. Truly, if there was any man who was going to teach us how to drive better, Morty was not him, and that's why we loved him so much. Never has a Saturday moved so slowly. We talked about aggressive driving, actually using your turn signal, and why we should leave our weapons at home.

Although the whole experience was regrettable, when I walked out of that room of shame, I was free of my debt to society, and I had made some connections if I ever needed some one's legs broken. I didn't realize that I had actually gleaned something from the session until the semester had ended and my mother was driving me home. She was cut off by some ill-advised motorist and unleashed a borage of obscenities, to which I replied "Mom, that's aggressive". We looked at each other with shock on our faces. "Is this my baby boy?" my mom's face read as we drove down the Mass. Pike past the man she had just said five versions of the "f-word" to.

Later, I returned to my throne, the driver's seat with new confidence. To this day, I catch myself going the speed limit, and it's during those times that I strull (or drive recklessly) down memory lane, hearing the voice of Morty ring in my head as I pass my true love, Tre, knifing some kid who owes him money.

A tear rolls down my cheek as I realize that my life is different now. I have not received a citation in four years, except for that one I got over break that I am fighting in court in a couple weeks. I will stand in front of the judge and defy my detractors with a glimmer in my eye and a solemn promise, "I am a reformed driver."

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

ALL COLLEGIAN STAFFERS ARE REMINDED TO VOTE IN THE EDITOR IN CHIEF ELECTION BEFORE FRIDAY.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

NOT ONLY ABOUT 'VANITY'

Erika Lovley's March 1 column was on the dangers of Accutane, a prescription drug that successfully treats cystic acne. Lovley writes, "I cannot say that I have ever suffered from severe acne. However, most acne is not a life-threatening or physically-restricting problem." While most acne is not a serious problem, the acne that Accutane treats can lead to permanent scarring and depression — two very grave results.

While her dismissal of the serious mental anguish that can result from lack of treatment of a serious medical disease can be overlooked, more serious is the implication that women of childbearing age must be monitored by an outside organization. While the unborn child certainly is a consideration, what about a woman's right to doctor-patient confidentiality? As Lovley writes, "no amount of watchdog monitoring can ensure that women will take their birth control, abstain from sex, or even worry about giving birth to a child with birth defects." I would argue that this is true whether or not a woman is prescribed Accutane. Should all women be subjected to this monitoring?

According to Webmd.com, Richard Scher, MD, president of the American Academy of Dermatology, stated, "As dermatologists, we strongly believe that limiting access to [Accutane] is a disservice to patients and erodes the patient-physician relationship … education, not regulation, is the key to safe use of this drug to protect women of childbearing age." I believe this argument by a physician is more scientifically compelling than an argument made by a politician who experienced the heart wrenching loss of a child (Rep. Bart Stupak).

According to Lovley's reasoning, all drugs that cause birth defects must be removed from the market. What about nicotine and alcohol, two widely marketed drugs that treat no serious disease and are known to cause birth defects? Furthermore, Lovley gives no thoughts to the rights of a woman, facing physical and emotional scars, to confidentiality in the patient-doctor relationship and autonomy in the decision making over her body.

Clearly, Accutane is intended only to treat acne that poses more than a problem of "vanity" to a patient. Decisions such as Roe v. Wade give women the right to control their bodies. Reason and clarity, not emotionally charged vignettes (such as that of "Jenn"), must prevail in the regulation of prescription drugs that treat serious medical problems.

Andrea Ponte
UMass student

FOCUSING ON THE BRIGHT SIDE

In response to Jeffery Napolitano's article, "A Campaign of Trivialities," published on Monday, Feb. 23, we do not believe that the basic human rights of freedom of expression, of the press and the ability to elect a government responsible to its citizens, are trivial. The Arab-Israeli conflict is one that is very complex and surrounded by much emotion. However, it is not all that is going on in the Middle East.

Napolitano's attack on the Student Alliance For Israel's (SAFI) flyer campaign that our organization has undertaken is absurd and unwarranted. Israel is a diverse multicultural, multi-religious and vibrant democracy. The desire of this campaign was to highlight Israel's freedoms and the many achievements of its citizens. It is a great pity that the same freedoms enjoyed by Israeli's Muslim, Christian and Jewish citizens cannot be enjoyed by the citizens of Israel's neighbors.

We find it difficult to understand what Napolitano's problem is with becoming more informed. Over the past three years over 900 Israeli's have been killed as a result of the bombing of buses, restaurants, and universities. And despite this barrage of violence that has been unleashed upon the Israeli people, they continue to stand firm against terrorism and thrive. We think it is important for students on this campus to have the opportunity to make up their own minds and decide what they think is important.

Rather than focusing on the bloodshed that has gripped this land for so many decades, we decided to portray a positive image and show people in Israel beyond the conflict. While Napolitano would demonize Israel and its people at every opportunity, we would like to see students on campus gaining greater understanding of more than just the body counts. We look forward to the day when Israel and its neighbors can arrive at a negotiated resolution to the conflict that has claimed so many lives on both sides. We will continue to assert Israel's right to exist as a Jewish state, free of terrorism, within secure and defined boundaries.

The SAFI Executive Board

MISGUIDED CRITICISM

It is a testament to Noam Chomsky's near-infallibility that his would-be critics, such as Gilad Skolnick, should have to resort to only the most fallacious, fraudulent, and myopic discourse in their misguided and dubious attempts at undermining him and his views. Skolnick's column was so ridiculous, so filled with lies and nonsense, that one wouldn't even bother responding if not for the chance that he may have succeeded in misguiding some of the Collegian audience.

Where should we begin? It might first be appropriate to point out that Professor Chomsky himself is Jewish. That aside, any realistic evaluation of — nay, even the briefest glance at — Chomsky's writings and career would thoroughly discredit Skolnick's fantastical Neo-Nazi label. While Skolnick was able to fill an entire quarter of your opinion page with his piece, he writes very little of substance: within the lengthy and misplaced statistics of anti-Semitic acts and cases of racially motivated genocide, only two actual statements about Professor Chomsky's alleged views are made (of course nothing is said about the lecture in question). Both claims, however, are notoriously dubious and will fall apart under the slightest scrutiny, and I encourage anyone interested — indeed, I challenge anyone who would dare call or believe Noam Chomsky to be a profit-driven, Holocaust-denying "Neo-Nazi" — to do their own research, to see what he has actually written and done for the world, and come to their own conclusions.

I for one consider myself extremely privileged to have been able to listen to Noam Chomsky speak in person at Bowker Auditorium. I found his lecture on the Bush administration's foreign policies, like everything else of Chomsky's that I've read or heard, at once fascinating, inspiring, and of unparalleled clarity. As a university community I feel we are all indebted to the Political Economy and Research Institute (PERI) for inviting Noam Chomsky to speak here. As a global community, we should all be thanking our lucky stars the man happens to exist at all.

Mike Sances
UMass student

NOTICING A TREND

I read Johnny Donaldson's "A Possible Cause to the Tragedies of Human History" last week and I was amazed that I was finally reading an article discussing the very things that I had been thinking. I wanted to let Donaldson know that I thought that it took a lot of courage to say the things he said. I also wanted him to know that he is not the only person who has seen the trend of people fighting and killing in the name of religion.

I, too, have noticed that the people who constantly live and preach their religion usually tend to be the ones who use those words to cause pain, torture, and death. What religion out there glorifies these things? I am certain that many others have noticed this but not many wish to discuss it. This is why I wanted the author to know that I, as well as other University of Massachusetts students, felt that it was wonderful that he had the courage to attack the subject head-on.

While I may not agree with abolishing all religions, I do agree that having one's own beliefs is important. The subject of religion as a whole can be controversial, and to narrow it down and discuss the pains caused may anger some of those who hold their religion on the highest pedestal. I just wanted Donaldson to know that I felt that he wrote his article very well and that he had substantial evidence to support his views. I look forward to reading more of his work.

Stephanie Cortez
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

This '24' the best yet

The Magic Picture Box is a column about that invention we all have and some of us actually watch — the television.

There is one show on television that can aptly be applied to riding a roller coaster ... a coaster in the dark mind you. The track winds this way and that, you go up and down and you don't know what is going to happen next. This ride is called "24," one of the best damn drama's there is on television today. Currently in its third season, "24" just gets better and better every week.

Magic Picture Box

Ryan Aubert

The gimmick of "24" is that a whole season occurs during one day. Every episode is an hour in that day. Thus, events occur in real time. This gives the whole series a sense of pressure and intensity. At any moment something unexpected may happen — and expectedly it usually does. It's as if the writers go into a room and ask themselves, "What can not ever happen?" Then they try to force that onto the screen. These writers must be masterminds of storytelling.

The main character of "24" is Jack Bauer, played superbly by Kiefer Sutherland. Bauer is an agent for the Counter-Terrorism Unit (CTU), which specializes, oddly enough, in tracking down those "ruthless, filthy terrorists." Bauer is simply put, a hero. He stopped the assassination of a senator in season one, averted an atomic bomb in season two, and is now attempting to stop an outbreak of a virus. Wow, and those are just the main storylines.

Another fine actor on the show is Dennis Haysbert who plays President David Palmer. President Palmer is an honest man and a sincere leader. Sherry Palmer (Penny Johnson Jerald) is Palmer's ex-wife who portrays the most negative image of an ex-wife with an ax to grind. You come to love her as much as you hate her. Sinfully delicious.

A varied team at CTU, including his daughter Kim Bauer (Elisha Cuthbert) joins Bauer. Kim was kidnapped multiple times in season one. Then she was chased by a cougar and got seduced by a madman the next season. Thankfully, this season she's elevated herself to an agent at CTU where daddy can watch her and assure that she is safe and sound (supposedly, anyway.)

Other CTU agents include the calm and collected Tony Almeida (Carlos Bernard), the beautiful and smart Michelle Dessler (Reiko Aylesworth), and Chase Edmunds (James Badge Dale) who was probably added this season to bring in the female viewers because of his looks.

If you have never watched "24" and are interested in jumping on the ride, then there is good news. "24" starts up again March 30, and both seasons one and two are available on DVD. So you have plenty of extra procrastinating hours to indulge in the back episodes. Now, if you don't have the money, (and truthfully, who does?) then the following is what you need to know:

1. In the last episode, CTU tracked the virus to a hotel. This hotel was put on lock-down while CTU agents Michelle and Gael, among others, arrived to find the detonator. Gael eventually found the virus but it was too late. During the last seconds of the episode, the virus was released through the ventilation system.

2. The president's ex-wife Sherry was tapped by the president to deal with a situation involving a rich businessman named Milliken. The president's chief of staff and brother (Wayne) had an affair with Milliken's wife. Milliken discovered the adultery and threatened to block the legislation in which he held a major influence. This is where the horrible ex-wife comes in. Sherry blocks Milliken's wife from giving him medicine when he is having a heart attack. With Milliken snuffed out, the administration is now facing a cover-up. How scandalous!

Those are the two basic plots you should know to start watching and be up to speed. So, come join the ride and see why "24" recently won the Screen Actors Guild and Golden Globe awards. The show is just a marvelous pleasure to revel in.

"24" returns on March 30. Tuesday's on Fox at 9 p.m.

Ryan Aubert is a Collegian Columnist.

Passion and violence

Gibson's depiction of the death of Jesus Christ laden with too much Hollywood style

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

That's as an apt a title as any for Mel Gibson's bludgeoning, gore-drenched retelling of the final hours of Jesus Christ. It is a title with far more veracity than, say, the actual moniker, the clunky and awkward-sounding "The Passion of the Christ." It isn't so much a movie about Jesus, but a movie about Jesus' suffering. For all the violence and torment on display, there's precious little faith or spirituality.

In "The Passion of the Christ" Jesus gets punched, kicked, thrown over a wall and beat into a purple, bruised pulp — and that's just in the first half hour. He gets whipped, first with canes than with cat-o-nine-tails tipped with jagged shards of metal and stone. When he gets nailed to the cross, he's done so with loving focus on the nails being pounded into his hands. The camera lingers on the gory, criss-crossing wounds on his body, the oozing, red lattice work that makes Jesus look like a walking sore. There's no doubt that Gibson, in his way, wants us to see, feel, and know the full extent of Jesus' suffering for our sins. He succeeded. But did he have to rub our faces in torture to do it?

"The Passion of the Christ" is the Gospel as horror film, a two-hour wallow in torture and sadism that amounts to nothing more than a snuff film with pretensions of both art and religion, the twin pinnacles of culture. Gibson may make us feel the brutality of Jesus' agony, but he never makes it understood who the man was. For a supposedly Traditionalist Catholic, the director seems more interested in presenting anguish then in preaching inspiration.

'The Passion of the Christ'
Directed by Mel Gibson
Starring Jim Caviezel Monica Bellucci
Icon/Newmarket
Rated R
126 mins
Grade C+

The theme seems to go with Hollywood evening, opening Easter. Gibson also no denying that the movie was well made. Here's a film in which undeniable artistry and craftsmanship lay side by side a story that is at once bombastic, overwrought and heavy-handed while also being a sickening, sprawling and wrenching experience. Gibson puts you through the ringer until you feel by the time the movie ends and Jesus has been resurrected, "The Passion of the Christ" has been overwhelmed by its director's vocabulary.

Throughout Gibson's movie, the actors [illegible] and have the charisma of [illegible]. Gibson's direction is workmanlike, but the focus of the film isn't one of inspiration or even [illegible] and [illegible] Gibson's sermon. Gibson scrutinizes the excruciating physical agony and the resulting [illegible] or awe, fear, confusion and despair by talking cold or thundering, literal interpretation of the Bible. Gibson has forgotten the religion in it.

The violence would hurt been more bearable had Gibson given us any insight into Jesus: his life, his work, his message. What we have here is barely a sketch of a man, a cipher posing as a messiah. Gibson and his co-writer, Benedict [illegible] give us no sense of who the man is, or even why he is being tortured and killed. Yes, the story is as old as time and yes, there are generations upon generations of Christians who are [illegible] familiar with the stories. But this is a movie, and as such, it is Gibson's requirement to provide a back-story; otherwise, all we are left with is gore. If Jesus' miracles had been shown, had his life been fully illuminated,

See PASSION on page 7

A great place to hang your hat

By Amy Forni
Collegian Correspondent

Looking for a casual, comfortable restaurant atmosphere that caters to most of your cravings? Fedora's Tavern located in the Village Commons in South Hadley is "a place to hang your hat," as the name suggests. Previous owner Charles Bowles masterminded the motto to create a put-your-feet-up and relax restaurant appeal.

Fedora's Tavern has been serving the community for 13 years, ever since Mount Holyoke College approached restaurant entrepreneur Charles Bowles. The college wanted a restaurant that would attract students. Present owner Mary Barr said the relaxed and casual setting is popular for families, as well as a younger crowd.

Fedora's has the capacity to seat 100 customers in their two spacious dinning rooms, both with televisions. There is also a large-screen television facing the bar. The deep green carpeting and painted walls decorated with a variety of hats and old-fashioned hatboxes creates a homey, comfortable setting. High ceilings with skylight windows and dim dinner lighting generate an intimate locale as well.

The dinner crowd arrives around 6 p.m. Customers fill the tables and bar. Barr said Fedora' prime time starts Thursday evenings and continues into the weekend. Parties of six or more can make reservations, but for smaller parties the wait usually lasts only 15 to 30 minutes during even the busiest hours, and at the most, an hour on holidays.

Barr said she does not target a particular audience because the restaurant appeals to everyone. Seventy-five percent of the restaurant's cliental are repeat customers. According to Barr, regular customers generate the majority of Fedora's business because of the size of the menu, the variety and specials offered, as well as Fedora's excellent customer service. Barr personally contacts customers by responding to comment cards. The welcoming wait staff knows the ins and outs of the menu and checks to make sure customers have everything they need throughout the meal.

Barr said the menu consists of "a complete American fare with large, homemade entrees" and customers "can find anything." A seasonal menu serves entrees such as grilled swordfish with cranberry butter for $12.99, and cranberry salad with goat cheese, dried cranberries, cucumber, and red onions for $6.99.

As one of the cooks, Barr understands the importance of catering to the health-conscious eaters. She developed "Mary's Healthy Choice" menu with meals such as oriental chicken salad with teriyaki-marinated chicken breast, broccoli, tomatoes, and water chestnuts for $6.99.

"Tavern Tempters", appetizers, start off a meal and range from $5.49 to $7.99 including generous portions of Buffalo wings, baked brie, hot seven layered dip, and potato skins to mention a few. Fedora's proudly serves a New England Recipe and People's Choice Best Clam Chowder for $3.49 a cup and $3.99 a bowl. Also, Fedoras touches on a little Tex/Mex cuisine with People's Choice Best Chili in a tortilla bowl. Salads range from $3.99 to $7.99 and the restaurant offers a soup of the day.

All entrees come with a fresh garden salad and hot breadsticks. The versatile entrees range from catches of the day to steak dishes, Italian fare, and vegetarian friendly dishes. All entrees range from $9.99 to $15.99, and come in very generous portions.

Fedora's offers an Early Bird Special from 4 to 6 p.m., Sunday through Thursday, for $8.99. The ever-popular Cappy Hour runs from 4 to 6 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and features $.99 wings and nachos, or half priced wings, nachos, and quesadillas. The bar features draft and bottled beer, white and red wine, specialty drinks and keeps twelve varieties of beer on tap. The menu also offers a Mix n' Match Combo for $5.99 consisting of a half sandwich with either a cup of soup, salad, or chili. All sandwiches come with French fries and cole slaw and range from $5.99 to $7.49 and burgers range from $6.29 to $6.99.

Fedora's has reasonably priced variety of meal choices and promotes a laid-back, comfortable atmosphere to enjoy a satisfying meal in. The versatility of Fedora's menu includes many genres of cuisine and appeals to most customers. If you are hungry and looking for something new, check out Fedora's Tavern for a casual, satiating dining experience.

Dirty Dancing in boredom

Sequel fails to reach time-of-life level of original

By Tammi Munn
Collegian Staff

Ah the 1950s, senior year of high school, and visions of college in the near future. Life is going well for Katey Miller. That is until Dad uproots the whole family to move to Cuba for a Ford Corporation executive position. Now they have to adjust to living at the Oceana Hotel in Havana during Fidel Castro's Revolution, so sets the scene for this bland romance flick.

Romola Garai stars as the uptight and studious Katey. The rest of her family adapts well to the move, but of course not her. She attempts to socialize with the other snobby American teenagers, but disapproves of their rudeness towards a cute Cuban waiter, Javier Suarez (Diego Luna.) One of the teenagers calls him a "spic" as he inadvertently spills a tray of drinks as a result of Katey's elbow.

Katey grows intrigued by Javier, his culture, the music and dancing. The moves the Cuban natives perform are mesmerizing, yet risqué. She wastes no time in going back to the hotel to awkwardly try some of the moves in front of a mirror in a public room. Odd, she didn't seem like the kind of person who would feel comfortable attempting this in public. Javier walks in and she is embarrassed for a second, but he is nice and says it is good dancing, but then reveals the horrible truth.

The two begin a friendship that eventually costs Javier his job. Katey feels bad that she was the cause and also discovers that the job supported Javier's financially destitute family. She comes up with the idea that she and Javier could win an upcoming dance contest so that she would be able learn Latin moves and he could have the prize money to give his family a better life.

The pair organizes a routine that mixes Javier's smooth Cuban moves with Katey's ballroom dancing. They seem to dance perfectly overnight as their dance moves go from horrible to great without an in-between phase.

'Dirty Dancing: Havana Nights'
Directed by Guy Ferland
Starring Diego Luna Romola Garai
Artisan
Rated PG-13
96 mins
Grade C

The day for the competition arrives. Katey's parents (Sela Ward and John Slattery) are stunned to see their conservative daughter on the dance floor in a skimpy dress and her Cuban partner grope her as they begin their sexy movements. It turns out her parents weren't that appalled at the dancing or her outfit. Her mother was jealous because she was once a great ballroom dancer at one time and her father was a little upset that little Katey lied about where she went at night. Eventually her parents become proud of their daughter's bumping and grinding and even videotape it. It will be something nice to show the grandkids someday.

This movie has a few similar aspects to the 1987 version of Dirty Dancing that starred Patrick Swayze and Jennifer Grey. There is the good girl meets bad boy story and there is still much dirty dancing fun to be had. The couple learns important truths about life from one another. There is an instrumental "I Had the Time of My Life" playing during certain moments. And last of all a shockingly old-looking Patrick Swayze makes a not-so-small cameo. He very conveniently plays the dance instructor at the hotel and he is the one who ultimately convinces Katey to join the contest.

The film seems promising at the beginning, but it is sad to say that the whole film comes crashing down towards the end. Javier and Katey are lying on the beach at sunrise. They are telling each other how happy they are to be experiencing these moments together. When Katey says she is glad to be with Javier, she says it matter-of-factly with no apparent emotion whatsoever. Ben Stein could have said the line with more feeling than she did. It completely destroys the entire scene and the whole audience cringed at the spoiling of the moment.

The plot could have been stronger if they lingered longer in certain scenes.

The pace seems terribly rushed. It was only 87-minutes long, so there wasn't time to embellish the story and to establish the characters and their relationships with one another. It had a lot of potential, but overall it proved to be a big disappointment.

New album truly one-tracked

FANTOMAS from page 6

One cannot deny the sheer audacity or intensity of his vision however. Fantomas enlists bell chimes, rattling clocks, theremin-esque synths, romantic piano, doctors whispering, unidentified squishy objects, funeral hymns, and resonating gongs. And that's all in the first 10 minutes.

Elsewhere discordant, off tempo pianos collide with conflicting bass drum heartbeats and Patton scats frantic syllables like a madcap doctor getting crazy with the scissors. If they were truly trying to epitomize the sound of being awake during surgery though, the searing pain of the experience would probably instruct the piece to be a scathing, dissonant Masami Akita-inspired noisefest rather than an eclectic collage that often slides into loungey upright bass plucks and soft Italian crooning like it does 32-minutes into "Delirium Cordia's" first and only track.

A more insightful metaphor for the album's acoustically symbolic territory would be the score to one's dreams when going under the knife, after being anesthetized with Nitrous Oxide and LSD. This may better account for the album's mostly somber ambiance of disconcerting gusts of wind and shuttered backwards-masked voices followed by the occasional anarchic breakout.

The result is harrowing, albeit a bit cheesy at times. Though Patton and company incorporate an array of new effects into the mix, his tribute to the dated perfectionism of the fabulous imported horror composers is very loaded. If you can look past these anachronistic references or even (God forbid) indulge in them, you're likely to find one hell of a record whose warm breath and hovering scalpel constantly dangle above your numbed body.

"Delirium Cordia" is Mike Patton's "Kill Bill"; an experimental pastiche of an album that tries to smush everything in at once. The result is a little bit overwhelming, but to doubt the man's surgical care of the material, given his devotion to it, seems not only ignorant but also downright heretical.

Film comes off as dispassionate

PASSION from page 6

ism. And Gibson gets two fine performances out of actors Hristo Naumov Shopov, who plays Pontius Pilate as a conflicted, basically decent statesman and Jarreth Merz, as a dignified Simon.

As for the film's biggest names, they aren't given much to do. Jim Caviezel doesn't so much act as endure, and he fails to give his Jesus much presence. But when the character is nothing more than a symbol to be beaten into the rawest of hamburger, then what can one do? Monica Bellucci is called on to do nothing but quiver and tremble in awe and horror as Jesus is tortured.

Is the film anti-Semitic? It's a question I've avoided this entire review. And the answer, at least in my eyes, is no. The Pharisee council is presented as hateful idiots, but (with a few exceptions) the Roman soldiers who whip, flog and flagellate Jesus come off worse, with Gibson turning them into the kind of slavering, vicious, boneheaded thugs only seen as the minions in the worst of movies. Gibson's inability to avoid such banal old cinematic conceits cheapens the drama of the film. Perhaps Gibson's original intentions with "The Passion of the Christ" were noble in nature, but results aren't. "The Passion of the Christ" basks in the pain of Jesus Christ without imparting any wisdom as to why he was important. This isn't faith. This is overkill.

Fantomas releases another unique album

Veteran rockers pool their talents again in an album that may stick in listener's hearts

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

"Who knows what evil lurks in the hearts of men?" The revised answer to that infamous question posed by rockabilly god Link Wray might deservedly be stated, "Fantomas knows." The answer is indeed appropriate seeing as how Fantomas covered Henry Mancini's "Experiment in Terror" (itself a clever knockoff of Wray's "The Shadow Knows") only two albums ago and has here scored the most sinister, unsettling, 74-minute single-track album that you will hear all year.

Glenn Branca paved the way for experimental rock symphonies back in the early 1980s so the 74-minute mark should not be misconstrued as boundary-breaking. Regardless, "Delirium Cordia" does go through various rumbling phases and as the bands latest experiment in terror it could have just as easily been divided into separate "chapters" like Fantomas' eponymous debut. Like a David Lynch DVD, the inability to peruse Fantomas's newest release for your favorite parts is an artistic choice by the band members who would kindly ask you to absorb the delirium of "Delirium Cordia" in one sitting.

For those who don't know, Fantomas has been touted as a supergroup comprised of, Trevor Dunn (Mr. Bungle), Dave Lombardo (Slayer), Buzz Osbourne (Melvins), and music veteran Mike Patton. Though each member does yield a certain degree of mastery to their discipline, it is really the addition of Patton that garnered the group the notoriety that it now has.

Fantomas
'Delirium Cordia'
Ipecac

When Patton's Faith No More disbanded in 1997, the news hardly came as a shock to anyone. Though they would later be credited with creating rap-metal (an honor I'm sure Patton is kicking himself over now), FNM were almost immediately passed off as a one hit wonder. By the time their cleverly titled swan song "Album of the Year" tanked among critics and fans alike, few could deny that the breakup was likely for the best. Besides after years of fighting and alienating their fanbase, most hardcore devotees knew that Patton had already moved on to produce his best work with other projects.

Hardly an offshoot of those many projects and defying the time-honored tradition of supergroups sucking horribly, Fantomas came hurling into the world like a wad of pent-up rage detained under years of thankless touring and mind-numbing screams for "War Pigs." In this new incarnation, Patton's voice worked as the fourth instrument of destruction and nary a discernible lyric was to be heard.

After an album covering various film scores and a jumbled live collaboration with The Melvins, Fantomas are back with a concept album scoring some kind of horrifically botched surgical procedures. Deliciously packaged in a pitch black casing with a glossy booklet of disturbing, surgical photography by Max Hellweg, "Delirium Cordia" begins with the sound of a needle dropping onto the spindle of a turntable as if this were a recently remastered soundtrack to a forgotten Dario Argento classic. There definitely is a feeling of being out of time on "Delirium." Not as if trapped inside an irregular heartbeat as the literal translation the album's title suggests, but rather one feels like they were being transported back to a golden era of horror films where the musical accompaniments were not just stocked with Static X outtakes.

Though consistently cited by sampledelic artists who simply pinch a Herrmann or Morricone loop onto some hip hop beats, the only time that these ominous works are adequately represented in their full symphonic grace is when oddballs like Patton and Dunn's Mr. Bungle project choose to provide some unsettling downtime between their bipolar spazzouts.

Patton's haters are usually not impressed and surely the mostly beatless ambience on "Delirium Cordia" will have them begging him to go back to California with the Chili Peppers and grow his hair out again.

It's easy to sympathize with the naysayers sometimes. His pretensions not only call attention to themselves on this project, they oftentimes scream at random intervals or yodel out in Benedictine chant. The last twenty minutes of the album contain only the sounds of a turntable groove, clicking at the pace of a weakened heartbeat. Is the turntable/ CD player here representing the pulse of an Electrocardiogram after the aforemented sonic surgery? Could the record needle be substituting for an IV needle? Or are Fantomas just yanking their audience around with utter contempt being the motivation behind this hysterical tedium?

See FANTOMAS on page 7

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Kevin Glenz scored six goals and posted two assists in leading UMass to a 13-7 victory over Hartford.

Minutemen record first win

MEN'S LAX from page 10

"You need those guys to pick it up and to score around the cage to be a good team. Especially the style we play, they need to score, and they did today."

The nine goals produced by the UMass attackmen — including sophomore Tony Ventiquattro's first of the season — was five more than it had in the Minutemen's 12-7 loss to North Carolina on Saturday.

While the Minutemen enjoyed a comfortable lead in the second half, the first half played a little more even than Cannella would have liked. The Hawks didn't trail by more than one goal until Glenz's third goal at 5:36 of the second quarter, making it 7-5, and led twice on goals from senior Lawrence McDonald and sophomore Mark Russ midway through the first.

"I was disappointed in our team, the way they came out," Cannella said. "I haven't been disappointed in a team here, in the way they've come out and been ready to play, and these kids weren't ready to play."

Karem did well to keep the Hawks in it in the first half, and made 13 saves before being pulled in favor of freshman Franklin Pargh with 2:22 to go.

"I give Hartford a lot of credit, they really packed it in on defense, their goalie had a really good game, particularly in the first half," Cannella said. "They slowed the ball down on offense, they scored on their opportunities."

The Minutemen took 53 shots in the game, while Hartford took a more efficient 16.

At halftime, though, Cannella spoke to his players, and that seemed to make a difference, because UMass came flying out of the gates in the second half, outscoring the Hawks 4-1 in the third quarter.

"I said, 'every one of you know that you're better than the way you played in the first half, and let's go out there and play the way we can play,'" Cannella said.

The Minutemen are off until Saturday, when they visit Stony Brook at 1 p.m.

Skiing continues to find success

SKIING from page 10

also finished third behind Pomeroy, who turned in the top UMass performance with a sixth place finish out of 62 entrants with a two-race time of 1:40.08. Hawkins came in eighth place with a time of 1:41.20, while sophomore Patrick Bachant placed 11th with a time of 1:41.77.

In Giant Slalom competition at the Colby-Sawyer Carnival at Mount Sunapee, the Minutewomen managed to place fourth despite Maxfield's poorest finish of the season: twelfth out of 57 competitors with a two-run time of 2:01.11.

On the men's side, Hawkins continued his successful campaign by winning the event with a two-race time of 1:49.19. Bachant finished 11th overall with a two-run time of 1:54.55, and Pomeroy finished 13th overall with a two-run time of 1:54.65.

The Minutewomen — namely Maxfield — also found success at the Boston College Carnival held at Auctuney Mountain, where the team finished third in the Slalom and second in the GS while Maxfield continued her tremendous success with wins in both events.

Maxfield won her fourth consecutive Slalom with a two-run time of 1:43.32, and took home her second straight Giant Slalom with a two-run time of 1:44.48.

Freshman Jen Barranger placed 12th overall in the Slalom with a time of 1:52.75, while in the Giant Slalom, sophomore Caitlin Doughty turned in a top-10 time of 1:46.18, placing her fifth overall.

Hawkins and Maxfield led the charge at both the MIT Slalom Carnival held at Loon Mountain as well as the Brown University Giant Slalom Carnival held at Tenney Mountain. The Minutewomen won both events while the men rebounded from a last-place finish in the Slalom to finish second in the Giant Slalom.

Maxfield placed first in the Slalom for the third consecutive week with a two-run time of 1:49.62, and beat out 50 skiers in the GS to record her first win of the season in the event with a two-run time of 1:41.22.

Sophomore Shaleighne Collins also turned in a top-10 performance in the Slalom with a two-run time of 1:57.67, good for eighth. In the GS sophomore captain Caitlin Doughty turned in a fourth-place finish with a time of 1:43.49.

Hawkins finished third in the Slalom, but saved his best for the Giant Slalom, winning with a two-run time of 1:34.97. Senior captain Pomeroy came in ninth with a time of 1:38.97.

Competing in Waterville Valley, N.H. for the Plymouth State Carnival, the men finished third out of 10 in the Slalom (328.06 points) and fifth out of 10 in the Giant Slalom (547.71 points), and the women captured fourth in the Slalom (326.34 points) and second in the Giant Slalom (201.44 points.)

Hawkins won both the Slalom and GS for the Minutemen, marking the first time this season the freshman accomplished that feat, while Maxfield won the Slalom for the Minutewomen and finished as the runner-up in the Giant Slalom.

At the season opening UMass Carnival held at Berkshire East in Charlemont, Mass., the women emerged from the ten-team field victorious while the men placed fifth out of 10.

Individually, Maxfield, a freshman, was victorious in the Slalom, while also leading the women to team victory in the event. The Minutewomen finished the Slalom with 210.81 points, and also won the Giant Slalom with 284.4 points. Maxfield, who finished second in the Giant Slalom, missed first place by just .47 seconds with a two-run score of 1:31.92.

On the men's side, UMass placed fifth as a team in the Slalom with 344.45 points and placed fourth in the Giant Slalom with 460.59 points. Freshman Rush Hawkins won the GS with a two-run score of 1:26.65, including a 41.27 mark on his second run that was the top run of the day.

Senior captain David Pomeroy finished sixth with a time of 1:29.35, while sophomore Marc Epstein came in eighth with a time of 1:29.35.

Former Reds owner Marge Schott dies at 75

By Joe Kay
Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Marge Schott, the tough-talking, chain-smoking owner of the Cincinnati Reds who won a World Series but was repeatedly suspended for offensive remarks, died Tuesday, a hospital spokeswoman said. She was 75.

Schott was hospitalized about three weeks ago for breathing difficulties and repeatedly needed treatment for lung problems in recent years. Christ Hospital spokeswoman Dona Buckler did not release a cause of death.

Schott had reportedly been on a ventilator during her treatment in the hospital's intensive care unit.

Schott kept a low profile after she ended years of turmoil by selling her controlling interest in the club in October 1999. She appeared at news conferences when she made donations to the zoo and other local organizations.

She remained a limited partner in the team's ownership group and sued owner Carl Lindner because she didn't like her seats in the new Great American Ball Park, where the Reds moved in 2003.

The Reds had no immediate comment on her death.

At the team's spring training camp in Sarasota, Fla., Reds shortstop Barry Larkin said he hopes the controversies Schott was involved in don't overshadow the good things she did, including her money donations.

"I think people are remembered for the good things they do when they're gone," said Larkin, who has played for the Reds since 1986. "Now that she's gone they will remember the parties she had to raise money for kids, her involvement with the zoo, her giving to minority programs. She gave to minority programs before her racist comments came out.

"People ask me all the time about her racist comments. They ask me how I could talk to her," said Larkin, who is black. "But I had a good relationship with her. I just go on personal experience. She was always respectful to me and my family."

Schott's outspokenness as owner became her legacy and her downfall.

Schott had inherited and expanded her husband's business empire after he died in 1968. Until she took over the Reds in the mid-1980s, she was known as a car dealer who made campy television commercials featuring her beloved St. Bernards.

Once she got control of the front office, she became one of the most prominent figures in the history of baseball's first professional team.

The Reds won the 1990 World Series, sweeping the Oakland A's while Schott rubbed dog hair on manager Lou Piniella and his players.

Two years later, her use of racial slurs created a national controversy that overshadowed the club for nearly a decade. Baseball officials ordered her to watch her comments, but she continued to publicly praise Hitler — saying he was "good at the beginning" but then "went too far" — and make disparaging remarks about ethnic groups.

In May 1996, after hours of consultations with baseball officials, Schott released a statement saying she was sorry her remarks offended people.

"This was not my intent at all," she said. "Let me take this opportunity to set the record straight. I do not and have never condoned Adolf Hitler's policies of hatred, militarism and genocide. Hitler was unquestionably one of history's most despicable tyrants."

With the team's limited owners ready to vote her out as the controlling partner, she sold all but one of her shares to Lindner in 1999 for $67 million.

As she left the spotlight, Schott blamed the other owners for her fate.

"I don't know what I would have done differently, except for stood up and fought with the boys a little more," she said, shortly after the sale was complete.

Growing up in Cincinnati, Schott attended a Catholic girls' school and the University of Cincinnati.

She married Charles J. Schott in 1952 at age 21. When her husband died in 1968 at age 41, she was left with a car dealership, real estate and companies that made bricks and concrete.

TEACH-IN ON WAR AND OCCUPATION

Saturday March 6th
Herter Hall, UMass

9:30 Coffee and Bagels

10:00-11:30 War and Resistance, Herter 227
Bill Fletcher, TransAfrica Forum
Peta Lindsey, International ANSWER
Fernado Suarez del Solar, father of U.S. soldier slain in Iraq

11:45-1:00 Workshops
Veterans and Military Families Speak Out, Herter 227
The Human Cost of War: Voices from the Frontlines, Herter 601
Racism at Home and the Patriot Act, Herter 301

1:00-2:00 Lunch

2:00-3:30 Internal and External Occupations: America, Iraq and Palestine
Rania Masri, Iraq Action Coalition
Sut Jhally, Media Education Foundation

3:45-5:00 Workshops
Imperialism, Herter 301
War and the Economy, Herter 601
Palestine, Herter 227

5:15-6:00 Closing Session

Workshop speakers include: Vijay Prashad (Trinity College), Claudia Lefko (Northampton Committee to Lift the Sanctions and Stop the Bombing in Iraq), Nancy Talanian (Bill of Rights Defense Committee), Adam Shapiro (International Solidarity Movement), Alisa Klein (Israeli-American anti-Zionist Palestine solidarity activist), Mazin Qumsiyeh (Al-Awda, The Palestine Right to Return Coalition), Kevin Noonan (Western Mass Open Pantry), Diane Scherrer (Veterans for Peace), Kate Harris (Solidaridad Colombia), Preston Smith (Labor Party), and many others.

Free and open to the public.
For more information contact Mark Nelson, nelson@mc.umass.edu or Mark Brenner 413-577-0241

Join Us March 5th, to say Not Just War! Arab Cultural Celebration, UMass SUB

10am-3pm: Exhibitions and Crafts
Traditional Handicrafts
Regional Foods
Henna Body Art
Informational Exhibitions

7pm-midnight: Music and Dance
Open Mike Poetry Slam
Regional Dance and Music
Hip Hop Artists Movement in Motion
Performances, and More

For more information contact: ALANA Affairs, 413-545-2517 or the Arab Student Club, arab@hfa.umass.edu

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive, Chicopee
From Showtime, CBS' "Late Show with David Letterman" and NBC's "Late Night with Conan O'Brien"
BRIAN REGAN
1st Time Appearance!

MARCH 26TH APRIL 3RD APRIL 10TH APRIL 17TH APRIL 18TH

BILL BELLAMY JOHN WITHERSPOON GREG PROOPS MIKE EPPS DAVE ATTELL

Clip & Curl 665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
SPRING FLING!
One hour massages or Aveda facials
regularly $50
NOW $45
Sunkiss your hair before you even leave!
Highlighting starting at $40
$5 off with this ad!
Tips and Toes Package
Spa Manicure & Pedicure
Regularly $52
NOW $45
WE USE AVEDA AND PAUL MITCHELL PRODUCTS
Expires 3/31/04

NEW THIS WEEK!
COLD CREEK MANOR
DUPLEX
GOOD BOY!
LOONEY TUNES
SCHOOL OF ROCK
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

BANG
BANG
BANG

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Back on track

Minutemen down Hartford for season's first win

By ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With two of its offensive stars out of the lineup, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team needed a scorer yesterday. It got one in senior Kevin Glenz.

The Minutemen (1-1) downed the Hartford Hawks 13-7 yesterday at Garber Field, thanks to a sizzling six-goal, two-assist performance from Glenz. The attackman from Merrick, N.Y. piled on five goals in the second half, jumpstarting a Minuteman offense that took 52 shots, but didn't begin to separate from the Hawks (0-2) until late in the third quarter.

Included in Glenz's six-goal day was the game winner, set up by defenseman Stephen Byrnes' charge through midfield, and a freshman attacker Matt Tundo's feed in front of the net. Glenz took Tundo's pass, and slipped a shot past goaltender Jordan Karem as he fell to the ground, making it 8-6 UMass.

UMass	13
Hartford	7

The Minutemen never looked back, running away with five more goals before the Hawks could answer.

"Every game I'm going to try to score six goals if I can," said Glenz, who doubled his previous game-high for goals. "Today it just happened to work. With our two stars out, it's hard sometimes to keep on working, guys get down on themselves. It was nice to be able to score six goals today and help my team out."

Glenz stepped up for an attack that was missing last year's leading scorer, senior Jeff Zywicki, who was out with a nagging back injury. UMass was also without one of its top midfielders, Sean Morris, still sidelined with mononucleosis.

"It's important, if you're going to be a good team, you need your attack to score a lot of goals," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "We've had that here over the last few years. Those guys have to score, and they've been struggling to find somebody that's gonna score some goals. Fortunately Kevin had six, and Matt Tundo had two.

See MEN'S LAX on page 8

AMELIA P. LINCH-KELLY/COLLEGIAN

Senior midfielder Neil Lundberg helped the Maroon and White win its home opener to even its record at 1-1 on the season.

Skiing enjoys great success

By MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Flying under the proverbial radar — not to mention down snow-covered mountains throughout New England's great white north — the Massachusetts men's and women's ski teams and its members have thrived both individually and as a team under first-year head coach Ken Thomas in 2003-04.

Led by former UMass/Dinn Brothers Athlete of the Week Ashley Maxfield, who has won six of the 10 races she has competed in and is ranked No. 9 in the Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference with 66 points, the Minutewomen currently sit in first place out of 10 teams in the Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference with 22 points.

On the men's side, freshman Rush Hawkins, a six-time winner on the season that leads the MacConnell Division's men's individual standings with 197 net points, has helped the Minutemen to fifth out of 10 teams in the ECAC with 44 points.

At the USCSA Eastern Regionals held at Waterville Valley, the Minutewomen finished seventh in the Slalom and third in the Giant Slalom to come in fifth overall in the event.

Barranger led in the slalom with a two-run time of 1:39.67, good for 20th overall, while Maxfield saw her undefeated record in the event receive its first blemish, as she placed 25th overall with a two-run time of 1:41.77.

In the GS, Maxfield placed third overall with a two-run time of 2:00.76, while Doughty placed eighth with a two-run time of 2:03.71. Collins also contributed, placing 15th overall with a two-run time of 2:05.14.

At the St. Anselm Carnival held at Pat's Peak, Maxfield continued her undefeated season in the Slalom, winning for the fifth consecutive time after posting a two-run score of 1:44.84.

The Minutewomen, who placed third overall as a team, received solid contributions from Collins, who placed 11th with a two-run time of 1:49.32, and sophomore captain Erica Mains, who finished 21st with a two-run time of 1:55.60.

Sophomore Lisbet Rauh placed 25th with a two-run time of 1:58.44.

The Minutemen, meanwhile,

See SKIING on page 8

UMass to battle Temple

By MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With just two regular season games remaining in what has been a disappointing season for the Massachusetts men's basketball team (10-16 4-10 Atlantic 10), third-year UMass coach Steve Lappas is surely finding it difficult to keep his young squad motivated despite playing for nothing more than pride.

However tonight, the motivation takes care of itself, as the Minutemen renew acquaintances with eternal conference enemy Temple Owls (14-11 8-6 A-10).

With tip-off set for 7 p.m. at the Liacouras Center in Philadelphia, Pa., the contest serves as the latest chapter of what was once one of college basketball's fiercest rivalries.

"There's no question, it's tougher to play games like this down the streich when you're out of it then it is when you're right in the thick of things," Lappas said. "But it's Temple, and the rivalry speaks for itself. These kids know the history between these two teams, and you only need to look back at the last time we played to see how competitive the series is."

In that earlier meeting, played Jan. 24 at the Mullins Center before a national television audience on ESPN, the Maroon and White squandered a 23-point second half lead and needed a clutch 3-pointer from freshman guard Art Bowers with just 31 seconds remaining to grab a hard-fought 66-65 victory.

The win snapped a seven-game losing streak for UMass, and was its first conference victory of the season while it also deprived legendary Owl coach John Chaney of his 700th career victory.

Bowers led UMass with 19 points, while Temple star David Hawkins rebounded from a poor first half that saw him score just three points to notch a game-high 22 points.

"It was a quality win for us, to go out and beat a quality team like that," Lappas said. "We showed we knew how to win by coming back after blowing the big lead, and we think that success can carry over for us into [tonight's] game."

For the Minutemen, the onus will be on stopping Hawkins and his 23.7 points per game. One of the nation's top scorers, the oversized guard also averages 5.2 rebounds, 2.7 assists and 2.6 steals per contest, and has helped the Owls to eight wins in ten games since the loss to UMass, with both losses over that period coming to undefeated No. 2 St. Joe's.

"Hawkins is a great player," sophomore forward Jeff Viggiano said. "He's bigger than most defenders, and does a lot of things well. He's a big-time scorer and we're going to need to be able to contain him."

Other weapons in Chaney's arsenal is sophomore guard Mardy Collins, who ranks second on the team in scoring at 15.1 points per game, as well as sophomore forward Michael Blackshear, who averages a team-best 6.5 rebounds per contest.

"They're guards are big and they have guys who can really go get the ball off the glass," Lappas said. "We need to be able to box out and not give them second-chance opportunities."

The Minutemen are hoping for another solid performance from sophomore forward Rashaun Freeman, who is coming off of a 31-point, 18-rebound effort in a win over St. Bonaventure that earned him his sixth Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week award on the season.

UMass also hopes to receive a solid effort from junior captain Anthony Anderson, who is averaging 13.1 points and 3.5 assists per game, but scored just six points on 1-of-3 shooting in the win over the Bonnies.

COURTESY/GERALD H. LINK

Freshman guard Maurice Maxwell averages 7.7 points per game.

UMass to host rival BU in home opener

By MATT BARSTOW
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will host Boston University in its home opener today, as they face the three-time defending America East Champions.

UMass is coming off Saturday's 9-6 victory over Holy Cross, a game that increased UMass' record to 8-0 all-time against the Crusaders. After falling behind 2-1 early, the Maroon and White scored six unanswered goals, cruising to victory in its season opener.

For the third consecutive year, senior attacker Hope Zelinger scored the season's first goal. Her opportunity came early; when UMass was awarded a free position shot 1:13 into the game. Zelinger capitalized on the Holy Cross penalty, bouncing home the first of her four goals.

"We expect Hope to have another good game against BU, she's really taken on role as the team leader," UMass coach Carrie Bolduc said.

Also guiding the Maroon and White to victory was senior captain Tracy Drown, who made her comeback debut in stunning fashion, after being sidelined with a season ending injury four games into the 2003 season. The midfielder dished out four assists on the day, including two to Zelinger.

"Last game some of the freshmen and sophomores weren't ready for the game's pace, hopefully that will change soon because we need them to come up with goals, Bolduc said. "The seniors carried us against Holy Cross, but we'll need more contributions against BU."

Sophomore attacker Lindsay Cassell helped the Maroon and White with three goals, while junior captain Maura McGarrity added one of her own. Scoring was capped-off by Kerri Connerty's unassisted goal, which came with 2:19 left in the game.

Playing between the pipes for UMass was redshirt freshman Lauren McCarthy, who allowed six goals on 15 shots during the contest. McCarthy was impressive in her first collegiate appearance, but has not solidified a spot as the team's starting goaltender.

"We're still juggling goalies, Lauren did a very good job for us but we're still trying out different things and trying to find the goalie that meshes well with the team," Bolduc said.

Last year UMass bested the Universities of Albany and New Hampshire, defeating the two America East teams that finished second and third respectively, behind Boston University in the division. The Atlantic 10 is considered a stronger conference, but with 17 returning letter winners and an Inside Lacrosse Magazine Pre-Season 10th place national finish, the Terriers may prove to be a formidable opponent.

Aside from boasting ten players from the All-Conference team, the Terriers return the 2003 America East: Player of the Year (Alyssa Trudel), Rookie of the Year (Mary Beth Miller), and Defender of the Year (Sasha Lang).

"We're excited to play BU, they're an unfamiliar opponent that demands a lot of respect," Bolduc said. "I think home field will play to our advantage, but BU is known as a fast team, so we'll have to be on our game."

UMass had not faced Boston University during Bolduc's two-year tenure as head coach of the women's lacrosse team. The game will start at 4 p.m. at Garber Field.

Billy Joel and Twayla Tharp's musical 'Movin' In' to Boston

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

UMass baseball has championship aspirations in 2004

SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 95

MassPIRG event to help the hungry

By BRENDAN HECK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

This weekend the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group will sponsor "Hoops for Hunger," a three-on-three basketball tournament designed to collect funds to combat poverty and open a Northampton soup kitchen.

The tournament will take place Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. in the Totman gym. It is open to everyone and costs $30 per team. To sign up for the tournament, students must go to the MassPIRG office in the Student Union. Signing up the day of the tournament will cost $35 per team.

"There is a need to address poverty and homelessness in Hampshire County, and our response is a soup kitchen," MassPIRG representative Megan Cunningham said.

Finding food to provide for hungry people is not a problem according to Cunningham; "finding a place to serve the food is the problem," she said.

In order to start a soup kitchen, MassPIRG would need to find a building to rent out, and find a knowledgeable person to run the soup kitchen.

"All of this takes funding," Cunningham said.

MassPIRG branches at UMass, Amherst College and Smith College are collaboratively working to establish the soup kitchen.

"We want to start by having the soup kitchen open one day a week, while providing free transportation to the kitchen," Cunningham said.

However, she said MassPIRG is optimistic that the soup kitchen will grow into a community run organization open seven days a week.

MassPIRG plans to raise around $30,000 for the soup kitchen through a variety of fundraisers; "Hoops for Hunger" is the first of the semester toward this campaign.

The soup kitchen in Northampton is what Cunningham called a, "short term," goal.

MassPIRG also hopes to establish a hunger platform. According to Cunningham, a MassPIRG student representative, 28 percent of Hampshire county residents live below the poverty line. Cunningham also said that 20 percent of families in western Mass-achusetts have, accessed the food bank in the past year.

She feels the only way to solve the hunger problem is through legislative action.

"[MassPIRG's long term goal is to] hire someone to go to the Statehouse and actually lobby for homeless and poverty stricken people," she said.

This is the second year MassPIRG will host "Hoops for Hunger." Last year 35 teams competed in the tournament. Cunningham said they hope that the turnout will be the same or slightly better. Spectators will be asked to give a $2 donation at the door.

Community gathers in support of gay rights

UMass Coalition for Marriage Equality hosts first panel discussion

By MATTHEW CONSOLINI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The differences between a civil marriage and a civil union are more than just legal; a civil union implies that homosexuals are second-class citizens with second-class feelings, said speakers on Tuesday night's University of Massachusetts Coalition for Marriage Equality's panel discussion.

The panelists spoke to over 50 attendees about the efforts to obtain equal marriage rights and why they're important, especially with the Mass-achusetts constitutional convention convening on March 11.

"You hear people say, 'civil unions yes, marriage no.' Every time you hear that, you think this person is saying there's something wrong with my love, that there's something wrong with the person I love," said Gina M. Smith, one of the plaintiffs in the case Goodridge vs. the Department of Public Health. "When you hear that, think that in your mind because that's what's really going on."

Smith and her partner, Heidi Norton, said their involvement with the lawsuit started when Smith and Norton were working with lawyers to draft up wills and emergency guardianships for their two sons, Avery, 7, and Quinn, 4.

"There are certain rights we had no control over. Marriage would take care of all of them," said Norton. "There's over a 1,000 legal benefits that come with marriage. The ability to say you're married opens a lot of doors that otherwise wouldn't be opened."

Norton recounted how after Avery was born, she began hemorrhaging and had to go to the hospital. Because they did not have rights like a married couple, Norton worried about the future of her partner and son, since Norton had to wait a year to adopt Avery.

"As I slipped in and out of consciousness, I wondered, am I going to see my son or my partner again? Will they be able to see each other again?" she said.

These concerns moved the couple to join in the case, which ruled that denying same sex marriage violated Massachusetts' constitutional law.

"Why marriage?" asked Norton. "Because we love each other. Love is at the center of what we're doing. We're motivated by love. That really contrasts us with our opponents. They're motivated by hate and fear."

That hate and fear stems in part from what Reverend Jay Deacon of the Unitarian University Society of Florence and Northampton calls "the marriage of church and state" and the confusion between civil marriage and religions marriage.

"This church-state entanglement has been with us so long we seldom notice the incongruity," he said.

Deacon said marriage became a sacred institution after the fall of the Roman Empire. People looked to the Church for stability and eventually marriage became a sacrament, validated only by the clergy.

"The distinction between civil and sacramental has remained blurred, with the result that religious institutions think that they hold far too much of a stake in the definition of civil marriage. They don't; yet the confusion persists," he said.

This confusion has led to religious leaders fiercely protecting marriage rites and doctrine, he said.

"But those are not endangered: no religious body will be compelled to open its sacrament of marriage to any couple whose relationship they don't approve," Deacon said. "They can exclude anybody they want to and the law can't do anything about it ... but it's wrong to shut out all same-sex couples from civil marriage."

> "Love is at the center of what we're doing. We're motivated by love. That really contrasts with our opponents. They're motivated by hate and fear."
> - Heidi Norton

Stacy Roth, co-chair of the Executive Committee for MassEquality, said the best way to combat their opponents is to be brave and take action.

"We've been spoken to from pulpits and from sermons on high by not only Catholics, but all those who would preach bigotry, discrimination, and hate," Roth said. "What I often answer is that hate is easy. But love takes courage."

She urged the audience to have courage because some political actions may be uncomfortable, like going door-to-door to talk about marriage equality.

"If we don't take the difficult steps and try it just once, we won't win. You have to do some of the things that you don't want to do," Roth said.

She also urged people not to be satisfied with civil unions because they are far from being the same as a civil marriage.

"Civil unions and marriage are not the same thing. Every piece of a civil union has to be defined individually. Legis-lators can pick and choose what's there. And step over the state line into Connecticut and your civil union does not exist anymore. It's not portable. A marriage is portable," Roth said.

Felice Yeskel, director of the Stonewall Center, ended the discussion urging students to be motivated to act.

"There's a lot of well meaning people out there that do nothing while injustice happens," she said. "I ask you not to be one of those well-meaning people. The time to put action behind you is now."

AMELIA P. LINCH-KELLY/COLLEGIAN

Gina M. Smith, one of the plaintiffs in the case of Goodrich vs. the Department of Public Health speaks to over 50 people for the UMass Coalition for Marriage Equality's first panel discussion.

International student fee motion withdrawn

By MELISSA BLANKSTEEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Members in the Student Government Association Senate last night proposed a motion to distribute the cost of the New International Student Fee imposed on University of Massachusetts international students to the entire student body.

The Senate also discussed a new Office of ALANA Affairs charter, and passed a motion to recite the U.S. Pledge of Allegiance and sing the Puerto Rican National Anthem at the beginning of each meeting.

SGA President Dave Carr and Sen. Dan Pozmanter brought the motion to the Senate on the proposed $65 fee for international students, although Carr later withdrew.

Last December, the University decided to impose a $65 fee on international students to help pay for budget cuts in the International Programs Office (IPO) and to pay for the federally mandated Student and Exchange Visitor Information System (SEVIS).

On Feb. 19, about 120 students marched in protest against the fee.

Russell Plato, secretary of diversity issues, said that only eight percent of the fee is going towards paying for SEVIS, and the rest is going towards the IPO's budget cuts.

"It's about having a small group of students paying for budget cuts," said Plato, during his presentation. "I think it's really important for us to stand together and say we'll pay for the fees together."

The motion asked for the fee to be spread out equally among the student body, costing $1.08 per student.

"You need to eliminate the fee," Plato said. "But if you can't find the money somewhere else, then everyone should share the burden of funding an office everyone uses."

The Senate proposed an amendment to ask for only the IPO budget cut portion of the fee to be paid by all students, leaving the University to find another source of funding for the cost of SEVIS, a program that many Senators believe is unjust.

After the amendment failed, an attempt was made to have it become a waiveable fee.

"It kind of makes sense to me," said Speaker Jared Nokes in favor of the change.

Nokes said there is a 40 percent return on waiveable fees, and to cover the other 60 percent, the Senate should raise its recommended fee to $2.70.

The Senate approved of this, but before they could vote, Carr withdrew the motion.

The Senate also discussed the new Office of ALANA Affairs charter. The motion, which presented a new charter, was sent back to the Administrative Affairs committee over a debate on who appoints seats and who will sit on the advisory board for the new charter. The committee has already debated the charter for a month, but Sen. Craig Goldschmidt hopes Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life, will come to their Sunday meeting to help iron out issues that still persist.

Goldschmidt also hopes that the Senate will look over the proposal and bring suggestions either to the committee meeting or next week's Senate meeting.

Another motion was proposed by Sen. David

See SGA on page 2

EMILIE TUTOGIAN/COLLEGIAN

SGA President David Carr proposed a motion regarding the New International Student Fee during last night's meeting, but later withdrew it.

EMILIE TUTOGIAN/COLLEGIAN

SGA Senator Alicia Cooper proposed a motion to recite the African-American pledge during last night's meeting in the Campus Center.

Same-sex couples line up for marriage licenses in Oregon

By RUKMINI CALLIMACHI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Gay and lesbian couples started tying the knot in Portland yesterday after the county issued same-sex marriage licenses, joining the rapidly spreading national movement in San Francisco and upstate New York.

About 50 people lined up for a sudden chance to wed after a Multnomah County commissioner said she would begin issuing the licenses to same-sex couples.

An ebullient Mary Li held up the very first certificate.

"I can't describe how great it feels," Li said. She and her partner Rebecca Kennedy were also the first to be married, by a county judge.

Gay bar owners handed out free glasses of champagne and many couples carried bouquets of roses. New York's attorney general joined the national debate, saying current law prohibits same-sex weddings and that mayors should not preside over them. But he said he would leave it to the courts to decide if the law is constitutional.

"I personally would like to see the law changed, but must respect the law as it now stands," Attorney General Elliot Spitzer said in a statement obtained by The Associated Press.

Both sides of the polarizing issue have been waiting for Spitzer's opinion since Friday, when the mayor of New Paltz, a college town 75 miles north of Manhattan, married 25 same-sex couples without licenses. Village Mayor Jason West now faces 19 criminal counts and could face jail time.

"The local district attorney has the authority and

See OREGON on page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Copy Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reed
News Editor Feman Salniker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagois
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Boe
Assistant Business Jachvan Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kiggins
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Erika Lorley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Mazzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semesters. The Collegian is independently operated and financed by advertising revenues. Published since 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life and was the Collegianससर in 1914 and the Massachusetts Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been semi-weekly since January 1999. For advertising rates and information, call 413-545-3500 or fax 413-545-3698.

Haitian rebel leader vows to disarm forces

By Mark Stevenson
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Rebel leader Guy Philippe said yesterday his forces would disarm as U.S. Marines fanned out in the capital — rifles at the ready — to help bring order amid Haiti's bloody uprising.

Earlier, Washington warned the rebels, who overthrew President Jean-Bertrand Aristide after seizing the northern half of the country, to disarm and disband.

"Now that there are foreign troops promising to protect the Haitian people ... and they have given the guarantee to protect the Haitian people ... we will lay down our arms," Philippe told a news conference.

In their first reconnaissance sweep since arriving Sunday, a convoy of Marines in Humvees and armored vehicles rumbled out of the presidential National Palace as troops on foot moved onto surrounding streets.

They patrolled an area stretching 30 blocks, pushing old burned-out cars from the road. The Marines met no resistance and then returned to the palace.

Despite the rebel vow to disarm, a gunbattle erupted yesterday between rebels and militant Aristide loyalists in their stronghold, the seaside La Saline slum. The shooting started when rebels, who started patroling the city Tuesday, tried to disarm the militants.

There was no sign at the scene of the American and French troops, the vanguard of an expected U.N.-backed peacekeeping force. Marine commanders told a press conference they had 1,000 troops on the ground in Haiti. In addition, Chile said it was sending 120 special forces to Haiti, the first of about 300. France said it would have some 420 soldiers and police here by the end of the week.

Also yesterday, U.S. Marines guarding the airport said they blocked rebels from chasing ex-Aristide officials into the main terminal. The incident started Tuesday afternoon when rebels drove up said they were looking for Prime Minister Yvon Neptune and other Haitian officials.

When the Marines drove out of the facility in two Humvees mounted with .50-caliber machine-guns, the rebels quickly left. "As soon as we rolled up, they beat it out of there," Staff Sgt. Christoperh Smith said. "They got out of there as fast as they could."

Staff Sgt. Timothy Edwards, also speaking at the airport, said protecting Haitians had become part of the Marines' job.

"Part of our mission is to step in if we think there is a threat of bodily harm or deadly force to a (Haitian) citizen," he said.

According to the Pentagon, the Marines' mission is to contribute to a secure environment in Port-Au-Prince and promote a constitutional political process after Aristide's resignation.

They also must help with the delivery of humanitarian aid, as needed, and protect U.S. citizens in Haiti "as may be required," according to a Pentagon statement released Sunday as the Marines were deployed.

The Marines are not mandated to seek out rebel forces to disarm or otherwise engage them, and there was no intent to get involved in stopping looting or other crimes, U.S. officials said. But if fired upon by rebels or others, the Marines could fire back.

Haiti's political opposition, meanwhile, met with interim President Boniface Alexandre, demanding that he name a new prime minister and that Neptune — a top member of Aristide's Lavalas party and his former spokesman — be dismissed and possibly arrested.

Also, the 15-nation Caribbean Community, or Caricom, concluded an emergency meeting yesterday in Jamaica over the Haiti crisis, calling for an international inquiry into Sunday's abrupt departure of Aristide.

In Washington, State Depart-ment spokesman Richard Boucher said the American and French troops were working with Haitian police to restore order. "The rebels need to disband and go back to their homes," Boucher said. "And I want to be quite clear that that's our position."

He also said U.S. Ambassador James Foley was in touch with members of the Aristide government and members of the political opposition in an attempt to set up a "council of eminent persons" to name a prime minister and new government.

Boucher said the "rebels do not have a role in this process. All illegal and armed groups should lay down their arms."

Philippe on Tuesday declared himself Haiti's new military chief. "The country is in my hands!" he announced by radio during a break in a tour of the capital in the back of a pickup truck.

He also incited a group of 300 supporters to rally outside the office of the prime minister, urging that Neptune be arrested.

Yesterday, Philippe was seen entering the U.S. ambassador's residence. The rebels, who appeared unarmed, spoke briefly with Marine guards who allowed the five to enter the compound.

It was not immediately clear if Philippe met with Foley. After about 20 minutes the rebels emerged and left without comment. The U.S. Embassy also would not comment.

Haiti's most recent round of bloodshed and killings started Feb. 5. The death toll has continued to rise, despite Aristide's departure, reaching at least 130 yesterday. Workers at the Port-au-Prince hospital said an additional 30 bodies had been brought to the morgue since Sunday.

Philippe apparently wanted to transform his fighters into a reconstituted Haitian army, which Aristide disbanded in 1995.

The rebel leader has said he was ready to follow the orders of interim President Boniface Alexandre, installed Sunday, but two days later he demanded Neptune's arrest and trial.

Associated Press writers Paisley Dodds and Ian James in Port-au-Prince contributed to this report.

SGA withdraws motion concerning new student fee

SGA from page 1

Bettencourt would change the Senate's bylaws to include a voluntary and predictable time for senators to say the Pledge of Allegiance before announcements, but after the call to order during each meeting.

"What I hope to do is possibly make you think about it," Bettencourt said. "Hopefully you can see this is not to judge or test people's patriotism."

After he spoke, Patrick Higgins, chair of Ways and Means and co-sponsor to the proposal, noted the tension in the room and wanted to stress that this motion made reciting the Pledge optional.

"If you do have a problem with it," Higgins said. "It is strictly voluntary. This motion is as large a compromise as possible."

Sen. Tristan Brown felt it was excessive.

"I don't think it should be in our by-laws if we can do this, anyway," he said.

He noted Bettencourt could say the Pledge during the announcement phase of the Senate meetings already.

Sen. Aishya Cooper attempted to amend the motion to include the African-American pledge. This failed.

The motion overall failed to pass in the Senate with the needed two-thirds majority. They tried to reconsider it, but that also failed.

Before the meeting ended, Higgins brought up a second motion that passed allowing for time to be set a side during the announcement phase for the Pledge.

"It is basically to allow a group of students to stand up in front of Senate to recite the Pledge of Allegiance in front of this body," he said.

Cooper tried to amend this motion to include the African-American Pledge again. This failed.

Sen. Gladys Franco then tried to amend the motion to include the Puerto Rican national anthem. The amendment passed along with Higgin's motion.

In defense of this amendment, Chris Eckel, associate speaker of the Senate, said that everyone's desires should be included and no one should be singled out.

"If you are going to say that one person can say his Pledge of Allegiance and that another person cannot, that's hypocritical," he said.

Next week, the Senate will voluntarily recite both the Pledge of Allegiance and sing the Puerto Rican National Anthem.

Overall, the Senate heard 11 motions, passing seven.

Earlier, during the announcement phase of the meeting, Attorney General Mark Morrison announced his candidacy for President. Carr announced his candidacy for Student Trustee.

In his chair report, James Brennon, chair of Administrative Affairs, announced the passing of the March 1 deadline to become a new senator.

"If they want to fill a vacant Senate seat, they need a written statement why they couldn't join before March 1," he said. "It will be very hard."

dailycollegian.com

almost here!
Friday/Saturday/Sunday Special
Large cheese pizza $5.00
LOCATION: FREE DELIVERY 549-6073
Open Hours
Sun-Wed : 11am-1 am
Thurs-Sat : 11am-3am

NEW THIS WEEK!
COLD CREEK MANOR
DUPLEX
GOOD BOY!
LOONEY TUNES
SCHOOL OF ROCK
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Have Questions On Your Resume?
Do they need to know my GPA?
Get Help by Coming to a Resume Workshop!
Today! March 4
2:30 pm - 201 Machmer
March 5
11:10 am - 318 Stockbridge
March 11
2:30 pm - 201 Machmer
CareerServices
For more information, go to www-ccn.acad.umass.edu or call us at 545-2224

OPERA VERDI EUROPA
◄ March 7,
Gaining international recognition on many of the world's most prestigious opera stages, Opera Verdi performs: Cavalleria Rusticana, a twisted interplay between past and present lovers, and Pagliacci, a drama where the boundries between the real and imaginary world of theatre are broken down with violent results.
Sunday, March 7
Cavalleria Rusticana and I Pagliacci
Concert Hall at 7:30
Sponsered by TIAA-CREF
THE FINE ARTS CENTER
For tickets: 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
www.fineartscenter.com

Battle for White House boils down to select states

Members from both parties prepare for eight-month contest

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush versus John Kerry. What promises to be a contentious eight-month battle for the White House opened yesterday with the incumbent buffeted by dangers in postwar Iraq and the loss of jobs at home, yet holding the upper hand on money and Electoral College math.

Partisans from both parties are already fretting over their candidate's chances.

"President Bush has the best odds, but incumbency has its disadvantages, too," said Tom Slade, former chairman of the Florida Republican Party. "There's four years of record to throw rocks at, and I've often debated with myself over which I would rather be — the incumbent or challenger."

"This election might settle that question," Slade said with a sigh, "for better or worse."

If so, it may be settled in Florida and 15 states that Bush won or lost by 5 percentage points or fewer in 2000 — the Midwest states of Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin; the Northwest's Washington and Oregon; Pennsylvania, Maine and New Hampshire in the Northeast; Western states Nevada and New Mexico, and the South's Tennessee and Arkansas.

Tennessee may be the only 2000 battleground that doesn't qualify. If Al Gore couldn't win his Republican-leaning home state, Kerry probably won't, Democratic and GOP strategists said.

Two states Bush won by just 6 percentage points — Arizona and West Virginia — could be more competitive this year.

"The Hispanic influence, as well as massive immigration from California, has moderated the politics of this state," said state Sen. Ken Cheuvront, an Arizona Democrat.

In his first ad blitz, Bush is targeting the 16 battleground states from 2000 — minus Tennessee but plus West Virginia and Arizona.

"We know this election is going to be decided in a limited number of states in the Electoral College and we've made decisions based on that," said Matthew Dowd, the campaign's chief strategist.

Changes in the Electoral Map favor Bush. The president won 30 states four years ago, worth 271 electoral votes in 2000. Reapportionment has increased their value to 278, without a vote being cast.

Kerry's base consists of 11 states plus the District of Columbia won most easily by Gore in 2000, worth 168 electoral votes Nov. 2.

In addition to those Democratic strongholds, Kerry's strategists believe he can add Michigan, Washington state and Maine to pass the 200-vote threshold. Claimed by Gore in 2000, they may be the ripest Democratic targets among all tossup states, but Bush is competing hard for them.

The next tier of Kerry targets are even tougher: Minnesota, Pennsylvania, Iowa, Oregon, Wisconsin and New Mexico. Winning all six, no easy task, would put Kerry within striking distance of the coveted 270 electoral votes.

He would still need to win at least one of the most competitive states — Nevada, New Hampshire, West Virginia, Missouri, Arizona, Ohio and Florida are among the targets.

Other Southern tossup states may come into play for Kerry, but only if he's doing unexpectedly well everywhere else. Martha Dixon of the Democratic National Committee gave Bush a good shot in Arkansas.

"With all his problems, he's still the president — and that counts for something," Dixon said. "He gets to fly around the country on his big plane and talk big talk."

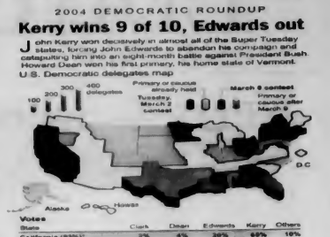
Money may be Bush's biggest edge. He has raised more than $150 million, shattering his own record and giving him easy cash to try to define Kerry as a soft-on-terrorism, tax-raising, flip-flopping liberal.

The president's campaign laid the groundwork yesterday for TV attack ads, accusing the Democrat of waging "a relentlessly negative campaign" against Bush this year. The president's initial TV ads portray Bush as the nation's caretaker in troubled times.

Kerry, who raised $1 million since wrapping up the nomination, is still far behind Bush in the dollar dash. He must count on the Democratic National Committee and Independent interest groups to help him compete.

The presumptive nominee also must retool his message for the general election, perhaps soften the rough edges of his criticism of Bush. Aides are planning a series of policy speeches for Kerry, who may travel overseas to burnish his image.

Most national polls show Kerry ahead or tied with Bush. In a race determined state by state, polls in the individual battlegrounds reflect a tight race.



Surveys also reveal lingering concern over the economy and Iraq, no surprise to Republican state lawmaker Tom Murphy of Kennebunk, Maine. "If things happen in a positive way, Kerry's campaign is over. If they don't ...," he said, his voice trailing off.

Slade argued that Kerry will be easy to cast as a liberal, but, "He has a very impressive war record. He speaks with authority and is going to be a very competitive challenger."

Democratic Mayor Michael Coleman of Columbus, Ohio, said he worries that Kerry may look too much like a creature of Washington. "The more time he spends in the heartland, in Ohio, the better off he's going to be," Coleman said.

J. Lowell Stoltzfus, a Republican state senator in Maryland, gave Bush the nod on leadership and appeal, but said of Kerry, "He seems like a personable guy. You know, this could be close."

2004 DEMOCRATIC ROUNDUP
Kerry wins 9 of 10, Edwards out
John Kerry won decisively in almost all of the Super Tuesday states, forcing John Edwards to abandon his campaign and catapulting him into an eight-month battle against President Bush. Howard Dean won his first primary, his home state of Vermont.
U.S. Democratic delegates map

Votes by State	Clark	Dean	Edwards	Kerry	Others
California (93%)*	2%	4%	20%	69%	10%
Connecticut (99%)	1%	4%	24%	56%	13%
Georgia (100%)	1%	3%	40%	47%	9%
Maryland (99%)	1%	5%	36%	69%	11%
Massachusetts (98%)	1%	3%	10%	77%	7%
(C) Minnesota (87.3%)	0.5%	2%	37%	41%	20%
New York (98%)	1%	3%	20%	69%	16%
Ohio (100%)	1%	4%	34%	50%	11%
Rhode Island (100%)	1%	4%	19%	71%	9%
Vermont (96%)	3%	58%	0%	34%	5%
(C) Hawaii (88.7%)	1%	8%	13%	49%	29%
(C) Idaho (100%)		11%	22%	54%	12%
Utah (100%)	1%	6%	30%	56%	10%
Wisconsin (100%)	2%	18%	34%	40%	6%
(C) Washington D.C. (100%)	1%	15%	10%	47%	24%
(C) Nevada (99.9%)		17%	10%	63%	10%
Tennessee (100%)	23%	6%	27%	41%	5%
Virginia (100%)	9%	7%	27%	52%	6%
(C) Maine (99.9%)	4%	27%	9%	48%	17%
(C) Michigan (100%)	7%	17%	14%	52%	12%
(C) Washington (99.2%)	3%	30%	7%	48%	12%
Arizona (100%)	7%	14%	7%	43%	10%
Delaware (100%)	10%	10%	11%	51%	18%
Missouri (100%)	4%	9%	25%	51%	12%
(C) New Mexico (100%)	20%	18%	11%	43%	9%
(C) North Dakota (100%)	24%	12%	10%	51%	4%
Oklahoma (100%)	30%	4%	30%	27%	9%
South Carolina (99.7%)	7%	5%	45%	30%	13%
New Hampshire (100%)	12%	26%	12%	39%	11%
(C) Iowa (96.6%)	0.1%	18%	14%	36%	13%

Delegate allocation
Contest results	Clark	Dean	Edwards	Kerry	Others
Past	70	173	206	701	37
Tuesday, March 9	17	9	202	591	17
Total delegates	87	182	408	1292	54

*1% of precincts reporting; (C) caucus

The number of delegates are based on party and media estimates. Delegates needed to win nomination: 2,162. Source: The Associated Press. Due to rounding results may not add up to 100 percent.

SOURCE: Associated Press AP

Three killed in Israeli air strike

By Ibrahim Barzak
Associated Press

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — An Israeli helicopter strike killed three Hamas militants riding in a car yesterday, the second such targeted attack in five days and a possible sign that Israel is stepping up its campaign against militants ahead of a planned withdrawal from the Gaza Strip.

Two missiles slammed into the car, triggering a fire that bystanders tried to put out with sand and their jackets. One man, using a blanket, lifted a charred body out of the car and heaved it onto a stretcher.

The Israeli military said one of those killed, 24-year-old Tarad Jamal, was behind several roadside bombings and rocket attacks on Israelis. The other two were identified as Ibrahim Deri, 34, and Amar Hassan, 21.

On its Web site, Hamas indicated that the three were about to carry out an attack. "The three martyrs were on a holy mission when the Zionist U.S.-made helicopters fired two missiles toward their vehicle," the statement said.

Hamas leader Sheik Ahmed Yassin said the Islamic militant group would keep up attacks against Israel. "The Palestinian people will continue their resistance despite this aggression," Yassin said.

Yesterday's strike, near the Jewish settlement of Netzarim, came just five days after Israeli helicopters fired missiles at a car in the same area, killing three militants of the Islamic jihad group.

There has been some expectation that Israel would step up its strikes against militants in Gaza ahead of a proposed withdrawal. Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon has said he would dismantle most Israeli settlements in the strip and impose a boundary on the Palestinians if peace talks remain frozen in coming months.

Avi Pazner, an Israeli government spokesman, said Israel would continue its campaign against militant groups even after a pullout.

The prospect of an Israeli withdrawal has also fueled internal Palestinian strife in Gaza, with armed gangs and corrupt members of the security forces jockeying for power.

Couples get licenses

OREGON from page 1

responsibility to enforce the law," Spitzer said.

Yesterday, Nyack, N.Y., Mayor John Shields said he would also start marrying gay couples and planned to seek a license himself to marry his same-sex partner.

Spitzer said New York's law contains references to "bride and groom" and "husband and wife" and does not authorize same-sex marriage. Gov. George Pataki has also said that performing gay marriages is illegal, a position he affirmed yesterday.

"Marriage under New York State law is and has been for over 200 years between a man and a woman. And we have to uphold that law," he said.

Shields and West said they would go ahead with their plans.

"What do you do when you're faced with injustice?" Shields said. "What did the women do in the suffrage movement? They marched. They were arrested. They did what they had to do to get their rights."

Rent One of Ours
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
OOPS!
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
76 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive, Chicopee
From Showtime, CBS' "Late Show with David Letterman" and NBC's "Late Night with Conan O'Brien"
1st Time Appearance!
BRIAN REGAN
MARCH 26TH APRIL 3RD APRIL 10TH APRIL 17TH APRIL 18TH
BILL BELLAMY JOHN WITHERSPOON GREG PROOPS MIKE EPPS DAVE ATTELL

THE CROSS OF CHRIST
Interested in The Passion?
Intrigued by The Cross?
Wonder Why?
Explanation. Discussion. Q & A
This Sunday 11am. Morrill N329
MERCYhouse (www.knowmercy.org)

GOLD'S GYM
NOW OPEN!
Bring in this coupon and receive:
$100 OFF OR FREE TRIAL
COMPETITION, PLEASE!
THERE'S A REASON WHY WE'RE #1
BEST EQUIPMENT. BEST RESULTS
COME CHECK US OUT!
GOLD'S GYM
10 UNIVERSITY DR.
(413) 549-6565

Where will it take you? Through USAC, a consortium of U.S. universities, you can choose from 31 programs in 21 countries. With 20 years of experience, you can be sure that you have someone to turn to throughout your educational adventures.
Month, summer, semester & year-long programs
Wide range of academic courses · Internships
· Field trips & tours
· Language classes at all levels
· Small classes
· University credit · Scholarships · Housing
USAC
Your Gateway to the World

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
Beer:
Harp Lager 2/12 pk btl.. $19.99*
Coors & Coors Light 30 pk cans.. $18.49*
Icehouse 30 pk cans.. $13.49*
Keystone 30 pk cans.. $13.49*
Millwaukee's Best 30 pk cans.. $10.99*
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl.. $10.99*
Sierra Nevada 12 pk btl.. $11.99*
Harpoon 12 pk btl.. $10.99*
Killians Irish Red 12 pk btl.. $8.99*
*all beer prices plus deposit
Wine:
Moet 7 Chandon White Star 750ml.. $29.99
Foxhorn Chardonnay or Merlot 6 btl./750ml.. $15.00
Canyon Road Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1.5 ltl.. $10.99
Kangaroo ridge Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1.5 lt.. $9.99
Clos du Bois Chardonnay 750 ml.. $9.99
Jacobs Creek Reserve Chardonnay, Shiraz, Merlot 750 ml.. $9.99
Corbett Canyon 3.0 lt.. $7.99
Liquor:
Glenlivet 12yr Scotch 750 ml.. $29.99
Chivas Regal Scotch 750 ml.. $25.99
Bushmills Irish Whiskey 1 lt.. $22.99
Jameson Irish Whiskey 1 lt.. $22.99
Bombay Sapphire Gin 750 ml.. $18.99
Rubinoff Vodka all flavors 1.75 lt.. $9.99
Cask & Cream all flavors 750 ml.. $8.99
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 3/04 THROUGH 3/10
Now Open Sundays Noon to 11pm

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Kerry is worthy of the White House

Sen. John Kerry struck the decisive blow in yesterday's Super Tuesday primaries. By winning nine of the 10 states in play, Kerry all but locked up the Democratic nomination for president in 2004, especially after Senator John Edwards' decision to drop out of the race.

The next steps in the 2004 presidential campaign have already begun, as Kerry is now identifiable as the Democratic opponent to President Bush. Among Kerry's supporters are the men who he has surpassed during his dramatic turnaround in the primary season. Former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean has said he will support the Democratic nominee, and retired Gen. Wesley Clark threw his weight behind Kerry after bowing out of the race on Feb. 11. But perhaps the most powerful support came today, as Edwards spoke inspired words about Kerry after announcing he would no longer run for the nomination.

"[Kerry] showed the strength, the resilience, the courage he has shown his entire life when he fought for us and for our country in Vietnam — he's done it all throughout this campaign," Edwards said, according to an article on CNN.com. Edwards said Kerry "has what matters right here to be president of the United States," pointing to his chest.

"I, for one, intend to do everything in my power to make him the next president of the United States. And I ask you to join me in this cause."

Edwards' words represent the current feeling about Kerry, who just nine months ago was having trouble getting his campaign off the ground. Thanks to his slight but necessary image renovation, Kerry is not only the party's choice by number, but indeed by spirit. Democrats should be enthralled that such a strong figure has emerged from what was once a muddled pool of too many candidates.

With overwhelming support from his former opponents, and a full head of steam gained off of his incredible string of primary victories, Kerry is no longer the aloof, static candidate he once appeared to be, but instead is a dynamic, popular leader with enough drive and experience to earn the Democratic nomination in July. His temperate ideas on the War in Iraq are refreshing. His grasp of foreign policy is impressive and vital to the improvement of American relations around the globe. And his domestic policy is a drastic improvement over that of President George W. Bush.

Kerry's forceful indictments of President Bush's upkeep of the No Child Left Behind Act, as well as his staunch dissent of the USA Patriot Act display a leadership ability that is lacking in the United States. While Kerry did vote to enter the War in Iraq, he has since strongly opposed Bush's policies and decisions, and other than his period of unfortunate indecision about the vote, Kerry has been one of the fiercest and most visible opponents of the war effort.

Now Kerry is in the process of choosing a running mate. Edwards is a popular option, but there are other names being tossed around that are all very attractive. No matter who Kerry selects, it has become obvious that the Democrats now have a strong, willing candidate with the ability to win back the White House in November.

For these reasons, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board is endorsing John Kerry for president in 2004.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Land of democracy?

World Perspectives

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz

Gavin Newsom, 36, is a rather average, young democrat by national standards. A well off, fourth generation San Franciscan, whose career has been largely defined by his fight against the increasingly problematic issues of urban squalor and homelessness.

After graduating from Santa Clara University with a Bachelor of Arts in Political Science in 1989, he began making a name for himself as a successful local wine merchant, before eventually taking a job in the local civil service as President of the Parking and Traffic Commission in 1996.

After serving on the San Francisco Board of Supervisors between 1996 and this year, he was sworn in as the 42nd Mayor of the City and County of San Francisco. The win followed a triumphant campaign that culminated in December and focused primarily on the work he has done for the city's neighborhood parks, railways and homeless population.

Despite such a routine and somewhat mundane political career, just 42 days into his new job, Mayor Newsom has found himself at the center of what will ultimately prove to be a controversy of national electoral proportions.

It was during President Bush's State of the Union address that Mr. Newsom realized that "this was not the world that I grew up aspiring to live in," The New York Times reported. "I just found some of [Bush's] words quite divisive."

After reviewing the Massachusetts Supreme Court decision from November of last year, in which a ban on same-sex marriage was ruled as unlawful and the state legislature order to allow for gay weddings by May of this year, and the civil union arrangements in a variety of other U.S. states, most notably Vermont, Hawaii and Alaska, the newly appointed mayor opened city hall for business to homosexual couples seeking legal marriage.

Naturally, several conservative groups quickly banded together to protest the legality of such a move, since California's constitution specifies marriage as the union of a man and a woman. Yet three successive judges have so far rejected any immediate injunctions, opting instead to await a fair hearing toward the end of March in which the mayor's office will be given the chance to back up its actions. The legal justification for such a move is, of course, that the California constitution also grants equality and freedom under rule of law regardless of all else. Thus, any law that limits the financial and psychological benefits associated with marriage to a certain portion of the demographic is inherently discriminatory and unconstitutional.

Nevertheless, following a statement last week by Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, the state attorney general Bill Lockyer has ordered San Francisco to desist in the issuance of such marriage licenses until the courts are able to rule on the issue in late March.

Meanwhile, the rest of the industrialized world has been far less shocked by the recent developments in California and Massachusetts than they have by the morally-motivated political counter reaction by conservative groups nationwide and even by the president himself, who on Feb. 24 gave his unconditional endorsement for any federal bill illegalizing same-sex marriage.

In Europe, for example, there exists more or less a consensus that the legal ability of guys and lesbians to wed represents a basic and inalienable human right. The European Court of Justice has ruled that denying marriage licenses to homosexuals is discriminatory and theoretically illegal by EU standards. Perhaps more significantly, and in light of the largest ever enlargement of the European Union scheduled for May 1, the European Parliament has recently passed a resolution "strongly recommending that current and potential member nations grant same-sex couples rights that are equivalent to those of opposite sex couples, and to ensure equal rights to GLBTs [Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, and Transsexual Community] in general."

Yet such a resolution may not even be necessary in many cases. In April 2001 the Netherlands became the first country in Europe to offer full civil marriage to same-sex couples (marriage licenses have been offered since December 19, 2000). Belgium and the Canadian provinces of Ontario and British Columbia quickly followed suit with similar legislation. Denmark, Finland, Germany, Greenland (autonomous region of Denmark), Iceland, Norway and Sweden all offer registered partnerships providing many of the benefits and responsibilities of marriage, though the area of child adoption in particular still lags in many cases.

Yet even in Europe these decisions have not gone unopposed. With the possible exception of registered domestic partnerships, which are largely symbolic and also apply to cohabitating heterosexual couples, most of this legislation has been passed only after standing up to conservative opposition similar to that now being applied in the United States. However, the necessity of adjusting to the civil needs and social evolution within many European nations has ultimately led them to pass such equitable and progressive legislation.

As far as the opinion of the university community goes, there seems to be quite a bit of support for egalitarian marriage laws. Even those acquaintances that are self-described "homophobes' realize in no way threatens the manner in which they live their lives. It does indeed seem more than a little ironic that many of the very same people who complain of the breakdown of the family unit in the United States also support a ban on marriage licenses.

The structure of the institution of the family has morphed from that of the 1950s, "Leave it to Beaver" type ideal — an ideal which actually only existed for a brief period of about 20 years anyway — and a variety of civil institutions have arisen to accommodate these changing social patterns. A ban on same-sex marriages, however, would effectively serve a tremendous blow to the entire concept of "family" by establishing the norm of non-marriage as a basis for committed coupleship.

Furthermore, as eloquently related by a recent UMass study conducted by the Institute for Gay and Lesbian Strategic Studies (IGLSS), allowing same-sex weddings would save the institution of the family for those children raised by homosexual parents (an estimated 8,000 in Massachusetts) and grant them the same financial benefits awarded to children of married heterosexual couples.

A final thought on the entire matter is best summed up by my Polish friend Pieter: "If America is the land of democracy, freedom and equality under law, then how can these people possibly justify, particularly in these modern times, discriminating significant portions of the U.S. demography based solely on their individual sexual orientation?"

The answer is, of course, that there is no legal validation for such policy. There exist only long-held moral convictions that will erode by the day at hands of political pioneers in San Francisco and the Massachusetts Supreme Court.

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz is a Collegian columnist studying abroad in Belgium.

Showing your pride

Gilad Skolnick

For over a century, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian was a virtual monopoly on campus, the main and only source of news, other than the struggling Socialist Worker newspaper continues to chug out news about "Amerika's evil capitalist ways," remaining an anomaly, as they give out copies for free, yet take no ads. Maybe someone should break it to them that if socialism failed in Russia, China, Vietnam, North Korea and Cuba, perhaps they should give it up and get a job.

Thus this era of peace and tranquility for The Collegian was brought to a painful end when the student senate, elected by over five percent of the student body, decided to introduce daily free copies of some major nationally known newspapers.

Weak-minded people such as your peers are taking these newspapers, owned by large corporations. Preying on the kleptomaniac nature of the average college student, they have slowly succeeded in infiltrating just about all of campus. Do not read such foul trash I warn all, for The Collegian is a far superior paper.

Unlike other well-known newspapers, the columns in The Collegian, such as this very article, don't go on and on about ridiculous and meaningless topics that don't seem to go anywhere.

Columnists in the paper are forced to undergo a grueling set of tests that analyze their wit, speed and physical endurances. After this a year long initiation process is set forth where writers have to do ridiculous tasks in order to be accepted as a fellow Collegian columnist, such as wrestling with the vicious campus swans or eating DC food. Once hired, these dedicated writers volunteer their time for free and spend countless hours working on their articles.

Unlike other well-known newspapers, the columns in the Collegian, such as this very article, don't go on and on about ridiculous and meaningless topics that don't seem to go anywhere.

Those free nationally recognized papers are bad influences on us all, with lingerie ads that objectify beautiful with stunning women, and ads for cell phones that may be found one day to cause radiation. As an employee of The Collegian, I don't know this first hand, as I must follow the unwritten rule not to read any of my paper's competition, but have heard of these misdeeds from my peers.

The Collegian is also made of a finer material, one that reduces the amount of paper cuts received. A state of the art carefully refined smoother manufacturing process of the paper ensures minimal blood loss when reading.

With a fresher scent and the ability to be recycled, the paper is also great for origami. In fact, some die-hard silly putty fans have stated that they felt silly putty made better imprints on The Collegian than any other paper.

The nationally recognized papers being given out in our Campus Center and DC's are not entirely useless, however. An informal unscientific survey conducted last November yielded some interesting results. About seven out of 10 students polled said they found no difference in taste between DC food and a fried and salted USA Today, and two out of 10 said they actually preferred eating a USA Today. In another poll, about 60 percent of UMass students said they preferred using these newspapers to the toilet paper provided by UMass, which is so thin that it's literally see through.

Thus I urge and plead that all those who support The Collegian and those that care for quality news coverage and editorials to show their support by taking out their favorite ed/op, possibly this one, and sticking it to their door. Show all who pass by what you stand for, that you are not some apathetic, self-centered college student but truly have morals that you deeply believe in. Whenever you have a chance cut out another Collegian article and stick it to someone else's door, bathroom stall, the campus swans, and yes, even on trees.

Show your UMass pride. Read The Collegian.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

Value of a clean break

Ben Feder

Countless numbers of writers, poets, theologians, sociologist and porn-stars much brighter than I have dictated the idea and act of love ... so why even bother? What I'm interested in conveying to you is the art of the break-up.

Heartbreak is a curious phenomenon because it's the only thing that afflicts emotional, mental and physical damage to both parties — the breaker and the breakee — involved in the break-up. Not any other weapon is more damaging to someone's ego as telling them, "You are no longer wanted or desired."

It's also detrimental to the person doing the break-up. You feel terrible and horrible as you plunge this double-edge sword into a once loved-one's heart. It's like you pick up a cute baby animal and started strangling it just to watch the last of its breath escape its body. Now that's an image.

OK. So now that I've gotten all of you feeling like absolute dirt about any past break-ups, even the one when you were 14 leaving for summer camp and you weren't going to the campfire social feeling "tied-down," let's examine it.

The break-up was a simple relationship device. You fall in love, have some fun times, some bad times, and you fall out of it, so you break up. Easy as can be. Well the break-up has evolved into something else that isn't as easy to manage, handle or even detect. This is the new founded "taking a break" complex.

How this works is that a couple, usually one that is past the one-year mark, hits some rough times. The two individuals try and work it out. They pretend they aren't having troubles, maybe get naked a few more times to see if they just need to sweat it out, but it's to no avail. So with the end in sight, they decide it's not working out. In the olden days, anything predating 1999, these two would be riding the 7:30 p.m. train to Splitsville. But now, they decide they need a break.

What taking a break means is that a couple is not completely broken up, but in the event that one needs a shoulder to cry on, a mouth to kiss, or a warm body next to him/her, the other can always find them. It's putting off the inevitability that couples will have to face the cold, bitter harshness of reality in the single life. Afraid of this change in lifestyle and mating habits, couples lean toward the false comfort of the "taking a break" mantra.

Within the break, you have a lifeline connected to the other person. This thin strand could be an emotional connection, physical connection, or maybe you just like to talk to each other. You can't have them all, however, or else you'd be a couple again, so it's a gamble. There are problems with these lifelines though.

If you have an emotional connection, you aren't getting any. You will have to deal with your ex's problems, help them out, let them vent to you ... but you will forever be looking at their underwear drawer with a reminiscing glint in your eye. You'll also have to deal with the jealousy of watching your ex with their new dates and then have to listen to any of the complaints about your new replacements.

Some people may think of this as being nice and helping someone out in need, and it's always good to be nice, but in moderation. Otherwise you have become a doormat. A potted plant can do just as good a job listening, and the plant is probably more interesting in your ex's new sexual encounters than you anyway. Eventually you realize the break is over, you are officially dumped, and you could have saved yourself the trouble three months prior and enjoyed yourself.

The physical connection, while fun, is shallow. You don't talk to your ex; you don't share that same exhilarating emotionally bond; you just can't keep your hands off each other. Three months later, you either will become sick of each other or very aware of how you're taking advantage of your past relationship just to get a little nookie. Don't fall into this trap. It'll only cause trouble in the end and make it extremely difficult to start a new relationship.

If you just like to talk to the other person, then you are broken up. There is no need to keep the taking a break charade going. This is actually the best possible option, for it means that you and your ex can get on with your lives and keep the friendship intact, built upon the foundation of your past love.

Whenever I overhear a person commenting on their significant other and with a downward glance they utter, "Oh we're just taking a break," I feel the dignity quickly sucked out of the room. So cut the cord, cut off your air supply, and be happy to just be floating free. You may even find you can breathe out their in the cold, bleak darkness anyway.

Ben Feder is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Numbers trying to get in listeners' minds with new record

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

Odd that San Francisco's Numbers would title their second album of minimalist jump-ups "In My Mind All the Time," since the mind seems to be the last place that Numbers would invite their listeners. Numbers' lyrics tend to border on the childishly minimalist. Upon first listen, one may get the urge to scream out in a likeminded chanting method "who/ who do you/ who/ who do you think you're kidding?"

It's only after repeated listens that one realizes the repetition of their choice phrases, mostly culled from the dull, plastic world of vapid consumerism and sterile mechanistic society, gives new meaning to the phrases each time that they are uttered. Clearly enunciating the words, spacing their linguistic points of emphasis and stressing their emotional detachment may reproduce the collectively dehumanized origins of the lyrics, but it is the placing of said idioms atop the axiom of jittery dance-punk that recontextualizes them for a completely new effect.

This postmodern reappropriation of phrases like "If you know your extension/ please dial it now" for the dance floor strategically set the Teutonic funk of their debut "Life" outside the scowling gothic ballpark of their much praised peers. Brooklynites dodged the vaguely McLuhanesque affirmations of songs like "We Like Having These Things." Yet critics cringed over whether restrained lines like "I am consumer/ My needs manufactured/ I am the product/ Chooser" could be construed as valid protest. Numbers certainly seem to be having too much fun to be that bitter, with their yelps and ride cymbals coming off more as a call to dance to the bells in the crosswalk than to burn effigies outside of IMF rallies.

Or perhaps all the chanting could just simply denote a cultural nausea of all the didactic proactive posturing that goes on in hometown of San Francisco.

"In My Mind All the Time" explores different territory than its predecessor (though it's not as far removed the electo-tinged remix EP "Death"). The guitar, drum, and Moog lineup remains the same. Dave, Indra, and Eric Landmark all greet their audience halfway through "In My Mind" in a cute little track called "We're Numbers" that enacts a Casio-driven clap-along version of Faith No More's "Introduce Yourself" for the Indie rock set.

Their approach has been toned up a notch though. Low-end Moog churns out angular rumbles of guttural bass while epileptic guitars shutter and shake. Indra and Dave obsessively spout three letter words in repetitive, monotonous chorus. All of the above wind up taking a back seat to Indra's relentless disco drumming. Each instrument is a slave to the beat, which has grown significantly terser this time around. Perhaps upping the ante to compete in the post-Rapture environment, "In My Mind All the Time" runs manically for 19 minutes before eventually cooling into the gestating Neu inspired "Feelings," which nearly clocks in at five whole minutes — epic by Numbers standards.

Those 19 minutes are mostly re-tweaked and finer-tuned regurgitations of the songs on their debut, with lyrics of simplistic, agitated, reactionary statements to the corporate hegemony replacing mechanical rhetoric. By "reactionary," I do not mean to say Numbers have replaced their cloak of semi-objectivity with devoted cries to take back the streets. Instead, the quirky threesome cuts down the extended dialogue to the simplest, most frustrated, and perhaps most selfish motivations in lyrics like "It's hard to wait" and "I can't stop thinking." Whatever the incentive for the reductive recitations, don't expect to many adjectives on "In My Mind All the Time."

Sparse, garagey no wave guitars and filthy Moog seem an odd choice to conduct numerical exercises in obsessive dance music. It is a far cry from the pristine synthscapes that their closest kin

See NUMBERS on page 6

"Movin'" into Beantown

By Joe Piedrafite
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — What do you get when you take the modern and innovative dance of the legendary choreographer Twyla Tharp and combine it with the classic music of piano man Billy Joel?

You get the sensation of the 2002 theater season, "Movin' Out." Time Magazine declared it the "#1 Show of the year!" Ben Brantley of The New York Times called it "a shimmering portrait of an American generation," and Richard Zolgin declared "Twyla Tharp and Billy Joel make Broadway rock!"

It seems sort of ironic, considering it was deemed a turkey during its pre-Broadway try out in Chicago during the summer of 2002.

"Movin' Out" was greeted with unanimous acclaim upon its fall opening. In May 2003, it was nominated for 10 Tony Awards, including Best Musical. It walked away with two, including Best Choreography for Twyla Tharp's innovative dance and Billy Joel and Stuart Malina for Best Orchestrations. "Movin' Out" lost the Best Musical race to the other runaway smash of the 2002/03 season, "Hairspray," which took home eight trophies.

Many of Joel's characters from his songs come to life in this brand new musical ... well, danceacle. The characters in the show are references to many of the names that have popped up in Joel's work as a musician. Brenda and Eddie (from "Scenes from an Italian Restaurant"), James (from "James"), Tony (of the "Movin' Out") and Judy (of "Why, Judy, Why") all come together to tell a tale of five friends living together intertwining with major events of the 60s and 70s — drugs, sex, rock 'n' roll and Vietnam.

Act I begins in 1960s Long Island, N.Y., where Brenda and Eddie's marriage is falling apart while James and Judy's marital

See MOVIN' OUT on page 6

'Eve' experiences a strangely odd and heated blind date

Advice from Eve:

Q: I've been dating this guy for a few months, but I'm reluctant to commit. His friends are complete jerks and have no respect for the girls they date. So far, he has proven to be a decent guy, but I'm afraid to trust him. I know they are all similar in every other way, so why would that make him any different from his friends? Do you think he's putting on an act, or is he for real?

A: The apple does not fall far from the tree. One thing I've learned is you can tell a lot about a person by their friends. Men are attracted to men of their own kind; the same goes for women. It is rare a guy will have a close group of friends that are entirely opposite to himself. Don't jump to conclusions yet, but live by your instincts and keep your eyes open to unseen realities.

Q: I go out every weekend with my girlfriends, and we can never find good guys. They are all sleazy and are interested in one thing. Where do you recommend a girl to go to find someone worthwhile?

A: I was afraid of this question, and I wish I knew. All I can say is it is very difficult to meet a decent guy in a club, bar or any other place where people go just to have fun. If you want to find something serious and worthwhile, you should go to a coffee shop, look around in your classes, or even at the library. Somewhere that shares the same interests as you. Honestly, stop looking so hard. He will find you when he's ready.

Original Sin Eve

My best girlfriend and I have simultaneously reached a breaking point. We just don't know what to say anymore.

The guys we've been meeting recently just don't seem to measure up to our standards. However, we always end up sacrificing our integrity to give them the benefit of the doubt.

And since we consider ourselves extremely high maintenance and slightly demanding, we are aware that the possibilities of meeting a decent guy seems slim. But still we manage to keep our radars on.

Personality wise, she is like a black cat and I, a golden retreiver. It sounds funny, but it is the only way I see her. She is incredibly beautiful, mysterious and exciting. But she will not give guys the time of day. A few bad experiences in her life has led her to mistrust and deny men constantly.

However, this is where we differ. No matter how many bad experiences I've had, I can't help loving guys. I still have that hope somewhere.

Recently her cynicism began to bother me, and I felt I needed to take action. I called up a male friend of mine, whom she doesn't know, and asked him if he would like to double date for just one night. Within an hour, the night was organized that the four of us were to meet up in the city. I was fully aware the only way my girlfriend would agree to do this is if I told her they were both my good male friends. I lied. But she did agree. So I was happy.

And there they stood, one I barely knew and his friend who I never knew. Two very good looking Italians, dressed to kill and ready to sweep us off our feet. But she wasn't impressed. Only until the new guy bought us a bottle of Cristal and told her how beautiful she was.

And then the night began. Four people became two pairs after a few drinks. Most importantly, I was able to make her happy for just a few hours. How refreshing.

But she has one character flaw — if she gets a bad vibe for one second, or if something negetive were to happen after a few drinks, she turns into one of those scary girls with an attitude problem that no one wants to mess with. And she did.

He pissed her off somehow, and I knew the night was over. He tried everything to calm her down while I watched. Of course it didn't work, so he started giving her attitude back. Non-stop. It was amusing to see two people bicker back and forth as if they had known each other for years. It suddenly grew into a battle of wits and much stupidity on the car ride home — and then he won.

Apparently, she didn't intimadate him at all. He was so heated, literally and figurativly, that he started taking off all of his clothing while driving the car — one hand on the steering wheel, and one hand to do the strip. But he was angry. It was like he had to prove to her how irresistable he was. Maybe because he knew she didn't think so. There he was, yes, completely naked — plus boxers while the three of us watched and cringed. And there was absolutely nothing we could do about it. What was he thinking? He started flexing, pointing to his Italian flag tattoo, and so on. That shocked her out of screaming. That shocked me into laughing. And that shocked his friend into keeping his head down and eyes closed. She gave me one look, and I knew it was our cue. As the car slowed to a red light, she said her last words, "You know what, I'm done. Goodnight." And we exited.

Eve is pen name for a love guru attending UMass who knows the ins and outs of every relationship. You can ask Eve for advice by e-mailing her at eve_originalsin@yahoo.com. "Original Sin with Eve" runs every Thursday in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

LOSAR

Tibetan New Year Celebration

Campus Center Auditorium
University of Massachusetts
SATURDAY, MARCH 6TH @ 6:30 PM
FREE ADMISSION

Special Appearances by:

Nawang Khechog, Grammy Nominated Tibetan Musician*
Lhadon Tethong, Executive Director, Students for a Free Tibet*
Tibetan Dance Troupe (TAWMA)*

For Information, contact Students for a Free Tibet at 617.429.6346

As an engineer in the U.S. Air Force, there's no telling what you'll work on.

(Seriously, we can't tell you.)

United States Air Force applied technology is years ahead of what you'll touch in the private sector, and as a new engineer you'll likely be involved at the ground level of new and sometimes classified developments. You'll begin leading and managing within this highly respected group from day one. Find out what's waiting behind the scenes for you in the Air Force today. To request more information, call 1-800-423-USAF or log on to airforce.com.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

'Movin' out' in Boston

MOVIN' OUT from page 5

bliss is just at its beginning. The horrors of Vietnam send the men overseas and leave the girls to pick up the pieces of their shattered lives.

Act II opens after the war, with Tony and Eddie struggling to get their lives back together. Slipping into a dismal abyss of drugs and alcohol, Eddie takes a nightmarish journey through his past, and realizes that forgiveness allows him to get his life back on track. Brenda and Tony realize the love they need to heal their wounds, and the lifelong friends reunite and discover they have found their way home.

The only actual dialogue in the show comes from the, bandleader, who plays the piano and belts out classic Joel tunes while overseeing the action on stage. Included in the "Movin' Out" repertoire are the signature Joel tunes "Scenes from an Italian Restaurant," "Just the Way You Are," "We Didn't Start the Fire," "Goodnight Saigon" and of course the title song, and that's only part of the 24-song set list. Also thrown into the mix are some of Joel's lesser-known songs, "Waltz (No. 1)," "Air (Dublinesque)" and "Elegy."

All of the action of the show comes from the white-hot dance talent of the six leads and the ensemble of 20 magnificent dancers, who generate passion and intensity from the stage for the better part of two hours.

On this, the first national tour, which launched in January at Detroit's Fisher Theater, the tireless and energetic cast is lead by Holly Cruikshank, Matthew Dibble, David Gomez and Julieta Gros as Brenda, James, Tony and Judy, respectively. Darren Holden plays the piano man on tour, belting out Joel's tunes night after night. During the matinee performances, Laurie Kanyok, Brendan King, Corbin Popp and Ron Todorowski play the four leads while Matt Wilson tickles the ivories.

Tharp has recreated her steps and her Tony nominated direction for the road. The creative team has returned as well. Santo Loquasto's sparse, industrial set, with the band above the action, Suzy Benzinger's sexy and sensual costumes and Donald Holder's imaginative lighting are all present on tour, identical to the show that has been thrilling sold out audiences at the Richard Rodgers Theatre on Broadway night after night.

Tickets to the limited five-week Boston engagement range from $28-$85 and can be purchased at www.ticketmaster.com, or by calling Broadway in Boston at 617-931-2787. "Movin' Out" will also participate in Broadway in Boston's $25 student rush ticket program, check out www.broadwayinboston.com for more information.

If you like Billy Joel, appreciate modern dance, or are curious to see some of the hottest dancing north of the border, check out "Movin' Out." The shows promotional phrase is true: "Five life long friends. Two turbulent decades. Twenty-four classic Billy Joel songs. One unforgettable musical."

Information from www.movinoutonbroadway.com was used for this article.

Numbers' second 'time' around

NUMBERS from page 5

in Kraftwerk draped their robotic décor in. Regardless, Numbers do well to simultaneously start the party and present themselves as paranoid android overwhelmed by the immeasurably bureaucratic input. Though their detuned, non-chord based makeshift funk sometimes does not work, it's usually over within a minute or two and Numbers, mechanized as they are, still have a few surprises in store.

On "Hot Fire," each instrument carefully goes asynchronous for a well-timed two minutes that catches the group itself on fire. Persistent drums and unpredictable Moog make for a satisfying humorous mid album break.

Then, toward the end of track 11, Numbers pull off their most shocking feat yet. It's the kind of stunt that drives people to listen to minimalist anything in the first place. On "Obsessed," Numbers actually sing. Their breakdown into recitations of the album's title paves way for the blissfully gorgeous closing track, "Feelings."

If "Feelings" is a step into a new direction, it will definitely be welcomed, if not warranted. Though "In My Mind All the Time" is a more appropriate debut than "Life" was, their shtick is growing a little weary already. Sure, the kids love their skittery, vaguely political dance punk, but Devo this isn't.

Not to say that with dedication and a slightly new approach, Numbers couldn't be the underground sensation of the new millennium. There's definitely no other band quite like them. However, "In My Mind All the Time's" sonic improvements cannot always compensate for the more of the sameness that this album has in spades.

If it comes down to it though, don't choose "Life." Keep it "In the Mind." At least some of the time.

Teach-In On War and Occupation

KEYNOTE SPEAKERS include RANIA MASRI of United for Peace and Justice, on Iraq; BILL FLETCHER of the TransAfrica Forum on U.S. Imperialism and Global Justice; PETA LINDSAY of International ANSWER on youth/student anti-war movement; and SUT JHALLY of the Media Education Foundation will show new films on Palestine and 9/11.

WORKSHOP TOPICS INCLUDE: War and the Economy, Palestine, U.S. Imperialism, Racism at Home and Patriot Act, Veterans and Military Families Speak Out.

HERTER HALL • UMASS AMHERST, SATURDAY, MARCH 6th AT 9:30 AM

Arab Cultural Festival

Exhibits, informational booths, crafts and more, from 10:00 AM to 3:00 PM in the Campus Center Concourse. Movement in Motion, a grass roots art and music group from Brooklyn, NY, plus various skits, dance and poetry slam, from 7:00 PM to Midnight in the Student Union Ballroom.
For more information please contact: the Arab Student Club at [illegible] or NAAW at 413-545-2517
UMASS AMHERST • FRIDAY, MARCH 5th

International Day of Protest
ON THE ONE-YEAR ANNIVERSARY OF THE WAR AGAINST IRAQ!

- END COLONIAL OCCUPATION FROM IRAQ TO PALESTINE AND EVERYWHERE!
- BRING THE TROOPS HOME NOW!

COURT SQUARE • SPRINGFIELD, SATURDAY, MARCH 20, 1:00 PM

For More Information, Call Western Mass ANSWER at 413-538-8537 • email:wmassiac@hotmail.com

All Events are FREE and Open to the Public

This ad sponsored by Western Mass ANSWER (Act Now to Stop War and End Racism) to support these events

Veteran Minutemen look to defend A-10 East title up Reynolds at first, while classmates Anthony Santos and Devin Barnett will add depth up the middle.

BASEBALL from page 10

Outfield

Fresh off a tour of duty with the Cape League's Brewster Whitecaps, junior outfielder Jason Twomley is poised for big things in 2004. Stone will move him to right field to take advantage of his strong arm, and will utilize his potent left-handed bat seventh in the order after watching him hit .319 with 37 hits, 21 RBI and a team-high 11 stolen bases last year.

"Jason has the ability to have a big season," Stone said. "He has a strong arm and showed a lot of punch with the bat, and we're counting on him to continue to work hard and produce."

Junior Derek Durepo will be penciled in center field after missing all of 2003 due to injury. As a freshman in 2002, Durepo started 30 games and hit .296 with 22 runs scored, but will have to prove he is fully healthy and can play every day.

Stone will use Curt Szado in left field after the junior started 18 games and hit .259 with 11 RBI last season.

"Our outfield is anything but set at this point," Stone said. "We know what Jason can do and he'll be out there, but other than that we have a lot of capable guys who we feel we can put out there and have them contribute."

Sophomore Bill Rankin could factor into the equation as well after playing four early games last year before bowing out to injury. Stone also believes skilled freshman Travis Munsey could play a large role in the outfield rotation.

Pitching Staff

While the lineup certainly poses some question marks for Stone, the Maroon and White's pitching staff will do no such thing.

Returning its entire staff from 2003, UMass has dependable veteran arms up and down its roster, thus allowing Stone to be creative yet efficient with his up and coming young hurlers and fill out what will be a very well rounded arsenal.

Leading the way for the starting staff will be Senior All-A-10 right-hander Eric Chown. Returning to Amherst for his final season despite being drafted by the Atlanta Braves, Chown looks to carry over the success that helped him go 7-4 with a 4.25 earned run average and 49 strikeouts as Stone's ace in 2003.

Following Chown in the rotation will be fellow right-handers Matt Torra and Mike Crane, as well as southpaw Keith Doherty. Torra was 5-4 with a 4.61 ERA last season, while ranking second on the team in innings pitched with 70.1. The sophomore hurled complete games in five of his nine starts last year, and was also named National Pitcher of the Week by the National Collegiate Baseball Writers Association.

Crane came on strong as a workhorse last year, compiling a 3.08 ERA and perfect 4-0 record in 10 appearances while ranking second on the squad with 48 strikeouts.

Doherty will begin the 2004 season on the shelf with an undisclosed injury, but when healthy will serve as the lone left-handed starter for UMass after a 4-4 campaign that included an impressive effort in a win over Xavier in the A-10 tournament.

The back end of Stone's rotation will be solid as well, as junior lefthander Scott Ratliff will return as the Minutemen's closer after leading the conference with seven saves and being named a first team All-A-10 performer. Ratliff, who is also plays football at UMass, posted a 2-2 record with a 3.70 ERA last year in 24.1 innings pitched.

Filling out the bullpen will be junior right-hander Anthony Gallo (2-0 3.60 ERA), along with sophomore right-handers Jeremy Demers, Jason Hickey, David Sullivan, Chris Lloyd and John Toffey.

Freshman hoping to chip in include right-handers Devin Barnett, Tom Cummings, Anthony Santos and Chris Sargoy, as well as lefty Daniel Larrow.

"We think pitching is going to be a real strength for us," Stone said. "We have a lot of good arms and guys who can win ballgames, and we think front to back our rotation should be able to win us a lot of games."

Senior righthander Eric Chown returns as ace of the Minuteman staff after being drafted by the Atlanta Braves in June.

Embree: Sox need another lefthander

FORT MYERS, Fla. — Even with two key off-season pitching acquisitions in starter Curt Schilling and closer Keith Foulke, the Boston Red Sox still are in search of another arm. If Alan Embree has his way, it will be another lefty.

As of now, Embree is the only left-hander guaranteed a spot on the roster when the season starts April 4 in Baltimore. Embree says if the Red Sox are going to finally win a World Series, having another southpaw would help.

"You look at most championship teams, they have more than one lefty," Embree said. "I would really appreciate another lefty but I'm ready to pitch whenever I'm called upon."

Last season, Embree appeared in 65 games for the Sox and posted a 4-1 record. But he also had the luxury of fellow lefties Kevin Tolar, Casey Fossum and Scott Sauerbeck sharing the load. None of those pitchers are still with the team.

With an all right-handed starting staff slated to start the season, Embree sees a greater need to get a situational left-hander for the bullpen.

"We need a one-out lefty," Embree said. "Someone who could come in early in a game and get a crucial out against a left-handed hitter."

Red Sox manager Terry Francona understands Embree's plead. But he doesn't know if one of the five left-handers in camp will be ready to assume that role.

"He has a valid point," Francona said. "Because with only one lefty you start second guessing yourself, when is the best time to use him and then you take the risk of getting him up too many times and then you can't even use him."

Currently, left-hander Mike Malaska is the leading contender to grab the final spot on the pitching staff. He appeared in 22 games last season with Tampa Bay, posting an impressive 2.81 ERA for the Devil Rays in 16 innings. His strikeouts-per-inning ratio (1.1) makes him a likely candidate to fill the one-out role.

Another former Devil Ray, Nick Bierdrodt, is the only other lefty in camp with any big league experience; Lenny Dinardo, Tim Hamulack and Phil Seibel are seen as long shots to make the final roster.

"While I'd like to take another lefty we may have to just go with the best arm available," Francona said.

But Embree said his concerns are eased when he considers Foulke, who had 42 saves last season in Oakland, and Scott Williamson, who joined the Red Sox late in the pennant race from Cincinnati, are right-handers who have faired well against left-handed hitters.

"Those two guys have the pitches and have the what it takes mentally to get a tough left-handed hitter out," Embree said. "So that takes a little of the burden off me."

If Embree is the only southpaw on the staff, it won't be the first time. He's been in that role before with San Diego and San Francisco.

"Hey, I'm always the only lefty," Embree said. "Right now left-handed pitching is a commodity. Look, the Yankees won't have a left-handed starter, either. So I guess we'll be even as far as that goes."

Notes: Francona said Pedro Martinez will make his first game appearance of the spring on March 9 against Cincinnati at City of Palms Park in Fort Myers. Martinez, who was 14-4 last season, will pitch in the same game as Curt Schilling. It hasn't been determined who will start. ... Francona said outfielders Johnny Damon and Trot Nixon will not be in the lineup for the first three games of the spring training season, which started Wednesday night against Minnesota. ... General manager Theo Epstein said the team has no interest in signing former New York Yankees pitcher Orlando "El Duque" Hernandez, who worked out for the Red Sox last week.

-Associated Press

NEW THIS WEEK!
COLD CREEK MANOR
DUPLEX
GOOD BOY!
LOONEY TUNES
SCHOOL OF ROCK
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND
Hot Nights? Cool Trips? Killer Deals?
This ain't your parents' travel agency ... it's yours

London $245
Amsterdam $245
Rome $245
Brussels $245
Miami From $740 - 6 nights
Vegas From $646 - 6 nights

BOOK IT BEFORE THE THRILL IS GONE.
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
Room 224 Campus Center
(413) 256.1261
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

BOLD TYPE

THE ONE YOU WANT
THE WAY YOU WANT IT.
ZANA
downtown Amherst

win a trip to europe!
contiki.com/campus

>save $150 to europe

>looking for a good time?

>8 day berlin/prague getaway explore the czech republic and germany!
>10 day london/paris getaway experience the best of england and france!
>13 day simply italy florence, venice, rome, pisa and more!
>14 day european discovery explore eight european countries!

contiki VACATIONS
for a free brochure or to book see your travel agent call 1-888-CONTIKI! visit www.contiki.com > europe > australia > new zealand > america > can

TAMALES
Great Mexican food that's good for you!
Extended Hours at The Hatch
Due to overwhelming demand, the Pizza and Tamales stations at the Hatch will

We accept the Ucard for all purchases!

PICK 'EM NOW
BerryBerry & Blueberry Bagels are back!

Come visit us at the Mullins Center and receive a FREE BAGEL
Cream cheese not included in offer
Valid only at UMass Dunkin Donuts. Not to be combined with any other offer. Coupon required for redemption. Offer expires 3/31/04.

DUNKIN' DONUTS

B's snag Gonchar

GONCHAR from page 10

opportunities (16.1 percent).

Prior to the addition of Gonchar, Boston's top scoring defensemen was Nick Boynton with 20 points.

Bruins general manager Mike O'Connell said he was comfortable dealing Morrisonn, 21, and draft picks because Boston has an abundance of good young players, particularly defensemen.

O'Connell added the dealing might not be done, saying he's looking to pick up a forward to boost scoring.

"We feel we have a good team that is in the right place at the right time with our goaltending and our solid play throughout the lineup," he said. "Adding (Gonchar) and hopefully others will hopefully give us a better chance to advance in the playoffs."

The trade continues a move by the last-place, money-losing Capitals to slash payroll ahead of an expected lockout next season. Gonchar, the leading scorer among NHL defensemen this season, follows Steve Konowalchuk, Jaromir Jagr, Peter Bondra and Robert Lang out the door.

General manager George McPhee said the trade market for Gonchar was limited because he only considered deals in which the Capitals would get a young defenseman in return.

Morrisonn had one goal and six assists for Boston in 27 games this season.

McPhee described Morrisonn as a "safe" player with good mobility and intelligence who can develop into a reliable defender and penalty killer, if not an "elite offensive defenseman, an elite power play guy," as he described Gonchar.

The trade leaves Washington without a player with more than 27 points this season. McPhee said the moves are tough to take now, but will give the Capitals a foundation of young, talented players.

"It's been difficult, but ... we're trying to do what we think is best for the hockey club in the near future," he said.

Gonchar, who turns 30 next month, is in the final year of a contract this pays him $3.65 million this season. He becomes eligible for arbitration this summer and will become an unrestricted free agent the following year.

O'Connell said the team would likely try to resign Gonchar after the season, adding, "We'll let the season play, we'll let the games go. He is a restricted free agent, which means we do own his rights.

The 6-foot-2-inch, 215-pound native of Chelyabinsk, Russia, had spent his entire career with Washington after the Capitals selected him with the 14th overall pick in the 1992 draft.

Since the start of the 1998-99 season, he's been the leading goal scorer among NHL defensemen with 109 goals. He's second among defensemen in points with 317 and has been named an NHL Second Team All-Star on defense in each of the last two seasons.

Trade for Gonchar shows Bruins are ready to take place among NHL elite

MERRITT from page 10

That may have all changed yesterday, because of one man from Chelyabinsk, Russia. The Bruins acquired hotshot defenseman Sergei Gonchar from the Washington Capitals yesterday, and that alone might be just enough to signal a paradigm shift in the way the club is run.

Sure, there have been big trades in the past few years. Bringing Jason Allison in worked for a while, although it seems now that Glen Murray was the best addition from that move. And the blockbuster that sent Ray Bourque to Colorado was one of the biggest moves of the 2000 season, but it had little to do with improving the Bruins, and more to do with giving an aging superstar a shot at Lord Stanley's chalice.

This trade, however, is all about shoring up the B's as they prepare for the Cup playoffs. Though the loss of Shaone Morrisson — not to mention the pair of high draft picks — could be a stinger in the future. It's long overdue that the club starts thinking about making a real run, now. The move was clearly designed to ensure that the mess of 2002 or 2003 doesn't happen once again.

Gonchar has been one of the only bright spots for a Capitals team that found a way to sink further into mediocrity this year. Now, he's just the latest Washington star to head out of town on a train bound for the postseason.

He is the most recent victim — using that term very lightly — of a fire sale being put on by a club that just can't figure out how to get out of its own way. Now, Boston is the benefactor of one of the game's best defensemen.

The trade represents a new willingness by the usually conservative Bruins management to go out and make something happen in order to improve the quality of play, and not just the bottom line.

In fact, it's almost so uncharacteristic that you'd wonder if rookie coach Mike Sullivan slipped this one to the NHL while Scrooge Jacobs and Harry Sinden II weren't looking. This is the kind of trade that contenders make, the kind of move that previously was only reserved for the Colorados, Detroits, and Torontos of the NHL's universe.

And in the end, it makes sense. That might be the most mind-blowing part of this whole thing. Once Montreal picked up Alexei Kovalev, the Habs were clearly out of the superstar sweepstakes. That left only a few other options, because there isn't exactly a throng of strong teams in the East.

The Bruins, who have done very well without a scoring defenseman all year, saw the need for an extra push heading into the spring, and rather than picking up an aging veteran at the end of his career (see: Coffey, Paul), they actually made the move that anyone who's been following the spoked 'B' this year wanted.

It also represents a tremendous improvement on the ice. For the first half of 2003-04, the Bruins were simply trying to put up an average defensive unit.

The defensive pairs began to bear a striking resemblance to the doomed "closer by committee" crew of Red Sox pitchers early last summer. But for the spectacular work of "rookie" Andrew Raycroft in net, the defense was by far the biggest liability.

Through patience and quality moves like the one that brought the season's biggest surprise, Jiri Slegr, the defense is better than average, and now it has a sharpshooter among the ranks.

The players like the move too. Not that they would likely say otherwise, but the enthusiasm is clear.

"It's a good sign when a lot of the other teams are starting to make deals and we get involved," Raycroft said on the team's Web site. "You know, as a player, it's nice to see that happen and to see us improve. Now its up to us, management did and good job and now its up to us."

Is another early-round bow out in the future? Possibly. But if nothing else can be taken from the Gonchar move, this team is not the same stubborn, overly cautious club that showed signs of brilliance but fell hard.

Couple that with the fact that O'Connell still looking for a forward who can bring some more goals, and this should be a very entertaining spring on Causeway Street.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at merritt_collegian@yahoo.com.

COURTESY WASHINGTON CAPITALS

New Boston Bruins defenseman Sergei Gonchar.

UMASS AMHERST STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE

HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS

Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students

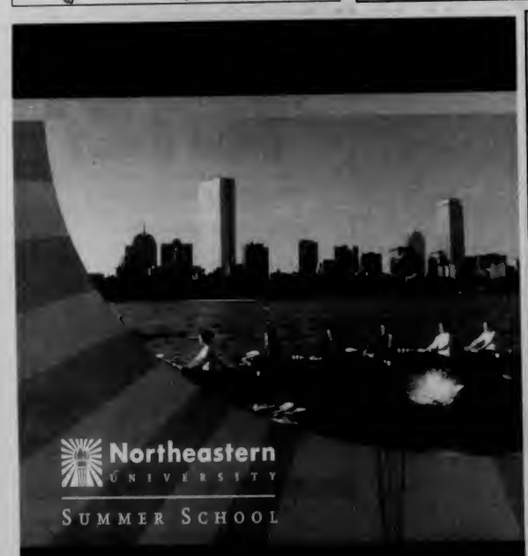
Student & Workers Rights: Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes

CALL 545-1995 or stop in at 922 Campus Center

On the Rocks School of Bartending

- Become a certified bartender in a weekend
- The course is held on campus
- Anyone 18+ may bartend in New England
- Bartending is a great summer job

Call us toll free at 866-MIX-5600 for more information or to register.



www.otrbartending.com

DO YOU WANT A GREAT SUMMER JOB?

◆ BECOME A PEER ADVISOR FOR PRE-MAJOR ADVISING SERVICES DURING SUMMER ORIENTATION ◆

Pick up an application at 615 Goodell Pre-Major Advising Services.

Application Deadline is April 16, 2004

Northeastern University Summer School

Spend your summer in Boston

Northeastern University's Summer School for you.

Choose from hundreds of courses in business, health, humanities, sciences, and the arts

Live in campus housing in the heart of the city

Transfer credit back to your college

Take courses online

Explore Boston. Discover Northeastern.

www.ace.neu.edu/summer925 or call 877-60-LEARN x925

→→ Summer registrations are now being accepted!

McMurphy's Uptown Tavern Presents...

5th Annual McMurphy's Blarney Blowout

Saturday, March 6th
Doors Open at Noon
Live Irish Music at 4

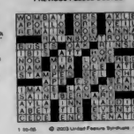
FREE CORNED BEEF BUFFET

Buttercup Festival • By Jason Cruickshank

Fish Hooper • By Rich Tennant

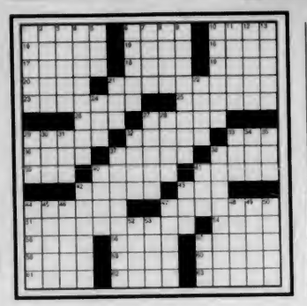
Get Fuzzy • By Darby Conley

1 in 30 Billion • By Meghann Rooney



Running on Empty • By Dan Beadle

Today's Crossword Puzzle



Previous puzzle solved

Across
1 Loses hair
6 Nevada town
10 Fresh
14 Thunders
16 Tel —
17 Refrigerator stick
18 "Wait Until Dark" star
19 Eat out
20 Sinuous of jeans
21 Modern energy source (2 wds.)
23 Kill a whale
25 Some exams
26 Metal
27 Dread
29 Real estate —
32 Mentor
33 Started city
36 Marker for 37 Tendon
38 Unusual
39 Emergency signal
41 Preposterous
42 Jerks away
43 Faint
44 Strong
47 Threatens
51 Small sight
54 Scent finder
55 Rock out
56 Pull off
57 Sharp
58 For the asking
59 Conrad of song
60 Poet Stephen Vincent
61 Impudent talk
62 Foxes' digs
63 Houston athlete

Down
1 Cheeky
2 Major artery
3 Los Angeles eagler
4 Wet
5 Egg application
6 Topic gas
7 Malicious
8 Carousel of 1492
9 Surplus
10 Warsaw's country
11 Actress Hagen
12 Party hearty
13 Works hard
21 Lou Gehrig's disease
22 Dock
24 Fall inc.
27 Viking letters
28 Cain's highway
29 Packing and crating
30 Moo — goo gai pan
31 Coast Guard off.
32 Fork prong
33 Corn serving
34 Miscalculate
35 Pre-fall
37 Traded places
38 Love affairs
40 City of dismay (2 wds.)
41 Be victorious
42 Trade and smell
44 Fatuity
45 Fatuity VIPs
46 Scarlett of Tara
48 Gets bored
47 Fashions
48 Dracula's title
49 Aromatic chemical
50 Look after
52 Limerick locale
53 Harness attachment
57 Perry Mason's org.

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Shepherds Pie
- Captain's Catch Sandwich
- Lentil Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Flank Steak
- General Tso's Chicken
- Penne with Spinach & Tomato (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 32

FRIDAY
- High: 52
- Low: 45

SATURDAY
- High: 56
- Low: 38

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan

COPY EDITOR
Erika Lovles

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl

PRODUCTION STAFF
Meghan Healy, Samantha Nielsen

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
If you overreact, it's OK. Just apologize when necessary.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Make some veggie or nacho dip. Dipping any food is much more fun.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
People often flip out for no reason. Don't be afraid; just laugh at the loser.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Travel. Seeing more of the world will change the way you look at it.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Forget about the shoes. Someone else already bought them.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Buy a new pet. Get an elephant. Name it Glen.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Go somewhere really cold. It will make you appreciate Massachusetts more.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You had better be serious about your next project. People are counting on you.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your phone is ringing like crazy. Answer it. Your roommate is sick of hearing it.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
That new hobby makes people question your sexuality.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Stop obsessively checking the away message of your crush.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Remember those great toys from the 1980s? Don't you miss Popples?

Quote for the Day

"When the returns came in, and I stood up there last night, I knew I was coming to Orlando, my first instinct was to say to everybody, 'Guess where I'm going tomorrow. I'm going to Disney World.' But I resisted the temptation."

-John Kerry, during a speech yesterday in Orlando, Fla. on his Super Tuesday sweep

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$1 off previewed movies at campus ministore and Worcester munchie store with this coupon 1 per customer Good until March 31st

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine 1 Bedroom. On bus line, gas water included. Immediate occupancy 978-835-4571

N. Amherst, 1 Bdrm 1 1/2 mi UMass deck $625 Pets OK Hdwd floors Avlb 4/1 maybe sooner 549-2062

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1996 Jeep Grand Cherokee, Maroon, 8 Cyl., AT, Fully Loaded, CD/Cass 75K, Tinted, Fabulous condition $9600.00 or B/O 413-256-3478 Ask for Justin

96 Accord Runs great Excellent CD $4300 256-1505 or 896-0017

EMPLOYMENT

Live in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet, Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Director Growing Co Looking for energetic, motivated personable phone supervisor to assist in managing sales staff Mon-Fri 5:00-8:30p.m. Must be proficient on phones to do Customer care Apt. setting No Telemarketing. $250.00 a wk. to start. Plus bonuses Call 413-253-6652

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

FOR RENT

Hadley 5 bedroom Newer home close to UMass big yard 2 full bathrooms, sunny living room. Call 549-4270

FOR RENT

Spring Break Rental Dayton Beach Resort Studio Sleeps 4 1 Wk March 14th-21st Price neg. 1321-724-5965 alwilson01@aol.com

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst; philosophydialogue.net

SERVICES

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun,

TRAVEL

Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

WANTED

Your 10 year old BMX bike $75. Will pay more for Mongoose or GT, Patrick, 508-934-9274

EGG DONORS NEEDED; Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.reproductivechoices.com

Collegian Classifieds! 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 4, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A near miss

Minutewomen fall just short in furious comeback attempt

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Despite attempting a great comeback, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team fell short of an upset win yesterday in their 12-9 loss to No. 10 Boston University at Richard F. Garber Field.

"We made a lot of good changes," Coach Carrie Bolduc said. "Honestly, this was probably the best game I have ever seen our team play."

BU	12
UMass	9

Tracey Drown was almost nowhere to be found in the first half, but when she found her stride, the Minutewomen began to fire on all cylinders. Drown's three goals all came during a late Maroon and White campaign of four unanswered goals.

"Even though Maura [McGarrity] was shut down, we still had two or three more people to go to on offense," Bolduc said. "It just shows that when all of us are on, it's kind of scary, because we really do have a top ten attack out there."

The Minutewomen struck the first blow in this duel after Kerri Connerty converted on a free position shot at 3:36. Connerty struck again for her second just four minutes later, unassisted, to give them a 2-0 advantage early in the game.

But the Maroon and White would encounter some turbulence in the final 15 minutes of the first half.

Lindsay Lewis kicked off a streak of six unanswered Terrier goals at 15:18 with her first goal of the game, assisted by Angie Martin.

Kaitlyn Cuneo then fired one past Lauren McCarthy on a free position shot two minutes later, to even things up quickly. Alyssa Trudel knocked in another Martin pass to give BU its first lead at 22:00.

Mary Beth Miller tallied her first of the game on yet another Martin pass with just 90 seconds to go to give the Terriers a two-goal lead heading into the break.

The bombardment did not end there.

Cuneo sent home her second goal of the game on a free position shot just 45 seconds into the first half, and Lewis sprinted straight through the Minutewomen defense 25 seconds later for another score to extend the Terriers' lead to four.

Hope Zelinger cut the lead to three with an unassisted goal at 4:51, but she could only temporarily stop the bleeding.

Miller tallied her second on a free position shot at 6:05. Danica Strutt weaved through the heart of the Minutewomen defense for her first and only at 8:27, and Miller tapped in a Lewis pass on a free position shot at 9:13 to make it 9-3.

But the game was far from out of reach.

Zelinger netted a free position shot and a Connerty pass to close the lead to four once again. Lewis connected with Martin again for her third of the game, but the momentum was clearly on UMass' side.

Drown finally found the back of the net for her first of three goals at 14:20, off a free position shot. She then tapped in a rebound less than two minutes later.

After another Zelinger goal from a Connerty pass at 22:31, Drown cut the lead to one for her third of the game, assisted by Lindsay Cassell.

For the next minute or so, it was once again a game. That was until Cuneo connected with Martin again to extend their lead back to two. Miller added on an exclamation point with her fourth, with just four seconds remaining on the clock.

COURTESY JERALD H. LIND

Not quite enough

Anthony Anderson and the Massachusetts men's basketball team fell just short at rival Temple last night, falling 98-92 in double overtime. David Hawkins led all scorers with 41 points for Temple, while Jeff Viggiano had 23 points for the Minutemen and Art Bowers added 18 points.

UMass well-armed in 2004

Strong staff to help Minutemen defend A-10 East title

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

As the snow that once dominated the Pioneer Valley subsides and the bitter Amherst chill gives way to manageable serenity, the sight of veteran UMass baseball coach Mike Stone wrapping fungoes to his infielders and coordinating cutoffs with his outfielders is a familiar one.

An indelible image of hope offering an assuring level of comfort to those sauntering by Garber Field's artificial turf on their way to and from class, it serves as a subtle reminder that the light at the end of winter's long, dark tunnel is indeed approaching.

The high sun, the ping of the aluminum bat, the continuous popping of leather mitts and vocal commands in a language only some can comprehend are nothing new to Stone. They are signs of spring, signs that game time is approaching for the job he has been doing successfully for 22 seasons and those which preclude Stone's transformation from caring father of three teenage children to rock-solid patriarch of 30 collegiate hardballers.

However the onus is on Stone this spring, and for the right reasons. A season-ending sweep at the hands of Richmond in last year's Atlantic 10 Championship Series left him stuck on 499 career victories, and his squad at least two wins short of where it had aspired to be after capturing the Atlantic 10 East Division title in 2003.

Now, the core of the squad that won 12 of its final 16 games in 2003 is primed for another go at A-10 supremacy, as well as UMass' first trip to the College World Series since 1996. The position that leaves Stone and his 499 career victories in is a curious one: that of the favorite.

The talented, arm-laden 2003-04 Minutemen have as much chance to sneak up on opponents as Stone does of sneaking up on 500 wins after nine months on the cusp. The secret is out: the Maroon and White have the horses to think bigger than they have in eight years, and Stone hopes 500 is merely the beginning.

Catcher

With the graduation of reliable captain Tom Ellerbrook and power hitting Chris Morgan, sophomore Frank Curreri is poised to step in capably behind the dish after a breakthrough 2003 campaign. Curreri saw the majority of his time in the outfield last season, but was a catcher at Boston College High School and proved potent at the plate with a .339 batting average, 13 extra base hits and 27 runs batted in during his freshman campaign.

It remains to be seen whether Curreri can handle the every-day rigors of catching at the college level, but Stone feels comfortable that what Curreri learned as a freshman will help him carry the load both offensively and defensively.

"Frank made the transition from high school pretty well last year," Stone said. "He works hard and learned what he needed to from Tommy [Ellerbrook], so that I think he'll be ready to be our primary guy handling the staff.

"Offensively he has good patience at the plate and is a guy we're counting on to produce."

Freshmen David Bettencourt and Michael Weiner will compete for backup duties.

Infield

Tri-captain Mike Athas — a temporary player with the Orleans Cardinals in the prestigious Cape Cod League this past summer — returns to his shortstop position as the catalyst of what will be a half-revamped infield in 2004. "Skip" will slide out of the leadoff spot and into the third hole in Stone's new-look lineup, and is being counted on to reproduce what was a very successful junior season that saw him hit .339 with a .401 on-base percentage and a team-leading 57 hits.

Gone is first baseman and cleanup hitter Jeff Altieri, to be replaced by Senior tri-captain Matt Reynolds who is making the shift across the infield after hitting .259 with 12 doubles as a third baseman last season.

Penciled in to replace the South Boston, Mass. native at the hot corner will be senior Adam Stojanowski, who started 15 games at third base, second base and shortstop for UMass but struggled at the plate, hitting just .189 — over 100 points lower than his career average.

Steady Senior Cullan Maumus rounds out the veteran infield, as he will be returning to second base and the two slot in the order after a .294 average and a school-record 14 sacrifices in 2003.

"You look around our infield and it's all seniors," Stone said. "You can never have too much experience like that, and it should be a strength for us because we feel like we have some guys who can do some good things there."

Senior tri-captain and infielder Sean Sarno takes over for Athas at the top of the order, and will do so out of the designated hitter slot rather than in the field. Capable of backing up Maumus at second, Sarno's blazing speed is evident by his perfect 18-for-18 in career stolen bases.

Bettencourt, as well as fellow freshmen Frank McPhearson and Michael Weiner will back

See BASEBALL on page 7

COURTESY JAMES SCHAFFER

Senior tri-captain Mike Athas will move out of the leadoff spot after hitting .339 with a .401 on-base percentage last season.

COURTESY JAMES SCHAFFER

Senior Mike Crane will help anchor a veteran starting rotation.

Bruins acquire Gonchar

By Jay Lindsay
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) – The Boston Bruins acquired high-scoring defenseman Sergei Gonchar from the Washington Capitals on Wednesday in a bid to add punch to their power play as the team prepares for the playoffs.

The Bruins dealt Shaone Morrisonn and their first and second round selections in the 2004 draft for Gonchar, 29, said general manager Mike O'Connell.

Gonchar is the top-scoring defenseman in the league, with 42 assists and 49 points in 56 games. Bruins forward and team captain Joe Thornton called the trade "a huge move for this organization."

"The power play is going to be much better," he said. "We've got a serious contender here now."

The Bruins are in fifth in the Eastern Conference, two points out of the top spot as the season enters its final month. They rank 14th in the league in power-play scoring with 39 goals in 242

See GONCHAR on page 8

Ready to compete?

Andrew Merritt

It's about time.

Year after year, the script has been mostly the same. Save for the really lean years in the mid-90s, the Boston Bruins have built a 32-year-old tradition of coming up short when it counts.

There were the epic battles with the Canadians in the late 80's and early 90's, and the surprising run to first place in 2002 that eventually ended up in shambles after a first-round whooping by those hated Habs. Last year, Bruins fans came to understand that yes, it was a good enough team to make the playoffs, but no, it wasn't nearly good enough to advance.

See MERRITT on page 8

UMass Theater brings Shakespeare to the stage

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

UMass hockey concludes regular season this weekend

SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 96

Librarians gather to talk about choosing career path

By Adamma Udokwu
Collegian Correspondent

Librarians from New England gathered yesterday to discuss the changing atmosphere of technology and ethnic diversity in American and career choices in librarianship.

The ALANA Library Career Reception, held in the main floor of the W.E.B DuBois Library, was an information session that was aimed at informing minority students of the opportunities available to them in the field of librarianship.

Among those 80 or some attendants were students from the ALANA community, the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and Minority Students as well as librarians of neighboring schools and other students from the area.

The goal of the session was to inform students that there may be more to a career in librarianship than stereotypes would suggest.

"Librarianship is a field where you can go where you want to go and be what you want to be," said Mike Havener, Ph.D. who is the director and professor of the Graduate School of Library and Information Studies at the University of Rhode Island.

The keynote speaker for the evening was Ms. Sherelle Harris who works in the children's library branch at Norwalk Public Library in Connecticut. Ms. Harris who holds a bachelors in journalism from Columbia College, spoke of the need a more diverse face in the field and explained how her presence in her community has made more people of minority background feel more comfortable with coming to the library and utilizing the resources available.

Ms. Harris also explained that along with planning for programs for children of all races, her job also consists of programming and working a lot with computers and graphics.

"Initially I was not interested in being a librarian," she said. "I gradually began to see a different side of it and considered giving it a try."

"There are many different sides to librarianship, such as corporate which is more task oriented, as opposed to public, which is more person to person interaction," she said.

The speakers discussed the scholarship opportunities that are available to aid students in pursuing their career in librarianship. For the past five years, the Spectrum Scholarship and the Institute of Museum and Library Services have been in place in order to bring in more minorities. The speakers stated that these scholarships have been put in place to attract students and offer them some aid.

"This profession is not as diverse as it should be," Mr. Havener said at the end of his speech. "We need to bring dynamic people like you to help bring information to everyone."

SCOTT ELLINGSON/COLLEGIAN

Students interested in library careers meet with representatives from Library degree programs in the W.E.B. DuBois library yesterday.

Health care cuts protested

By Megan Daley
Collegian Correspondent

Approximately 30 health care activists, including several students, gathered outside of Wal-Mart and surrounding stores yesterday to distribute flyers to customers until police sent them home.

The Jobs with Justice Coalition held about 50 demonstrations across the country during Health Care Action Day yesterday. In Hadley, outside of the Mountain Farms Mall, there was a campaign to inform customers of the "Wal-Martization of health care," and to vocalize the need for a national health insurance plan."

Event Coordinator Jon Weissman called this "a nationwide day of action," saying, the main aim for the event was to "educate the troops."

"The health care system is broken and Wal-mart has come up with a new way to break it," Weissman said. "Wal-mart offers a meager health plan and then finds ways to make sure its empoiyees don't qualify for it."

Weissman also accused Wal-Mart of setting a precedent that other stores are now following, saying that he fears that "Wal-martization might spread."

Rick Brown, the president of the Pioneer Valley American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Unions agreed with this fear, using the example of the threatened Stop & Shop strikes over health care issues.

"When we were negotiating a contract; we heard again and again: 'We can't compete with Wal-Mart' as an excuse for fewer employee benefits like health care," he said.

Weismann said that the protestors were using Wal-Mart to highlight a problem that is overtaking other businesses.

"Wal-Mart is actively leading the charge to say 'you're on your own,' Weismann said. "[Wal-Mart] leads the industry on so many issues."

Protestor Shirley McCready, an Amherst resident, said that she came to pass out leaflets because "Congress just passed a horrendous Medicare Bill that pharmacists wrote to get themselves money."

"We have to fight this," she said.

Democratic candidate for Governor Council, Peter Vickery, also attended this event, passing out leaflets and holding a sign. "I'm protesting to support the right to organize and because I'm a union member."

UMass Graduate student and union member, Leo Maley says that he and other UMass employees are all members of the union and that he wants to protest Wal-Mart's "continual harassment of right to unionize."

Customers had varied reactions to the activists.

"I'm bitterly against Wal-mart," said one man who stopped to engage a protestor in conversation.

Another shopper was embarrassed to be shopping at Wal-Mart, which she normally tries to avoid. Some customers, however, were not happy at being "harassed," as they said, by the activists.

"Get a job," one woman yelled, while another repeated "I'm not interested, I'm not interested," as she went through Wal-Mart's entrance.

Apparently, the angrier customers complained to store managers, prompting them to call the police. Although Weissman said that Rick Gelarneau, a Teamsters Local 404 member had spoken to the police chief to warn him of the leafleting campaign, some officers said that they had not been informed of the event.

Police said that protestors were stopping customers from entering stores, blocking store entrances and generally annoying the customers. Every store in

See HEALTH CARE on page 2

Volunteers distribute flyers about healthcare to shoppers at the Mountain Farms Mall in Hadley.

Lecture on Internet security set for Monday

By Gabriel Leiner
Collegian Staff

A senior-level employee of a telecommunications company is scheduled to speak Monday about securing the Internet.

Patrick D. McDaniel, senior technical staff member of the Secure Systems Group at AT&T Labs-Research will give a talk titled, "Origin Authentication in Interdomain Routing," in the Computer Science building in room 151.

McDaniel, whose most recent research efforts have focused on security management of network systems and public policy and technical issues in digital media, will discuss the limiting of Internet attacks by validating Internet addresses.

McDaniel will also present possible methods of formalization of address usage and delegation, as well as types of cryptographic proof systems appropriate for origin authentication.

Two notable observations that have been made by McDaniel in his research, are that as few as 16 entities are the source of 80% of the delegation on the Internet, and that this system may be able to provide the capability to efficiently implement Internet-wide origin authentication.

Currently there is no way to validate if a computer using an Internet address has the right to do so. When an illegal entity is able to exploit Internet security, the potential exists for a disruption of the Net, which is why McDaniel is working to develop a collection of interdomain routing data.

Prior to the sudden increase of computer networks in the late 1980s, most computer networks were isolated collections of computers, and the methods used to connect those computers did not require much security. As computer networking has grown to a much larger scale, security attacks against Internet routing have become a concern. Until recently, little information was known about some important characteristics of address use on the Internet.

McDaniel has had works published for information and network security conferences, as well as papers for the Institute of Electrical and Electronic Engineers and the Internet Engineering Task Force. McDaniel has been part of IEEE committees for several of the major systems and security conferences including the USENIX Annual Technical Conference and the USENIX Security Symposium. McDaniel has been mentioned in the New York Times and the International Herald Tribute. He has been interviewed on CNN Financial News.

McDaniel attained his Ph.D. from the University of Michigan in 2001 where he studied algorithmic limits and enforcement of security policy. He has a M.S. in Computer Science from Ball State University and a B.S. in Computer Science from Ohio University.

McDaniel's professional experience includes time at the Kennedy Space Center and Primary Access Corporation as lead engineer before 3Come acquired the company. McDaniel was also the architect and developer of the Lightweight Secure Group Communication middleware layer, which is currently used to support reliable and secure key distribution within "Internet 2" type test applications.

McDaniel is a past recipient of the NASA Kennedy Space Center fellowship, a frequent contributor to the IETF security standards, and is member of the Internet Research Task Force working group, which develops standards for Internet security.

Gay marriage licenses rejected

People supporting gay marriage line up outside the Municipal Building in New York yesterday. Dozens of same-sex couples lined up outside the city clerk's office to obtain marriage licenses in the morning.

By Timothy Williams
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — The fight over gay marriages reached the nation's largest city Thursday as about three dozen same-sex couples asked for licenses and were turned down. One applicant warned, "This isn't going away."

Couples in a New York suburb were also rejected, but across the country in Portland, Ore., a line of at least 100 hopefuls snaked around a building as Multnomah County handed out licenses to gay couples for a second day.

"This isn't a matter of sacred and religious issues. It's a civil issue," said Nelson Jones, 74, who came out to support the Oregon couples and hoped to seek his own license there next week.

It is not clear how long the licenses will be available. Democratic Gov. Ted Kulongoski has warned the marriages may not be legal and requested a legal opinion from Oregon's attorney general.

New York's attorney general, Eliot Spitzer, said in an opinion Wednesday that his state's laws prohibit same-sex marriages, and New York City's top lawyer said the same about city law. Mayor Michael Bloomberg has also promised to enforce the law.

Still, gay couples began lining up outside the city clerk's office two hours before it opened. First in line were Mara Gottlieb, 33, and Camille Gonzalez, 38, accompanied by Gottlieb's mother and their rabbi.

They, like those who followed, were handed a 50-page rejection letter that included the state and city's legal opinions and offered information about domestic partnership options.

"We're disappointed, but we think it's important for people to come here," said Gottlieb, who wore a tiara-like white band in her hair. "We want the politicians to know that this isn't going away."

About 300 gay and lesbian demonstrators held signs and chanted: "It's about equality!"

About 30 miles to the north, Nyack Mayor John Shields met on Thursday with same-sex couples and then accompanied them to the Orangetown clerk's office to apply for marriage licenses. The mayor and his partner, Bob Streams, went first, and the town clerk handed them a statement saying she is not authorized to issue licenses to same-sex couples. Eight other couples were also denied.

Shields, 60, was not surprised. "I think it's wonderful that a group came together to fight for the rights we deserve," he said.

Shields had originally planned to hold a wedding ceremony for same-sex couples like one held last week in the college town of New Paltz, but changed his mind after the Spitzer opinion.

"I want to be a plaintiff, not a defendant," Shields said.

Teach-in on war planned

A "Teach-in on War and Occupation", organized by the Arab Student Club and the Office of ALANA Affairs is scheduled to take place tomorrow in Herter Hall.

The teach-in will begin at 9:30 a.m. in room 227 with free bagels and coffee for the attendees. Planned events for the day include plenary presentations, workshops and a variety of cultural activities.

Jo Comerford, director of the American Friends Service Committee, said there will be six specific workshops, including; the economic cost of war; imperialism; civil liberties; veteran's perspectives; Palestine; and the human cost of war.

The teach-in was specifically arranged to be two weeks before the one-year anniversary of the U.S. invasion of Iraq. In part, this is to highlight and promote the global day of action being planned for March 20.

See Arts & Living p.5 for more coverage.

Comerford said this is a great opportunity for students, faculty and members of the community to come together and comfortably talk about any issues at hand.

Mark Brenner, assistant research professor at the Political Economy Research Institute said anywhere from 200 to 400 people are expected to attend the teach-in over the course of the day.

"It's really important for people at UMass to have a chance to start talking from more of a grass-roots perspective," said Brenner.

See TEACH-IN on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Founakis
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Stroub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reed
NEWS EDITOR Feroza Salaskar
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marry Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagatic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamen
HUMAN RESOURCE Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADDITIONS David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jachren Sorensen
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kuggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lizz Lynch
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Crum
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilio Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Martarelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE SCHOOL YEAR BY STUDENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST. THE COLLEGIAN IS EDITORIALLY INDEPENDENT OF THE ADMINISTRATION AND FACULTY. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS NEWS LETTER CALLED THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907. THE NAME CHANGED TO THE COLLEGIAN IN 1908 AND THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN ENGAGHOST SINCE JANUARY 1998. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 5454545 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

www.daily collegian.com

Club Castaway Will Proudly present College night on Thursday from 9pm - 1am. 18 & OLD ares with valid college ID Entrance fee needs must be 21 years or older through March.
CLUB CASTAWAY
Hey ladies pay $5 before 11! Earn big money for your Spring Break vacation. Come and see us and we will show you how to make the money that you need in the entertainment business.
Rt. 5&10, Whately 665-8135

Health care protested

HEALTH CARE from page 1

the mall had placed a call in complaint of the protest, they said.

Mountain Farm Mall's Property Maintenance Manager arrived soon after police with a trespass order to force the activists to disperse. Protestors complied without complaint since they were only planning to continue picketing for another five minutes.

Ben Armstrong, Wal-Mart's store manager refused to comment, saying only: "Wal-Mart is not anti-union; we're pro-associate."

When asked if he thought that today's event would make a difference he said: "Based on the fact that this is nationwide...we are optimistic."

Middle East talk planned

TEACH-IN from page 1

Brenner also said with the 2004 elections coming later this year, the teach-in will give people in the community an opportunity to talk about coverage of the soldiers stationed in Iraq and families in the U.S. left behind.

"This is a way for people at UMass, the community and beyond to come together and see about war and military intervention," he said. "We're providing resources who are experts on these issues."

The event is scheduled to run until 6 p.m.

— Kimberly Seymour

Campus Perspectives

By Scott Eldridge II

What are you doing for spring break?

"Going home, hanging out with some friends."

freshman
Chemistry major
Collin Bright

"Relaxing, taking some time off. Probably going snowboarding."

junior
Communications major
Josh Sillup

"Going to New York."

freshman
Nursing major
Margaret Frempong

"Just going home and working."

junior
Civil Engineering major
Ptricio Valadivieso

"I'm going home to Pennsylvania with a friend of mine."

sophomore
Undeclared major
Sarah Diehl

"Shopping and just having fun."

freshman
Nursing major
Rose Mintor

McMurphy's Uptown Tavern
Presents...
5th Annual McMurphy's Blarney Blowout
Saturday, March 6th
Doors Open at Noon
Live Irish Music at 4
FREE CORNED BEEF BUFFET

What's in it for U?
LAST CHANCE TO GET USED BOOKS FOR THIS TERM
UMass Amherst University of Massachusetts UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center • Phone: (413) 545 2619
www.umass.bkstr.com
Visit us at efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bush's new advertisement campaign disrespectful

President George W. Bush and the Bush-Cheney re-election campaign began airing political advertisements on Wednesday. The ads have come under a great deal of scrutiny for featuring images of the World Trade Center wreckage. The ads, which feature a voice-over from Bush promoting his campaign, also feature firefighters working at the scene of the disaster.

The firestorm of controversy serves as a double-edged sword for President Bush. On the one hand, it stirs up emotion and brings attention to his campaign. However, it has also managed to offend several people who lost relatives and loved ones on Sept. 11.

It appears that President Bush, who has a $100 million campaign advantage over his opponent, Sen. John Kerry, seems to think the benefits of the exposure outweigh the backlash it has produced.

The ads have drawn criticisms that the Bush campaign is using the tragedy as a political tool. The patriotic rhetoric and sentimental music allow Bush to remind every American that while the attacks occurred during his time in office, he did everything in his power to rescue the country in its greatest time of need.

Some do not see it the way that President Bush does.

"The ads make me sick," said Colleen Kelly, who lost her brother Bill Kelly Jr., in the attacks. "Would you ever go to someone's grave site and use that as an instrument of politics? That truly is what Ground Zero represents to me."

New York City firefighter Harold Schaitberger, said: "We're not going to stand for him to put his arm around one of our members on top of a pile of rubble at Ground Zero during a tragedy and then stand by and watch him cut money for first responders."

The White House has defended the advertisements, which are airing nationally on cable television and on broadcast stations in about 80 media markets in 18 states. Former New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani has already been signed up to publicly defend the ads on air.

Several relatives of Sept. 11 victims have also expressed their approval of the ads. Bernard Kerik, the former New York police commissioner who saw 23 of his officers die on Sept. 11, said Bush is perfectly justified in using the images of the WTC to support his campaign, comparing it to Sen. Kerry using scenes of Vietnam in his advertisements.

"It's comparable. It's about the president's history. It's about his leadership ability," said Kerik. Regardless of whether or not you are for or against the ads, the fact still remains that they are being discussed in the first place. This in and of itself makes the point that the ads do not have a rightful place in Bush's campaign push. It is a clear indication that the President's plans on tugging at every voting American's emotional heartstrings, rather than take on the bigger issues.

The ads running so far have not taken a firm stand on any of the major issues expected to decide the November election. Instead, they have stirred up painful memories of this country that may happen to be patriotic, but are also sacred in many ways. He is blatantly exploiting one of the most sensitive moments in our nation's history.

If President Bush planned on using the ads to draw attention to his campaign, and get a reaction from the voting public, he has already succeeded at the expense of the thousands who lost their lives on Sept. 11.

Information from CNN.com was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The 413

by Zachary Denver

America's unlikely 'Idol'

Jen Hodson

When it comes to memorable auditions from this season's American Idol, one name comes to mind: William Hung. If you haven't heard about this most talked about contestant yet then you've been living under a rock for the past month.

After his television appearance on the Jan. 27 episode of American Idol on Fox Television Network, Hung managed to win over the hearts of viewers from all across the country. By singing an off-key and ultimately failed rendition of Ricky Martin's "She Bangs," Hung left a lasting impression that would have people talking about him for weeks to come.

Despite being laughed at and not chosen by the judges, Hung's response was sweet and sincere and perhaps is what catapulted him into stardom in the first place. "I have no professional training. I already gave my best. I have no regrets at all," he remarked.

After the show, Hung had no further expectations but to return back to his normal student life at University of California – Berkeley where he is pursuing a degree in civil engineering. Little did he know that his dream of landing a music career was far from over.

Since the show, Hung has become a nationwide celebrity. Known as American Idol's favorite contestant, he began receiving invitations to perform in other settings as well. He even sings and dances with the UC –Berkeley cheerleaders at the University's volleyball games.

But what happened next came as a shock to everybody. After a performance at a volleyball game, Fuse VJ Marianela Pereyra, Fuse President Marc Juris and Koch Entertainment Executive Vice President Allan Grunblatt surprised Hung with the deal of a lifetime. What was it you ask? A record contract and music video production deal from Koch Entertainment, the largest independent record company in the country. This would go along with a check for $25,000 if he decides to accept the offer, which he hasn't yet, believe it or not.

Despite being laughed at and not chosen by the judges, Hung's response was sweet and sincere and perhaps is what catapulted him into stardom in the first place.

When asked what his plans were for the future, Hung said that he was considering the offer, but needed to look over the details more closely. He believes that contracts are a serious matter and take time.

Aside from music deals and performances, Hung's fan base has increased on a large scale and is currently still growing. He has received bulks of fan mail where people have written in saying thanks and wishing him the best of luck. Despite his song and dance routine, which many find comical, it's his attitude that has attracted so many viewers. People were inspired mostly by his confidence and honesty along with accepting rejection so graciously... unlike other American Idol contestants. Ouch!

His popularity has skyrocketed to the point at which he has been invited to guest star on such shows like Ellen Degeneres, Dateline NBC, and Entertainment Tonight. Even Jimmy Fallon of Saturday Night Live joined in on the fun by performing a skit that parodied Hung's memorable song and dance routine. Like television, the press has covered him to a large extent. Newspapers and magazines that have featured stories involving Hung's involvement within the music industry include US Weekly, USA Today, The Los Angeles Times and The Houston Chronicle.

Williamhung.net, a website that was created to honor the former contestant includes all existing information that anyone would want to know about him. It even includes a section titled "Marry Me, Will", which is dedicated to him by his female fan base. In this section, women from around the country have sent in proposals and pictures asking for Hung's hand in marriage.

Many may have thought that Hung's performance was just another bad audition gone wrong. However, this couldn't be farther from the truth. It seems that William Hung has made a lasting impression that has allowed to him outlive his 15 minutes of fame, whether people like it or not. With a music contract in the works and national press exposure, it's obvious that Hung isn't going to be ducking out of the public eye anytime soon. What lies ahead for this music hopeful is unknown but one thing is certain, Hung is one of a kind.

Information from www.azreporter.com was used in this article.

Jen Hodson is a Collegian columnist.

Nice guys finish last

Nice guys really do finish last. I never put much thought into this old saying, but thanks to NBC's less than average show, "Average Joe," it has been constantly reverberating in my mind ever since the finale aired. This phrase is definitely worth thinking about.

On the show "Average Joe," NBC introduces a high-maintenance female to a group of men who are (go figure) average.

Appearance-wise, these men aren't just average, they are less than average. In a method similar to an ABC show, "The Bachelorette," this high-maintenance female knocks off a few "Joes" each week, narrowing down her choices. Three-fourths into the episodes, with only a few left, NBC adds a ridiculous twist! A handful of muscular, cheesy hunks get thrown into the mix to join the average Joes. I wouldn't care about this part if one of these so-called hunks didn't always make it in the final two.

So yes, dramatically enough, the first and second 'Average Joe' have come down to the wire between the Joe and the hunk.

Choosing Time. Now this is a time that makes us all move to the edges of our seats. In the first 'Average Joe,' the girl picks the hunk. Okay, so it's a little bit unfair, but by this time they are already heavily advertising for the second 'Average Joe,' so I'm thinking that there will be hope for the second show. Now we are down to the final two in the second 'Average Joe,' and the girl picks the hunk (again)! 'Average Joe' viewers are so deceived because both times, the editing of the show makes it seem like the girl is more interested in the "Joe," and makes the hunk seem like a shallow muscle-head.

Michelle Rivera

This show sends out a horrible message. The message: looks are practically everything. Personality is nothing. Come on, now. The hunk got chosen twice! The show is called 'Average Joe.' It's funny because one out of two times, one would figure that the name would actually go with the premise of the show. What does this say about society? What does this say about female preference?

Women are more sensitive and dramatic, which makes things seem, well, complicated. Yes, I admit that I'd rather hang out with a guy than a girl. Guys are just laid back and easier to deal with (outside of a boyfriend-girlfriend relationship, of course).

Most women like to subconsciously think and plan ahead, whether they choose to admit it or not. In fact, they can't admit it because they don't know that they do it. They go out and they have their minds already made up for what will happen that night. In most instances, a girl will know in the back of her mind whether or not she will end up meeting a hot guy and be in the mood to hook up with him. That's why most women shave their legs before going out. They are subconsciously and unknowingly setting the night up.

I can guarantee that most women don't go out thinking they'll have a nice conversation with an ugly but nice guy. Women are like hawks. Our eyes will float to the hottest guys in the room first. But should the "Joe" be shafted and ousted by a hunky, muscular, overly self-tanned guy who likes a different girl a night? What about a guy with depth, and who isn't a perfect 10 out carries a great personality?

Guys make this mistake almost as often as women. I'm certainly not saying that there are not good-looking nice guys. Obviously, personality doesn't matter much to men these days. Britney Spears' head is completely hollow yet most guys would do pretty much anything to get close enough to smell her.

Maybe I am just biased, but I would have chosen any one of the average Joe's in both instances. I am part of that small bunch left in society that would choose personality over looks. In fact, my ideal man can look however he wants to look just as long as he has a good sense of humor and is a Red Sox fan.

Now back to my main question. Do nice guys finish last? Unfortunately and in most instances they do, but definitely not with me.

Michelle Rivera is a Collegian staff writer.

The Dos and Don'ts of 21

This weekend, I went home to meet up with a bunch of my friends for someone's big 21st birthday. Like any night on the town in Boston – which included 15 half-drunk college kids – this night had its good and bad times.

This was the first time I really went out for someone's "big night." Yeah, I know, my friends are young. As I sit back and reminisce about what happened that night, I think about what went right and what went terribly wrong.

The whole game plan for the night was to go to Avalon in Boston, hang out with everyone, dance, those who were old enough to drink, and we were all supposed to just have a good time together.

Good plan – in theory.

However, right from the beginning things quickly spun out of control.

Let me start out by saying that the kid who turned 21 cannot drink large amounts of alcohol, but nonetheless, he wanted to be a champ that night (foreshadowing, anyone?). He decided all 145 pounds of him would take 21 shots by the end of the night, and he marked each one on his arm every time he took one.

He went from zero to hero in about a half-hour with four checks on his left arm.

So, with that being said, here are some dos and don'ts for your 21st birthday, judging by what I saw this weekend:

Do go and have a good time. Hell, it's one of your best friends 21st birthday. Drink with buddies, play games, whatever floats your boat. However, don't have such a good time that you spend more time sitting on the toilet than you do at the club.

Yes, sitting on the toilet for about 35 minutes. We'll get to that later.

Do go to a club or bar with a group of people. It's a good atmosphere, and everyone should have a good time. Do not bring nine white kids to a dance club in Boston on Asian night. If you do, you will stick out like a... well, you'll stick out like nine white kids at a club in Boston on Asian night.

Matt Elder

Whoops. I wish I had known that a little before 10 minutes before departing from his house.

Do get a designated driver in case people plan on drinking. Unfortunately, it's not such a good idea to waste $65 a person on a stretch Hummer that you're in for 45 minutes while you pretend that you're P. Diddy.

However, those people who did ride in the stretch Hummer were kicking themselves as the car of level headed people who refused to shell out that money actually got a better parking space than the Hummer, who pulled up right in front of the club.

Now back to this whole have a good time fiasco.

Do have a good time, but don't have three people puking side-by-side-by-side in the bathroom while bouncers do their best to politely tell you to get the hell out of the club.

Yeah, that was us that night. We were the group of idiots who were hogging one-half of the bathroom stalls while three of us puked. And no, I was not one of them. The weird part is that all the people who were puking were 21-year olds who were unfortunate enough to shell out $8 a shot and $10 a drink.

Unless this drink comes with the full length Paris Hilton videotape, I don't think they got their moneys worth.

You should dress up nicely. After all, we did go to a nice club, so no one could wear jeans or sneakers. However, do not dress up that nicely in a shirt you were going to return tomorrow if your boyfriend is going to pass out on your lap and get chunks of lunch all over you.

So the 21-year-old didn't make it through the night without throwing up. No surprise for someone's birthday. However, the worst part for me is that I spent a large majority of my night guarding the entrance to the stall while my friend swore he had to piss, than when we finally get him to stand up (40 minutes later) he lets it rip in the sink, and the bouncers say we have to clean it up.

I spent more time in the bathroom than on the dance floor, and I touched a puke-covered sink more than I touched my girlfriend that night.

A good idea would be to go get some late night food to absorb all the toxins you ingested throughout the night. However, it isn't such a good idea if this food is McDonalds, and if one of the "victims" of the night goes in with you and proceeds to pass out on the table.

So lets piece this night back together. People drink a ton of Red Bulls and vodka at my friend's house, we take our desired mode of transportation to the club, we go to the club (on Asian night), three people from our group of 15 are puking, five different bouncers come in and kick us out, we drive back to Framingham and to McDonalds where we all go in and eat and one of the pukers passes out on the table. Then we get up and leave, and go back to my friend's house where it all began.

And THAT is what friends are for.

Matt Elder is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

REASONS FOR BARING IT ALL

As one of the "naked" protesters taking part in PETA's anti-fur demonstration outside Harvard University, please allow me to respond to the March 2 editorial entitled, "PETA protests crosses the boundary."

People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA) strives to do all it can, legally and peacefully, to make sure that the animals' side of the story makes the news. We, too, would prefer to raise awareness about cruelty to animals without taking our clothes off or employing other provocative tactics, if only it worked.

We'd like nothing better than if the media considered facts alone newsworthy enough to cover. Unfortunately, while evidence of fur-bearing animals—including foxes, raccoons, minks, coyotes, bobcats, lynxes, opossums, nutria, beavers, muskrats, otters, and others—being killed on fur farms by anal and vaginal electrocution and in the wild by drowning, trapping, or beating is depressing, evidence alone does not make headlines. That's why we need to think of more effective ways to draw attention to the animals' plight.

PETA's imaginative efforts, such as our naked pillow fight, make the difference between keeping important yet depressing subjects invisible, or having them revealed to the world. I invited readers to visit FurIsDead.com to learn more.

Karla Waples
PETA member

A PLEA FOR A 'NO' VOTE

College students are harassed in any town. Who hasn't been to a party that was raided by the police? Who would want to be at a party that wouldn't catch the eye of the local watchdogs? The cops go after marijuana smokers with a special vengeance. Many are arrested every semester. This should be a concern to more than just the folks at the Cannabis Reform Coalition.

People bitch and complain about the situation. This month we have a choice opportunity to actually do something about it. The police chief is engaged in an ongoing effort to expand the size of his force, and needs money to hire more officers. There is a tax increase on the ballot in the local election of March 30 to raise more money. Coincidence?

So... get registered to vote, if you aren't already. Do it today. Register at your local, Amherst, dorm or off-campus address. If you're registered in some other town, change your registration. Come by the CRC office to fill out a voter registration card, or do it at the Town Clerk's office at Town Hall (on the east side of the Common). The deadline to register to vote in this election is Mar. 10. Don't miss it. And put Election Day, Mar. 30, on your calendar now. Circle it in red, so you won't forget to vote.

Remember, if you vote for higher taxes, you are voting for more cops — who won't leave you alone. You just want to be left alone, don't you? Vote no!

Emily Russell
CRC Vice President

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Evanescence rocks Boston up inside the Avalon

By Ryan Aubert
Collegian Correspondent

BOSTON — Evanescence rocked Boston with a show at the Avalon on Sunday night. As the last stop on what has been hectic, extensive 14-month world tour, the dark rockers played to a sold-out crowd.

The show was a declaration on the part of Evanescence, whose fans have watched the band evolve in both public image and line up — lead guitarist, songwriter and co-founder Ben Moody abruptly left the band in October.

In the aftermath, fans were left with doubts and questions about the fate of the group; tour dates were postponed and the search for a replacement went full-force. Guitarist Terry Balsamo — formerly of Cold — was found and subsequently joined the ranks of Evanescence as a permanent member.

Sunday's show in Boston gave the Bay State confirmation that the goth-rock band is not down and out, but rather better than ever. Evanescence put on a solid show, with impressive musical sound and a moving performance.

Opening their set with a chilling rendition of "Haunted," vocalist Amy Lee came out in a large, gaudy pink prom-dress — an uncharacteristic choice when taking into account her usual self-made black ensembles. She later explained that she had lost a bet. The band then played its second single off of Fallen, "Going Under" to an enthusiastic crowd. The small size of the venue made the atmosphere at the Avalon intimate and the concert something special – all present seemed to understand this was an ending to one chapter of the band's career. Next tour the band will probably be playing at much larger venues.

Throughout the majority of the show the band seemed to be playing tricks on each other, lightening up and having a good time. After harder songs like "Going Under" and "Taking Over Me," they brought out Lee's keyboard for the few lighter hits. After loosing the pink dress for a blank tank top in the warm club, Lee needed a drink, literally. They brought out a glass of wine for her, and with the crowd chanting "Chug! Chug! Chug!" She downed the whole thing.

After some comical keyboard malfunctions — including an unintentional playing of some funky dance music on it — she finally got it working though. Resuming serious band mode, Lee and company busted out with "Breathe No More." Following that the band played its current single, and perhaps the most beautiful Evanescence song, "My Immortal." The live version of the song was just as touching as the one

See EVANESCENCE on page 5

An old favorite revisited

Press Start to Play

Reid Davenport

Put down the old-school Nintendo controllers and pick up an X-Box controller. One of the most popular classics has been revamped and altered to fit into today's video game world. The skilled ninja Ryu is back in the new and improved "Ninja Guiden." The game packs a powerful punch with smooth graphics and influences from popular games such as "Devil May Cry" and "Prince of Persia: Sands of Time," both of which have revolutionized the gaming world.

'Ninja Guiden'
X-Box
TECMO
Team Ninja
Rated M
Grade A-

The new version utilizes abilities from the first "Ninja Guiden" on the NES such as leaping from wall to wall in order to reach higher places. It takes a noticeable influence from the recently popular "Prince of Persia" game, as you have the ability to run along walls for combat and as another way to reach high areas.

This new version of a classic also involves quit a bit of button mashing to take out the opposition. Being able to hone in your skills to block, kick, and slash your sword will come in handy when you find yourself surrounded by bloodthirsty ninjas, all aiming to take you out of commission. Along with the ninjas and soldiers, you will occasionally battle head to head with a few demons that gobble up a few soldiers if they get in their way.

"Ninja Guiden" is also very, bloody, like most combat games on the market as of late. With every slash of your sword, blood spurts out of your enemies and they explode into a bloody mess when defeated. The battle blood is a semi-realistic graphic, while the explosions created by a downed enemy seem like a bit too much.

TECMO and Team Ninja did an excellent job in bringing back this classic as they made sure even the most avid gamer would have a tougher time through this "Ninja Guiden" than the NES classic. The older versions would have parts where one enemy kept managing to knock you off a cliff, thus preventing you from moving on. In this version, you must deal with multiple enemies all aiming their guns, swords, and other weapons at your head.

While defense is usually the key towards preserving your health, in this game holding the block button can allow an enemy to perform an even more deadly attack. Some soldiers will grab you and slit your throat open, taking a good amount of health away. The only way to avoid getting into these situations is to get practice in using your weapons and combine those skills with kicks and blocking. The button-mashing will not save you from in this game.

"Ninja Guiden" also brings back powers found in the older incarnation and gives your character an additional aid when you feel surrounded and low on health. You get "soul points," which are yellow orbs, when you kill most enemies. Saving those up will allow you to improve your characters abilities in order to make some situations a bit easier for you. Much like "Devil May Cry" you can keep slashing away enemies to gain points. The player can use those points to upgrade, and save frustration from the next mission.

The online feature available on the games main title section can be used in the future to download updates and emulated versions of the classic "Ninja Guiden" games. It can be used to conduct tournaments as more people purchase the game.

Overall, "Ninja Guiden" is an extremely good looking and challenging game. It is easily one of the better X-Box exclusive games to be released recently. The secrets will keep gamers hunting to unlock more abilities and others will find themselves trapped playing the game for weeks on end in order to finally complete it.

Reid Davenport is a Collegian columnist.

'All's Well' with the UMass Theater department

Shakespearian classic ends run with shows tonight and tomorrow

By Peter McDowell
Collegian Correspondent

We all love the hard language of Shakespeare. Right? Of course not! But why let that keep you from a show that is full of comedy and interesting stuff? "All's Well That Ends Well," a production by the University of Massachusetts Theater Department, is just that, with skilled acting and an intriguing take on the Shakespearian classic. You never know, it could be monumental in your development as a college student, an intellectual.

'All's Well That Ends Well'
Curtain Theater
UMass
$5, $10
Mar. 5, 6

Well maybe that is a bit over the top. But honestly it is simply a great show.

It is advisable that all UMass students check out one of the last performances of Shakespeare's "All's Well That Ends Well" in the Curtain Theater. Director Alec Wild's stage movement is absolutely tight. Like a slide show, each scene appears in a flash as another ends. The non-stop pace helps to keep the movie-oriented person mesmerized, but not so much that s/he forgets the players are real.

The production is in-your-face personal. The top-notch cast dares the audience to get to know each actor's character. Nicholas Hernon and Adam Sanders contribute their comedic energy to the show. Hernon plays the liar/coward Parolles and Sanders plays the fiery-eyed fool Lavatch. Both are bold and help guide the audience through the oddly twisted plot of "All's."

The lovely Kate Mettam plays a thoughtful, yet cunning Helena. The audience follows her through the play cautiously and loves her by the end. In her strongest moments, she looks into the eyes of the audience with captivating prose.

Chamaio Cheyenne-Rindge plays the reluctant husband, Bertram. Together he and Helena are not your typical star-struck lovers. They play out the more delicate parts of the show. The Countess played by Shannon Stillings is very empathetic. George Bernard Shaw called her role 'the most beautiful old woman's part ever written" and Stillings does her best to prove him right.

From the beginning, "All's" takes the audience by surprise with an unscripted scene and some especially little actors. Costumes are great and the soundtrack is smooth. The intimate set includes an impressive wooden framework that adds dimension. And some actors get to climb it. The arena stage itself is unlike any other on campus. The players become like sports figures on a small court in the middle of the audience. The intimate space means there is not a bad seat in the house.

If you are uncomfortable with Shakespearean language, check it out anyway. Wild's stage movement keeps those extra-long monologues to a bearable limit. The action does not center solely on the speaker. Rather the monologues invoke and reflect action around the stage. This is a difficult challenge for the cast, but it pays off for the audience.

Director Wild and the cast have pulled off a great show since they began rehearsing at the beginning of this spring semester. Wild is an adjunct professor in the Theater Department and has specialized in Shakespearean theater. Some may remember him as the character Iago in the Theater Department's production of Othello.

"All's Well" has three performances remaining. Tonight 8 p.m. and tomorrow 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. Tickets are $10 for the general public and $5 for students and seniors. The Curtain Theater seats 93, with standing room for 15 people. The show has attracted a lot of early ticket buyers. However, most people who show up and put their names on the waiting list will be able to get in.

Two students in the UMass Theater department act out a scene from the Shakespearian classic "All's Well That Ends Well."

Dance party 'Burns Down' Pearl Street

By Caitlin Ott
Collegian Staff

This Saturday night starting at 9 p.m. "Burn Down the Disco," a Western Massachusetts dance party, will bring its second night of brit-pop, indie-rock, punk dance-party mania, to the area in its new venue, Pearl Street nightclub. For only $6, a night of sweat-pouring, fun-inducing dancing can be had by all.

With music subscribing to what founder Jonathan Doyle describes as a "smart and stylish" audience, for the past three years "Burn Down" has offered a safe space for music lovers to dance their cares away. Whether they are regular attendees or new faces, local residents and five college students keep packing into what has proven to be one of Western Massachusetts' best dance party.

'Burn Down the Disco'
Sat. Mar. 6
Pearl Street
Northampton
$6

It was on an indiscernible date in the fall of 2001 that the fat, howling, biting babe of "Burn Down the Disco" was born. At least this is what Doyle recalls as the day the greatest dance party to hit western Massachusetts was born. UMass students and alumni DJs Jonathan Doyle, Justin Hirons, Brendan Gough, Dave Hadden and Tore Olsson can feel proud to hold the title of ear splitting, side aching, rowdy party enablers.

Reflecting on the area's lack of nightclub diversity, Dave Hadden and Brendan Gough conceptualized the idea of "Burn Down." Originally a dance party at their home, the idea grew as the enthusiasm of friends made the idea of opening "Burn Down" to the public seem plausible. While still in the planning stages the problem of where to host the event arose.

Until recently the solution came in the glimmer and thoroughly iced-down drinks of Hadley's Peking Garden. In the back rooms of what appears an innocent Chinese restaurant, a dance floor with a capacity of 100 people lay in wait for Jonathan, Justin, Brendan, Dave and Tore to bring on the party. Fondly remembered by DJ's Tore and Jonathan for its spinning disco ball and scorpion bowl drinks, "Burn Down" found its home in the cozy back room of this tiny restaurant. Unfortunately for the guys, Peking Garden was fined for breaking fire codes with a reported several hundred guests in attendance at an event. After police intervention forced the restaurant to rethink their policies, "Burn Down" was forced to find a new home.

This Saturday marks the second night Pearl Street nightclub will host "Burn Down." Reflecting on the change of venues in a realistic fashion, Tore and Jonathan discussed the one drawback being the increase in price. Feeling an increased responsibility to put on "a good show," due to the higher prestige of the venue, set lists are thought out and reviewed ahead of time while new ideas are experimented with.

With Tore, Dave and Jon moving to Boston at the semesters end, "Burn Down"'s loyal attendees needn't worry, for the party isn't ending just yet. Plans of future "Burn Downs" are in the works. It's either party till it gets old or, as Jonathan quips, MTV buys them out, sending in "Eric Nice to teach the audience how to dance 'properly' and play Black Box and 2 Unlimited."

Festival celebrates Arab culture

In light of much media attention over the ongoing war in the Middle East, as well as turmoil in America hitting as close as this very campus, it is becoming rare that Americans are exposed to what the true Arab culture actually is. Today various on-campus and community agencies will attempt to covey the aspects of the culture and people that are often not shown in the media.

"Arab Cultural Festival: Not Just the War" is an all-day event being held in the Campus Center and the Student Union Ballroom. Hosted by the office of ALANA affairs, the Arab Students Club, the Social Thought and Political Economy program and the Western Mass A.N.S.W.E.R, the festival will consist of exhibits, information, games, and prize booths that will educate and show the community what they don't know about the Arab World.

The event, which takes place as the anniversary of the war on Iraq is marked, will take place in the campus center concourse, and will attempt to expose students to themes such as Arab history, geography, religion, cultural foods, custom and language.

The evening portion of the event will consist of live performances in the form of skits, traditional Arab music and dance, poetry slam and a performance from political hip-hop group Movement in Motion. Other activities will include, raffles, Arab Arts and Crafts and an opportunity for students to voice their opinions on the themes presented throughout the day including the political themes of the war on Iraq, as well as the Patriot Act.

"Participants can be interactive, fun and learn something new about the Middle East in both day and evening events" said Nelson Accosta, director of the office of ALANA affairs, in a press release. "The Arab student club and the OAA have been anticipating this event for quite sometime now," added Ryan Mudawar, president of the Arab Student Club. Both believe that it will be an entertaining and educational experience for students as well as community. All events are free and open to the public, and interested students are encouraged to sign up for the poetry slam on the Campus Center concourse from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

— Monique Jemmott

RAINN benefit show tonight in Van Meter

The Van Meter dormitory in the Central residential area of the University of Massachusetts will play host to a benefit concert for the Rape Abuse Incest National Network tonight.

RAINN, which operates the National Sex Hotline, is the nation's largest anti-sexual assault organization.

The concert starts at 8 p.m. and will be held in Van Meter's basement — for many years a popular venue for up-and-coming UMass-bred bands. And in keeping the tradition a number of musicians who have called the Amherst campus home will be playing to raise money.

Student A Cappella group Vocal Suspects — who just returned from a trip to Albany after making it to semi-finals of an A Capella group competition — and hip-hop jazz-funk band Cold Duck Complex are scheduled to perform. Others expected to entertain are Busted Vaccuum, Rebecca Correia, Mindy Grant, Jason Gross and Kevin Connelly.

Along with the music a bake sale and raffle will be going on throughout the night. It is $3 to see the show and donations are encouraged. All proceeds go to help RAINN.

— Glen Straub

Evanescence rocks Beantown

EVANESCENCE from page 4

on radio. In concert the ethereal chart-topper was immensely moving. The crowd loved the emotional and serious beginning along with the rocking ending including the whole band. Confetti streamed down from the rafters of the club at the conclusion of the song, somewhat to the bewilderment of Lee who responded, "Happy New Year's everybody!"

The highlight of the evening, however, was what came next. "Bring Me To Life," the band's first single and a feature on the Daredevil soundtrack, electrified the crowd. Everybody in the room sang along and cheered. Guitarist John LeCompt provided the male vocals (originally done by Paul McCoy of the 12 Stones) and didn't sound too bad.

They ended with the profound "Tourniquet" and then right into "Imaginary" — rumored to be the next single. The band's encore was "Whisper," during which the crew shot silly string all over the band and the crowd.

The band said its goodbyes, but Rocky Gray refused to leave his drums and kept banging away. He eventually started in with "One" by Metallica and Lee returned and sang the first verse. She didn't know the rest, but it didn't matter. Will Boyd sang the rest —along with the entire audience. It was an awesome end to an incredible show for a band that had one hell of a year.

The band will now take some much needed and well-deserved R&R, and also will work on its sophomore album. However, as Lee energetically exclaimed during the show, "This band will be back!"

NEW THIS WEEK!
COLD CREEK MANOR
DUPLEX
GOOD BOY!
LOONEY TUNES
SCHOOL OF ROCK
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

PURIM PURIM PURIM PURIM PURIM PURIM PURIM PURIM
5-College Hillel PURIM EXTRAVAGANZA
Saturday, March 6
Amherst College Alumni House
7:30pm Megillah Reading
(egalitarian and orthodox)
8:30pm Purim Party
with DJ, food, costume contest and prizes.
Bring a canned good or closed food item to donate for the Purim Food Drive.
Purim

LATKE vs. HAMANTASH DEBATE
Sunday, March 7,12noon, Hillel House
Hear distinguished faculty debate which is better; the latke or the hamantash. You choose the winner!
The Debaters for the Latke:
Fred Cohen/Music
"The Pivotal Role of the Latke in History"
David Samuels/Anthropology
"Meta-Indexicality, Metanoia, and Metapelot: Parsing the Culture of the Potato"
The Debaters for the Hamantash:
Debbie Felton/Classics
"How the Hamantash Caused the Fall of the Roman Empire"
Doron Goldman/SOM
"The Hamantash: Perception vs. Reality" sponsored by UMass Hillel with help from Paul S. Berger

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive, Chicopee
From Showtime, CBS' "Late Show with David Letterman" and NBC's "Late Night with Conan O'Brien"
BRIAN REGAN
1st Time Appearance!
MARCH 26TH APRIL 3RD APRIL 10TH APRIL 17TH APRIL 18TH
BILL BELLAMY JOHN WITHERSPOON GREG PROOPS MIKE EPPS DAVE ATTELL

Clip & Curl
665-2629
Hair Skin & Nails
Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)
Accepted: Visa MC
Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
SPRING FLING!
One hour massages or Aveda facials
regularly $50
NOW $45
Sunkiss your hair before you even leave!
Highlighting starting at $40
$5 off with this ad!
Tips and Toes Package
Spa Manicure & Pedicure
Regularly $52
NOW $45
WE USE AVEDA AND PAUL MITCHELL PRODUCTS
Expires 3/31/04

On the Rocks School of Bartending
• Become a certified bartender in a weekend
• The course is held on campus
• Anyone 18+ may bartend in New England
• Bartending is a great summer job
Call us toll free at 866-MIX-5600 for more information or to register.
www.otrbartending.com

HEELING POWER
THE ONE YOU WANT
THE WAY YOU WANT IT.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Rent One of Ours
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
75 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Tired of the Dorms?
•IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT TH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE•
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St.

DO YOU WANT A GREAT SUMMER JOB?
◆ BECOME A PEER ADVISOR FOR PRE-MAJOR ADVISING SERVICES DURING SUMMER ORIENTATION ◆
Pick up an application at 615 Goodell
Pre-Major Advising Services.
Application Deadline is April 16, 2004

THE CROSS OF CHRIST
Interested in The Passion? Intrigued by The Cross? Wonder Why?
Explanation. Discussion. Q & A
This Sunday 11am. Morrill N329
MERCYhouse (www.knowmercy.org)

Women's lax faces Crimson

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (1-1) will be playing against a Harvard team with a familiar face. That being of former assistant coach Tegan Leonard.

"For players, I think, yeah they're going to be fired up," coach Carrie Bolduc said of this weekend's game. "They're going to show [Harvard assistant and former UMass assistant Tegan Leonard] what they got this year, and it's going to be a lot of fun."

As for first-year head coach Sarah Nelson, she will be looking for career win No. 1 when she brings her Harvard Crimson Tide to Richard F. Garber Field this Saturday for their season-opener against the Bolduc-led Minutewomen.

The Minutewomen are coming off a tough loss to the Boston University Terriers last Wednesday at Garber Field. The Maroon and White were down by as many as six goals midway through the second half. A series of goals by Hope Zelinger and Tracey Drown cut the Terriers' lead to one before giving up two more goals in the final three minutes.

With senior tri-captain Kristin St. Hilaire just coming off an ankle injury, the defense has been reliant upon several underclassmen, as well as senior Andrea Valachovic, to step things up.

"Erica Shapiro, a freshman, has definitely stepped it up. Overall, our defense has done a nice job defending, although we're for some reason a little reserved coming out in the first half," Bolduc said.

The 1-2 punch of Zelinger and Drown has been the key on attack thus far for the Minutewomen. With Drown creating the plays and Zelinger executing them, the dynamic duo can be a pest for defenders.

And as Wednesday's game proved, it's difficult to contain them when both are on the same page. Zelinger has accounted for nearly half of all the goals scored by the Minutewomen so far (eight of the team's 18), many of them coming from assists by Drown and Kerri Connerty.

"[Kerri] had a tough first game. Physically she was feeling sick, but now she's back," Bolduc said. "We are expecting really good things from her. Everyday in practice she's become more and more consistent, so I think we're going to see a lot of good out of her this season."

The Crimson are coming off a 3-11 campaign (1-6 Ivy League) in which they also lost head coach Carole Kleinfelder to retirement after 24 seasons. In her tenure at HU, the Crimson had 12 Ivy titles, 11 NCAA Tournament appearances and the 1990 National Championship, the first in any sport for an Ivy women's team. She won National Coach of the Year twice in 1990 and 1992, and ends her reign with a career record of 252-125-3.

Nelson will have a lot to live up to, but she may have the right tools to get the job done.

The Crimson return two All-Ivy Honorable Mentions in juniors Elaine Bellitsos and Kelly Noon. Bellitsos is the team's returning leading scorer, with 16 goals and five assists for 21 points. Noon was ubiquitous on defense, leading the team in ground balls (30) and caused turnovers (18).

Joining Bellitsos on the attack will be senior Jen Brooks, as well as juniors Bessie Clark and Catherine Sproul. Last season, Brooks is Harvard's second-leading return scorer with 12 goals and three assists for 15 points. Clark was fourth on the team last year with five goals and seven assists for 12 points, and Sproul was fifth with five goals and three assists for eight points.

"We're not really playing our defensive game like we do in practice. Hopefully, we can make that change and play more of our game. Part of that is being more persistent," Bolduc said in attacking Harvard's defense.

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

Senior Hope Zelinger leads the Minutewomen with eight goals on the season. UMass comes home this weekend to take on Harvard for a 1 p.m. face-off.

UMass heads to Fla. to face nation's best

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team will travel to Boca Raton, Fla. this weekend to take on NCAA Tournament caliber teams in the FAU Worth Invitational.

The Minutewomen are 4-7 with three of their four wins coming via shutouts. Coach Elaine Sortinos' squad is currently riding a two-game win streak that they picked up at last weekends NFCA Leadoff Classic. UMass was on a six game losing streak through day one of the tournament and Sortino thinks that overall the 3-3 finish was a positive outcome for her young team.

"I thought last weekend was a real good step in the right direction for us," Sortino said. "We're a young team. If we could come up .500 or better considering who we're playing this weekend that would be good. We're finally settling into an offensive lineup that works better in terms of run production."

A major part of that run producing lineup is Atlantic 10 rookie of the week Candice Molinari. Molinari batted .375 last weekend, scored three runs, drew two walks and was 3-5 on stolen base attempts. She is currently leading her team, hitting .333 on the season.

Sortino is hoping that her freshman standout will do "everything she did last weekend."

"She played primarily in the outfield, she's very fast and she stole some bases. I think it's a name that's going to be synonymous with our program for the next few years," she said.

Katie Jo Kelley is also swinging a heavy bat for the Minutewomen thus far. Kelley is hitting .214 with three homeruns and nine RBI's. She hit a grand slam in the Classic against Army leading UMass to an 8-0 mercy-ruled win.

Sortino's knowledge of the weekend's opponents is limited but she's confident that her young pitching staff will step up in whatever situation they are put into.

"All three will see time, they all do good things," Sortino said. "They're very, very different, very, very strong… each one of them. [Who pitches] depends on what we know about the other teams and which pitcher based on style will look best against that team."

The Minutewomen will take on both Notre Dame and Florida Atlantic tomorrow at 10 a.m. and 5 p.m., respectively.

Ranked No. 23, the Fighting Irish are 10-4 on the season and finished the Classic 5-1 and champions of the Silver Bracket. The 2004 squad has mustered the second best start in school history behind the 2001 team.

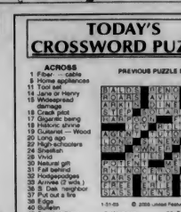
Florida Atlantic (17-9) went 2-4 in the Classic with one of their wins coming at the expense of UMass.

Jenn Piazza hit a three run homer in the sixth to give the Owls a 4-1 advantage. Piazza has been a steady source of offense for FAU as she went 4-9 on Tuesday when her team swept the double-header against St. John's.

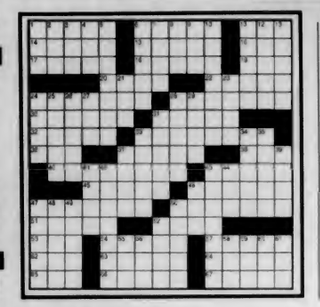
Sunday's contests consist of a 10 a.m. game versus North Carolina and a 12 p.m. match with Florida International.

The Tar Heels (11-7) swept UNC-Wilmington in Tuesday's double-header winning 9-0 and 8-0. Freshman Anna Evans went 4-7, scoring four runs, registering three RBI's and one homerun on the day.

Florida International (4-13) went 2-3 at the Golden Panther Adidas Invitational last weekend. FIU lost the championship game 3-2 to Michigan State in extra innings. The Golden Panthers, a participant in the 2003 NCAA tournament was on a five game losing streak prior to the weekends' play.



Panda East
We bring Chinatown to you!
"Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!"
*Sushi Bar!
*OOMP accepted
*Delivery available!
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
Location: 103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, M.A. 01002
Open Hours:
Fri. & Sat.: 11:30 a.m.-11:00 p.m.
Sun. - Thurs.: 11:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Delivery: (413)549-0077
Telephone: (413)256-8923 (413)256-8924
Fax: (413)253-1173



STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Travel Operator
JAMAICA
SPRING BREAK 2004
LAST MINUTE DISCOUNTS!
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Quesadilla
- Lemon Pepper Fish
- Vegan Cutlet (vegan)

DINNER
- Shrimp & Scallop Creole
- Beef Strudel
- Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 45

SATURDAY
- High: 63
- Low: 28

SUNDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 30

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR Glen Straub
PHOTO TECHNICIAN Scott Eldridge II
COPY EDITOR Leah Wyner
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR Irene Ros
PRODUCTION STAFF Oliver Chong/ Emilie Duggan

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Sometimes it's better just to keep your mouth shut. Today is one of those days.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't let anyone rain on your parade.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You should dress up today. You've been looking kind of skuzzy lately.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Something very embarrassing will happen to you today. Sorry.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Today is your lucky day. Take advantage of whatever opportunities come your way.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
All of your hard work will pay off soon.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Today is a good day to do 100 crunches. Push yourself, your abs will thank you.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't keep humming that song that's stuck in your head. People are getting annoyed.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Someone you know likes you very much. Make sure you're not leading them on.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You are looking mighty fine today. Flaunt it.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your DC crush will smile at you today. Try not to look goofy.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Stop procrastinating. You and the library need to spend some quality time together.

Quote for the Day

"How many points does a three point field goal account for in a basketball game?"

-Question on Fall 2001 basketball course final exam at University of Georgia. The class included members of the UG men's basketball team.

TEACH-IN ON WAR AND OCCUPATION

Saturday March 6th
Herter Hall, UMass

9:30 Coffee and Bagels

10:00-11:30 War and Resistance, Herter 227
Bill Fletcher, TransAfrica Forum
Peta Lindsey, International ANSWER
Fernado Suarez del Solar, father of U.S. soldier slain in Iraq

11:45-1:00 Workshops
Veterans and Military Families Speak Out, Herter 227
The Human Cost of War: Voices from the Frontlines, Herter 601
Racism at Home and the Patriot Act, Herter 301

1:00-2:00 Lunch

2:00-3:30 Internal and External Occupations: America, Iraq and Palestine
Rania Masri, Iraq Action Coalition
Sut Jhally, Media Education Foundation

3:45-5:00 Workshops
Imperialism, Herter 301
War and the Economy, Herter 601
Palestine, Herter 227

5:15-6:00 Closing Session

Workshop speakers include: Vijay Prashad (Trinity College), Claudia Lefko (Northampton Committee to Lift the Sanctions and Stop the Bombing in Iraq), Nancy Talanian (Bill of Rights Defense Committee), Adam Shapiro (International Solidarity Movement), Alisa Klein (Israeli-American anti-Zionist Palestine solidarity activist), Mazin Qumsiyeh (Al-Awda, The Palestine Right to Return Coalition), Kevin Noonan (Western Mass Open Pantry), Diane Scherrer (Veterans for Peace), Kate Harris (Solidaridad Colombia), Preston Smith (Labor Party), and many others.

Free and open to the public.
For more information contact Mark Nelson, nelson@hrc.umass.edu or Mark Brenner 413-577-0241

Join Us March 5th, to say Not Just War! Arab Cultural Celebration, UMass SUB

10am-3pm: Exhibitions and Crafts
Traditional Handicrafts
Regional Foods
Henna Body Art
Informational Exhibitions

7pm-midnight: Music and Dance
Open Mike Poetry Slam
Regional Dance and Music
Hip Hop Artists Movement in Motion
Performances, and More

For more information contact ALANA Affairs, 413-545-2517 or the Arab Student Club, arab@hfa.umass.edu

LOSAR
Tibetan New Year Celebration
Campus Center Auditorium
University of Massachusetts
SATURDAY, MARCH 6TH @ 6:30 PM
FREE ADMISSION

Special Appearances by:
Nawang Khechog, Grammy Nominated Tibetan Musician*
Lhadon Tethong, Executive Director, Students for a Free Tibet*
Tibetan Dance Troupe (TAWMA)*

Sponsored by : SACEF, Five College Inc., SFT Chapters of Umass, Hampshire College, & Mt Holyoke, Umass Arts Council, Student Affairs and Campus Life, ALANA Affairs, Graduate Student Senate & Tibetan Students Association, SFT ARHS SFT NHS, Yuri Kochiyama Cultural Center

For Information, contact Students for a Free Tibet at 617.429.6346

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APARTMENT FOR RENT

N. Amherst, 1 Rdm 1 1/2 mi UMass deck $625 Pets OK Hdwd floors Avlb 4/1 maybe sooner 549-2062

Brandywine 1 Bedroom. On bus line, gas water included. Immediate occupancy 978-835-4571

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

AUTO FOR SALE

1996 Jeep Grand Cherokee, Maroon, 8 Cyl., AT, Fully Loaded, CD/Cass 75K, Tinted, Fabulous condition $9600.00 or B/O 413-256-3478 Ask for Justin

96 Accord Runs great Excellent CD $4300 256-1505 or 896-0017

EMPLOYMENT

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Gymnastics Instructor Pre-school, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening & weekend hours available. 3-20 hrs/wk, flexible work environment, Gymnastics center w/ loose foam & resi pit system. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, MA 01301 (413) 773-3646 x 423

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

EMPLOYMENT

Live in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet, Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392

Marketing Director Growing Co Looking for energetic, motivated personable phone supervisor to assist in managing sales staff Mon-Fri 5:00-8:30p.m. Must be proficient on phones to do Customer care Apt. setting No Telemarketing. $250.00 a wk. to start. Plus bonuses Call 413-253-6652

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

EMPLOYMENT

ATTENTION LAX PLAYERS Play & Coach – Have fun – Make $$$ Top Boys Sports Camp in Maine looking for staff to instruct & coach LAX. Awesome Summer! Work with kids! Top salaries, FREE rm/bd/trvl allow. Apply online ASAP: www.campcobbossee

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

FOR RENT

Spring Break Rental Dayton Beach Resort Studio Sleeps 4 1 Wk March 14th-21st Price neg. 1321-724-5965 alwilson01@aol.com

Hadley 5 bedroom Newer home close to UMass big yard 2 full bathrooms, sunny living room. Call 549-4270

LOST AND FOUND

Glasses found, Thompson 102, Wednesday 3/3 maryl@anthro.umass.edu

Bracelet found, Thompson 102, Monday March 1st maryl@anthro.umass.edu

SERVICES

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst, PhilosophyDialogue.net

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK CANCUN Best price, U MASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps wanted. $$$ Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

WANTED

Your 10 year old BMX bike $75. Will pay more for Mongoose or GT, Patrick, 508-934-9274

Collegian Classifieds: Call 545-3500.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen set to face Huskies

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Throw out the calendar, the pocket schedules and promotional posters. For the Massachusetts hockey team, the playoffs begin tonight.

The Minutemen travel to Boston this evening to play the first of a two-game home-and-home series with Northeastern. The Huskies (9-16-7, 3-13-6 Hockey East) are two points out of the playoff picture behind Boston University (9-15-8, 5-13-4 HEA) in the Hockey East standings, and with the Terriers playing a weekend set with fourth-place New Hampshire, this weekend is NU's last chance to sneak past BU for the eighth and final playoff spot.

As for the Minutemen, while their spot in the playoffs is clinched, their final position isn't. UMass could finish either third or fourth, and while the Mullins Center is guaranteed to be hosting a playoff series next Thursday, the visitor could be any of four teams, as BU, NU, UMass Lowell and Merrimack have yet to finalize their travel plans.

"It's one rung up the ladder," UMass coach Don Cahoon said, "probably doesn't matter in terms of an opponent, because you're going to get an opponent that's fighting for their life. Everyone wants to go to the FleetCenter. But we want to be third, it obviously puts us in a better position in the national picture."

In addition, UMass has the eye of the nation on it, with the NCAA Tournament picture slowly starting to gain focus. The Minutemen are currently ranked 16th in U.S. College Hockey Online's Pair-Wise Rankings. While the PWR is not the official method of NCAA tournament selection, it mimics the process used by the NCAA, and has predicted the exact tournament field in each of the last four years.

The Minutemen are tied with Colorado College, but the 18-13-3 Tigers have a slight edge on the 16-9-6 Minutemen (12-7-3 Hockey East).

"We're really on the bubble right now, and without these wins coming up, I think our chances would be pretty slim," UMass senior forward Mike Warner said. "We're definitely working towards that, it's been a major goal this season. It would definitely make our chances stronger with a couple of wins this weekend."

So while the Huskies need to grab at least three points to have a shot at the Hockey East Tournament, the Minutemen need this weekend's series nearly as much.

"From our standpoint, because of the NCAAs, the implication's there," Cahoon said. "They're very important games. They're not must-win games, but they're very close to it."

The Minutemen will be playing their first game in 13 days, after taking last weekend off from competition.

"It's going to be tough, especially on Friday night, to come out flying, but it's something we need to do, to finish strong Friday and Saturday night," said Warner, one of the three captains who Cahoon entrusted with the responsibility of preparing the squad mentally. "I think we just have to let [the team] know what it was like last year, when we made that run, and how important the weekend before the playoffs is, as we figured out last year."

The Minutemen finished the 2002-03 regular season with a 5-1 record in the final four games, including a 4-2 win over Maine at home on Feb. 21, 2003. The end-of-season spurt put the Minutemen in sixth place heading into the Hockey East quarterfinals, where they upset the Black Bears in Orono.

While the Minutemen could get away with a bad weekend, continuing their five-game winless streak — dating back to the 3-2 loss at New Hampshire on Feb. 7 — wouldn't exactly bolster hopes for the playoffs.

"They're really feeling the pressure, and maybe it's not so heavy on us, but it's something that every guy here wants," Warner said, "we have to play as hard as them, the way they're fighting."

NOTES: Tickets are on sale for the first-ever playoff series at the Mullins Center, scheduled for March 11-13. Fans can buy tickets at the Mullins Center box office, or by calling 1-866-UMASS-TIX.

COURTESY LIBRALIYN LING

Freshman forward Kevin Jarman has four goals and two assists this season. The Minutemen take on Northeastern in a home-and-home series this weekend for their final games of the regular season.

UMass hits A-10s

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team will travel to the City of Brotherly Love for the Atlantic 10 tournament as the sixth seed out of the East.

The Minutewomen (6-21, 2-12 A-10) face Duquesne, the third seed in the West, today at 2 p.m. in the first round. All the A-10 action will be hosted at the Alumni Memorial Fieldhouse on the St. Joseph's campus.

In their last meeting, it was a defensive battle between UMass and the Dukes (15-12, 10-6 A-10) ending in a Duquesne victory, 46-42 on Feb. 8 in Pittsburgh, Pa. Bodies hitting the floor and pressure defense reflected the intensity of the game. Both teams had poor shooting performances with UMass at 30 percent (20-66) and Duquesne at 32 percent (17-54).

The difference in the game was the Dukes perfect performance from the foul line (5-for-5) and hitting seven 3-pointers.

"I'm not trying to make excuses, but we were tired that game," head coach Marnie Ducko said. "Edris [Bailey] had a huge game with 16 points and 18 rebounds. After Edris, there was no other scoring except for Judit [Zsedenyi]. We need several people step up and score in double figures."

Duquesne is an offensive-minded team, averaging 67.8 points per game (third in the conference) while giving up 69.4 ppg (12th in A-10). With a highly energized transition offense, the Dukes are deadly behind the arc averaging nearly seven 3-pointers per game.

"We worked on [defending the three] yesterday morning," Ducko said. "I'm aware their three point ability is a concern, but I'm also concerned with their transition offense. They can really push the tempo and we need to try to disrupt that by switching up our defense between a trap, man-to-man, and zone. We also need to box out, because we haven't done that over the last few games."

Duke's guard Candace Futrell is an inside-outside player – leading the A-10 in scoring with 21.8 ppg. The 5-foot-10 senior is a solid rebounder, averaging 6.9 rebounds per game. Yesterday, Futrell was named Co-Atlantic 10 Player of the Year, along with George Washington's Cathy Jones.

"Candace is a major concern for us," Ducko said. "I feel she is the best player in the conference. Cleo Foster will play her, but we know she can't get isolated in the post. She is a great player who I have great respect for. She can't leave her open."

The winner of the UMass/Duquesne game will play Saint Joseph's in the quarterfinal round on Saturday, March 6, also at 2 p.m.

UMASS Weekend Schedule

Friday, Mar. 5

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Women's Basketball	vs. Duquesne	2:00 p.m.
Women's Ski	at USCSA's	9:30 a.m.
Men's Ice Hockey	at Northeastern	7:00 p.m.

Saturday, Mar. 6

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Basketball	at Richmond	4:00 p.m.
Baseball	at Rider	12:00 p.m.
Softball	vs. Notre Dame	12:00 p.m.
Women's Track	at ECAC's	9:00 a.m.
Men's Ski	at USCSAs	9:30 a.m.
Men's Track	at IC4As	10:00 a.m.
Women's Lacrosse	vs. Harvard	1:00 p.m.
Men's Lacrosse	at Stony Brook	1:00 p.m.
Men's Ice Hockey	vs. Northeastern	7:00 p.m.

Sunday, Nov. 23

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Baseball	at Rider	12:00 p.m.
Softball	vs. North Carolina	10:00 a.m.
Men's Track	at IC4As	10:00 a.m.
Women's Track	at ECACs	12:00 p.m.

Hoops travel to RU

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Fresh off a heartbreaking 98-92 double overtime loss at the hands of archrival Temple Wednesday night, there will be no rest for the weary Massachusetts men's basketball team as it will fly further south to conclude what has been a disappointing season at Atlantic 10 rival Richmond on Saturday.

Tip-off is slated for 4 p.m. at the Robins Center in Richmond, Va. and will be broadcast locally on New England Sports Network.

The Minutemen (10-17, 4-11 A-10) will look to build off a solid effort against the Owls that saw all five starters in double figures, including 23 points from sophomore forward Jeff Viggiano, 18 points and eight assists from freshman guard Art Bowers and 17 points, and five assists from junior captain Anthony Anderson.

UMass also hopes to reproduce what was its finest shooting night of the season from behind the arc, as six players combined to shoot 18-of-40 on 3-pointers. Among them were Anderson (5-of-9), Bowers (4-of-9) and Viggiano (4-of-8). For the game, UMass shot better from three (45%) than it did from inside the 3-point line (44.4%).

Despite having a relatively quiet night offensively on Wednesday with just 10 points, sophomore forward Rashaun Freeman also managed 12 rebounds against the Owls as he continues to make a strong push for A-10 Rookie of the Year. On the season, No. 1 averages 15.0 points and 8.3 rebounds per contest.

The Spiders (17-11 9-6 A-10), who joined the A-10 prior to the 2001-02 season and own a 2-1 record all time against UMass, will be facing the Maroon and White for the only time in what has been a solid campaign under first-year head coach Jerry Wainwright.

Highlighted by a stunning 69-98 win over No. 12 Kansas at Phog Allen Fieldhouse on Jan. 22 that snapped the Jayhawks 52-game home winning streak, Wainwright's first season after arriving from UNC-Wilmington has the Spiders currently tied with Xavier for third place in the A-10 West Division.

Forward Mike Skrocki has emerged as one of the top offensive players in the A-10 in 2004, as his 16.3 points per game average is good for ninth in the conference and his 1,336 career points place him 15th all-time in program history. Boasting a career scoring average of 11.0 points per game, Skrocki has come on strong during his senior season, dropping double-figure scoring outputs in all 28 games to date.

Dobbins, meanwhile, is just 15 steals shy of Greg Beckwith's school record and continues to be regarded as one of the conference's – as well as the nation's – premier defensive players.

A former Virginia Tech-transfer, Dobbins has also had success on the offensive end, as he needs just 24 points to reach 1,000 in his UR career and has scored 1,101 total for his college career – none bigger than his game – winning fade away jumper with one second remaining that downed Kansas.

EMILIE DUGGAN/COLLEGIAN

Face to face

Sophomore Done Collins has won 19-of-39 face-offs for the Minutemen. Today UMass travels to Stony Brook for a 1 p.m. face-off.

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, MARCH 8, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 1

The Cooper Temple Clause brings new Brit rock to the States
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

Columnists remember 'Coach'
SPORTS, PAGE 8

Former coach Leaman dies at 71

EMILIE DUGGAN/COLLEGIAN

Former UMass basketball coach Jack Leaman, seen here during the ceremonies for former player Al Skinner's number retirement, died of a heart attack Saturday.

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Jack Leaman, the winningest coach in the history of Massachusetts men's basketball and one of the more beloved figures ever to grace the University of Massachusetts Amherst and Stockbridge Agricultural schools, died Saturday evening of a heart attack. He was 71.

Leaman, a color commentator covering the Minutemen for radio station 100.9 WRNX, was traveling home from the team's regular season finale in Richmond, Va. when he suffered the attack while changing planes at Dulles International Airport in Washington, D.C.

"I sat with Jack on the flight to Dulles," third-year UMass coach Steve Lappas said. "We had to get out and switch planes, and just as we were about to take off a flight attendant notified me that something was wrong. "It was then that I noticed Jack wasn't there."

While Lappas returned with the team to Bradley International Airport in Hartford, Conn., assistant coaches Andrew Theokas and Patrick Sellers remained in the Washington D.C. area, where Leaman was taken to a local hospital and pronounced dead.

A Boston native and a long-time resident of Amherst, Leaman is survived by a wife, Rita and a daughter, Laura, as well as large contingent of friends, confidants and admirers both locally and nationwide.

Associate athletic director Bill Strickland said the family will hold private funeral services. The university is planning a memorial service as well for a later date.

"Obviously Jack Leaman is an icon in UMass sports, and one of the classiest, most genuine people I've ever met," associate athletic director Thorr Bjorn told the Associated Press. "It's a terrible loss to the University."

"Coach Leaman was and is one of the single most influential people in my life, and I know I'm not alone in making that claim," Boston College head coach Al Skinner said of his mentor and coach before a Feb. 18 ceremony to retire the former UMass great's number. "I learned a lot of what I know now from Jack, and that goes far beyond basketball.

"He cares about you as a person above and beyond anything else, and because of that, he's had a profound effect on a lot of lives."

The unofficial father of UMass athletics who was referred to by those who knew him simply as "Jack" or "Coach," Leaman began his tenure in Amherst in 1961 as an assistant under men's basketball coaches Matt Zunic and Johnny Orr. His legacy, however, was born prior to the 1966-67 season, when he was named UMass' head coach — a position he held for 13 seasons.

A two-time New England Coach of the Year, Leaman compiled a career record of 217-126 and won eight Yankee Conference titles in a nine-year span, while guiding what were then known as the Redmen to six National Invitation Tournament appearances.

Inducted into the UMass Athletic Hall of Fame in 1998 and the New England Basketball Hall of Fame in 2003, Leaman coached 22 All-Yankee Conference selections while behind the bench at Curry Hicks

See LEAMAN on page 6

Activists learn Tools for Change

By Amanda Koeck
Collegian Correspondent

College students from across the Commonwealth gathered at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center on Saturday for a conference focusing on the concrete skills that activists need to organize for social and political change in the world.

The second annual Tools for Change conference was held to provide a forum for student activists to get together and work on five different skills: public speaking, managing volunteers, negotiating, grant writing, and strategic campaign planning.

Over 130 people attended the conference. Most of the students were from Mount Holyoke and UMass, and some traveled from Tufts University in Boston.

"There is an unleashed power in young people," said social activist Joan Mandle in her keynote address. She also said social change is possible when coalitions focus on specific areas and the root of the problem.

Students learned many practical tools for fighting for social change and economic justice.

At the effective negotiation workshop, students learned about the framework for understanding the core elements of negotiation and about getting contributions to cover a budget, convincing staff to take on a project, and soliciting support from the community. The workshop was lead by David G. Seibel, co-founder and president of Insight Partners Inc. and Ashley Kalus, the coordinator of the conference.

At the strategic planning workshop, students learned about the elements of campaign planning and what happens if a group lacks focus. The workshop was lead by Mandle, also the executive director of Democracy Matters. She focused on seven essentials of campaign planning.

At the public speaking workshop, students learned about paying attention to body language and context of a speech to find the real message of the person speaking. The workshop was lead by Razvan Sibii, a UMass graduate student.

"The public speaking workshop is not about honing skills but to get the students interested in the concept," Sibii said.

Students learned techniques on how to set up a volunteer for success and dealing with motivation and delegation problems and the importance of knowing one's leadership style and volunteers' development levels. The managing volunteers workshop was lead by Bob Marx, who teaches management courses at UMass.

At the grant writing and research workshop, students learned about the fears of grant writing, the elements of the grant application and planning programs before they happen from Karen Chisholm, director of the Massachusetts Campus Compact AmeriCorps*VISTA Program and Jon Parise, a leader in the same organization.

Ashley Kalus, a UMass Civic

See ACTIVISTS on page 2

Interest group raises money for community project

By Amanda Bossi
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group raised $355 on Saturday through "Hoops for Hunger," a three-on-three basketball tournament held in Totman Gymnasium to further its goal of opening a soup kitchen in Northampton.

Ten teams signed up to play in the tournament, which was held from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. MassPIRG Representative Meaghan Cunningham said that she had expected at least 16 teams to sign up, but was not disappointed with the turnout. Last year, 35 teams played in the tournament.

Teresa Soracco, a UMass student and tournament participant, didn't plan on going to the event, but was standing in for a friend who had planned to play but hurt her knee.

"We basically got together today for the basketball," she said. "It's worth being here because it's for a really good cause."

Many prizes for the event were donated from on-campus or local businesses. Campus businesses donated prizes, such as mugs from People's Market, and UMass T-shirts from the University Store. Other prizes included passes to Ultimate Fitness, movie passes from Cinemark, and gift certificates to Dave's Soda and Pet City, all of which are located in Hadley. Local eateries like the Bluebonnet Diner and Brasserie, both in Northampton, donated gift certificates.

"It was good to see that so many local businesses supported our cause and were willing to donate prizes to our event," Cunningham said.

According to the Food Research and Action Center, more than 33 million Americans suffer from hunger. MassPIRG is working toward their

See MASSPIRG on page 2

Students take a breather after playing a round of basketball at MassPIRG's Hoops for Hunger fundraiser, Saturday. The program raised $355.

War teach-in brings viewpoints on Iraq

By Kimberly Seymour
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts students and members of the community gathered for a Teach-In on War and Occupation Saturday in Herter Hall.

The event began at 10 a.m. with three guest panelists and about 100 attendees.

Peta Lindsey, an international student activist and student at Howard University, began the teach-in with a speech on the upcoming one-year anniversary of the U.S. invasion of Iraq. She said across the world people will gather on March 20 in peaceful demonstrations to protest U.S. occupation of Iraq.

"This is not our war and we stand against it," said Lindsey.

Bill Fletcher, member of the TransAfrica forum and co-chair of United for Peace and Justice, the second speaker on the panel, took his place speaking about the political reasons the U.S. went to war with Iraq.

"There will never be another country who can threaten us," said Fletcher. "If you disagree, the U.S. can take you out."

The third speaker, Fernando Suarez del Solar, is a member of the Global Exchange and Military Families Speak Out. He lost his son, Jesus A. Suarez del Solar Navarro, while he was serving for the Marines in Iraq on March 27, 2003. Suarez said the government told him his son died from enemy fire, but when he talked to the members of the troop, they said Jesus had stepped on a cluster bomb that the unit was not made aware of.

Suarez visited Iraq some time after the death of his son. While there, he said he saw many disturbing things.

"The children's hospitals in Iraq are completely annihilated," he said. "Children are dying everyday because of lack of medicine … that would cost $5 in the U.S."

Suarez said many of the soldiers are suffering from psychological damage as well as the physical effects of war. He told a story of a young soldier riding through Baghdad in a tank who shot a

See TEACH-IN on page 2

Mayor to recognize civil unions

By Elizabeth M. Gillespie
Associated Press

SEATTLE (AP) — Mayor Greg Nickels announced Sunday that the city will begin recognizing the marriages of gay employees who get their unions licensed elsewhere — a privilege he'll ask the City Council to extend to all Seattle residents.

"Beginning tomorrow, we're going to give everyone who works for the City who has been married equal rights regardless of whether they are straight or gay," the mayor said in a statement provided to The Associated Press.

An executive Nickels said he would sign on Monday will require all city departments to grant city employees in same-sex marriages the same rights heterosexual married couples get.

An ordinance Nickels is sending to the City Council would extend that recognition to Seattle residents with marriage licenses, regardless of their sexual orientation.

"The basic message is one of fairness, and that is that people who are willing to make a commitment to one another, who love one another, and who are willing to take on the responsibilities of marriage ought to be able to, regardless of their gender," Nickels told the AP on Sunday.

Nickels supports gay marriage, but because counties — not cities — Issue marriage licenses in Washington state, he has said he lacks the legal authority to issue same-sex marriage licenses like mayors in San Francisco and New Paltz, N.Y., have done.

King County Executive Ron Sims, a Democratic gubernatorial candidate, favors gay marriage but has said his hands are tied by a state law and would not follow the lead of Multnomah County in Oregon, which began issuing marriage licenses to gay couples last week.

Washington state lawmakers passed a "Defense of Marriage Act" in 1998, making Washington one of 38 states defining marriage as the union of a man and a woman. Gov. Gary Locke vetoed the law, but lawmakers overrode the veto.

Seattle has offered domestic partnership benefits to its employees since 1989, but that process requires workers to fill out extensive paperwork — a step same-sex couples will be able to skip under the executive order Nickels was to sign Monday.

The ordinance Nickels said he would send to the City Council on Monday defines "spouse," as a husband or wife in a same-sex or opposite-sex marriage.

If the council approves the ordinance, it would protect gay married couples throughout the city from discrimination in employment, housing or the use of parks or other city facilities. It would also bar contractors doing business with the city to from discriminating against people based on their marital status.

Nickels said he's hopeful the council will pass the ordinance.

"Seattle, I believe, has always been a very tolerant city, one that believes in basic fairness and defending the rights of people," Nickels said, "and I think there will be strong support for this action."

Rick Forcier, head of the state Christian Coalition, called Nickels' plan a clear violation of state law.

"What he's about to do is anarchy — taking the law into his own hands," Forcier said.

"We have to have uniform laws," he added. "People cannot be recognized as married in one jurisdiction and not in another. … He's pretending to recognize counterfeit licenses that will have no value."

Haitians celebrate victory

By Ian James
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Thousands of Haitians marched on the presidential National Palace on Sunday, burning a billboard of exiled leader Jean-Bertrand Aristide and demanding he face trial for corruption.

Shots were fired during the protest, wounding at least five people. It was not immediately clear who fired. Afterward, U.S. Marines who had been watching the march began patrols around the palace.

Pro-Aristide militants canceled a counter-march, saying they feared reprisal attacks and that peacekeepers offered them no protection. Their protest was rescheduled for Monday.

"The Americans are only here to protect those who helped oust Aristide," said Ednar Ducoste,

See HAITI on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundos
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reed
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Sulsiker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Legatic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCES Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kiggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lizz Lynch
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Crum
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Martelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SCHEDULE. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS NOTES LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN ON THE INTERNET SINCE JANUARY 1996. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

Students gather to learn Tools for Change

KAITLIN OTT/COLLEGIAN

Student activists discuss writing grants at Saturday's Tools for Change conference. This is the second year of the annual program.

ACTIVISTS from page 1

Engagement Fellow, organized the event with help from the Office of Community Service Learning. Kalus is a junior at UMass and is majoring in finance and legal studies.

"I'm very political," Kalus said, "I want to create ways to support other activists. I believe that all voices should be heard."

Kalus also organized the Tools for Change conference last year and hopes that someone else can organize the conference in the future.

Each workshop met in different rooms and students were allowed to attend two workshops, one during the day and one in the afternoon.

All students were treated to a continental breakfast and lunch on the 11th floor of the Campus Center.

"[The conference] is the most organized event at UMass that I've seen so far," said Lauren Kapalka, a music education major and junior.

The Tools for Change Conference was funded by the University of Massachusetts Alumni Association, Commonwealth College at UMass, the UMass Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, the Isenberg School of Management, the Massachusetts Campus Compact, the Office of Community Service Learning, and the Pew Raise Your Voice Campaign.

Interest group raises funding

MASSPIRG from page 1

goal of addressing the issues of hunger and homelessness with their efforts.

"Hoops for Hunger" was the first of many events planned in hopes of raising $30,000 to open the soup kitchen. The next fundraising event planned by MassPIRG is "Hunger Cleanup Day," which will take place on April 3.

"Hunger Cleanup Day" will involve students who are sponsored to work in the community for a three-hour period. Participants collect pledges from sponsors and then volunteer within the community on projects such as painting local shelters, planting community gardens, preparing and cleaning food banks, and construction. Each student involved has to raise a minimum of $25 to participate.

"It's not a huge commitment, but with a lot of people the event will be successful," Cunningham said.

"This is going to be one of our really big events that we're hoping will bring in a lot of money for our soup kitchen campaign," Cunningham said. "Hunger Cleanup Day" was created by the National Student Campaign Against Hunger and Homelessness. It is one of the largest national one-day community service fundraising events. The aim of the campaign is to educate participants about problems of hunger and homelessness and encouraging continued community service participation by volunteers.

The National Student Campaign Against Hunger and Homelessness was created in 1985 by the Student Public Interest Research Groups and U.S.A. for Africa.

The campaign works to increase student community service and to sustain a coalition of students and community members working to end hunger and homelessness through service, education, and action, according to one of their publications.

Their "Hunger Cleanup Day" is now in its 20th year.

The kickoff of the event will take place on Amherst common, and will involve students from UMass, Amherst College and Smith College.

The MassPIRG branches at each school are working collaboratively to establish the soup kitchen.

Haitian rebels march on national palace

HAITI from page 1

Opponents of former President Jean-Bertrand Aristide drink champagne before marching through Port-au-Prince, Haiti yesterday.

23. "If we had guns, we would be fighting against them right now."

Two leaders of the monthlong rebellion that ousted Aristide joined the jubilant crowd, signing autographs for demonstrators. Guy Philippe, a former Aristide police chief accused of coup-plotting, was hoisted onto supporters' shoulders as they chanted "Guy Philippe — hero! Aristide — zero!"

During the march in Port-au-Prince, protesters tore down a billboard that displayed Aristide's picture and the slogan: "Haiti is the mother of freedom." They carried it to the palace and set it on fire, as military helicopters circled overhead and black smoke billowed from the front gate.

The protesters also cheered for Louis-Jodel Chamblain, an ex-soldier convicted in the killings of Aristide supporters. He was among the most prominent leaders of the rebels, who began their uprising Feb. 5 in Haiti's north.

Near the state hospital, the stench rose from more than 200 bodies rotting in the morgue, most from the rebel insurgency that drove Aristide to flee exactly a week ago.

A morgue worker said the latest bodies — two men with gunshot wounds — were brought in Friday, more evidence that the latest round of bloodshed is not over in the Caribbean nation with a 200-year history of violent politics.

Associated Press writer Joseph B. Frazier contributed to this report from Cap-Haitien.

For the Record

Correction: In a Page One story on Feb. 26, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian incorrectly reported that Jennifer Paluseo was held on $25,000 bail after pleading guilty to manslaughter charges. Paluseo was released on bail.

Correction: In a Feb. 29 story on the June Jordan conference that appeared in the Arts & Living section, The Collegian incorrectly identified the director of women's studies. The story should have identified her as Arlene Avakian.

Correction: In a Page One story last Thursday, The Collegian incorrectly reported that the SGA Senate passed a motion to sing the Puerto Rican national anthem at the beginning of each meeting. The motion failed.

Teach-in on war, occupation protests Iraq involvement civilian boy because he thought he was a threat. The soldier then shot himself because of the horror of killing a child, he said.

TEACH-IN from page 1

"That's what Bush is doing with our children," Suarez said. "Either he sends them back crazy or he sends them back in body bags."

Throughout the course of the day six workshops were offered: "Veterans and Military Families Speak Out," "Voices from the Front Lines: The Human Cost of War," "Racism at Home and the Patriot Act," "Incurious George and His Magnificent Empire: Imperialism Today," "War and Economy," and "Palestine."

Eric Wasileski and Suarez spoke at the Veteran's workshop. Wasileski is a former UMass student and a Persian Gulf veteran.

Wasileski said the war against Iraq began when the Berlin Wall fell. He said this has been one ongoing war that has lasted for 13 years now. He was part of Operation Desert Fox in 1998 and said not a day goes by that he doesn't think of the Iraqi people he helped to kill.

"The U.S. didn't actually use germ warfare," he said, "but they sat aside and did nothing when germ warfare was killing 2.5 million people in Iraq."

He also talked of the Universal Service Act; a draft bill that would make men and women ages 18 to 24 able to be drafted without student deferment.

Suarez focused on his opinion about the U.S. military recruiters. He thinks they should no longer be allowed in schools, where young people are not able to get all of the facts before signing their lives over to the military. He also said he believes the recruiters target young members of the Latino community who do not fully understand the laws and the fact that they have a choice about serving in the army.

Adam Shapiro and Sut Jhally spoke during the forum on "Internal and External Occupations: America, Iraq and Palestine."

Shapiro is a filmmaker and member of the International Solidarity Movement who is working on a film titled "About Baghdad." He traveled to the city in the summer of 2003 to talk to everyday people about the U.S. involvement in the country. Overall, he said, he found a positive attitude about Saddam Hussein no longer being in power, but a negative one about the American troops occupying their country.

Jhally, professor of communication and director of the Media Education Foundation, spoke about the delicate relationship between Hussein and the U.S.

"Saddam is not going away," he said. "We were running a propaganda cover for Saddam. We loved him. He killed over 6,000 civilians with poisonous gas in 1988 — with whose chemicals? And delivered by what helicopters?"

He said it was not until the 1991 invasion of Kuwait that the U.S. decided to step in.

"Suddenly Saddam goes from being our own personal butcher to Hitler overnight," he said.

CAITLIN OTT/COLLEGIAN

Fernando Suarez del Solar speaks at the Teach-in on War and Occupation, Saturday. The program was sponsored by the Political Economy Research Institute and the Office of ALANA Affairs.

Bush 9-11 intelligence questioned

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — John Kerry on Sunday accused President Bush of "stonewalling" separate inquiries into the events leading up to the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorists attacks, as well as into the intelligence that suggested Saddam Hussein was hiding weapons of mass destruction in Iraq.

Kerry, the presumptive Democratic presidential nominee, endorsed complaints by some members of a federal commission investigating the attacks that Bush was resisting their efforts to get documents and question witnesses.

"Why is this administration stonewalling and resisting the investigation into what happened and why we had the greatest security failure in the history of our country?" Kerry said at a hastily arranged news conference.

"The American people deserve an answer now," Kerry said. "The immediate instinct of the Republicans and this administration was to shut it down."

— Associated Press

Change your mind this summer:

• Get the Gen Ed courses you need
• Enjoy smaller class sizes
• Keep on track for graduation
• Choose from over 200 courses and degree programs
• AND take 6 credits or more and we'll waive the registration fee!

Watch for our money-saving coupon in your mailbox.

umass.edu/contined
413-545-2414

stay.

UMassAmherst
Continuing Education

Where summer is a state of mind.

GOLD'S GYM.
NOW OPEN!
Bring in this coupon and receive:
$100 OFF OR FREE TRIAL
COMPETITION, PLEASE!
THERE'S A REASON WHY WE'RE #1
BEST EQUIPMENT, BEST RESULTS
COME CHECK US OUT!
GOLD'S GYM.
10 UNIVERSITY DR.
(413) 549-6565

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Tour Operator
JAMAICA
SPRING BREAK 2004
LAST MINUTE DISCOUNTS!
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1 800 648 4849 www.ststravel.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 8, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Romney's scholarship proposal ineffective

In January, Gov. Mitt Romney announced at the State of the State address his plan for a higher education scholarship program. The John and Abigail Adams scholarship is designed to provide free tuition for the top quarter of MCAS scorers in the state to attend Massachusetts public institutions. The program also includes the opportunity for the highest scorers to receive an additional $2,000 toward room, board and fees.

This may seem like a step in the right direction, especially to many who think that Romney has neglected to support the public colleges and universities. However, his proposal has come under strict scrutiny.

According to research done by The Boston Globe, the people most likely to benefit from these scholarships are also the people least likely to need or take advantage of them. Because the program awards the top quarter of scores in the state, and not in each district, the percentage of recipients is much higher in wealthier neighborhoods such as Sharon and Wellesley rather than where the money is really needed.

When asked about this possibility, the governor said that it was "silly" to focus on the students who would not need the scholarship. The focus should be on the students that it does help, regardless of how small that number might be. He is convinced that his design will encourage lower-class students to excel, knowing that they have stiff competition all over the state.

Also, because the program is based on MCAS scores alone and does not take into account grades or class standing, the distribution percentage of the proposed scholarship is even more skewed. While 68 percent of the students in Dover-Sherborn would be eligible for free tuition, not even the predicted valedictorian at Hyde Park High School in Boston would qualify.

Romney claims that his plan is meant to help the middle-class families who are struggling to pay for rising college costs, but it has many design flaws that prevent it from doing just that. For one thing, Romney acknowledges the fact that many of the upper-class students who qualify for the scholarship will most likely reject it to attend private or out-of-state schools. Instead of allowing that discarded money to trickle down to more needy students, Romney compensated by only requesting enough funding from the legislature to cover 40 percent of the scholarships.

Still he sticks by his proposal. And although he says he is open to improvements in the plan, he is determined that the program remain solely based on merit, and not take any other qualifications into account.

"When you're getting ready to go to medical school or law school," Romney said, "or you're thinking about that job, someone says: 'Oh, boy, you went to a school that gave you a lousy education. We're going to hire you anyway.' That's not how it works."

It may be a good sign that Gov. Romney is finally paying some attention to the needs of higher education, but the John and Abigail Adams scholarship proposal is not the way to do it. The money appropriated in the budget for this program should be used for a scholarship that will benefit those that really need it.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Unfair blacklisting in Texas

Allison Edles

A new website started on Jan. 30, 2003 by Dr. John S. Jones has recently been creating controversy between the medical and the legal industries. The website, www.DoctorsKnowUs.com (formally known as DoctorsKnowUs), is "a Texas Limited Liability Company profiling litigious conduct of plaintiffs, plaintiff attorneys, and plaintiff expert witnesses," according to the website. The list found on the website includes names of patients and litigators in Texas who have filed malpractice lawsuits against doctors, hospitals, clinics, etc. The list serves as a warning to practicing doctors of a patient's legal history and can impact a doctor's decision to provide treatment to a patient or not. The list containing the names of plaintiffs and attorneys who have taken legal action in the form of malpractice suits is a step back for the people of Texas; it is comparable to the blacklisting of people who were thought to be associated with the Communist Party during the 1950s.

According to the website, "You may use the service to assess the risk of offering your services to clients or potential clients." Doctors who have previously been sued for malpractice or negligence are constantly worrying that the same circumstance may happen again. This allows the doctors themselves to evaluate the patient and decide for themselves whether providing treatment is a procedure that they are willing to perform given their past legal actions. It can be argued that a doctor, knowing in advance that a patient has previously taken legal actions against physicians, may not want to treat the patient if they know that they may very well be sued themselves. Under their guidelines of their medical licenses, physicians and surgeons are expected and required to perform and provide their services to the best of their abilities. Only when performance is below par should legal action be considered, if the outcomes are detrimental to the patient. In compliance with the expected guidelines of doctors, the website shouldn't be necessary because malpractice isn't something that should continually be occurring, especially enough to cause doctors fear of being sued.

The service provided by the website brings into question privacy laws concerning the doctor/patient relationships between the people listed. When the issue of how the website gained access to patients' legal records arose, the website stated that "profiles are derived from official and unofficial public records. Public records are open to inspection without legal restriction." For a patient that suffered from a doctor's malpractice, it is emotionally disturbing to see their "dirty laundry" aired on the Internet for the entire world to see, for making a legitimate attempt to have some good come out of the situation. The owners of the website are adding insult to injury to the patients and the lawyers mentioned on the list.

The DoctorsKnowUs.com service is not provided free of charge. According to the site, "plaintiff search is $4.95/Month for 250 searches and $.02 for each additional search. Group monitor $7.50/Month for 250 Monitored Persons and $.03 for each additional person monitored." Behind the fee charged to doctors for using the server, the website is backed by a slogan that reads "They can sue, but they can't hide," a sort of inspirational phrase that lends physicians a sense of comfort after being sued for malpractice.

Having a modern-day blacklist for the people of Texas discourages those in need of medical care from seeking it. If a surgeon does not perform up to the standards of his/her medical license, the patient that is hindered by their carelessness should try and seek some sort of compensation. As a physician, it is not illegal to turn a patient away because of their previous legal history. However, to many of the patients whose names appear on the list, it is certainly unethical. Granted, a doctor can refuse to treat a patient if they feel that the patient will pose a risk. However, for all the people that appear on that list, medical assistance has become more difficult to obtain, and quite often those patients require more treatment than they did before their malpractice suits. This Texas liability service has essentially blacklisted many people in need of medical attention, people who only tried to remedy an already horrific situation. To publicize their legal actions taken is disgraceful to the medical community and only serves to further humiliate the physicians and surgeons that were previously sued.

Allison Edles is a Collegian columnist.

Celebrating Women

Ian Trefethen

Attention guys: Did you know that March 8 is International Women's Day? Many men I've talked to on campus had no idea. If you did know, have you thought about what you might do? The chance to celebrate women is not just for women, it's for everyone. As men, women are our mothers, our sisters, our friends, our daughters, our partners, our lovers. They are extremely important to us. Because we care about them, we must support them. We have to be proactive in the struggles that women face. One important concern is women and violence.

The simple fact is, men engage in most of the violence in the world, and most of the violence women experience is at the hands of men. When violence happens, it's inappropriate to blame the victim. Blaming the victim often happens in cases of date rape and sexual assault. Men, and sometimes women, place responsibility on victims with statements like, "She shouldn't have been walking alone at that time of night," or, "She shouldn't have been drinking so much." Of course, violence against women (and men) is a reality, so there are behaviors that can help protect us.

However, women should be able to walk when and where they want, and should be able to drink however much they want without having to worry about being assaulted. It's not the behaviors of victims that will ultimately stop violence from happening. When the perpetuators of violence stop creating it, then it will stop. In most cases, this means men.

This is not to say that every man is violent: many of us do not commit specific acts of violence. We do, however, live in a culture of violence. As men, we often learn to address our problems with violence, whether it be the classic schoolyard fight scene, relationship violence, or violence between groups of men concerning drugs or "ownership" of women. Our foreign policy is based around a doctrine of violence: "Do what we want or we'll drop bombs on you." Movies, video games, and advertising frequently present images of violence, including explicit violence against women. Poverty and hunger, often overlooked forms of violence, disproportionately affect women. We are all part of the economic and political systems that allow suffering to exist in a world that has enough resources to take care of everyone. Whatever our individual actions, we all are surrounded by acts of violence against women.

Because we care about them, we must support them. We have to be proactive in the struggles that women face.

Men not only have the responsibility to stop violence, but they have more resources to do it. Men have the majority of power, whether you measure it by income, career status, governments positions, or otherwise. One small example: War, an extremely violent activity, kills men, women, boys and girls. In the U.S. Federal budget request for 2004, $399.1 billion is requested for the military. The people who decide on this budget are mostly men. If every one of those men decided that we should spend several billion on programs to support victims of violence, promote awareness of violence, teach non-violence, and help people who are violent to change, instead of on weapons, that would be a good start. Men have the power to make that change.

As a man, I pay special attention to the issues the women in my life are dealing with. I also try to make change on a larger level. Last year, I became an advocate for victims of domestic violence. After a 40-hour training, I volunteered at an agency providing support to victims of domestic violence by answering hotline calls and helping at a shelter. My interest in issues particularly affecting women, like violence, have lead me recently to an internship at the Men's Resource Center in Amherst. I am currently working on a campaign for men to show support for women on International Women's Day, Monday, March 8.

I encourage all men to not only take a stand against violence against women, but to become actively involved in the issues facing women today. This includes women's control of their bodies, economic equality, reproductive rights, access to women-friendly health care, accommodations for mothers, affordable child care, and much more. What better way to start than to show support on International Women's Day?

Ian Trefethen is a UMass student.

Bush shows no shame

Mark Ostroff

It was honestly a coincidence that Bush's ads came under fire last week as I discussed that joke of a commission that he put together for the Sept. 11 attacks. For a while, I just took it as a matter of fact that Bush, Mr. PR Stunt himself, would make the same kind of cheap tear-jerking sideshow out of 9-11 that one could find on the late-night lineup of The Bible Network.

And right on cue, Bush played what he thought would be the trump card of his hollow presidency — his "leadership" after that day of infamy, September 11. The ads that Bush put out depicted scenes of firefighters, flags, and the rubble in which thousands met an early grave — symbols to surely tug on patriotic heartstrings. What they didn't show you, and what they never will, was Bush's real record of "leadership."

Bush critics were generally right in describing those ads as inappropriate. What bothers me is that many did not go into detail as to why. His ads exploited the Sept. 11 attacks, not because he was simply depicting American tragedy, but because his representation of it was not only a lie, but also a blatant hypocrisy, given how he really handled 9-11. He was expecting you, the typical American, to be too stupid to see through his melodrama and ask the real questions.

Bush bends to the Hooverist anti-union ideology of his corporate tennis partners and actually refuses funding for first-response rescue workers.

First of all, what Bush's patriotic appeal won't show you is that after the attacks happened, he couldn't even get his own story straight. According to a CNN transcript, Bush actually claimed to have seen live coverage of the first plane hitting the tower! Initially he said that he dismissed this as a "terrible pilot," and was eventually notified that a second plane had hit the tower.

Bush, however, didn't realize that he was seen on videotape in a Florida classroom reading a book about sheep, while those "terrible pilots" were committing the atrocities that he claimed to have witnessed first-hand. And he accuses John Kerry of "uncertainty"?

What other points of pride does Bush flaunt for his "leadership in times of change" in his shameless ads? He has no problem getting in front of a camera and putting his arm around a bunch of firefighters. But what did Bush do to support all those "heroes"? According to one firefighter, Michael Mohler, "The president has merely been using firefighters and their families for one big photo opportunity."

You see, widows are made in New York, while heroes are made in Washington. Instead of our "hero-in-chief" giving the firefighters of New York better funding to do the job that he pats them on the back for, they get a slap in the face. Bush bends to the Hooverist anti-union ideology of his corporate tennis partners and actually refuses funding for first-response rescue workers.

The bill, already passed in Congress both by Democrats and Republicans, would have given $5.1 billion in much needed funding to rescue workers nationwide, according to Reuters.

These "first-responders," not only went into the crumbling WTC to save lives, but over 300 died as a result. The rejected bill appropriated $100 million to ensure better radios for firefighters all over the country, but all they got was a lousy ceremony honoring those who died, ironically as a result of poor radio equipment.

As if that wasn't a big enough slap in the face, they came under fire from conservatives who basically called them a bunch of sniveling babies for demanding unions and better equipment! According to the Newsmax, an overbearingly conservative news source, "left-wingers are cleverly using the long-term crisis to con politicians into believing now is the time to act on legislation that would force locally controlled firemen and police into collectives."

You see, it's perfectly okay to use 9-11 for political gain, but when those who risked their lives go and invoke 9-11 for better working conditions, it's tacky, tasteless, and shot down with some good ol' fashioned red-baiting, left over from the McCarthy era.

According to the International Association of Firefighters, "Two-thirds of America's fire departments remain under-staffed because Bush is failing to enforce a new law that was passed with bipartisan support in Congress that would put more fire fighters in our communities."

If and when there is another terror attack, do you think that Bush and Karl Rove are going to be there with hoses and helmets? Do you think that Homeland Security will show up to carry people down all those flights of steps?

The only people who will be up to the job are the kind of blue-collar Americans that Bush has used only as a photo opportunity. Even that little appearance at the NASCAR race was done to coddle blue-collar Americans at taxpayer expense, diverting from the fact that he ultimately leaves them in the dust.

Alongside the issue with firefighters, there are countless other reasons why Bush's classless ads are a joke. The only problem is that describing them would take the space of a whole book. Oil interests in Afghanistan, the puppet-president Hamid Karzai, our military adventure in Iraq, Halliburton's crony capitalism, CIA leaks, the Patriot Act, a 9-11 commission that had less priority than Janet Jackson's right breast — the list goes on!

Sorry, Mr. President. It looks like you'll have to do a lot better than a bunch of pseudo-patriotic ads about 9-11 if you want to get the chance to screw us over for another four years.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian Columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

MERCURY POLLUTION EXTREMELY DANGEROUS

Mercury pollution from coal-fired power plants is one of the most persistent, toxic, and harmful chemicals in existence. This invisible poison ends up in our waterways and accumulates in the fish we catch and eat, threatening public health and Massachusetts outdoor recreation. Despite this threat to our health and way of life, the Bush Administration announced on Tuesday that it will push to overturn Clean Air Act protections and allow as much as five to six times the toxic mercury pollution that is allowed under current law. To do this, it is declaring mercury a non-toxic pollutant — when every child knows that mercury is a deadly poison.

This is bad news for America's $35 billion-a-year sport fishing industry, and for those of us who make fishing part of our lifestyle. It is terrible news for anyone who eats fish.

The risk of mercury poisoning takes away much of the simple enjoyment of eating freshly caught fish. Exposure to mercury can damage the brain, kidneys and cardiovascular system. It is especially harmful to children whose brains are still developing, and to children still in the womb who are exposed when their mothers eat contaminated fish. Roughly 300,000 newborns each year are already exposed to dangerous mercury levels, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

To protect against the health risks of mercury, 43 states issued mercury advisories last year warning people to limit consumption of fish from 12 million acres of lakes and 450,000 miles of river.

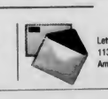
The good news is that we don't have to choose between fish and public health. There is a common sense way to make fish fit to eat: keep toxic mercury out of the environment and out of the food chain by cutting mercury from power plants, the largest unregulated source of mercury emissions in the United States. The bad news is that President Bush and his campaign contributors from polluting industries seem unwilling to take this easy step.

More than 500 coal-burning power plants emit about 100,000 pounds of mercury into the air each year, more than any other industry. While other sources of mercury, like garbage incinerators, are already subject to stringent emission control requirements, mercury emissions from power plants are completely uncontrolled. If we are to address the problem of mercury contamination in fish, we must close this gap. We know that we can — the Bush administration's own scientists have found that by using current technology, we can reduce mercury emissions from power plants by 90 percent over the next five years.

Doing so would result in rapid reduction in the incidence of mercury poisoning. A recent EPA study done in Florida shows that when tough mercury emission standards are enacted, mercury begins to leave the food chain almost immediately.

Massachusetts fishermen and anyone who eats fish urgently need that improvement to protect against the debilitating impact of mercury poisoning. It is appalling that President Bush would put the wishes of campaign contributors in the utility industry before the health of citizens and the environment.

Jenifer Yang
UMass student



SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com

413-545-3699

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 8, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rocking their way over the pond

British musicians CTP make good first impression in the U.S.

BY NICK ROMANOW
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The stigma of being the "next big thing" is something that haunts many bands. Bands from the mediocre to the deserving are, it seems randomly, singled out by the press and crowned to be the new, hip thing to listen to. That makes it difficult to award an innovative, interesting, and above all, talented group such as The Cooper Temple Clause, with such a title. Whether or not the band will get the massive hyperbolic acclaim like The Strokes or The Vines have, there is no doubt that CTC is one of the most exciting and innovative bands in recent memory.

The band's second LP, and the British band's first United States release, "Kick Up The Fire And Let The Flames Break Loose" showcases the young group's mixture of American alt-rock, Brit-pop, and electronica that makes for an eclectic and ambitious sound. "Kick Up The Fire..." with its driving riffs, electro freak-outs, and the best sound dynamic in ten years, is something along the lines of ethereal space grunge. The dreamy yet disturbed "The Same Mistakes" opens the disc and comes across as twisted lullabies by future generations raised on "Kid A"-era Radiohead with vocalist Ben Gautrey quietly warning and instructing "Can't jump ship just yet/There's no one at the wheel/Someone has to steer/Get a hold of yourself." The Coopers' schizophrenia is immediately recognizable as the second track, "Promises, Promises" begins with a chug-chug riff that wouldn't be that out of place in a Stone Temple Pilots song.

In fact the occurrence of "Temple" in both STP and CTC's name seems like it might not be much of a coincidence. Gautrey's voice bears a resemblance to Scott Weiland's and the band's collision of almost-stadium-ready alt-rock and electronic experimentation is not unlike what the result of melding STP and "12 Bar Blues", Weiland's solo album, would be.

Dan Fisher, the band's lead guitarist and lyricist explained to the Daily Collegian that CTC's distinct style comes from their very varied influences. "All six of us listen to completely different music, I think that's the big influence on our sound," he said, "like, Tom [Bellamy, who plays guitars and synthesizers] and Kieran [Mahon, the band's keyboardist] are into electronic music whereas I'm pretty much strictly into guitar [rock]."

Fisher continues, "I think that really contributes to our sound and our sense of ambition." Ambition is definitely an appropriate word to use when talking about CTC. "Talking To A Brick Wall" starts out like a funeral march, complete with chanted vocals, before launching into anathematic, crunching rock.

Part of the reason that the songs on "Kick Up The Fire..." work while many other electro-rock bands fail, is that the band knows how to balance the genres. Nothing on the album sounds overstacked, nor does anything feel lazy.

Fisher chalks that up to the band being unafraid to try anything and everything, and being egoless enough to subtract their own parts.

"We'll try everything, we can always take things off," he explains, "that's kind of the difficult thing ... when we load the things on the track than the art is, I guess, to know which bits to leave off, even if it's got a really nice sound, if it muddies up the overall picture, it's important to keep that in sight ... a little individual moment can be sacrificed for the greater good of the whole track."

The Cooper Temple Clause
'Kick Up The Fire And Let The Flames Break Loose'
RCA Records

CTC is capable of both wearing their influences on their sleeve and also creating something brand new, rather than relying on the past. Critics often focuses on the band's unique use of electronics and fearless experimentation, which often connects them to Radiohead, a logical but not totally accurate comparison.

"We've had favorable comparisons to stuff like Radiohead and Primal Scream, those are ones we get compared to a lot and they're great, but [we've heard] Charlatans, Hanson, Robbie Williams, Simon & Garfunkel ... stuff that doesn't make sense ... we've stopped listening...any band that comes from Britain gets compared to Radiohead, especially 'cause there's various different kinds of Radiohead. There's the Radiohead that Coldplay and Travis get compared to ... and there's the more progressive and experimental Radiohead that is, what I think, we get compared to ... at the end of the day you can sit and stew in it but there's not a lot you can do about it ... Radiohead's a great band to be compared to ... the thing that I worry about is people see 'Radiohead' [in the articles] and they think we're gonna sound like Coldplay or Travis ... it's not in your control, really, and it's not worth making too much time to worry about."

Indeed, the focus on "Kick Up The Fire..." isn't on image or attitude, like so many up-and-coming bands, but on music, which is certainly a big part of the reason that the band sticks out from the pack. CTC have no problems transitioning from the pseudo-dirge/ballad "Into My Arms" to the almost-radio-ready rock fury of "Blind Pilots", which again recalls the STP comparisons. "New Toys" and the epic, 10-minute finale "Written Apology" have no shame and no awkwardness mutating into electronic experiments that drown out all the traditional rock elements of the music.

The band often also forgoes the more traditional pup/rock song format, in exchange for experiments in soundscapes, atmospheres, and dynamics. The band does seem to have a thing for, and a talent towards, the soft/loud dynamic. The concept, which has been around practically as long as music itself, was practically beaten in the ground by Nirvana-wannabes in the mid-90s, but CTC is talented enough to resurrect it and use it properly, instead of overusing the effect.

"The Pixies and Nirvana were the first ones to do that kind of quiet-verse/loud-chorus thing and virtually every band since than has done a similar thing...Also, we get bored easily. We don't like the verse, chorus, verse, chorus, middle 8, chorus structure; we have very few songs like that. We like to have as much fun within a song in as many places as possible ... I think "Dirge" by Death In Vegas was another [influence]. I remember seeing an interview with Richard Fearless where he said the idea of that track was two chords and every eighth bar, add another instrument ... You also have to avoid overdoing it, if every track starts of low-key and than gets bigger and bigger than you're just doing the same thing ... it's just kinda mucking about with the tracks, it's just our experimental nature."

It's the fact that CTC isn't doing the same thing over and over, or doing anything too similar to what is happening in rock music today, that makes them such an exciting band. "Kick Up The Flames..." is, even in it's most inconspicuous moments, so completely different from today's "next-big-things" that it seems CTC is no doubt destined for great things.

"I guess if there's any mission at all," Fisher concludes, "it's to keep reinventing ourselves, the way [David] Bowie did ... and always be interesting, always be different, always try and push what we do, and take on new influences, and make sure we never get stale ... standing out in the crowd is what we're all about."

Clearly the band knows what they want to do and, "Kick Up The Flames..." shows that it knows how to do it too.

On tour supporting "Kick Up The Flames...," The Cooper Temple Clause will be in Boston at The Paradise Wednesday night. Tickets are $10.

COURTESY COOPERTEMPLECLAUSE.COM

The Cooper Temple Clause is a product of the influence of former electronic artists, just as much as it is a band of its own creation.

'Bloody lovely' music

New band worth a little money

BY CAMERON J. WOODS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Can you name a band that was played on nearly 50 leading radio stations in the U.S., had its bassist featured on the Tonight Show, and had over 110-thousand downloads from a single website, all before being signed to any record label? No? How about The Bloody Lovelies? With their refreshing retro pop rock sound and enormous musical talent the Lovelies have breathed life into their first album, "Some Truth and a Little Money."

The Bloody Lovelies
'Some truth and a little money'
Cheap Lullaby

Originally formed as a college band on the University of Tennessee- Nashville by vocalist Randy Wooten, the Lovelies have come a long way in solidifying their presence as something to take note of. The quartet consists of songwriter/vocalist Wooten, Eric Holden on bass, Craig Macintyre supplying percussion and Lance Konerth on guitar. Besides the musical instruments the Lovelies list wit, charm, and machismo as contributing factors that they each bring to the music, which though may be in jest, are some attributes some contemporary artists lack.

With a sound comparable to a synthesis of Pink Floyd with a little bit of Cake, the Lovelies successfully combine the old and the new into something wholly their own.

The tracks on "Some Truth..." run the gamut from boisterous and energetic to moody and mellow. From their opening track "Hologram" with its classic rock sound, vocal fading techniques, and its sunshine sound to "You Could Die" which hits the heart somewhere close to Floyd's "Wish You Were Here" with its weeping guitar holds and emotionally heavy lyrics.

Their one radio hit, as of yet, is the second track on the disc, "You Don't Love Me." The song's beat is set by a light piano that sets a simplistic tone to the song easing the listener into the sweeping up-beat refrains. With the slightly nasal, melodic whine of Wooten's crystal clear vocals this song has a catchy sound to it that guarantees that it has potential to be an ear-bug.

"Star" leads in with Holden laying down a jazzy backbeat, which Wooten overlays with breathy tones. The song soars at points as Wooten hollers about the effects, good and bad, of being a star.

Coming off of the egomaniacal rant of "Star," their next track "Lonely Town" is a heart-crushing ballad sung with a depth and range of voice yet to be heard on this disc. Its sound flows like ink, suffusing the air with a sad sort of audio mist. The lyrics tell a story that is commonly enough tried by musicians, but the Lovelies supply, the breakup song with a sort of self-indulgent anguish that hurts to hear but feels all too familiar.

True to form the Lovelies change things up yet again, with a short track entitled, "3-days." The track seems to be the manic stage after a particularly low depression; it is loaded with high-note guitar riffs and jiving rock bass solos, with vocals too match.

To "cloud nine" and back again in less than a heartbeat, "Square" pours out as a neutral track with soothing lyrical tones and placid guitar accompaniment. Though the track is about being lame and dreams that stem from being socially marginalized, the ascending hold lyrics drag the song into a slightly happier place than neutral despite the semantics pessimism of its words.

Enough emotional jostling was enough and the Lovelies give listeners a rest with the mellow track "Dreams." With a somewhat jolly piano and heavy bass beats this song is a breath of mellow tones that gives a needed break before more serious topics are to be confronted.

By far the best guitar solos of the entire track appear in "The Money Song," which aptly refrains

See LOVELIES on page 5

COURTESY THEBLOODYLOVELIES.COM

Vocalist Randy Wooten doubles as The Bloody Lovelies' keyboardest as well as their frontman.

NAACP Image Awards honor African American performers

BY BRUCE HARING
ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Bernie Mac paid tribute Saturday night to his early fans for making it possible for him to take home two NAACP Image Awards, which honor works by and about people of color.

The usually boisterous Mac, who won outstanding actor in a comedy series and outstanding comedy series for Fox's "The Bernie Mac Show," thanked those who supported him when he was making the rounds of comedy clubs.

"For 43 weeks a year, for 18 years, you came to see me. So when I came to television I was ready, and I thank you so much," he told the audience.

Hip-hop group OutKast won for outstanding duo or group, and was nominated for five other awards including best album for "Speakerboxxx/The Love Below."

Ray Charles turned the tables as he was inducted into the NAACP Hall of Fame following a tribute performance by B.B. King, Stevie Wonder and Bonnie Raitt.

"They do so much to help so many," Charles said of the NAACP. "I want you to know this is truly an honor and I thank you from the bottom of my heart."

The ceremony was at the Universal Amphitheatre and will be broadcast Thursday on Fox. The awards by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are determined by show business professionals and NAACP officials nationwide.

Five Image Award nominations went to singer Beyonce, including best female artist and outstanding song and video for "Crazy in Love." She was also named Entertainer of the Year. Special awards were going to the Dave Matthews Band and T.D. Jakes, a nationally known evangelist and pastor of Dallas-based The Potter's House, one of the nation's fastest-growing churches with 59 ministries.

OutKast won three Grammy Awards last month but a performance during the telecast angered some American Indians. For a version of "Hey Ya," OutKast's Andre "3000" Benjamin and several dancers wore feathers and war paint and swirled wildly around a teepee. CBS apologized to anyone who was offended.

Luther Vandross, the soul singer who is recovering from a stroke, had four Image Award nominations for male artist and the song, album and video titled "Dance With My Father." He won four Grammys last month.

Up for best movie was "Whale Rider," whose 13-year-old star, Keisha Castle-Hughes, lost to Charlize Theron for the best actress Academy Award. She played a Maori girl who challenges tradition and her disbelieving grandfather to seek leadership of her tribe.

Other contenders were "Bad Boys II," a critically panned and violent sequel to the Will Smith-Martin Lawrence action film; "Bend It Like Beckham," about the culture clash between a British-born girl who wants to play soccer and her Indian parents; the romantic comedy "Deliver Us from Eva," and the Gospel music comedy "The Fighting Temptations."

COURTESY ROLLINGSTONE.COM

Beyonce took home best female artist for "Crazy in Love."

COURTESY

Ray Charles was inducted into the NAACP Hall of Fame.

COURTESY @VAH.COM

Bernie Mac took home several awards, including Best Actor in a comedy series.

the source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

MondayMarch8

BOOKS

The Odyssey Mystery Book Group will discuss Barry Eisler's John Rain mystery, "Rain Fall" as their March 2004 selection. The group meets every second Monday to discuss a selected piece of literature; they analyze what worked in the book and what did not. This event begins at 7 p.m. and is free and open to the public, and all are welcome to contribute to the discussion.

TuesdayMarch9

MUSIC

The UMass Department of Music and Dance is set to Present its 22nd Annual Jazz Showcase. This year's performance is entitled "Spotlight on the Saxophone." The show is to take place at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall starting at 8 p.m. Tickets are on sale through FAC box office and are $5-$10. For ticket information call 413-545-2511.

DISCUSSION

As part of its annual fund drive, which this year will benefit local agencies that assist people living with HIV/AIDS, Service Organizations of Smith will present a panel discussion, featuring experts on the global pandemic from local colleges. The panel will take place at 7:30 p.m. in Neilson Browsing Room.

The following panelists will be featured at the event: Kiaran Honderich, guest lecturer in economics at Smith, Richard Goldsby, professor of biology, Amherst College, Jill Lewis, professor of gender studies and literature, Hampshire College, Ellen Miller-Mack, nurse practitioner, Brightwood Health Center, Springfield.

MUSIC

The Iron Horse Music Hall set to host Coco Montoya. Montoya learned is musical trade as a member of John Mayall's "Bluesbreakers" and Albert Collin's "Icebreakers." His particular flair for blues rock distinguishes Montoya from other artists. The performance begins at 7 p.m. and tickets are on sale for $15.

WednesdayMarch10

BOOKS

The Odyssey Bookshop will host editor Linda Roghaar. The night's events will include readings from "KnitLit, Too: Stories from Sheep to Shawl ... and More Writing about Knitting," the follow up book to "KnitLit." Readers will include Leslea Newman, Jay Elliot, Martie Stothoff, and more.

This collage of short stories and diverse reader is subject to change. The readings will begin at 7 p.m. at the Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley. This event is free and open to the public, for more information, call 413-534-7370.

ThursdayMarch11

PERFORMANCE

The Calvin Theater of Northampton will host Les Ballet Africans. Hailing form the Republic of Guinea, Les Ballet Africans performs traditional dance, music, acrobatics and storytelling. The incorporation of ancient tribal instruments adds to the authenticity of their performance.Curtain call is at 7 p.m. and tickets are on sale for $17.50-$35.

BOOKS

Peter Manseau and Jeff Sharlet to discuss, "Killing the Buddha: A Heretic's Bible," an examination of spiritual exploration in America. Manseau and Sharlet began working together early on in their careers at the National Yiddish Book Center at Hampshire College. The discussion will be held at the Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley at 7 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

SaturdayMarch13

BOOKS

Starting at 10:30 a.m. the Odyssey Bookshop will continue its "Children's Saturday Fun" series with a daylong event entitled "Saint Patrick's Day Fun" for children ages 4-8. Events will include readings of traditional Irish folktales and other activities. For more information on this event contact the Odyssey Bookshop at 413-534-7307.

PERFORMANCE

Dad, Come Home! is set to play the Amherst Brewing Company. The group of Pioneer Valley natives consists of Rick Cahillane on bass and vocals, John Hayman on guitars and vocals, Bob Gould on keyboard and Alan Kurtz, drums and vocals. Dad, Come Home!'s style is a mix of rock' n' roll, Texas lounge blues and swing surf.

With three compact discs under their belt the guys of "Dad..." are a well-polished group of performers. The show will be held in the ABC and is free and open to the public.

SundayMarch14

BOOKS

Best-selling author Linda Barnes will speak at the Odyssey Bookshop about her latest Carlyle murder mystery "Deep Pockets." Barnes has authored nine previous novels in her Carlyle series, including "The Big Dig" and "Cold Case" and is a winner of the Anthony and American Mystery Awards. The reading will begin at 3 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

weekly pinup

THURSDAY MARCH 11

The world-renowned New Shanghai Circus will perform, their own style of ancient acrobatics at the Calvin Theater of Northampton. The show begins at 7 p.m. and tickets are on sale now for. $17.50-$35.

'Ovaries' finally given their due

CASEY NOVAK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

In honor of International Women's Day, the Everywoman's Center is sponsoring a "That Takes Ovaries!" open mic from 4 to 6 p.m. this evening in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union.

"This is a great opportunity for girls and women, boys and men to come celebraie the everyday and the extraordinary bravery and courage shown by girls and women everyday," said Sandy Mandel, associate director of special events for the Everywoman's Center.

That Takes Ovaries
Today
Cape Cod Lounge
Student Union
Free

"That Takes Ovaries!" is an international open mic movement, as well as a play and a best selling book. Rivka Solomon, editor of "That Takes Ovaries!: Bold Females and Their Brazen Acts," activist, and University of Massachusetts alumnus will be on hand for this Western Massachusetts premiere. The open mic, play, and book all focus on real-life stories from women and girls and the courageous things they have done.

Solomon specializes in first-person narratives focusing on women's issues. In addition to her book, Solomon's work has appeared in newspapers, magazines and radio broadcasts.

"I wrote the book in order to encourage women and girls to be bold risk-takers in their lives," she said. "Courage is infectious, risk-taking is contagious, and I wanted to make sure that some of those ripples in the pond happen."

"It's scary to be a risk-taker," she said, "but we need to be risk-takers in order to live our lives fully."

In one and a half years, more than 90 "That Takes Ovaries!" open mics have been held around the U.S. and India, organized locally by women in the community.

"We would like to see people who have never jed anything before to get their feet wet by organizing a 'That Takes Ovaries!' open mic or play as a way of learning how to become an activist and a leader," Solomon said.

Men are encouraged to attend and proudly brag about the women in their lives — their mothers, sisters, and daughters. Everyone who shares a story will receive a chocolate egg wrapped in gold foil — a Golden Ovary award.

"It takes ovaries even to just get up and share stories about times that you have had ovaries," Solomon said. "It is my way to encourage girls and women to notice their fears and step through them and to act boldly. I love seeing them take charge of their lives."

Everyone is welcome at the open mic, it is free, (donations welcome), is open to the public and wheelchair accessible.

Arabian Nights

Artists perform as part of the office of ALANA affairs' "Arab Cultural Festival: Not Just the War".

Talk about sex

Kosher Sex revealed

BY CAMERON J. WOODS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Looking for something exciting to do this Wednesday? How about some kosher sex? Schmuley Boteach, rabbi and world-renowned author, will speak in the Student Union Ballroom about his newest book, "Kosher Sex."

Rabbi Schmuley Boteach
'Kosher Sex'
Student Union Ballroom
March 11

Hillel House and the UMass Jewish Student Union are presenting Rabbi Boteach as a part of the University of Massachusetts "Healthy Relationships Month." Rabbi Boteach has reached international acclaim through his provocative writings, live debates and extensive media appearances. He is the author of 14 books including "Kosher Sex," "Dating Secrets of the Ten Commandments" and "Why Can't I Fall in Love." In 1999 Boteach was the first ever non-Christian to win the "London Times Preacher of the Year Competition." Boteach is a nationally syndicated radio talk show host on the Talk America Network. He has appeared on The Today Show, Larry King Live, Politically Incorrect, CBS and NBC. He has been featured in numerous publications including Time, Newsweek, The New York Times and the L.A. Times.

Through his writings Boteach expresses his cultural and personal views on what it means to have a healthy, productive, and loving relationship. He has been an inspiration to countless readers, in the throes of romantic tribulation. Not only an accomplished writer, Boteach is also an acclaimed orator, and his talk Wednesday should prove to be just as entertaining as it is informational.

This event is free and open to the public. So add a little bit of spice to your week, and take a break from the humdrum grind of midterms and enjoy a little bit of "Kosher Sex."

Some 'bloody' brilliant music

LOVELIES from page 4

in the cliche. "Money makes the world go round." With its culturally charged lyrics the song is surprisingly calm as opposed to the one that follows, "Baby tells me (it's all right)." For this track the piano is put in to full swing yet again, as they belt out a slightly more rock tune about a woman who is less than a model lady.

The final track of the album sounds a bit Tori Amos-inspired with a lilting and bit erratic sounding piano and vocals, which shift volume levels without emphasizing on any particular lyrics. "A Million Years From Now," emphasizes with a melancholy sound the immortality of music and the human spirit with a refrain of "we'll still be shining, a million years from now, like all the star light that's just reaching us now."

We will just have to wait and see if that is so for The Bloody Lovelies as well, or if they are just a distant star that is not to shine for us.

Information from thebloodylovelies.com was used in the article.

TEXT AND PHOTO BY TYLER ANDERSON

Bassist Eric Holden lays out the beat for the "Lovelies" songs.

STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND
Cheap Fares? Budget Hotels?
Advisors Who Get It?
This ain't your parents' travel agency... It's yours.
London.....$245
Amsterdam.....$245
Rome.....$245
Brussels.....$245
Miami From $740
» 6 nights
Vegas From $646
» 6 nights
BOOK IT BEFORE THE THRILL IS GONE.
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
44 Main Street
(413) 256.1261
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

Wiffle® Rock
2-5 player teams
Medium pitch
speed
MAY 1 & 2 @ TOTMAN FIELD UMASS
WIFFLEBALL TOURNAMENT
$1000 cash
FOR WINNING TEAM
Entry info--www.wifflerock.com
Hotline 508-429-7093
ROCK 102
WAQY Springfield's Classic Rock

SPRING BREAK
Free People top
back slit capris
Steve Madden heel in pink and black
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Twin killing by NU

HOCKEY from page 8

after a handful of stick dekes, slipped it past on the backhand, under the stick of a diving defenseman.

"Oh my lord, it looked like the seas parted," Cahoon said of the play.

Mauldin then stepped in for the Minutemen, and scored goals on two consecutive power plays midway through the third. The first came off of good puck movement, with Stephen Werner giving Mauldin the feed down low.

The second was a blistering slap shot from the point off of a faceoff, with the assist given to Mauldin's power-play blueline mate, defenseman Marvin Degon. As a result, the Minute-men were only down 3-2 with 12:30 to go.

Friday night at Matthews Arena in Boston, the two squads played even for the first 10 minutes of the game. After that, however, the Huskies completely took over, and the Minutemen were unable to generate any sustained attack in a 4-0 loss. Gibson made 38 saves to earn his sixth career shutout, and his fifth this season.

"[NU] played with a sense of urgency, and a stronger conviction than we did," Cahoon said. "They scored some goals in tight areas, got some bloody noses trying to put pucks in cages. I didn't think we played so bad, just not hard enough to win in this league. We made some nice plays, we had scoring chances, but we're not bearing down. We've got to play with greater conviction."

The Minutemen had a number of good chances early, but Thomas Pöck's stick broke as the senior defenseman tried to clear the puck, and NU's Mike Morris quickly sent the loose puck to Jason Guerriero, who put it through Winer's legs to take the early 1-0 lead at 12:32 of the first. Guerreiro followed with another feed from Morris just 2:19 later, and the Huskies were off and running.

Gibson was tested with a number of long-range shots, but showed his finest moves on the handful of occasions when the Minutemen were able to penetrate. One of his finest stops came at 4:39 of the second, when Pöck ended up on the doorstep. Gibson made a spectacular split to stop Pöck's attempt with his right leg, stifling one of the Minutemen's best chances of the evening.

Former UMass coach dies

LEAMAN from page 1

Cage, including Skinner, Basketball Hall of Famer Julius Erving, Louisville coach Rick Pitino and UMass Athletic Hall of Famers Bill Tindall and Joe DiSarcina.

"Jack Leaman did a remarkable job with this basketball program," Lappas said after an early season practice. "If it wasn't for Jack, this program wouldn't have ever been put in a position to succeed like it has."

"Coach Leaman is someone I always know I can confide in," Skinner said. "I always felt like I could go to him for anything, whether it be about life or basketball.

"He had a tremendous impact on how I coach, and even more so on who I was as a person."

Following his stint as men's basketball coach, Leaman remained heavily involved with the UMass athletic department in a variety of capacities.

He served as head women's basketball coach during the 1986-87 season, guiding the Minutewomen to a 14-12 record — the team's only winning season between 1980 and 1995. Additionally, he also spent three seasons as an assistant for the Minutewomen, beginning in 1991.

From 1994 until the day of his passing, Leaman served as a radio color commentator for UMass Sports Radio covering all men's basketball games. Known for his unparalleled capacity for basketball knowledge and brutally honest approach to analysis, Leaman teamed with partners Mark Vandermeer and Bob Behler to earn Best Play-By-Play honors from the Associated Press three times.

Leaman's efforts also spread to UMass' Stockbridge School of Agriculture, where he has served as athletic director, men's basketball coach and, most recently, men's golf coach.

Despite having retired from the UMass athletic department, Leaman remained a permanent fixture around the UMass campus and at university athletic events year-round. Known to have been a close friend and advisor of former men's basketball coaches John Calipari and Bruiser Flint in addition to Lappas, Leaman's fatherly insight also helped guide current women's basketball coach Marnie Dacko, as well as former coach Joanie O'Brien.

"He's just a wealth of knowledge," Lappas said prior to the 2003-04 season. "I know anytime I need to help with basketball, or with anything else for that matter, all I have to do is call Jack."

A 1951 graduate of Cambridge Rindge & Latin High School, Leaman was honorably discharged from the United States Army in 1955, and from there went on to earn a bachelor's degree and a master's degree while playing basketball for Boston University.

On the court, Leaman led the Terriers in scoring and assists over each of his first three seasons. During his senior campaign in 1959, he captained BU to a 20-7 overall record and an appearance in the NCAA East Regional final. He was inducted into the Boston University Hall of Fame in 1977.

With UMass set to play an opening round game of the Atlantic 10 Tournament Wednesday night in Dayton, Ohio, WRNX-FM and the university's athletic department have yet to make a decision on or about a potential replacement for Leaman on radio broadcasts for the remainder of the season.

Tourney time

Junior guard Anthony Anderson scored nine points and dished four assists in UMass's 69-65 loss to Richmond on Saturday. The Minutemen head to the A-10 tournament in Dayton on Wednesday.

Leaman was friend to all

MERRITT from page 8

how much he meant to Marnie and her team. And with no disrespect intended to Jack's daughter, Laura, the relationship that Jack had with Marnie certainly showed shades of a proud father watching his daughter at work.

While Jack would never have been mistaken for a hockey guy, he was still at every game that didn't conflict with men's hoops, sharing a few laughs, watching the game from his seat in section N, right on the aisle. Even though the conversation usually turned to basketball, Jack was a presence before hockey games. From the lowliest beat writer, to the highest-ranking officials, Jack treated everyone with the same great respect.

Everyone who was able to experience even a moment with Jack has been blessed. And there are more of you than you think. From the folks that listened to him coach and analyze on the radio, to those who were around when he was officially the Minutemen's coach, to the 4,630 who got to see Jack help raise Al Skinner's No. 30 to the South Wall a few weeks ago, if you were a UMass student, supporter, or faculty member with any interest in sports, you knew Jack.

Jack Leaman is one of those people who define this university. In a time when athletics is struggling to maintain, when budget woes and campus division makes UMass less than the bright, shining institution we'd all like it to be, Jack has always been a source of inspiration.

Jack was the biggest presence in UMass sports, whether you knew it or not. If you didn't recognize the face in the picture today, then you didn't follow the Maroon and White.

Yes, Jack coached Dr. J, Skinner, Pitino, and many other greats. Yes, he is UMass basketball's all-time winningest coach. But that's not why Jack is so important. Jack Leaman was one of the best and loudest voices for this university. He made sure to uphold the traditions and pride of UMass in everything he did. He made everyone who entered this school feel welcome.

He was UMass' greatest ambassador, its biggest fan, and its most visible icon. He will be missed by more people than can be counted, from all over the globe. Jack Leaman was UMass, and it is the hope of this writer that this school will always remain a source of pride.

That is Leaman's legacy, and I know that he will always look down on this tiny little corner of the world with that big grin, the one that never left his face, the one that made coming to games at the Mullins Center, or any other athletic event, absolutely worth it. We're all blessed to be touched by Jack, and I, for one, am eternally grateful that I could call him friend.

I hope you are too.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at merritt_collegian@yahoo.com

A reporter remembers 'Coach'

MARZELLI from page 8

could almost always find Leaman at the Mullins Center, perched behind the south goal watching over the Mass Attack or on press row examining the Minutewomen, or spending his Saturday afternoons in the McGuirk Alumni Stadium press box watching the gridiron intently while soaking up the atmosphere he loved.

Even for those outside the UMass athletic family, Leaman's refreshing personable nature engulfed him. A commanding figure with a reverberating smile, those who made a point to say "Hi coach" when he passed were guaranteed a "hello" and a pat on the back if he was in a hurry — whether he recognized your face or not — and a fully-engrossed conversation about anything from hoops to your academic workload if he wasn't.

As an aspiring journalist, I loved talking to Coach Leaman because he always viewed me as a legitimate writer, yet recognized that I was still just learning.

The first time I ever asked him for his general thoughts on a matter, he looked at me, told me to shut off my tape recorder, smiled and said:

"You're going to have to ask me a more specific question than that, son. I've got a lot of thoughts and a lot of time, and it's your job to avoid having to sit here with me all night, because I don't mind."

In a nutshell, that was Jack Leaman. He accomplished enough in his 71 years on this earth to earn legend's status, and if he chose to he could have easily gotten away with being arrogant and distant. Instead, he was gracious, forthcoming and personable — always willing to go the extra minute or the extra mile to make sure whatever you came to do that involved him was done right and done well.

Coach Leaman will never truly be recognized for all that he brought to UMass athletics, because it is immeasurable. A father and grandfather figure to so many men and women over the years, his absence will sting painfully for those, including myself, who were so used to seeing him arrive at Mullins or McGuirk or the Cage with his usual stroll and overflowing brown briefcase.

So as UMass Nation mourns its patriarch, it is time to honor Jack Leaman in a way that would have made him smile from ear-to-ear, and burst from his sweater vest with pride. It is time to make of coach's name ring true for generations of UMass fans that will never be able to truly appreciate how influential he truly was to a program he dedicated a lifetime's worth of hard work.

It's time to name the Mullins Center hardwood "Jack Leaman Court."

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_collegian@yahoo.com.

Harvard brings a heartbreaker

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team could not maintain a five-goal halftime lead on Saturday, and it fell to Harvard 9-8 in overtime. UMass (1-2) entered the game heavily favored, against a Harvard team that went 3-11 last season.

A second-half barrage by the Crimson turned a five-goal deficit into 8-8 tie, before Harvard freshman Liz Gamble capped off the game winner, 56 seconds into overtime. Gamble came off the bench to tally three goals and one assist in the second half.

Harvard	9
UMass	8

For the Minutewomen, the turning point of the game was a non-call that took place in the final seconds of regulation. Hope Zelinger of UMass was knocked to the turf amidst a breakaway attempt, as time expired.

Referring to the play in question, UMass coach Carrie Bolduc said, "I obviously thought it should have been a penalty, but there's nothing we can do, the game wasn't videotaped."

UMass wasted no time getting on the board early, as senior captain Tracy Drown scored 33 seconds into the game. Junior midfielder Maura McGarrity added to the lead with a goal at 1:57. Attacker Lindsay Cassell expanded the lead to four, with back-to-back goals coming off dodges in front of the cage.

Harvard stopped the bleeding with a goal from Catherine Sproul at 18:11, but Massachusetts replied with a series of goals, including McGarrity's second, and freshman Brianna Bubeck's first two career goals. Harvard got a goal from Elaine Belitsos to end the half, closing the gap to five.

Harvard went on a 7-1 run after the break, earning coach Sarah Nelson a victory in her first game behind the Crimson bench.

Kerri Connerty of UMass made what was arguably the nicest play of the game, for the lone Minutewomen goal of the game in second half. With 19:45 left in regulation, Connerty split a double team at the eight-meter hash mark in front of the Harvard goal, and bounced home a shot between goalie Kathryn Tylander's legs.

During overtime, UMass had a golden opportunity when sophomore Lindsay Cassell found herself receiving a pass within arms reach of the goal. Unfortunately for the Minutewomen, Cassell's shot found its self being absorbed by Tylander's chest protector, instead of the nylon net.

The Minutewomen will look to get back on the winning track when they travel to Hofstra on Tuesday for a 4 p.m. match against a Pride team that went 8-8, 4-3 in the Colonial conference in 2003.

Hofstra is coming off a season-opening loss to Rutgers 12-7, and are picked to finish third in the conference. The Pride return 20 letterwinners after losing only five to graduation last season, but must find a way to replace Kathleen Mikowski, an All-American attacker who graduated last spring.

birthControl.com
Helping you to make the right choices
For non-prescription
Birth Control Needs
visit:
www.birthcontrol.com
We have the Today Sponge Available

Amherst Laser & Skin Care Center
"Because you are worth it"
Laser Hair Removal
Both Men and Women
Any Area of the Body
Bikini * Face * Chin * Lip * Underarm * Leg * Back
Facials, Massages, & Microdermabrasion
Laser treatment available for acne and facial veins
Call Now for a free initial physician consultation.
Student Discounts available with a valid Student I.D.
Amherst Laser and Skin Care Center
Bob Weitzman MD- Medical Director
196 NORTH PLEASANT STREET - SUITE 11
AMHERST, MA 01002 - 413-253-2214 - FAX 413-253-2216
www.amherstlaser.com

NEW ON TUESDAY!
MONA LISA SMILE
SCHOOL OF ROCK
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Seniors GET A JOB!
Get "The Edge" for your career transition:
• The Edge – The inside scoop from hiring managers
• The Edge Workbook – Your Quick Start Guide
• Internet Resource CD – Save surfing time for fun
Get The Edge – It's your future!
The Deal: All 3 for $24.95
Save 15 bucks ... go buy a pizza!
Order: www.transitionstrategy.com

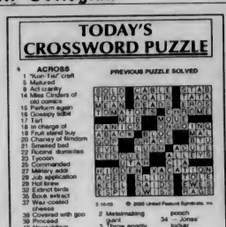
On the Rocks School of Bartending
• Become a certified bartender in a weekend
• The course is held on campus
• Anyone 18+ may bartend in New England
• Bartending is a great summer job
Call us toll free at 866-MIX-5600 for more information or to register.
www.otrbartending.com

Absolute Nutrition Center
Weight Loss and Body Building Specialists
Slim down before spring break!
Get Ephedra while you can!
63 University Drive
Booth Club Dance
687-5083

I Went to College Once • By Jason Adam Katzenstein

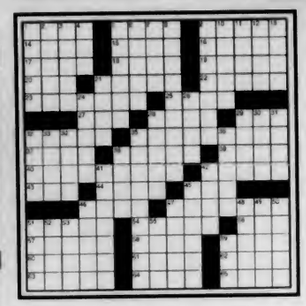
Damaged Goods • By Jason Adam Katzenstein

Ten 40 Bitton • By Jason Adam Katzenstein



Get Fuzzy • By Darby Conley

Mr. Gnu • By Thomas Danthes



Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across
1 "Kon-Tiki" craft
5 Matured
8 Act crankily
14 Mike Childers of old comics
15 Perform again
16 Gossipy tidbit
17 Tart
18 In charge of
19 Bid at a sale buy
20 Chancy of Timbuctoo
21 Smashed bad
22 Robins' dormitories
23 Tycoon
25 Commanded
27 Military addr.
29 Job application
29 Hot brew
32 Extinct birds
33 Pass awkwardly
37 Wear-related chemical
38 Covered with goo
39 Pinocchio
40 Nonsoldiers
42 Smart-mouthed
43 Lock turner
44 Montreal's airport
45 Perfect score
46 "Son of Mazeltov" spell
47 Delicate
51 Actress — Hunt
54 Potato snacks
56 Taxes
57 Is a snit
58 Minimal amount
59 — Kong
60 Sweetener
61 Radius
62 Not even twice
63 Gets wind of
64 Liars
65 Tinted

Down
1 Kingdom
2 Metalmaking giant
3 Throw angrily
4 Youngster
5 Cave
6 Hendrix's shoe
7 Shangri-la
8 Manuals
9 Mom's mom
10 Oath coin
11 Safe callers
12 Shad hair
13 U.S. leader
21 Drama, as a movie
24 Wrestling's mom
26 Bohemian
28 Drill
29 Bindings
30 Vast ages
31 Pizzeria of "60 Minutes"
32 She's a flyer
33 "Garfield"
35 Compliment
36 Longbow's kin
38 Baby, maybe
41 Recipe-ament vehicles
42 Oceans
43 Takes out to dinner
46 Prevent
47 Be accepted
48 Tart cake
49 Spear
50 — or (incited)
51 Shrill
52 New York canal
53 Molten rock
54 Nero's city
58 Coal sleuths

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
M DESIGN

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Pizza Casserole
- Santa Fe Chicken
- Cuban Red Beans (vegan)

DINNER
- Fried Shrimp
- Szechuan Beef & Broccoli
- Szechuan Tofu & Broccoli (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 38
- Low: 22

TUESDAY
- High: 40
- Low: 26

WEDNESDAY
- High: 39
- Low: 27

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andrew Merritt

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Caitlin Ott

COPY EDITOR
Andy Vogt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Katie Dwan

PRODUCTION STAFF
Diana Mogilevsky/ Russell Silva

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't hand in crappy work. You're not fooling anyone.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Go explore campus. You may find a new random building you never knew about.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Where will you go from here? It better not be near that smelly kid.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
People notice when your clothes are dirty.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Help out your cousins, they are family.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Go hang out in the Wal-mart parking lot at night. Being shady is really cool.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
The Mohawk is a very tough hairdo to pull off. Be cautious with the scissors.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You're ugly and you're incompetent. Work on that.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Before you reach for the stars, check for pit stains. They are really unattractive.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Pick a nickname for a friend, everyone likes nicknames.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Who really knows what manual labor leads to?

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Don't you hate when McDonald's doesn't stir your McFlurry?

Quote for the Day

"My philosophy has always been a doer. If there was nothing for me to do, I think I'd be lost. I really do."

-Jack Leaman

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine 1 Bedroom. On bus line, gas water included. Immediate occupancy 978-835-4571

AUTO FOR SALE

1996 Jeep Grand Cherokee, Maroon, 8 Cyl., AT, Fully Loaded, CD/Cass 75K, Tinted, Fabulous condition $9600.00 or B/O 413-256-3478 Ask for Justin

96 Accord Runs great Excellent CD $4300 256-1505 or 896-0017

EMPLOYMENT

Live in babysitter needed for two girls this summer in Wellfleet, Cape Cod. Salary, room, board. Please call 508-349-6392

EMPLOYMENT

Gymnastics Instructor Pre-school, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening & weekend hours available. 3-20 hrs/wk, flexible work environment, Gymnastics center w/ loose foam & resi pit system. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, MA 01301 (413) 773-3646 x.423

ATTENTION LAX PLAYERS Play & Coach – Have fun – Make $$$ Top Boys Sports Camp in Maine looking for staff to instruct & coach LAX. Awesome Summer! Work with kids! Top salaries, FREE rm/bd/trvl allow. Apply online ASAP: www.camp-cobbossee

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.around-campus.com

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

FOR RENT

Hadley 5 bedroom Newer home close to UMass big yard 2 full bathrooms, sunny living room. Call 549-4270

LOST AND FOUND

Glasses found, Thompson 102, Wednesday 3/3 maryl@anthro.umass.edu

Bracelet found, Thompson 102, Monday March 1st maryl@anthro.umass.edu

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst, PhilosophyDialogue.net

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Resumes and Cover Letters Professional And Customized Offering to marketing your skills. Affordable prices, Timely Service. By Email, phone, or in person Call 413-467-7440

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, & Florida! Best Parties, Best Hotels, Best Prices! Space is limited! Book Now & Save! 1-800-234-7007 www.endlesssummertours.com

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

WANTED

Your 10 year old BMX bike $75, Will pay more for Mongoose or GT, Patrick, 508-934-9274

Want to wish your friend a Happy Birthday? Do it in the Collegian Marketplace! Call 545-3500 or visit the Campus Center Basement.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 8, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Remembering Jack

Coach to some, friend to all

Andrew Merritt

It was incredibly easy to like Jack Leaman.

He was everywhere: men's basketball, women's basketball, hockey, anywhere a UMass athlete was competing. If the Mullins Center was rocking, and men's hoop wasn't somewhere on the road, Jack was there, with a smile, a conversation, and his warm presence.

Everyone knew Jack. And in his own way, he knew everybody. Jack probably never knew my name. And that doesn't matter, because every time I came up to him, he put his two big hands around mine, in that huge, enveloping handshake of his. He'd pat you on the shoulder, ask you how you were doing, and then launch into a conversation about UMass sports. And, for practical reasons, you didn't even have to be there. Jack could carry on a conversation all by himself. But you wanted to be there, and he wanted you to be there, and you knew it every second.

Jack loved people. He loved talking to people, he loved being around people, he loved making people feel good. He was the loudest voice in the Mullins Center's green room, where the media types meet and eat before games, but it wasn't because he was brash. It was because he held court. He moved around like a politician, talking to everyone and anyone. He paced the floors at women's basketball game, stopping to say hi to all the people he knew.

For some, that would only take a few minutes. For Jack, well, it's amazing he saw the game at all.

The first time you met Jack, he seemed like one of those gentle giant types, the kind that really don't understand what's going on, but keep a smile on anyway. But that wasn't Jack. He had that big grin because he enjoyed every minute of life. He drank life up, in ways we all wish we could. Meanwhile, he was as sharp as a tack. Quick-witted, always good for a joke, and able to really understand what was going on no matter what the sport was, Jack might have seemed simple, but there was plenty going on up there.

My first experience with Jack Leaman was hearing him on the radio. And my first thought, I'm embarrassed to admit, was "wow, this guy's such a homer, why can't he just analyze the game?" And then I realized, thanks to more time and experience here, that Jack spoke on the radio like the Minutemen's coach, because in many ways, he still was. He still helped out the team, he still offered advice, and it wasn't limited to the men, either.

Jack was Marnie Dacko's right-hand man through thick and thin, and as one of the reporters assigned to cover the Minutewomen last year, it was easy to see

See MERRITT on page 6

UMass basketball commentator and former head coach Jack Leaman passed away on Saturday. Leaman had been involved with UMass since becoming a Minuteman assistant coach in 1961.

The legend's living legacy

Mike Marzelli

Returning from New Hampshire with friends on Saturday evening, I listened to Jack Leaman call his final game.

Speaking in his trademark gravely voice with that seasoned tone that always made you think he had marbles in his mouth, the ol' coach was in his element in the hours prior to his passing.

Leaman was cursing Richmond star Mike Skrocki's shooting ability, praising UMass coach Steve Lappas for protecting young Rashaun Freeman from picking up his fifth foul and lightheartedly commenting on how the Minutemen were lucky to have Spider guard Reggie Brown leave the game with an injury after playing well all afternoon. He maintained the on-air combination that has allowed him to become a top-notch color analyst in his 10-plus years on the job: that of unparalleled basketball insight and a burning love for everything UMass.

The Minutemen eventually fell to the Spiders 69-65, to conclude what has been an extremely disappointing season. Nonetheless, Leaman, always the optimist when it came to his beloved Minutemen, preached about what a great time he had watching this young team grow during the season and, that while fans were calling for Lappas' head, he wouldn't be surprised if it snuck up on the rest of the Atlantic 10 in the post-season tournament and won a few games.

It was, without a doubt, classic Leaman.

In 40-plus years of involvement with the University of Massachusetts, there has never been an individual more dedicated and passionate about the school's athletic department than Jack Leaman. The university's all-time winningest basketball coach, Leaman's devotion to UMass extends well past his days behind the bench and well into what he called his "retirement."

UMass athletics exists as it does today because of Jack Leaman. He lifted the men's basketball program from the doldrums of ineptitude to eight Yankee Conference titles in nine years while making Julius Erving "Dr. J" and helping both Al Skinner and Rick Pitino become award-winning players, and then coaches.

Since then, his rock-solid support of Minuteman athletics as a whole never waned. When he wasn't broadcasting games or on the road, you

See MARZELLI on page 6

Minutewomen ousted by Duquesne

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — After a season that had all the makings of a rebuilding year, the Massachusetts women's basketball team didn't convert any skeptics on Friday. UMass was eliminated from the first round of the Atlantic 10 tournament for the second straight season at the hands of Duquesne, 73-44.

UMass	44
Duquesne	73

The only positive for the Minutewomen, who finish the season 6-22 was the play of junior forward Edris Bailey. Bailey scored 18 points, grabbed seven rebounds, and recorded six steals.

Bailey has been the most consistent player for UMass this season and finished the year leading the team in steals (45), total rebounds (171), and points per game (11.4).

"We didn't get any scoring outside of Edris Bailey and we had 20 points at the half, we held them to 31," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "You would think with them sagging and playing in a zone we would be able to shoot from the outside. So I think that when you look at it, Edris stepped it up and no one helped her."

The Minutewomen shut down co-A-10 player of the year Candice Futrell in the first half. Futrell, who has averaged 21.8 points per game this year, was held scoreless in the half by UMass point guard Cleo Foster.

But Futrell came alive in the second half and sparked a seven-point scoring run for the Lady Dukes with her first three-pointer. Futrell finished the game with 11 points, but dished five assists and kept the Minutewomen off-balance for most of the second half.

The Minutewomen gave one of their finest defensive performances of the season. The Maroon and White caused an array of poor shooting from the Lady Dukes, but were unable to capitalize on offense.

UMass caused 15 turnovers in the game, but gave the ball up 22 times. The Lady Dukes took advantage of the Minutewomen's miscues with a transition offense which caused two 6-0 scoring runs in the second half.

"Their transition did hurt us — our turnovers cost us and their turnovers didn't cost them," Dacko said. "We didn't capitalize on their turnovers and they capitalized on all of ours."

For UMass, Friday's game was the last collegiate game for three seniors: Foster, Judit Zsedenyi, and Glamora Macweather. Dacko was pleased with the experience the seniors provided for the team this year, and hopes her squad can turn the corner next year.

"I don't think their effort disappoints me, I think that what I have to look for right now is change and for the people that are returning to get on board," Dacko said. "Twenty-two losses is unacceptable, but I knew this was going to be a challenging year. I think that UMass' program is going to go in a new direction."

Just warming up

Neil Lundberg tallied two goals in the Minutemen's 10-3 victory over Stony Brook on Saturday. UMass (2-1) takes on Harvard this Saturday at Garber Field for a 1 p.m. face-off.

Minutemen swept by Huskies in last series of the HE season

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Of the many trends that have developed during the Massachusetts hockey team's 2003-04 season, the most distressing one of late is the Minutemen's penchant for coming up just a little short.

UMass	0
N'eastern	4
N'eastern	3
UMass	2

After being skated out of the building to the tune of a 4-0 shutout Friday night by a Northeastern squad that was fighting for its playoff life all weekend, the Minutemen managed to make things much more interesting Saturday. However, despite the work of junior Greg Mauldin (two power play goals) and a defense that allowed 15 shots on Gabe Winer's net, UMass was unable to rally past the Huskies (11-16-7, 5-13-6 Hockey East), surrendering a 3-2 victory at the Mullins Center. It was the third/second one-goal loss of the season for the Minutemen — including a 1-0 loss to UMass Lowell on Jan. 4 that was later forfeited by the River Hawks.

UMass falls to 16-11-6, and 12-9-3 in Hockey East.

It ended up a bittersweet night for everyone. The Huskies, who swept the Minutemen in the final weekend of the regular season, were knocked out of the Hockey East playoffs by virtue of Boston University's 4-3 overtime win at New Hampshire. The Terriers will play first-place Boston College as the eight seed next weekend.

Meanwhile, the Minutemen haven't won since Feb. 6, going 0-6-1 in seven games during that stretch. However, thanks to BU's defeat of UNH, UMass retains the third-place spot over New Hampshire, and will take on UMass Lowell in the Hockey East quarterfinals, starting Thursday at the Mullins Center.

Northeastern goaltender Keni Gibson was the first star Saturday, in a game that saw the Huskies do everything they could to sneak past BU for the eighth and final spot. A handful of his 37 stops were the kind of quick-witted, physical saves he made in NU's 4-0 shutout of the Minutemen the night before in Boston.

"Six words," said NU coach Bruce Crowder, referring to the reason his squad was victorious, "Keni Gibson, Keni Gibson, and Keni Gibson."

For the Minutemen, who had struggled through a 0-5-1 stretch over the past six games, a third-period comeback that fell short was a start, if not good enough to topple the visitors.

"The proper word is encouraging," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "It was interesting to try some things in the end. I think these games will serve us well going into the weekend. There were a lot of positives tonight, but we still weren't good enough."

The Minutemen will host Massachusettts-Lowell starting Thursday in the Hockey East quarterfinals.

Northeastern jumped out to a 2-0 lead after the second, despite being outshot 24-8 in the first two periods. Ray Ortiz ended up with the puck after it got loose in the UMass zone, and put it home from close range to give the visitors the two-goal advantage.

Steve Birnstill added to the total, scoring the eventual game winner on one of UMass' worst defensive breakdowns of the night early in the third. Birnstill ended up on the right-wing side of Winer's net with open space in front. He drew Winer out, and

See HOCKEY on page 6

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, MARCH 9, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 98

'That Takes Ovaries' comes to the Student Union
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Men's lacrosse surges past Stony Brook
SPORTS, PAGE 10

Alcohol policies reexamined by task force

UMass faces possible controversial changes

By Melissa Blanksteen and Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

The days of "ZooMass" may be over.

Nicknamed for its notoriety as a hard partying school, the University of Massachusetts is facing major changes to its alcohol policies both on campus and off.

The University of Massachusetts Alcohol Task Force, put into place in September of 2001 by then-Interim Chancellor Marcellette Williams and the University Health Council, has made drastic and controversial suggestions to curb alcohol usage by students. Recommendations on the table include notifying parents when students are charged with alcohol violations and establishing separate freshman housing.

Student use of alcohol is a central issue of concern for the UMass community this spring, especially community members involved in the Student Government Association and Faculty Senate — the two major legislative bodies in discussion with Chancellor John V. Lombardi and Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life.

The task force presented a report to Lombardi last fall. Meeting every other week, the 22-member group included three student representatives, with Brian Long, SGA secretary for University policy, as the sole SGA representative. The report included a list of changes that the Task Force would like to implement at the University, and a list of statistics regarding student alcohol use.

A call for a change in culture

An alcohol survey conducted by "Project Pulse," a polling system set up by the Student Assessment, Research, and Evaluation Office, was included in the task force's report and presented to the Faculty Senate. This report, released this past fall, shows several statistics important to understanding student alcohol use on campus.

One question students taking the survey were asked was, "In your view, to what extent is alcohol use a problem here at UMass?"

A plurality of students, 46 percent, answered "to some extent," 22.4 percent said "to a little extent," and 19.6 percent said "to a great extent."

The task force released an eleven page final report last fall for the consideration of the administration and faculty. SGA received an abbreviated report through Task Force representative Long, who made complete copies available in the SGA office.

The report had both short-term and long-term recommendations focused on reducing the amount of alcohol on campus.

"Its all about education, and trying to change the atmosphere of this campus," Long said of the long-term recommendations. "They look to try and change the culture. If you change the culture to a non-alcohol culture, it's going to be easier to deal with the recommendations."

The task force laid out seven ideas for changing the campus long-term. One plan asks for administration to organize groups of parents, religious leaders, students, and staff to help design a "comprehensive plan to alter the alcohol culture."

Others include having alcohol prevention added to academic courses, preparing a yearly report on the University's progress, and adding a new orientation program for new students to inform them of the University's policies.

"That's huge," Long said of the new orientation program. "It's not about drinking. This campus has a lot to offer that's [not alcohol-related.]"

It is the 11 short-term recommendations that have stirred up the most debate, with one recommendation already close to implementation next fall. The report recommends for parents to be notified if their son or daughter is "subject to disciplinary action due to a violation of the University Massachusetts Amherst Alcoholic Beverage Policy."

Letters would only be sent home to parents for certain offenses, according to the report. A first letter would be sent home when a student commits a second offense for having an open container in a public space or underage possession of alcohol. A letter would also be sent home when a student commits a first offense for having a large volume of alcohol, or providing to underage drinkers.

"I don't think there should be any parental notification at all," Long said. "Some students have issues with alcohol and you don't see it."

Long said the recommendation for parental notification is not a good policy, noting that under current rules, parents are not even notified when a students gets kicked out of housing or fails school.

Gargano sees it differently.

"[Students] should act like adults if they want to be independent," Gargano said. "More than the majority [of parents] want to be notified when their sons and daughters get in trouble."

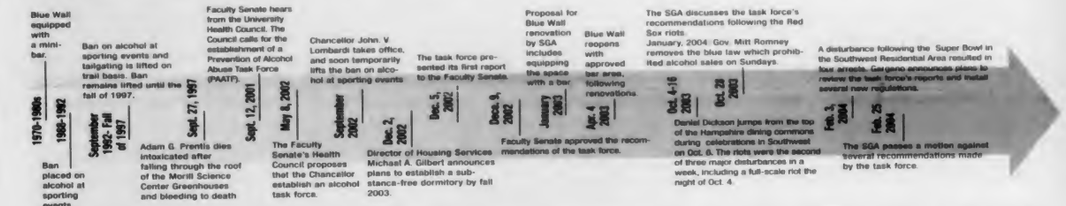
Policy has precedent

The letter sending policy is based on one already in place at the University of Delaware, one of the first schools in the country to send letters home to parents. At UD when a student is tried and convicted of violating any university policy, not just those concerning alcohol, University officials send a nonspecific letter home with a number for parents to call for more information.

UMass, like all universities, cannot send information home to parents based on a federal law passed in 1976 called Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA). This act protects academic records, including financial aid records, of students unless they release the information through written permission. Morgan Long, president of Delaware undergraduate student congress, told The Massachusetts Daily Collegian in an email that an amendment was made to FERPA giving institutions the right to inform parents when a student is found guilty of violating university policy. UD has had this policy in place since 1997, and has received little resistance, Morgan Long said.

"It is important to recognize, however, that not every student that goes through the judicial process has a letter sent home to their parents," Morgan Long said. "Instead, this sanction is only imposed when that student has been found guilty and the appeal process has been exhausted."

"I personally am not sure what the letter home will say," Brian Long said. "I do not believe that one has been drafted as of yet. I would imagine that it will say something along the lines of 'your son/daughter violated our alcohol beverage policy' without saying which charge it was or the exact incident."



A second recommendation that the University is closely looking into asks for a "professional security staff be placed in all residence halls."

Long says UMass Police Chief Barbara O'Connor told him to staff the dorms professionally from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m. would cost $3.2 million a year.

"It's not practical. That's what it comes to," Long said.

Although Gargano said if

See TASK FORCE on page 3

GEO rallies against increased costs

About 200 graduate students marched from the Whitmore Administration Building to the Campus Center yesterday morning. The rally aimed to raise awareness on several financial issues facing graduate student employees.

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

About 200 graduate student employees told the University of Massachusetts administration yesterday they intend to "fight back" in a half-hour long march across campus to raise complaints about several additional financial responsibilities they may feel as early as next semester.

The march took place pr..or to the beginning of bargaining talks between the Graduate Employees Organization, a unit of United Auto Workers (UAW) Local 2322 and the University. The talks are expected to last until June.

The march began at 11 a.m. at Whitmore Administration Building, where people gathered and began chanting before making their way as a group to the Campus Center by way of the Campus Pond.

During the march, participants chanted: "They say take back, we say fight back"; and "Who's got the power? Student power."

Before going into the Campus Center to participate in the talks, James Shaw of UAW 2322 addressed the crowd.

Shaw summarized the main issues he intends to bring to the talks and then led the two chants again before going inside.

"It's going to take more than the nine or 10 people in there at the bargaining table," he said. To encourage the chanting, he added: "They can hear you."

Graduate employees came to the talks looking for increased salaries, retroactive payment of previously unfunded employment contracts, and a waiver of fees for graduate employees. They are also concerned with healthcare coverage, a guarantee of a minimum of 20 work hours per week, the Office of ALANA Affairs, sexual harassment and other employee benefits.

Some of the most important concerns to members of the GEO are healthcare and childcare. UAW information handed out at the rally states that the University is interested in increasing the cost of healthcare and dental care for graduate student employees by 20 percent. Individuals would have to pay $140 more per semester to enroll in the healthcare plan and families would have to pay an additional $70 per semester, the information said.

The University is also interested in the ability to privatize the childcare they currently provide to graduate student families (the UAW information said). The University wants to replace the current voucher system with one for which parents would pay $3.50 per hour for pre-school-aged children and $4.25 per hour for toddlers, it said.

Tabitha A. Morgan, a doctoral student concentrating in language, literature and culture, said this would result in all of graduate student earnings made by parents who require childcare to be spent on the program, assuming they work the 20-hour week the UAW is fighting for.

Anthony J. Ratcliff, vice president of GEO, expressed his concern for the image he feels the administration may have for graduate student employees. The University sees their concerns as a special interest, he said.

"We feel that we are the only interest of the University," the doctoral student of Afro-American studies said after the march ended. "If the University isn't for students, who is it for?"

Among the items set for discussion in the talks is the New International Student Fee that will cost students

See RALLY on page 3

FleetBoston and Bank of America to merge

By Marcy Gordon
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bank of America and FleetBoston Financial Corporation won approval from the Federal Reserve yesterday for a merger creating the third-largest U.S. bank, a behemoth holding nearly $1 trillion in assets and stretching from California through the South and up to New England.

The Fed's board of governors voted 6-0 to clear the merger, determining that Bank of America's acquisition of FleetBoston would not threaten competition or unduly concentrate banking resources. The new institution, with about 5,700 branches, would have assets trailing only Citigroup and another planned bank megamerger between Chicago-based Bank One and Wall Street powerhouse J.P. Morgan Chase.

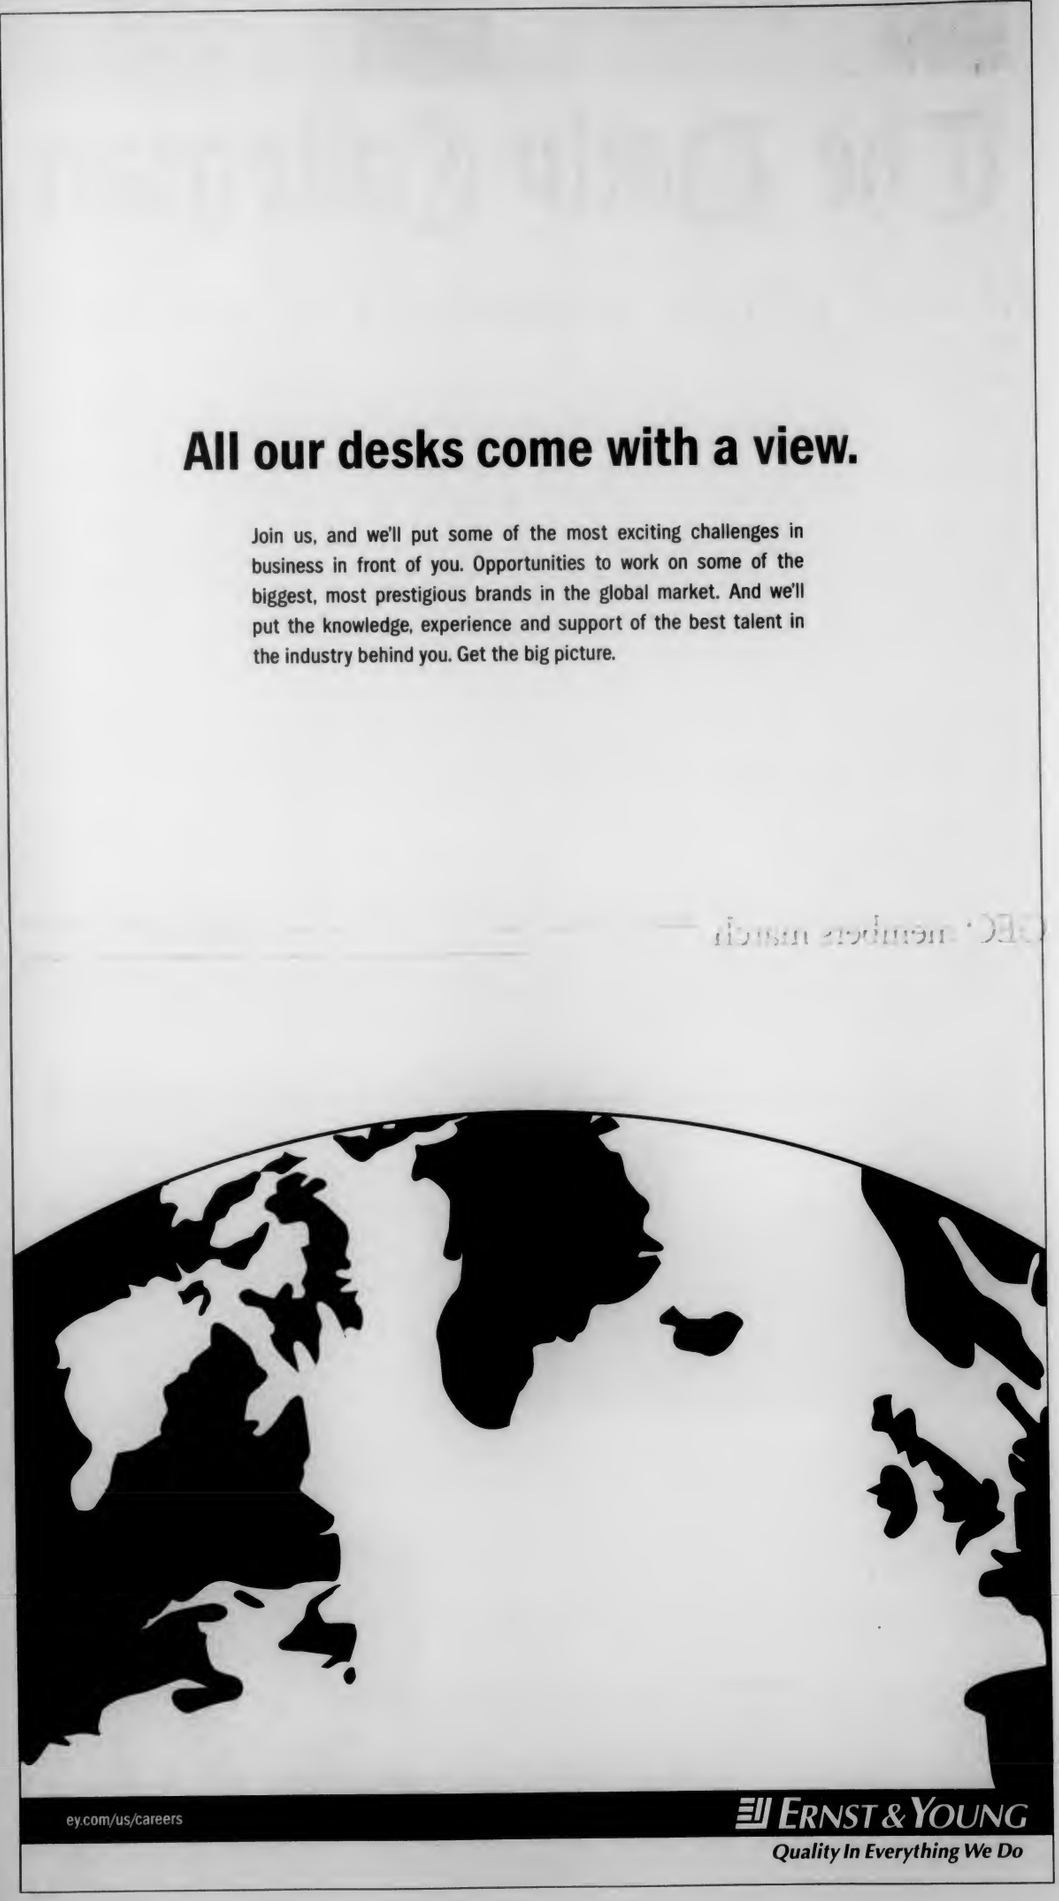
The proposed purchase of FleetBoston — a deal estimated at $47 billion when announced last October — has been met with much anxiety in Boston, which would lose its last major hometown bank, and to a lesser extent in other communities across the country worried about diminished competition and local control.

The central bank's approval removed the last major regulators hurdle for the combination, which already had been blessed by the Justice Department and the Federal Trade Commission. The merger also must be approved by shareholders of both banks, allowing it to be completed early next month. Both banks have scheduled special shareholders meetings for March 17 for the votes.

At public hearings held by the Fed in January in Boston and San Francisco, witnesses expressed concerns about predatory lending, possible closing of rural bank branches and the trend toward big banks getting bigger.

Last month a federal judge in Honolulu — saying he lacked jurisdiction — dismissed a lawsuit against the central bank brought by Native Hawaiians seek-

See FLEET on page 3



Firewall

Patrick D. McDaniel, senior staff member of the Secure Systems Group at AT&T Labs-Research, gave a lecture yesterday in the Computer Science Building.

All our desks come with a view.

Join us, and we'll put some of the most exciting challenges in business in front of you. Opportunities to work on some of the biggest, most prestigious brands in the global market. And we'll put the knowledge, experience and support of the best talent in the industry behind you. Get the big picture.

ey.com/us/careers

ERNST & YOUNG

Quality In Everything We Do

Project Pulse: Alcohol Survey (so3-B) March 4, 2003

By SAREO – UMass Amherst

Which of the following terms best describes your drinking at the present time? (If on average drank less than once a month or more often)

You are a non-drinker: 8.8%
A light drinker: 47.1%
A moderate drinker: 36.6%
A heavy drinker: 7.3%
A problem drinker: .3%

Next, I'd like you to think back over this past week. On how many days did you consume five or more drinks? (asked of drinkers only)

- 48.3%
- 19.2%
- 17.5%
- 8.3%
- 4.6%
- 1.7%

Most students I know are responsible drinkers.

Agree Strongly: 15.3%
Agree somewhat: 50.8%
Disagree somewhat: 28.6%
Disagree strongly: 5.3%

Alcohol helps students make connections with their peers.

Agree Strongly: 16.8%
Agree somewhat: 46.5%
Disagree somewhat: 22.6%
Disagree strongly: 13.8%

Too many students on this campus abuse alcohol.

Agree Strongly: 29.4%
Agree somewhat: 44.7%
Disagree somewhat: 18.8%
Disagree strongly: 5.5%

Recommendations discussed by SGA and administration

TASK FORCE from page 1

O'Connor's estimate is accurate, the University would not be able to afford professional security, he remains worried about the number of crimes in residence halls.

"The number of crimes in the residence halls is far too high for my comfort level," he said.

This relates to yet another recommendation in the report, a request for community billing. With community billing, all residents on a floor would be held accountable for any kind of vandalism. Brian Long said that would not be fair because it would force students to pay for crimes that they did not necessarily commit. Even if an outside visitor were to cause vandalism, the residents would still have to pay.

"Community billing is a method to get people to rat on other people," Brian Long said. "Why should I pay for something I didn't do?"

The task force also recommended that freshmen and students over the age of 21 live separately from the rest of the campus.

Patrick Higgins, SGA chair of Ways and Means, and Adrienne Girard, chair of Public Policy and Relations, both note that Cornell University is one example of a campus that separates freshman from the rest of campus.

As a consequence of Cornell's freshman-only living area, Higgins and Girard noted in their motion on the Alcohol Task Force presented two weeks ago to the SGA Senate that Cornell has "noticed an increase in vandalism and excessive drinking."

Long has his own spin on breaking up dorm life as it exists at UMass.

"This University is already isolated in too many spots," Long said. "I have my own circle of friends. If I was in a freshman dorm, I would be friends with the same people all four years."

The "dry dorm" debate

This year the University began to experiment with substance-free dormitories, with Brooks Hall in the Central living area designated as a "dry dorm" starting at the beginning of last semester. The creation of a "dry dorm" comes in addition to other dormitories that already had wellness and substance-free floors.

Residents of Brooks Hall are split on the issue. While some students willingly chose to live in the alcohol-free dorm, several students said they were placed in the dorm against their will.

"Some people who live here tried to move out, and those kids got placed right back in here," said Jen Leimert, a freshman Brooks resident.

A few other students said residents are frequently receiving write-ups from Residential Assistants. The students said it is unfair because most of the students being written up for alcohol violations did not want to live in Brooks in the first place.

"I don't know what they were expecting, but most people on the first floor have been written up," said Leimert.

"My friends and I all requested [to live in] in Central, but I'd rather live in Orchard Hill than live here. ... We're not even hardcore alcoholics. If you put your stereo volume above 5, you'll hear someone knocking at your door asking you to turn it down," said Megan Coss, another freshman Brooks resident.

Some students did choose to live in Brooks for the alcohol-free environment, however.

"It's a personal decision for me not to drink. I kind of wanted [to live in] Central, and I figured this was an easy way to get in," said freshman Will Holland.

Other recommendations

Another sticking point for Brian Long and many other students relates to fraternity and sorority housing. The Task Force recommends that the "housing units be required to have a faculty advisor who helps members ensure legal and responsible use of alcohol."

Long had one word for this idea, "stupid."

"The faculty should look at grades," he said. "Faculty already have too much on their plate."

Keri Davis, President of Alpha Chi Omega Sorority, said the idea would be beneficial to students who are willing to attend meetings, but she thinks addressing the issue to the entire student body would be more advantageous.

"I think it's a good idea, but we already take a lot of measures [to educate sorority members]," she said. " If they want to work with me, I'd be more than happy to work with them, but I'm not sure that [singling out] fraternities and sororities is the best way to go, because there are other groups too."

Davis pointed out that there are houses that belong to sports teams and off-campus apartments that are consistently the source of student alcohol use.

As for the rest of the Task Force's recommendations, Long approved of five of the short-term plans.

The first of the five is a recommendation that the "number and quality of alcohol free extra-curricular activities for all students at [UMass] be increased."

The Project Pulse Alcohol survey results reported the limited number of alcohol-free extra-curricular activities as a concern. They found that 29 percent of students surveyed strongly agree alcohol-free activities should be increased, and 37 percent somewhat agree "the social life here at UMass is too focused on alcohol."

The task force in its report asked for both an external and internal yearly evaluation of any change in the alcohol culture at the University.

Long also approves of a recommendation from the task force that asks for 25 percent of revenues from the sale of alcohol on campus be used to help fund alcohol free programming. The revenue would come from the Blue Wall Bar and the Faculty Club, among other places.

The last short-term recommendation would "develop and field test an online one credit course for entering students that centers on the current local, state, and federal alcohol policies and laws, and the consequences of binge drinking, alcohol misuse, and illegal underage drinking."

Long agrees somewhat with the final recommendation.

"Not a bad idea, but why do it on top of a new freshman course?" he said. "Freshmen have enough on their plate already. It should be done during the New Student Program."

The SGA is currently planning a new UMass 101 class for freshman. The online course recommended by the Alcohol Task Force would be in addition to the SGA course.

How many of the recommendations in addition to parental notification that are put into effect is up to the administration.

"We're going slow with this," Gargano said. "It was given to us as a guide."

– S.J. Port contributed to this story

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Fountas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
Feature Editor S. J. Port
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Mertzi
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagatti
Finance Manager Greg Stanton
Human Resource Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kiggins
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lita Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marselli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been incorporated since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

For the Record

Correction: An event listed in yesterday's Arts & Living Section incorrectly reported the day for "Kosher Sex" author Shmuley Boteach's appearance in the Student Union Ballroom. Boteach will be appearing at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, March 10.

GEO members march

RALLY from page 1

from other countries an additional $65 per semester, part of which will fund the operational costs of the Student and Exchange Visitor Information System at UMass.

Morgan, who works for the UAW Local 2322, described the fee as "racist" and "anti-education."

"I think that it's symbolic more than anything," she said. "I believe that one of the things about UMass ... is the diversity here," she said. She feels the fee limits diversity on campus.

To Ratcliff, the march is an important part of the bargaining process. It shows the University that graduate student employees will protest the recent proposals.

"It shows the University ... that these students aren't in support of this," Ratcliff said. "[If the administration gets] the sense that this is somehow what the people are going to accept, then they'll do it."

"We as workers on this campus deserve everything that we have," he said.

Banks merge; Form third largest U.S. bank ing to halt the merger. The Fed noted that Bank of America had recently affirmed its intention to complete its goal for mortgage lending to Native Hawaiians.

FLEET from page 1

The banks maintain that the merger will benefit consumers by giving them an expanded choice of ATMs, branches and banking products.

In its merger review, the Federal Reserve also determined that the new bank — to be called Bank of America Corp. — would fulfill obligations under the Community Reinvestment Act, which requires banks to make loans in low-income and minority areas as a condition for opening new branches.

Clip & Curl 665-2629

Hair Skin & Nails
Massage Therapy
Route 116, Sunderland
(Located on bus route)

Accepted: Visa MC

Open Tuesday - Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4

SPRING FLING!

One hour massages or Aveda facials
regularly $50
NOW $45

Sunkiss your hair before you even leave!
Highlighting starting at $40
$5 off with this ad!

Tips and Toes Package
Spa Manicure & Pedicure
Regularly $52
NOW $45

We use Aveda and Paul Mitchell products

Expires 3/31/04

TO TOP IT OFF

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

A Lecture and Discussion with

Shmuley Boteach

An opportunity to gain new perspectives on love, sex, intimacy and relationships with world wide renowned author, lecturer and activist, Rabbi Shmuley Boteach. Boteach served as Rabbi for eleven years at Oxford University where he spearheaded the founding of the second largest student organization in the University's history. He is the author of fourteen books including "Kosher Sex: A Recipe for Passion and Intimacy," and "Dating Secrets of the Ten Commandments." He is also a nationally syndicated radio host on the Talk-America network and has appeared on The Today Show, Larry King Live, Politically Incorrect, CBS, and NBC.

Wednesday, March 10
7:30pm
Student Union Ballroom
UMass/Amherst
Free and open to all.

kosher SEX

This program made possible through the generous support of Debra Abrahams Weiner (class of '81), the UMass Jewish Student Union, UMass Hillel House, the Western Mass Jewish Ledger, and a grant from the UMass Amherst Alumni Association.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 9, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DNA database a good move for FBI

Having a criminal on the loose can put a community in fear. It can prevent the number of times people want to leave their homes, have people walk around in fear and make parents force their children to play inside.

Thanks to the FBI's DNA database, which is filled with genetic samples from prison inmates nationwide, such cases are being limited. The DNA database has helped local authorities identify suspects in more than 11,000 cases since first being used.

The database, known as the Combined DNA Indexing System or CODIS, has proven to be extremely successful in solving many cases and even those that have baffled experts.

Hitting close to home, authorities in Massachusetts were able to charge a convicted murderer last summer in the 1998 death of an elderly Foxboro woman who was stabbed 29 times.

The database has also proven to be effective in nabbing the right suspects. It has quickly eliminated the capture of wrong suspects, preventing authorities from chasing after innocent people in false leads. Police and lawyers say it has freed prisoners wrongly convicted of crimes. In fact, more than 100 prisoners have been freed because of the database.

More than 8,000 samples of genetic evidence from unsolved cases have been matched to past or current convicts in the database, helping to solve crimes, the FBI says.

In the 1990s, scientists of the FBI were criticized for falsely identifying suspects. But its current director, Dwight Adams, has addressed those concerns and has expanded the DNA database minimizing the number of errors.

The FBI's efforts should be applauded in nabbing criminals and making America safer. Although the FBI has seen much success with the database so far, it should not become complacent. The DNA science can become even more accurate by increasing the current 13 markers used to make matches.

The DNA database has increased communication and cooperation between law enforcement agencies. It has increased reliability in matching the right suspects with criminal activity over traditional and less reliable forms of proof such as fingerprinting.

The criminal justice system is much improved by the DNA database. The continued use and improvement of the DNA database should be a priority for the FBI and their scientists. Enhancements in the system can lead to more efficient targeting of suspects, leading to quicker capture of suspects.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Truth about Chomsky

Jeffrey Napolitano

After hearing Noam Chomsky's talk almost two weeks ago, my initial reaction to reading commentary a day later, describing Chomsky as a "neo-Nazi" and comparing him to Saddam Hussein, was amusement.

To those familiar with Chomsky's writings, speeches, and activism, the idea of calling Chomsky a neo-Nazi is about on par with calling Drew Barrymore a genocidal warlord. What has since been eating away at me is the possibility of those who are not aware of his views actually believing the ridiculous accusation. Finally, this concern was realized when overhearing someone say, "Chomsky? Isn't he the anti-Semite?"

While Chomsky, in a recent email correspondence with The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, refused to spend the time "to respond publicly to transparent absurdities," I am less busy than he. Beginning with the charge that he's a capitalist millionaire who needs thousands of dollars to bother to show up for a talk, it should be pointed out that Chomsky insisted that the honorarium designated for him by the Political Economy Research Institute be donated to charity, which it was.

The charge of neo-Nazism was supposedly backed up by a book entitled "Chomsky and the Neo-Nazis." No such book exists. An article of the same name exists, written by a right-wing professor in an Australia magazine. The first part of the quote taken from the article appears to be accurate, but uncontroversial.

Chomsky was quoted as saying "I see no anti-Semitic implications in denial of the existence of gas chambers, or even denial of the Holocaust," which, taken without context, might seem to be an inflammatory statement.

However, when I asked him to elaborate on this statement, Chomsky said, "It is not by definition a racist act to be ignorant. Nor does anyone think so, as in these cases. Have you seen a condemnation of the American Jewish Congress for Holocaust denial and anti-Gypsy racism, even though they are the only respectable source for Holocaust denial in the U.S., maybe the world? Of course not, because the truisms are understood to be truisms."

To put forth another example, would someone who claimed the U.S.-inflicted casualties in the Vietnam War only totaled 100,000 be considered racist, when in fact the number was about 3 million or more? Would someone who denied that a single Iraqi has died by U.S. violence be considered a Nazi? No, such a person would be considered wildly ignorant of the facts or completely irrational.

If someone were to claim that the deaths of those in the Holocaust, or the Vietnamese killed 35 years ago, were unimportant, that would clearly be racist. But any informed critic of Chomsky's work must have come across his oft-repeated stance about those who deny the Holocaust: "We lose our humanity even by entering into debate with those who deny Nazi crimes."

Such a position is quite clearly not only unsympathetic to Nazism, but a passionate denunciation of anyone who would defend such doctrines. Why this stance, or any similar position of Chomsky's, was not quoted in an incrimination of neo-Nazism is rather dubious.

Chomsky was also charged with helping Robert Faurisson, a French academic, write a book which questioned the authenticity of the Holocaust. This is misinformation that leaves out the totality of Chomsky's role: Faurisson was threatened with being jailed for denying the Holocaust, due to the lack of free speech laws in France.

Chomsky, along with numerous other academics, signed a petition which pointed out that Faurisson did not deserve to be physically threatened or jailed for simply expressing his views, however odious they might be. Chomsky was asked to write some basic comments on the principles of free speech, which appear on his official website www.chomsky.info.

"I have nothing to say here about the work of Robert Faurisson or his critics, of which I know very little, or about the topics they address, concerning which I have no special knowledge," he said.

The point, Chomsky wrote, was that "the defense of the right of free expression is not restricted to ideas one approves of, and that it is precisely in the case of ideas found most offensive that these rights must be most vigorously defended."

This statement, entitled "Some Elementary Comments on the Rights of Freedom of Expression," was used by Faurisson's publisher as a preface to his book.

For over 20 years now, frantic extremists with no concept of the very basic right to free speech have been trying to use Chomsky's defense of such speech as an excuse to call him an anti-Semite.

Yet another easily dismissed charge against Chomsky was that he denied any Cambodians died at the hands of the Khmer Rouge, and that the New York Times distorted the atrocities in that country. As for the first part of the claim, in one of the speeches he gave at this very campus two weeks ago, Chomsky directly referred to the atrocities of the Khmer Rouge — which was a rather contrary thing to do for a denier of those same atrocities.

The other controversy about his stance on 1970s Cambodia was that he insisted that the U.S. share the blame for the number who died, given its massive bombing of the country leading up to the overthrow of the government by the Khmer Rouge. As for distortions of facts about Cambodia at that time, Chomsky clearly outlines cases of media fabrication in his acclaimed book, "Manufacturing Consent."

In it, he demonstrates, with sources, how journals such as Reader's Digest, the New York Review of Books, and others did indeed engage in distortions of facts about the situation. The New York Times has referred to Chomsky as "arguably the most important intellectual alive." This past month they asked him to write and then published a critical essay by him on Israel's so-called "security fence." Either those at the newspaper have short memories, or Chomsky might have actually been onto something.

However unimpressed you may be with Chomsky, a Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor of linguistics best known for his opposition to the Vietnam War, an analogy comparing him to Saddam Hussein is beyond ludicrous. An analogy between Chomsky and Bertrand Russell would be more in order. On behalf of those who are impressed by Chomsky, who consider him to be the conscience of our country, I thank PERI for bringing such a distinguished figure to our campus.

Jeffrey Napolitano is a Collegian columnist.

An RA's perspective

Matthew Stubblefield

I have been a student at the University of Massachusetts for four years and a resident assistant for a year and a half. I will be graduating in May, but before I leave I request that everyone help build a better UMass rather than tear it apart. All thoughts expressed in this article are my own and do not necessarily reflect on Residence Life.

In my time here at UMass I have seen people complain about different groups of authority on campus without offering any solutions. People most frequently attack UMass police and Res. Life. This only exacerbates the problems.

The rift between UMPD and UMass residents is one of the worst results of this mud slinging. I don't blame anyone for this. The chasm is a result of many factors. I will not say that UMPD is perfect. Just like any organization, they have their flaws. Nonetheless, we should be glad that we have them because when push comes to shove I have seen them act with great integrity time and again.

Despite UMPD's best efforts to keep UMass a safe living place for all of us, they are almost always portrayed as an evil entity out to get the students. UMPD does not make the rules; we as a society make them. UMPD officers dedicate their lives to helping enforce these rules. We should thank them for this, not ostracize them. This ostracizing looks even worse when you realize that in addition to enforcing the law, they run several educational and community outreach programs, most notably Rape Aggression Defense training.

UMPD's disconnection from the student body is partially a result of how we have treated them. This disconnection hurts both them and us.

UMPD is working to remedy this. They have community officers creating personal relationships between UMPD and RAs. Their connection with the student body is, however, harder to bridge than with the RAs. In order to help bridge this gap, they now have students in uniform helping to patrol campus. UMPD is learning and growing. We should praise their efforts, not belittle them. If you have a problem with them, go tell them. They will listen, and if they can, they will help you and they will implement your suggestions.

When people are not bashing UMPD, they are attacking Res. Life. This animosity makes no sense to me because I think Res. Life is the one organization on campus whose sole purpose has always been to help the students.

As UMass has repeatedly been hit by budget cuts many departments have started to concentrate more on campus politics, rather than just students. These departments see this change of focus as the only way they can survive. Res. Life, on the other hand, has always worked for the students.

Res. Life and UMPD have one major thing in common; they are both thankless jobs.

This is partly because Res. Life has the highest ratio of student employees to full time employees of any department on campus. As RAs, students are what make Res. Life work.

For those of you who have never been or known an RA, you might be surprised at the two hardest parts of the job. RAs have to get past the persona of being an evil rule enforcer. You cannot do anything with your residents until they no longer view you this way. I know a lot of people who have quit as a result of never being able to overcome this stigma.

The ironic part is this stigma impairs the best part of the job: helping residents. The primary role of RAs is not policy enforcement. If it were, RAs would have a lot more power. RAs mainly assist residents. They let you in when you lock yourself out, have socials and educationals, listen to your problems, and even go and ask others to respect you and your rights when you don't feel comfortable doing it yourself. RAs may not be able to do everything, but they know where to direct you if they can't.

The second hardest thing is documenting residents' policy violations.

I do not know any RA who enjoys this. Who actually enjoys getting other people in trouble? Do you? If that is not a good enough reason to not want to document a situation, it also means hours of work for Res. Life. In addition, you have probably just created an enemy. The more mature residents get over it and understand, but there are always those who never will.

Res. Life and UMPD have one major thing in common; they are both thankless jobs. They need people who want to work for the betterment of UMass, not for personal gain. Neither job grants much free time or money.

Yes, both organizations have problems, but both are working to solve them with the help of students.

The next time you feel the need to lash out, please think about what you are doing. Are you helping to fix the problem, or are you just making a worse UMass for all of us? Please also consider why you are mad. Did they do something wrong, or did you? If you were wrong, have the self-respect and integrity to take responsibility for your own actions. Making mistakes is part of life and no one will blame you for that. However, they will not respect you if cannot admit to your own mistakes.

Finally, I ask you to help out. UMass is only as good as we make it.

Become an RA, join an RSO, vote, or do something. Every little bit helps. This school could be so much more. However, we can only realize this dream by working together to build a better UMass.

Matthew Stubblefield is a UMass student.

The gospel of Gibson

Yousef Munayyer

The Passion of Christ has just dominated the box office for the second weekend in a row and is on track to possibly becoming the highest grossing film of all time. Surprisingly, it is one of the oldest stories we know.

The film has been surrounded with controversy for months. Mel Gibson, the director of the film, has been working on it for 12 years, with his masterpiece attacked for the way it portrayed certain characters.

Before I get into that though, it's important to note this: the story that is being retold in "The Passion" is based on both scripture and history. If you attempt to criticize this film without reading the scripture or the history, you will simply look and sound like a fool. You don't have to be a Christian to watch The Passion. You should, however, read the scripture to further understand all that is occurring.

When I watched the film I tried to put myself in the position of a person who has little or no familiarity with the New Testament, and I realized that many things could be unclear. Reading the New Testament doesn't make you Christian; however, it can make you more educated, the same way reading scripture from other religions can educate you. It is imperative that we become familiar with the scriptures of other religions so that we understand them. The greatest enemy of tolerance is ignorance, and in a world divided by religion, ignorance is abundant.

The greatest enemy of tolerance is ignorance, and in a world divided by religion, ignorance is abundant.

I became very annoyed watching people criticize the film on television even before I saw it. What bothered me was their willingness to criticize a film based on scripture even though they admit they have never read it before. I watched at least three different critics on different programs criticize the film for its lack of accuracy and then admit that they themselves have no knowledge of the scripture. I will be the first to admit that I have never read the "Lord of the Rings" books and therefore I will not criticize the movies in regards to how they relate to the Tolkien novels.

Also, I watched a few Rabbis critcize the way the Sanhedrin was portrayed. On an MSNBC program hosted by Pat Buchanan, I heard a lady call "The Passion" the most anti-Semitic film since War World II Nazi propaganda. One critic said Gibson intentionally portrayed the Jewish leaders in the film as sinister. When I saw the film I noticed that the Jewish leaders were depicted as dark featured, sinister, bearded, and their heads were covered in several layers of cloth. I found that to be strikingly similar to the way Arabs are portrayed negatively in film. However, I haven't heard Rabbis complaining about that.

The debate disintegrates into claims of anti-Semitism, which I still don't really understand. It is not a movie about laying blame. It is not about Jews verse Christians. This is the retelling of the story of Jesus Christ. Yes, according to the scripture, leaders of the Jewish community actively perused the Crucifixion of Jesus Christ. That does not mean that every Jew did. In fact the 12 disciples and Jesus himself were Jews. The Virgin Mary was also a Jew. Joseph of Aremeah, whom Gibson neglects to include, asked for Jesus' body; he too was Jewish.

Still to look at "The Passion" as an anti-Semitic film is to apply a modern day misunderstood phenomenon to a retelling of an ancient story.

However, the controversy that surrounded this film was very much fueled by such ridiculous claims. I believe that Gibson not only knew this, but he perpetuated it. He used the media to blow this way out of proportion, making his film one of the most anticipated films ever.

If this were just another Jesus movie no one would see it. Let's not forget, there's not going to be many surprises in a movie like this; we all know how it's going to end. This is why Gibson hyped it up the way he did. He used every media outlet he could. In fact, with all the noise about anti-Semitism, he got many leaders in the Jewish community to be vocal about his film. Gibson, though indirectly, got leaders of the Jewish community to promote his movie about Jesus.

Mel Gibson wanted to deliver a message. If you watch his film and see Jew verse Christian you are missing the message. Christian scripture teaches that Christ knew he would die and predicted his death. Jesus dying was part of the plan so all of this finger pointing is just nonsense.

What was Gibson trying to get across? He wanted to produce a graphic, realistic portrayal of the death of Jesus Christ. I'm sure many people, like myself, had difficulty watching the lifelike onslaught. The images will surely be engraved in our minds. That is the message Mel Gibson is sending. He wants those who believe in Jesus Christ to remember that agony when they are confronted with decisions in life.

Scarier than these images though, is that many people, when confronted with such decisions, will still call out for Barabas.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 9, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Ovaries' get their 15 minutes of fame

EMILIE BERGANNE/COLLEGIAN

Melissa Goodman, senior women's studies and BDIC major, reads a poem at yesterday's "That Takes Ovaries" open-mic night in the Cape Cod Lounge.

By Casey Novak
Collegian Staff

A group of about 35 women and men of all ages gathered at the Cape Cod lounge yesterday to celebrate International Women's Day, sharing bold and courageous stories about themselves or other women in their lives at the first western Massachusetts "That Takes Ovaries!" open mic.

"Move over gentlemen, it's time for the ladies!" Rivka Solomon, editor of "That Takes Ovaries!: Bold Females and Their Brazen Acts," said to the crowd. "It's time to reject all that keeps women unsure or quiet."

Stories ranged from the silly and funny to the deep and meaningful.

One woman spoke about being suspended in the sixth grade for punching a boy in the arm after he told a sexist joke, while another woman told of her experience growing up in Palestine and being imprisoned while in college for participating in a pretend wedding put on as a celebration of Palestine culture without the consent of her parents.

Some stories were read directly from Solomon's book.

One story in particular called "Educating Bill Clinton" told of a teacher who attended a George Washington University basketball game where Bill Clinton was in attendance with his daughter Chelsea. When she saw the president get up to leave after the men were done playing, the teacher asked him to show support for women athletes also and to stay for their game. Her attempt was successful and Clinton stayed to root the women's team on.

Sandy Mandel, associate director of special events for the Everywoman's Center, participated in the open mic herself, sharing a story of how she avoided using road rage when threatened by a car full of young boys at 2 a.m. one night. By going to the police station with the car's license plate, Mandel said she was able to "take action without putting herself in danger."

Katina, a local artist and teacher at Amherst High School, spoke of the controversy surrounding the idea of young women talking about their vaginas.

"I am really happy [the production] went up, the students have learned so much," Katina, the co-director of the "Vagina Monologues" production at the school, said. "I'm so incredibly proud of them."

One man took the opportunity to tell a story about his mother, who in the 1950s was not allowed to take advanced courses at her high school. He said women being forced to take courses such as home economics rather than scientific courses were the "realities of people's consciousness" and his mother was prepared to light back. She eventually convinced her principal to allow her take the advanced courses, the man said, and was the first women of many to study science at the school.

"Women shouldn't let fear get in the way of anything," Thalia, one of the women who shared a story said, after telling about how she got the courage to travel abroad on her own for the first time.

Some women said they would not normally get up and speak in front of a crowd, but took the risk of telling a story themselves because they had been inspired by the other women participating in the event.

Phoebe, a Daily Hampshire Gazette reporter said, "I don't usually speak at the events I cover, but I thought — why not?"

She proceeded to talk about how she protested a Miss America pageant from being held in Springfield and convinced Sammy Davis Jr., head of the event to get back on his bus, turn around and go home.

"Beauty pageants aren't a good thing for women in general," Phoebe said.

Solomon talked about how she has been leading this open mic movement with a disability called "chronic fatigue syndrome" which she said has kept her bedridden for almost 90 percent of her life.

"It takes ovaries for me to be able to write the book and participate in the movement with my invisible disability," Solomon said.

Solomon said she decided to start the open mic movement because her book was only able to share 64 women's stories, but wanted all women to have the opportunity to share stories of their gutsy, outrageous and courageous acts.

"It's a delight to be here for International Women's Day," she said. "It's important to recognize all women's strengths and accomplishments and be part of the global movement that is currently happening."

Yesterday's event was sponsored by the Everywoman's Center. Any women interested in organizing a "That Takes Ovaries!" open mic can get the guidelines from the back of the book or on www.thattakesovaries.org.

NOT QUITE 'TWISTED' ENOUGH

JUDD, JACKSON AND GARCIA STAR IN LATEST THRILLER, MINUS THE THRILLS

PHOTOS COURTESY PARAMOUNT (4)

By Lauren C. Freeman
Collegian Staff

In this day and age, pretty decent crime shows are on television 24-7, and thus any movie that claims to be a suspense/murder mystery must live up to the audience's heightened expectations.

The audience is well trained to watch this genre of film and/or television, and it is therefore a difficult task to create something new and original. It is truly disturbing that movie producers and makers believe that the unintelligent, formulaic excuse for a mystery that "Twisted" is should be made.

"Twisted" is by far unworthy of the all-star cast it harbors, or more correctly exploits. It's a thriller without thrills, a suspense drama with a weak resolution, and a shameful reminder that Hollywood foots the bill of such pathetic films. Maybe it should have been named "Disturbing," not because it evokes this emotion in the audience but simply because of the almost unbelievable stupidity of everything it attempts.

'Twisted'
Directed by Philip Kaufman
Starring Ashley Judd Andy Garcia
Paramount
Rated R
97 mins
Grade D

The premise places Jessica Shepard, (Ashley Judd) in a potentially interesting situation. Recently promoted to the homicide division, Shepard, a former cop, investigates a serial murderer only to find that the only connection between the corpses is the fact that she has slept with them.

This is more than a coincidence; someone is out to prove a point, or worse ... Shepard, in a state of unconsciousness, is killing these men herself.

The plot progresses with knowledge that Shepard's father, also a police officer, was a serial killer himself. When Jessica was young, her father killed several men then took his and Jessica's mother's lives. Jessica was then raised by her father's partner John Mills (Samuel L. Jackson).

The chance that Jessica could in fact be the very serial killer she seeks, killing in a somnambulant state is rather interesting. However, the interest dwindles soon after the possibility is entertained for a few scenes of Shepard passing out drunk.

One thing that the audience knows after watching night after night of "NYPD Blue" or "Murder She Wrote" is that the most obvious possibility of the killer can almost automatically be ruled out. The writer will try to deceive the audience by sloppily pointing a finger at a likely source, but this likely source is usually too likely to be true.

The difficulty in writing a "whodunit" thriller resides in the fact that the audience has to be surprised by the identity of the killer. Surprising an audience while maintaining a degree of plausibility is a more difficult task than one might imagine.

Unfortunately for "Twisted" the revelatory ending is weakened by a huge surprise degraded by its lack of plausibility.

What constitutes plausibility? With some rare exceptions, the outcome of a thriller is dependent on the screenwriter's choices. The director will only on occasion develop an ending entirely separate from that which the screenwriter creates. How can a writer be sure that the audience will entrust him/her to reveal the "correct" killer's identity? How can there be a "correct" choice of a killer in a fictional tale?

There are definitely certain rules that a writer can be held accountable for when choosing his or her killer. These rules have and can be broken, but when the writer or director is a newcomer to the Hollywood scene (as is screenwriter Sarah Thorp) these rules might be abided by, or broken with care.

Perhaps the most important rule when choosing a killer is balancing the obvious with the got so obvious. In other words, the killer should be someone who the audience knows well enough to determine that this person couldn't be the killer. Then when this person indeed turns out to be the killer, the audience is surprised.

Simply put, the killer in "Twisted" is someone who doesn't receive enough screen time, and the audience won't care that he is the killer because they don't feel like they knew him throughout the two hours they spent with Ashley Judd and Andy Garcia. The character's lack of involvement in the main series of events that occur up until the final blow out — where his/her character finally gets the screen time he deserves — is minimal and forced.

Mortensen saves 'Hidalgo' from losing race

By Ryan Aubert
Collegian Staff

"Hidalgo" is the kind of film that is hit or miss. Fortunately, it hits more than it misses.

Just like director Joe Johnston's other flicks (namely "Jumanji" and "Jurassic Park III") the film does certain things right, and those things are actually done rather magnificently. However, the things it does wrong cannot be overlooked, as the viewer is painfully aware that it could have been a better movie.

"Hidalgo" is based on a true story about an American cowboy named Frank Hopkins and his mustang horse, Hidalgo. Hopkins is invited to enter a grueling 3,000-mile horse race across the Middle East for a $10,000 dollar prize. The movie harkens back to old time action/adventure flicks, or at least that's what it should be throughout.

'Hidalgo'
Directed by Joe Johnston
Starring Viggo Mortensen, Omar Sharif
Touchstone
Rated PG-13
100 mins
Grade B

Elongated forays into drama and romance question the film's allegiance to the adventure genre. The movie tries to have an epic quality, but this aspiration is out of its league.

Viggo Mortenson, best known as Aragorn from the almighty "Lord of the Rings" trilogy, stars terrifically as Hopkins. With "Hidalgo," he is takes his first shot at breaking out of his famous role, an interesting phenomena to track as his "Rings" costars do the same, now that the trilogy has ended.

Mortenson has definitely broken out of the mold, and is a wonderful actor to behold in "Hidalgo." He can be believably serious one minute and humorously adventurous the next. Even without speaking, Mortenson is emotionally moving. He unquestionably has superb acting ability, and is poised to become an A-list actor.

Special acknowledgment has to go to T.J., the stunning horse who plays Hidalgo. T.J.'s personality and expressions throughout the film are poignant. One look into his eyes and a world of life opens up. T.J.'s emotional performance would hands-down win an Academy award for best animal actor in a feature film, if there ever were one.

The movie's supporting cast just can't compare to the two stars, though. These actors are cookie-cutter, bowing down to pre-established stereotypes. There is the powerful, and ultimately wise, Sheikh, the British femme fatale, and the group of ruthless Muslims gallivanting about. These ridiculous stereotypes hold "Hidalgo" back from reaching 'epic' status, and instead just reinforce the predictable Hollywood movie i turns out to be.

The cinematography in "Hidalgo" is a sight to behold. A Native Am-erican massacre sequence during the beginning of the film has a dark blue quality, invoking cold and death. Likewise, towards the end of the flick the color and light is very bright and blinding, establishing that Hopkins is going crazy from the desert heat. And, while wide shots of Hopkins on Hidalgo trudging through the sand with magnificent clouds behind them is beautiful, too much of a good thing spoils it. The shots occur way too often and become predictable. Five minutes of traveling here, then stop for something exciting, then again five minutes of traveling, and on and on until the end.

Granted, this is the way most directors would show the long journey — but spare the audience the yawning, and don't make it that long.

The end result of "Hidalgo" is a nice, fun jaunt through the Arabian Peninsula, albeit predictable, and slow in some spots. It is worth viewing at least once, since Mortenson and his horse truly shine. It's only too bad the rest of the movie doesn't live up to what it could have been.

COURTESY TOUCHSTONE.COM

Viggo Mortensen, above, is the highlight of 'Hidalgo,' but the 'Lord of the Rings' star cannot save the film from it tedious plot. Omar Sharif and Zuleikha Robinson, below, try their best as the film's mediocre supporting cast.

NoHo-based record company honors band

COURTESY NRBQ.COM

The members of NRBQ have been making music together for 35 years. Spirithouse Records, based in Northampton, will release a tribute album for the band, scheduled to play the Calvin in late April.

By Mark Pratt
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Flip through any serious rock 'n' roll fan's record collection and you're almost bound to find a piece of vinyl by NRBQ. Talk to anyone who went to college in the past 30 years, and they probably have a few hazy memories of attending an NRBQ show or three.

The band is one of the most enduring, most respected, most appreciated yet least well known on the American music scene.

Rock, blues, country, jazz — the Q, as they are known to their fans, have done it all. And pulled it off, mixing in a quirky sense of humor. The band once destroyed Cabbage Patch dolls on stage.

The band is still touring and still making records 35 years after it was founded, an anniversary being marked by the release on Tuesday of a tribute album featuring some of its greatest admirers in the music industry. Two anniversary concerts also are planned at the historic Calvin Theater in Northampton in late April and early May.

"We really mean it," founding member and keyboard player Terry Adams said, explaining the band's longevity. "We want to play music no matter what happens, no matter what people think. It's not about playing it safe."

NRBQ has recorded nearly 30 albums, developed legions of fans, and earned something that most song writers and musicians would rather have than top 10 records — the respect of peers, including the likes of Paul McCartney and Keith Richards.

"To me, they were always one of the most important and significant American bands," said Steve Berlin of Los Lobos, which cut a track for the tribute album "The Q People."

"To this day, I think it is one of the true crimes of our age that they are so underappreciated," Berlin said.

The album includes Bonnie Raitt, Yo La Tengo, Widespread Panic and Mike Mills of REM. It also features a nearly 17-minute "audio cartoon" by SpongeBob SquarePants, voiced by standup comedian Tom Kenny, who has opened shows for NRBQ.

Raitt's association with NRBQ goes back to the band's formative years in the late 1960s when she was still a Harvard undergraduate and before her own recording career took off.

"There was a gig at BU with Kate Taylor, a guy named Eric Mercury, Carl Perkins and NRBQ, and I was going to see Kate anyways because she was a friend of mine, and I was just knocked out by NRBQ," said Raitt.

She went on to tour with the band, and even cover a couple of its songs, including "Me and the Boys," included on the tribute album.

"There were these guys who could play Chuck Berry as authentically as Chuck Berry, as opposed to some white versions of Chuck Berry," Raitt said. "They were one of the funkier bunch of white people I'd seen and to this day that holds true."

NRBQ's versatility, musicianship, and ability to appeal to so many people — the band once released an album of children's songs — is at the same time blessing and a curse. The group is impossible to pigeon-hole.

"That's held them back," Raitt said. "In many ways I sympathize with that. All during my 20s and 30s everybody was trying to put me in a box and saying I had to stick with one style, but that would be boring. If you like all kinds of music, you've got to just play."

The NRBQ tribute album is the first release for Spirithouse Records, a startup label based in Northampton and founded by music industry veterans and western Massachusett natives Paul McNamara and Danny Bernini.

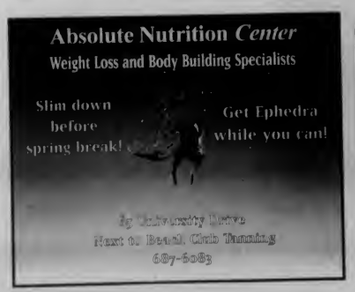
Bernini, 37, estimates he has seen NRBQ live "at least 75 to 100 times," the first time when he was nine years old and his older brother dragged him to a show. He couldn't think of a better way for the label to make an initial splash.

"They were as big to me as Aerosmith, Led Zep and J. Geils and all the bands that we were into as kids," he said.

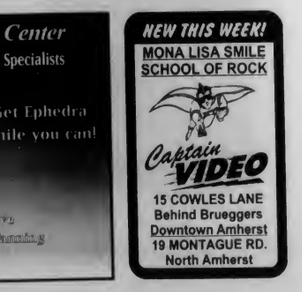
But Spirithouse still needed the consent of the band and cooperation from other musicians for the album.

"We weren't interested in doing it without their endorsement, and when we asked them about it they were immediately excited," he said. "I had worked with them in the past and they knew that I understood the band."

Dozens of artists have recorded songs written by NRBQ over the years, but band member Adams can't remember an entire tribute album. "The people at Spirithouse just had the desire to put it all together, and we were touched by that," he said.



Getting artists to contribute was even easier.



"The level of enthusiasm we got back from the bands kind of justified the whole idea," McNamara said. "It proved there was a lot of love for NRBQ."

"It took me about a second," to agree to be on the album, Raitt said.

Los Lobos jumped at the chance too. "It was a pleasure," Berlin said. "This one was way fun."

Kenseth wins Vegas

JOE SARGENT/GAMMA GUARD, INC.

Matt Kenseth takes the checkered flag to win the UAW-DaimlerChrysler 400 Sunday at the Las Vegas Motor Speedway. Kenseth, who won the 2003 Winston Cup Championship despite only winning one race, has already doubled his victory total from last year with Sunday's win. He also won the Subway 400 in North Carolina on Feb. 22.

2003 points champ wins second straight

By Mike Harris
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Matt Kenseth has a simple solution to mastering NASCAR's new rules: Win every time.

Kenseth is on top of the NASCAR Nextel Cup standings again after his second straight victory, this time dominating Sunday's UAW-DaimlerChrysler 400 at Las Vegas Motor Speedway.

The eighth win of his career came on the heels of a victory two weeks earlier at Rockingham, giving him one more win than he accumulated all of last season on the way to the Cup championship.

"This a race car driver's dream come true to come out and win two in a row," Kenseth said. "It's unbelievable to have this good of a car and to be able to lead all those laps and kind of dominate the way we did the last two races. It's pretty cool and I just can't wait to keep racing."

Kenseth led 123 of 267 laps Sunday in winning the Vegas race for the second straight year and moving to the points lead, the spot he occupied for the final 33 races of 2003.

Criticized last season for winning the series title with boring consistency and only the one victory, Kenseth is answering his critics by getting off to a great start in 2004, also winning Feb. 22 at Rockingham after finishing ninth in the season-opening Daytona 500.

"I've learned it's always something," Kenseth said, shaking his head. "It would be hard for anybody to argue that we didn't have a dominant car at Rockingham and all you saw in the headlines was that the caution didn't fall right, that we weren't on the lead lap and we shouldn't have won.

"But I'd rather have 'em talking about me because we're doing so good than something else, I guess," Kenseth added, grinning.

In his win at Rockingham, Kenseth had to hold off a challenge from rookie Kasey Kahne, winning by only inches. This time, there was no one to challenge Kenseth after he moved past Kevin Harvick on lap 230 to regain the lead for the fourth and final time in the 267-lap event.

The 23-year-old Kahne, in only his third Cup start since replacing longtime NASCAR star Bill Elliott in the No. 9 Dodge at Evernham Motorsports, wound up second again Sunday. He inherited the runner-up spot five laps from the end when Harvick ran out of gas and coasted to the pits. Harvick was 21st.

Kahne, who started from the pole, crossed the finish line 3.426 seconds — about half a straight-away — behind Kenseth's No. 17 Ford.

"To run second in these races is fine with me right now," Kahne said. "We want to win and we're going to win sometime."

Tony Stewart finished third, followed by Jamie McMurray, Mark Martin, Elliott Sadler, Casey Mears, Kurt Busch and Rusty Wallace.

The race was supposed to be the first true test of the new combination of a shorter rear spoiler and softer tires, intended by NASCAR to make the racing more exciting by allowing more passing.

This race didn't look much different than the previous six on the 1 1/2-mile Vegas oval, with mostly single-file racing. There were 18 lead changes among 10 drivers, but many of them came during pit stop sequences and had nothing to do with passing on the racetrack.

Still, most of the drivers liked the changes.

"The tire that Goodyear brought has made this racing fun again," Stewart said. "You can't go out and just run real hard. That's how we lost second to Kasey Kahne. I busted the tires trying to get by Harvick."

Kenseth appeared to have the fastest car all day, building leads of up to 4 seconds several times.

He was leading Stewart by about 20 car lengths when Kevin Lepage's blown engine dumped oil on the track on lap 183. The leaders made their final pit stops on lap 184 and an uncharacteristic slow stop by his Roush Racing crew left Kenseth seventh for the restart on lap 193 with Harvick in the lead.

"If there was ever a time to have a bad one, that was the time to get a little behind," Kenseth said of the slow stop. "We actually adjusted the car a little bit and made it better."

Once the green flag flew, Kenseth moved steadily toward the front, finally taking the lead from Harvick on lap 230.

The victory vaulted Kenseth into the series lead one race earlier than he took the top spot for good last year. He leads Stewart by 88 points going into next Sunday's race at Atlanta Motor Speedway.

Sunday's race was disastrous for Dale Earnhardt Jr., who came in leading the points after winning the Daytona 500 and finishing fifth at Rockingham.

Earnhardt, who said the team didn't know why the car was so bad, struggled throughout. He spent considerable time in the garage area before coming back out to salvage 35th place. Earnhardt fell to seventh, 125 points behind Kenseth.

NASCAR TOP 10
NEXTEL Cup Series
Following race 3 of 36

	Driver	Points	Wks in top 10
1	Matt Kenseth	523	3
2	Tony Stewart	435	3
3	Elliott Sadler	405	3
4	Jeff Gordon	404	3
5	Kurt Busch	400	2
6	Kevin Harvick	399	3
7	Dale Earnhardt Jr.	398	3
8	Kasey Kahne	385	1
9	Jamie McMurray	365	1
10	Casey Mears	367	1

SOURCE: NASCAR AP

NASCAR NEXTEL CUP SERIES

John Henry Williams, son of Ted, dies of leukemia at 35

By Greg Sukiennik
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) —The last two years of John Henry Williams' life were spent fighting.

He struggled to make it in baseball, the sport his father and Hall of Famer Ted Williams excelled in. He battled family members when he arranged to have his father frozen at a cryonics lab after his death. And he fought cancer.

On Saturday, that final fight ended in a Los Angeles hospital room.

Williams died of leukemia at UCLA Medical Center with family members at his bedside, said Peter Sutton, an attorney for Ted Williams' family. Williams was 35.

According to published reports citing family sources, John Henry Williams' remains were delivered to the Alcor Life Extension Foundation in Scottsdale, Ariz., where his famous father's body has been stored since his death.

Williams, had been battling the disease for months. In December, he had a bone marrow transplant, using a donation from Claudia, his youngest sister.

"On behalf of all of us with the Boston Red Sox, we extend our condolences to the John Henry Williams family," Red Sox principal owner John W. Henry said in a statement. "Perhaps no person meant more to the history of the Boston Red Sox than did his father, and it was clear that his father's life and legacy were the focal point of John Henry Williams' life."

John Henry Williams, Ted Williams' only son, was four when his parents divorced. After that, he saw little of his larger-than-life father, a war hero and noted outdoorsman, as well as one of baseball's greatest hitters of all-time.

But John Henry Williams became part of Ted Williams' life in the early 1990s after the slugger's romantic companion, Louise Kauffman, died.

"He took over Ted's business affairs, his household affairs and he just became the boss," Kay Munday, who managed Williams' household from 1989-95, told The Associated Press in 2002. "I would ask Ted something and he would say, 'Let John Henry handle it,' and I would have to go through John Henry."

Rejuvenated Odom leading the Heat back into contention

By Steven Wine
Associated Press

MIAMI (AP) — Lamar Odom sheepishly eyes a messy pile in front of his locker that includes dirty socks and seven size-16 shoes.

"Sorry about that," he says, pushing the clutter aside to clear a path for visitors and teammates.

Odom heard plenty of criticism during his first four NBA seasons, when he played for the Los Angeles Clippers and was labeled an undisciplined, unreliable underachiever. The worst the Miami Heat can say about their versatile power forward is that he's untidy.

Miami is contending for its first playoff berth since 2001, and the 6-foot-10 Odom is a big reason. The latest evidence: a 30-point, 19-rebound, 11-assist performance Saturday against Sacramento.

It was the Heat's first triple-double in nine years.

"He has a lot more in him," teammate Rafer Alston says. "He's a phenomenal player."

Still only 24, Odom is blossoming in his fifth pro season, and on Monday he was chosen Eastern Conference player of the week. He's averaging 17.4 points and 9.8 rebounds, both career highs, and 4.5 assists.

"It's a maturing process," Odom says. "It has never been a big deal whether I could play or not. Staying healthy and doing the right things to protect my career off the court _ that was mostly everyone's concern. No one ever really said, 'I don't know if he can play, I don't think he's a good player.'"

Odom came to the NBA with a reputation for being flaky and indecisive. He played at three high schools as a senior, then drew the attention of NCAA investigators when recruited by UNLV and never played there.

He spent one season at Rhode Island, changed his mind twice about entering the draft and finally decided to leave college. He skipped pre-draft workouts with several teams and failed to show for a scouting combine.

The Clippers nonetheless took him with the fourth pick in 1999, but he was hampered by injuries and twice suspended for violating the league drug policy. He played a total of just 78 out of 164 games the past two seasons, and after he signed a free-agent contract with Miami, Clippers vice president Elgin Baylor questioned his character.

But Pat Riley saw a player with the potential to reverse the Heat's fortunes, and he drew Odom with a six-year, $65 million deal.

"I knew a lot was going to be asked of me here," Odom says. "It's a position I wanted to be in."

It's a position that has Odom all over the court. He runs the offense from the point, slashes or shoots from the wing and provides a vital inside presence for a team with an understated center in Brian Grant.

"Lamar's a great player," Sacramento's Vlade Divac says. "He does everything, and he makes the other players better."

Odom has scored in double figures in all but five games, but he takes particular pride in rebounds and assists.

"That means you're getting your teammates involved," he says.

But Odom has been forced to carry the Heat at times. Leading scorer Eddie Jones is struggling through the worst shooting season of his career, and talented rookie guard Dwyane Wade has missed 21 games with injuries.

"Lamar can do so many different things," coach Stan Van Gundy says. "We have asked him to do everything, and he has responded."

The Heat started 0-7 but have played nearly .500 ball since then, and they're one of six teams battling for the final three playoff spots in the Eastern Conference. Miami, Cleveland and Toronto all were 27-36 through Sunday, tied for eighth place in the East.

A postseason appearance would be Odom's first.

Contrasts make Sox staff strong expects to start the game after Martinez and before Schilling.

PITCHING from page 10

"I think that's the best place for me and the best place for the team," Wakefield said after pitching the fourth and fifth innings of Boston's 9-4 win over Minnesota. "Just the contrast between Pedro and me and Schill, I think it's a huge advantage."

General manager Theo Epstein doesn't think it makes a big difference, although opposing batters may have a different perception.

"If guys (on other teams) think it does, that's enough," Epstein said. "I think if you have two guys who look exactly alike, you probably don't want them following one other."

Martinez is scheduled to pitch the regular-season opener at Baltimore on April 4. After a day off, Schilling, Lowe and Kim are expected to face the Orioles before Wakefield pitches the home opener April 9 against Toronto.

No matter how the rotation is set up, opposing batters will have to adjust to different styles.

"Pedro and Schilling are the closest things to being the same look," Epstein said, "and they're different because Schilling has a four-seam straight (fastball) and a split and a slider and Pedro's got the curveball and his fastball."

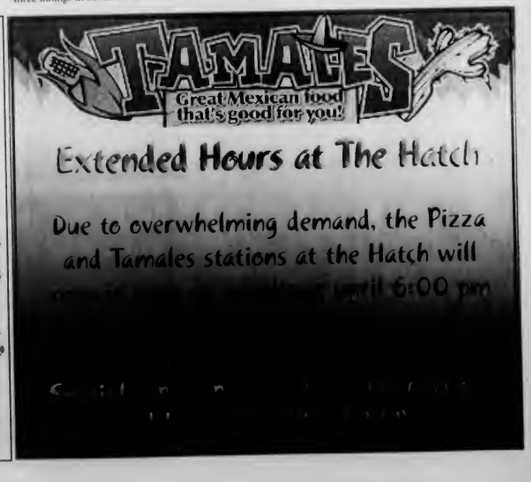
Lowe's sinkerball worked well for his second straight start, although he lasted just two innings in which he threw 37 pitches. He threw 36 pitches in three innings in his first exhibition start last Thursday, a 5-3 win over Minnesota

But he couldn't deeply analyze his performance after just two innings.

"It's so hard to try to say how good your outing could be," Lowe said, "because if this was during the regular season, you could turn it around in the third or it could be a disaster in the third. You never know."

Lowe was expected to go three innings Monday but didn't make it because of his high pitch count. Non-roster pitcher Carlos Morla worked the third and Wakefield pitched the next two innings.

"I don't have any idea" about his spot in the rotation, Lowe said. "I don't know if they've told anybody." Lowe and Wakefield each allowed one run in two innings.



"Mechanically, I still need a little bit of work," Wakefield said. "My timing's a little off right now, but I'll take those results feeling that way."

On Tuesday, Martinez makes his first appearance of spring training. He will be followed by Schilling, who allowed three hits in three scoreless innings last Friday night against Northeastern University.

It's all part of the preparation for the regular season.

"Your sequence in April is very rarely your sequence throughout the year," Epstein said. "The sequencing of our starting pitchers is not a big concern. We don't have guys who would suffer from following anyone else on the staff because we have five unique styles."

EMILIE DUGGAN/COLLEGIAN

Ready for the River Hawks

Junior defenseman Jeff Lang (1 goal, 4 assists, plus-4) and the Minutemen will host the UMass Lowell River Hawks (10-21-7, 7-12-5 Hockey East) in the quarterfinals of the Hockey East Tournament, starting Thursday night at 7 p.m. at the Mullins Center.

Flying high now

Saint Joseph's is No. 1 team in country

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

Tiny Saint Joseph's and its ever-flapping Hawk have soared to the top of the basketball world.

The Philadelphia school with an enrollment of 3,400 and not much recent sports history to brag about was No. 1 in the AP men's college basketball poll yesterday for the first time.

"It's a dream come true," Hawks senior guard Jameer Nelson said. "At the same time, we have to take care of business these last few games. We'll still approach each game and practice the same way."

The Hawks (27-0) are the only unbeaten team in Division I, now that previously top-ranked Stanford has been upset by Washington.

Saint Joseph's needs three victories in the Atlantic 10 tournament to become the first team since UNLV in 1991 to enter the NCAA tournament without a loss.

"All along, we have discussed the idea of having a great program," Saint Joseph's coach Phil Martelli said. "Obviously, we have a great team, and now we can talk about a great program, and this can be a springboard."

With help from the Hawk, of course. The mascot never stops flapping its wings during games.

A national basketball power in the 1960s, the Hawks were ranked in the Top 10 consistently. They made their only Final Four appearance in 1961, then reached No. 2 in the rankings twice in December 1965.

"It's a significant feat for the longtime followers of this program," Martelli said. "Schools like ours have been overlooked for years by things like the BCS and the football powers."

The coach doesn't think he has to worry about his team looking past the conference tournament and thinking ahead to a probable No. 1 seeding in the NCAA tournament field.

The A-10 tournament starts Wednesday in Dayton, Ohio.

"We're going there to fight," Martelli said.

The Hawks moved up from No. 2 thanks to the loss by Stanford (26-1) Saturday. That ended the Cardinal's three-week run atop the AP poll.

Saint Joseph's received 67 first-place votes and 1,795 points from the national media panel. Second-ranked Stanford was No. 1 on two ballots and had 1,648 points.

Gonzaga (26-2) moved up one spot to No. 3, the highest ranking in school history, and received one first-place vote. Mississippi State (25-2) moved up one place to fourth, switching positions with Duke (25-4), which was No. 1 on two ballots after losing to Georgia Tech and beating North Carolina.

Air Force moved into the Top 25 for the first time in school history. The Falcons (22-5), the No. 1 defensive team in the country, won the Mountain West regular season title.

Pittsburgh, Oklahoma State, Kentucky and Connecticut held sixth through ninth from last week, while Wisconsin moved up seven places to No. 10, its highest ranking of the season.

Texas was No. 11, followed by Illinois, Cincinnati, Georgia Tech, Wake Forest, North Carolina, North Carolina State, Kansas, Syracuse and Providence.

The last five ranked teams were Arizona, Utah State, Memphis, Southern Illinois and Air Force.

Louisville (19-8) fell out from 25th after being ranked for the last 12 weeks, reaching No. 4. The Cardinals lost 81-80 at Marquette on Saturday, their seventh loss in 10 games.

Saint Joseph's is the sixth team to reach No. 1 this season, joining Connecticut, Kansas, Florida, Duke and Stanford.

"Being ranked No. 1 is a sign of steady improvement and the hard work we've put in all season," Saint Joseph's junior forward Pat Carroll said. The NCAA "tournament will prove who really is the No. 1 team in the nation, but right now, it's a good feeling to have that ranking in front of us."

Doubles does Minutewomen in

TENNIS from page 10

matches could easily have gone the other way.

"We lost two 3-set matches, and if we had been able to get both of those matches to fall for us we would have beaten a very good team ... and so instead of beating them 5-2 we lost 5-2. I'd say we had good results," Dixon said.

Dixon also noted the performance of No. 4 singles player Iwanowicz, who currently has an overall Spring season record of 7-2 in singles.

"The whole entire weekend Dorothy [Iwanowicz] played spectacular singles and continues to be on fire," Dixon said. She has high hopes for Iwanowicz, who was undefeated in No. 5 singles last year at the Atlantic 10 Championships.

Also looking to help get the Maroon and White back on track is returning Minutewomen Iafra Depontes, fresh off a semester abroad in Barcelona. Dixon is confident that Depontes' return will help cement the Minutewomen's position as at least one of the top two schools in the conference. Richmond currently holds the top spot, and Massachusetts and Xavier are vying for the second position. Depontes is seventh in all-time career doubles wins for UMass, and went 7-6 in singles, and 11-5 in doubles last spring.

Depontes' return is also good news for the struggling doubles.

"With Iafra back on the team, it means that our doubles combos are once again strong. She'll play No. 1 doubles with Price," Dixon said. "I would say you'd have to give us the nod over Xavier to be No. 2 in the conference right now, because she's going to make that much of a difference."

Another advantage of Depontes' return is the surprise factor.

"It's going to be wonderful that she's stepping in because no one in the conference expects for her to be in the roster, and all of a sudden in the last three weeks she's going to be on the team. It's going to be meaningful for us as we come to the end of the season," Dixon said.

The Minutewomen travel to Florida for their next three matches against nationally-ranked Florida Atlantic, Barry, and Lynn University. Aside from playing against some of the best competition in the country, Dixon hopes the team will adjust to the sudden departure of Munroe and the arrival of Despontes.

"I would like to be ready to play outdoors as much as I can. Right now what I have is a solid team who is feeling the loss of one of the players, Jenny Munroe ... the results are a team that is still solid, still competing well, but really has been struggling with their doubles, and with [Depontes] coming back in, that difficulty with the team is going to be fixed," Dixon said.

Dixon remains extremely optimistic about the rest of the season.

"I expect big things from this team between now and the end of the year, particularly at the A-

Sato choosing his fate

XU star weighs NBA, options

By Joe Kay
Associated Press

CINCINNATI (AP) — The choices get tough now for Romain Sato.

Xavier's versatile guard is finishing his undergraduate degree and thinking he might get a master's in international business. Or, he might put school on hold and wind up in the NBA as a draft pick — the second round is a possibility.

There's also a chance he could play in Europe if the NBA doesn't want him, perhaps studying in his spare time.

So many choices, so much uncertainty. None of it rattles the college senior's calm demeanor. He doesn't change his facial expression or voice inflection as he matter-of-factly lists the options, until he gets to the last one.

Then, the smile flashes and the eyes beam.

"I want to go visit my parents," Sato said. "That would be nice."

Sato hasn't seen them since he left the Central African Republic in January 1999, a terrified 17-year-old who didn't speak English but was expected to start classes in his new home of Dayton, Ohio, only a few days later.

The remarkable journey is nearly complete. Xavier is 19-10 heading into the Atlantic 10 tournament in Dayton. The Musketeers play St. Bonaventure in the first round on Wednesday.

As expected, Sato has been their best player. Little else has gone according to expectations.

Xavier has struggled this season without David West, the national player of the year in 2003 who went to the NBA as a first-round pick. Sato and senior guard Lionel Chalmers found themselves trying to fill West's void while teaching a young lineup how to win.

The record isn't what they expected, although a 9-1 finish to the regular season showed it might not be too late to accomplish a few things. And Sato's numbers haven't been up to par, ending any thought of getting picked early in the first round of the NBA draft.

Given how much he has matured a half-world away from home, Sato doesn't let any of it bother him. In his perspective, life is good and there's no reason to fret.

"He's been about as good as anybody I've ever seen, especially the last month or two months, on just enjoying the process, enjoying his teammates, enjoying going to class, enjoying joking with the coaches," assistant coach John Groce said. "He has really developed a big-picture perspective this year. I think that's been the biggest change."

Xavier was hoping he would develop into a big-time player as well. The university sent out nesting dolls that depict him in a Xavier uniform, a graduation gown and his native garb. He also has a Web site with information about his six languages and his native land.

For the first time in his four-year career, Sato's scoring average is down — 16 points per game, after he averaged 18.1 last year with West getting most of the attention from opposing defenses.

Now, defenses concentrate on Sato, who's had to find different ways to make an impact.

The 6-foot-5 shooting guard has concentrated on rebounding and is fifth in the conference with 7.9 per game — a remarkable statistic for someone who spends so much time behind the 3-point arc.

Sato's defense also is so good that coach Thad Matta uses him to cover everyone on the opposing team except the center. He might cover the point guard for part of a game, then slide down and deny the ball to a much bulkier power forward later on.

"I've been doing this for 10 years, and I have never seen a guard rebound like he does," Groce said. "And I've never been around a guard who has guarded so many different types of players and positions. It's really odd."

Sato also has learned what it's like to be a leader in a foreign land.

"We're kind of coming into our own as leaders," said Chalmers, the team's most vocal leader. "We handle things differently. That's where we need to be with it. Early on, we didn't know which way to go with things and nobody wanted to stop over anybody else. It was kind of up in the air."

So are the next few months.

Sato is still close with his legal guardians in Dayton, who taught him the language and helped him through the tough transition to a new culture and a new sport — he didn't start playing basketball until he was 14 years old.

When he thinks about the choices immediately ahead, he remembers their best advice.

"They always tell me: You can never worry about anything else because you've been through a lot," Sato said.

Frimpong-Boateng sets record

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's indoor track squad finished 30th out of 50 teams last weekend at the IC4A Championships at Boston University.

Senior Kwesi Frimpong-Boateng's streak of first-place finishes in the 55-meter dash ended, as Frimpong-Boateng came up just short in second place with a time of 6.28. The time sets a personal best for the Atlantic 10 Indoor Track and Field Student Athlete of the Year, as well as a new school record in the event.

In a pattern that has been typical of the Minutemen all season long, Frimpong-Boateng was once again UMass' leading point scorer with eight points, accounting for all but one of the Minutemen's points on the day.

The tandem of senior John O'Neil and junior James Godinho proved its worth in the 500, where they finished one behind the other in 13th and 14th place, respectively. Both clocked in at 1:04.16, but the time qualified neither party for the final round.

The 1600 relay squad of senior Dave Falvey, junior Joseph McCormack, O'Neil and Godinho finished dead last out of the 26 competing teams, clocking in at 3:35.81.

Despite taking a top five finish in the preliminary rounds with 9:58.27, the distance medley relay team of junior Matt Clark, junior Jon Korhonen, junior Dave McMenamy and freshman Tyler Simpson could not repeat that performance, settling for eighth in the final round of the event with a finish of 10:10.45. The run was good enough for one point.

All in all, the Minutemen tallied nine points on the day, tied for 30th in the meet with Iona College.

Manhattan College had the most success on the day, amassing 60 points to take home first place in the meet for the first time since 1992. Tyler Raymond and Adeniyi Omisore were the Jaspers' best finishers on the day, both taking second in their respective events. Raymond ran the 1000 in 2:24.14, while Omisore leaped 15.37 meters in the triple jump.

Omisore finished in the triple jump just ahead of teammate Janek Augustynowicz, who took third with a leap of 14.91.

Rounding out the top five in the meet were Connecticut (55 points), Seton Hall (47), Penn State (42), and Army (34).

Junior Joel Legare had the most success for the Huskies, taking first in the 1000 in 2:22.58. Senior Joe DiCola had another strong performance, taking second in the Heptathlon with 5,102 points. Senior Chris Mazza was UConn's other second-place finisher with a mark of 5.10 meters in the pole vault. The Huskies' distance medley relay team took third in their event, clocking in at 9:47.30.

birthControl.com
Helping you to make the right choices
For non-prescription
Birth Control Needs
visit:
www.birthcontrol.com
We have the 1-day Sponge Available

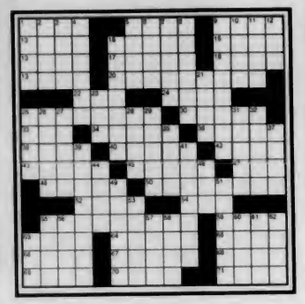
sports @ daily collegian.com

Seniors GET A JOB!
Get "The Edge" for your career transition:
• The Edge – The Inside scoop from hiring managers
• The Edge Workbook – Your Quick Start Guide
• Internet Resource CD – Save surfing time for fun
Get The Edge – It's your future!
The Deal: All 3 for $24.95
Save 15 bucks . . . go buy a pizza!
Order: www.transitionstrategy.com

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS ...always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256.0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586.0155

QUOTE FOR THE DAY



"People hate me because I am a multifaceted, talented, wealthy, internationally famous genius."

-Jerry Lewis

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Star Wars
8 Bikes at 9 Benches
12 Mimic
13 Hot drink
15 Healing succulent
16 Writer — Morrison
17 Greased
18 Cooked slightly
19 Dukes
20 Great Lakes port
22 Buchwald
24 Eventful periods
26 Because (of; with)
28 Baking soda, e.g.
33 Rabbit — Chow —
34 Lumps a "book"
36 RBI et al.
38 "Bedouin", e.g.
40 Agreed (with)
42 Repeat
43 Kind of coffee
45 Open the door (2 wds.)
47 Ump
48 Not ink entry
50 Fastening
52 Temple image
54 — had it!
56 Mexican masses
58 Waverly leaves
63 Dull person
64 Shorthand pro
65 Sandy hyrine
66 Drop
67 Entrance
68 Count, in England
69 Desires
70 Eject
71 It has a home page

DOWN
1 Like some trains
2 Current with (2 wds.)
3 Look after
4 Gramophone inventor
5 Sprinter — Devers
6 Competent
7 Annoy
8 Tribal council
9 Fee, e.g.
10 PUBED
11 Noun or verb
12 Grow a garden
14 Grasshoppers
21 Baltimore Urioles
23 Compete in a slalom
26 — the line (obeyed)
27 Publicized
29 Wonderland girl
30 Chinese measure
31 Of longer standing
33 Spicy plants
35 Himalayan sighting
37 Melody
39 Advisory groups
41 Arithmetic term
44 Dog name
46 Arts' neighbor
48 Body fluids
51 Bit
53 Greetings
55 Illuminated (2 wds.)
56 Any
58 Gray or Moran
57 Antionette lost hers
60 For a second time
60 Tom Brien range
61 Gossip
62 Price reduction
63 Lad

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Nuggets
- Sloppy Joes
- Curried Vegetables (vegan)

DINNER
- Grilled Boneless Pork Chops
- Turkey Divan
- Grilled Portabella Mushroom Steaks (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 39
- Low: 25

WEDNESDAY
- High: 45
- Low: 27

THURSDAY
- High: 44
- Low: 23

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan
COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Nikolas P. Markantonatos/ Glen Straub

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
That's a stretch you can't make.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Drink more orange juice. It's really good for you.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Crawl under your desk and hide. Something very scary is after you.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't dry over spilled milk. Cry over spilled beer.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Make friends and improve your networking skills.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Yoga is good for the mind and spirit.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Get some sleep. You've been burning the candle from both ends.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You are a crazy, kite flying psycho.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Develop your interpersonal skills some more. You stink at talking to people.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Keep your place well stocked with food.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't be a sketchy stalker.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Don't blast your Spanish Christmas music at three in the morning.

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
March Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"start your own tradition"

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

EMPLOYMENT

Native speakers of any Dravidian language sought E.G. Tamil, Kannada, Malayalam, Telugu Contact John Kingston 545-6837 voice mail JKingston@linguist.umass.edu

Gymnastics Instructor Pre-school, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening & weekend hours available. 3-20 hrs/wk, flexible work environment, Gymnastics center w/ loose foam & resi pit system. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, MA 01301 (413) 773-3646 x.423

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Fun at Life-Tech Ventures live-in counselors and instructors at Presidential Summer Camp in Charlton, MA Available to anyone who honestly likes being with children Call 800-433-8375 naturesclassroom.org

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley 5 bedroom Newer home close to UMass big yard 2 full bathrooms, sunny living room. Call 549-4270

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst, PhilosophyDialogue.net

SERVICES

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida.

TRAVEL

$$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

WANTED

Your 10 year old BMX bike $75, Will pay more for Mongoose or GT. Patrick, 508-934-9274

EGG DONORS NEEDED; Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.robertnicholsesq.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 9, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

EMILIE OCCHIANTI/COLLEGIAN

Junior Chris Doyle (Putnam Valley, N.Y.) scored three goals to lead the Minutemen past the Stony Brook Seawolves on Saturday. Doyle is second on the team with seven goals this year, one behind Kevin Glenz.

Power surge

Minutemen create sparks at Stony Brook

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The power went out at Stony Brook University Saturday morning, creating a confusing situation on the field and in the stands that was augmented by poor weather conditions.

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team provided its own electricity, though, as it romped past Stony Brook, 10-3.

The Minutemen, who have been a classically high-octane offensive team during coach Greg Cannella's tenure, had struggled to produce the kind of offense many had come to expect in the first two games this season. Those struggles may have ended with Saturday's outburst.

UMass	10
Stony Brook	3

The Minutemen (2-1) scored three goals in the first quarter, including two from Neil Lundberg and an extra-man goal from Chris Doyle, one of three tallies for the junior on the day. They finished the opening stanza with a 3-1 lead, and never looked back.

The Seawolves (0-2) countered at the end of the first with one goal, but then were held at bay by the Minutemen, who ran away to an 8-1 lead with less than 10 minutes to go in the third quarter. Stony Brook managed to score two more late, but UMass matched the total to punctuate its second victory of the season.

The Minutemen are now averaging 10 goals a game, but coach Greg Cannella said that the defense was the group that has made the biggest impact thus far.

"We got up 3-0 pretty quickly in the game, but the defense allowed us to be patient on offense, and [sophomore] Dane [Collins] did pretty well on face-offs," he said. "That meant we could kind of play the way we wanted to play."

The Minutemen took 47 shots, the second straight game they have taken more than 40. They peppered Hartford with 53 shots in a 13-7 win on March 2, and took 38 in their 12-7 loss to North Carolina on Feb. 28.

"That may say something about our team on offense, that we may be a little bit different than we have been in the past," Cannella said. "That's a tough thing for this group right now. Everybody expects us to blow everybody out, score 15 a game. It may not happen. We may not be able to score 15 a game. We're gonna try, but it may not be there, so we're going to have to win some tighter games, possibly."

UMass also benefited from 11 different shooters, and five different goal scorers. In addition to Lundberg's pair and Doyle's hat trick, Kevin Glenz and Ryan Connolly each scored two, and Matt Tundo notched one goal.

"A lot of guys got shots," Cannella said. "The guys that got them on cage scored, but that's the way it always has been. You look at the older guys, Lundberg scores two out of the first three, Doyle scores one out of the first three, Kevin Glenz scored some big goals for us, those are the guys we need to step up."

Junior goaltender Bill Schell made 11 saves behind the strong work of the defense, which allowed just 21 shots.

The quick trio of goals was also a contrast to the Minutemen's game against Hartford, in which the teams traded goals until UMass began to pull away in the later stages. After that game, Cannella expressed his displeasure with how the team came out of the blocks. Not so on Saturday.

"It's not our best, but we did play the best we've played," Cannella said. "We came out enthusiastic, and we came out hungry, which was great to see."

The Minutemen will host Harvard (1-1) on Saturday at 1 p.m. on Garber Field.

Minutewomen upset No. 23 Fighting Irish

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team scored four runs on only four hits in an upset over 4-2 upset over No. 23 Notre Dame Saturday, part of a 2-2 weekend for the Minutewomen at the FAU Worth Invitational.

The Minutewomen split each day during the Boca Raton, Fla. tournament, winning each day's first game and losing the second. Following the upset over the Irish on Saturday, Kelli Arnold's gutsy pitching performance was not enough to overcome the lack of run support, losing 1-0 to tourney-host Florida Atlantic.

The second UMass victory, 4-2 over North Carolina Sunday, came off sophomore K.J. Kelley's three-run walk-off homerun. The nightcap wasn't as dramatic, with Florida International blanking the Maroon and White, 5-0.

"This is a invaluable experience for a young team trying to find out where they are," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "Day after day, they are facing the best teams in the nation. That's what experience is, facing strong pitchers and looking at those hard pitches coming at you."

In the third inning against Notre Dame, senior Aisha Franke led off with a single down the first baseline. Two batters later, freshman Candace Molinari laid down a sacrifice bunt and reached first on an error by Irish pitcher Steffany Stenglein. With runners on first and second, Stenglein walked three straight batters, including a beaning of senior Jamie Cahalan, resulting in two runs on only one hit.

The Irish had a chance to cut into the lead with Megan Ruthrauff on second. Mallorie Lenn singled to center, as Ruthrauff rounded the corner. Franke fired a strike home to Cahalan, who blocked the plate and never allowed Ruthrauff to score, ending the inning. This was the second time in the season Franke has thrown out a runner at the plate from center.

"She is absolutely a big insurance in center," Sortino said. "Defense wins championships. We have seven double plays on the year, so our defense has been solid. As we are still trying find ourselves on offense and the mound, the reliable defense will help us."

UMass added two insurance runs on no hits in the fourth. Sophomore Kristen Stefanoni was the reason, stealing second and third following her walk. After Franke walked and advanced to second on a wild pitch, Stefanoni scored on an error by the catcher. Franke also scored on the next at-bat off Hilary Puglia's fielder's choice.

Sophomore Jenna Busa finished with a complete game while scattering eight hits, walking two and striking out one. Stenglein had a rough outing with four walks and four runs, though she allowed only two hits. Carrie Wise finished strong for the Irish with five strikeouts and sacrificed a couple hits.

"I think [our runs] were a combination of things," Sortino said. "When the ball was in play, we had runners in scoring position and they forced a lot of balls. They also seemed sluggish that day. I just don't know what exactly it was. Their pitcher was good, not great. Though, Jenna did do a great job shutting down the offense."

There was no lack of offense the next day against UNC, as the teams combined for 18 hits.

UNC jumped out to an early 2-0 lead in the first. Jessica Robinson gave UNC the lead with a two-out, two-run double to the left center gap. The Minutewomen were able to get one run back in the bottom of the frame, but left the bases loaded.

The Tar Heels extended their lead in the top of the seventh before the Maroon and White's final at-bat. Puglia and Molinari led off the inning with back-to-back singles to start the rally. Kelley worked the count to 2-2 before blasting a three-run shot to left, ending the game in dramatic fashion.

"Amazing," Sortino said of Kelley's performance. "The thing we have got to do is get someone behind, because a lot of teams are going to stop pitching to her. We need a strong supporting cast around her."

Arnold hurled 105 pitches against North Carolina, giving up 10 hits, walking three and striking out three. The junior pitcher did not get the same run support against Florida Atlantic. Arnold only allowed one run on seven hits, but the Minutewomen left five runners on base in the shutout.

No scrubs for Sox in win over Twins

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) — Boston's backups scored seven runs in the eighth inning with the help of three walks and a wild pitch, and the Red Sox beat the Minnesota Twins 9-4 in a split-squad game yesterday.

The Red Sox batted around in the inning, and none of those hitters has played for them in a regular-season game. Minnesota's Kevin Tolar did pitch in six games for Boston last year and was wild in allowing five runs in one-third of an inning.

One day after their much-anticipated game against the Yankees, an 11-7 loss, the Red Sox went ahead 6-4 on a two-run single by Jeremy Owens, then added one run on a single by Hanley Ramirez and two more on a single by Matt Murton.

Red Sox (ss)	9
Twins (ss)	4

They didn't give in to the urge nervous youngsters often have to swing at whatever pitch is thrown, Red Sox bench coach Brad Mills said.

"Those guys really did a good job of getting some pitches to hit and getting ahead in the count," said Mills, who managed the team.

Red Sox manager Terry Francona was with another squad that beat the Philadelphia Phillies 5-3 in Clearwater.

Against Minnesota, Derek Lowe and Tim Wakefield each allowed a run in two innings. Twins starter Kyle Lohse gave up a run on three hits in three innings.

The Twins scored an unearned run in the first on Justin Morneau's RBI single. They made it 3-0 on a two-run homer by former Boston infielder Jose Offerman in the third against Carlos Morla.

Offerman also doubled in the first but didn't score.

"I'm trying to help him out," Lowe joked about Offerman, trying to make the Twins on a minor league contract. "I'm a nice guy, 3-1 fastball down the middle, double. I thought maybe he was even going to get an RBI, but he didn't."

Terry Shumpert, whose error at shortstop contributed to Minnesota's first run, homered in the third. But the Twins made it 4-1 in the fourth on a triple by B.J Garbe and a run-scoring ground-out by Cristian Guzman.

Boston's Johnny Damon doubled in a run in the fourth before the Red Sox scored seven runs on four hits.

Sean McGowan singled, Tony Womack walked and both advanced on a wild pitch. Michael Hernandez grounded to third and McGowan beat the throw home. Kevin Youkilis walked, loading the bases, before a walk to Carlos Febles made it 4-4.

Owens, Ramirez and Murton then followed with run-scoring hits.

Edwin Almonte wrapped up the game for Boston with two scoreless innings.

Notes: Boston SS Nomar Garciaparra missed his second straight game with a sore right Achilles' tendon. He's expected to be ready for Tuesday night's home game against Cincinnati. ... At Clearwater, former Phillies ace Curt Schilling took Boston's lineup card to home plate before the game but didn't pitch. ... Pedro Martinez makes his exhibition debut for Boston against Cincinnati on Tuesday night.

COURTESY OF KALETH LING

Winding down

Junior Anthony Anderson and the Massachusetts men's basketball team head to Dayton, Ohio to play Duquesne in the Atlantic 10 Tournament at 7 p.m. tomorrow.

Variety gives the rotation some bite

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) — Minnesota had to deal with Derek Lowe's sinker and Tim Wakefield's knuckler yesterday.

The Twins are lucky that Pedro Martinez's curveball and Curt Schilling's split-finger fastball won't be on display until Tuesday night when the Boston Red Sox face Cincinnati.

Add Byung-Hyun Kim and his extreme sidearm style to the mix, and the Red Sox have a rotation that should force teams to adjust from game to game.

They have two days off in the first nine days of the regular season. But once the Red Sox settle into a regular rotation, Wakefield

See PITCHING on page 7

Tennis gets doubled up

By Leah Wyner
Collegian Staff

Any tennis player will agree that the doubles point is an incredibly important part of any match. Because it's the first point, it plays a role in setting the stage for the rest of the match. The point that can put a team in the lead can just as easily set one behind, and all before the first singles match is played.

Although its importance is not always emphasized, the doubles point puts pressure on the singles players, especially the ones on the team that's already a point behind. Many matches come down to a single point, and if a team wins many but not all of the singles points, that doubles point can make the score extremely close, and the match intense until the very end.

UMass	3
UMBC	4
UMass	2
Cornell	5

So naturally, when the Massachusetts tennis team lost No. 1 doubles player Jenny Munroe soon after going against Temple, the next few matches were quite a struggle.

This past weekend was no exception, as the Minutewomen fell to the University of Maryland Baltimore County 4-3 Saturday, and Cornell the next day, 5-2.

After Munroe's withdrawal from school for personal reasons, the team has had a significant amount of trouble bouncing back, and filling her spot in the No 1. doubles position.

"Our doubles have been incredibly affected [by Munroe's departure]. Even though we have combinations on paper that should play well, they just haven't been playing well," UMass coach Judy Dixon said.

According to Dixon, it was the loss of the doubles point that caused the Minutewomen to lose the UMBC match 4-3, a drastic change from last fall's undefeated doubles season.

"It's difficult because in the fall we won all the doubles points that we played, and now we're sort of in the hole before we even get our hands into the match," Dixon said.

The Minutewomen struggled with doubles in the Cornell match as well. Stephanie Price and Dorothy Iwanowicz fell at the No. 1 doubles position, 9-8, and Christine Liehr and Jana Bartoloni fell in No. 2 doubles with a score of 8-3. Cornell proceeded to sweep the doubles matches, defeating co-captains Susan Hyams and Sasha Edelstein 8-4 at the No. 3 spot.

The sole point-scorers for the team in singles were Edelstein in the No. 3 position, 6-2, 6-3, and Iwanowicz at No. 4, 6-4, 6-4. And even though Hyams and Bartoloni were defeated in the No. 5 and 6 positions, respectively, they tied their opponents after the first two sets and lost only in the third round. According to Dixon, it's just as important to note that the 3-set singles

See TENNIS on page 8

Theron saves 'Monster' as film
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 6

Minutemen set to Duke it out in first round of A-10 tourney
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 99

Convicted D.C.-area sniper receives the death penalty

AP PHOTO/STEVE HELBER

Convicted sniper John Allen Muhammad stands as he is sentenced to death for the shooting of Dean Meyers at the Prince William County Circuit Court in Manassas, Va., yesterday.

By Matthew Barakat
Associated Press

MANASSAS, Va. (AP) — Sniper mastermind John Allen Muhammad was sentenced to death yesterday by a judge who called the Washington-area shootings that left 10 people dead "so vile that they were almost beyond comprehension."

Muhammad denied any involvement in the October 2002 rampage, echoing a claim of innocence he made in his opening statement to the jury when he briefly served as his own attorney.

"Just like I said at the beginning, I had nothing to do with this, and I'll say again, I had nothing to do with this," Muhammad said Tuesday.

He told the judge he plans to appeal, and urged, "Don't make a fool of the Constitution of the United States of America."

A jury recommended a death sentence for Muhammad last year, but Circuit Court Judge LeRoy F. Millette Jr. had the option to reduce it to life in prison without parole. Millette said the evidence of Muhammad's guilt was "overwhelming."

"These offenses are so vile that they were almost beyond comprehension," Millette said. Muhammad appeared in an orange jail jumpsuit with a slightly graying, unkempt beard, in sharp contrast to his clean-shaven, well-dressed appearance at trial. His teenage accomplice, Lee Boyd Malvo, is to be sentenced Wednesday to life in prison.

About 50 family members of sniper victims were in the courtroom. One silently shook his fist as Millette announced the sentence.

"Justice has been served today," said Sonia Wills, mother of sniper victim Conrad Johnson, who would have been 37 this Sunday. "I can go to my son's grave and wish him a happy birthday."

The sister of Hong Im Ballenger, allegedly killed by Muhammad and Malvo in Baton Rouge, La., in the weeks before the D.C. attacks, said Muhammad deserved to die.

"He killed so many innocent people," said a tearful Kwang Im Szuszka. "My nephew is 12 years old and he needs his mommy. ... It breaks my heart."

Muhammad, 43, was convicted of capital-murder on Nov. 17 for the Oct. 9, 2002, murder of Dean Harold Meyers at a gas station near Manassas.

The capital-area killings began on Oct. 2, 2002, when the pair shot a 55-year-old man to death outside a Wheaton, Md., supermarket. The following day, five people were killed in the Washington area _ four within a span of about two hours.

Muhammad and Malvo were captured Oct. 24 at a highway rest stop near Myersville, Md., in a car that had been altered to allow someone to fire a high-powered rifle from inside the trunk.

UMass campus loses reception as server drops Viacom stations

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

In the aftermath of repeated stalling of contract negotiations between the fourth-largest television distributor in the country and one of the world's leading media companies, the University of Massachusetts Housing Services Cable Network found itself unable to broadcast some of the most-watched television channels on campus yesterday.

EchoStar/DISH Network, the satellite television distributor that provides HSCN's cable content, dropped its broadcast of Viacom Corporation-owned television stations at midnight to comply with the expiration of its contract.

Students watching MTV, MTV2, VH-1, Nickelodeon, Comedy Central and BET lost reception of the content.

EchoStar also dropped its broadcast of CBS, which is owned by Viacom. This did not affect the University, as HSCN broadcasts a local CBS signal on its network.

In place of the normal cable signal came messages from EchoStar CEO Charlie Ergen, chastising Viacom for the difficulties the two parties reached in negotiations.

"Viacom Corporation, the owner of these channels, has made unreasonable demands to renew our agreement," he said.

Viacom executives responded yesterday in a conference call, expressing their disappointment in EchoStar and affirming their confidence that viewers will find ways to view the content of their channels, with or without EchoStar.

"We are broadcasters and programmers and the most important relationship we have is with our viewers," said Mark Rosenthal, president and chief operating officer of MTV Networks. "The idea that something or someone would disrupt that relationship, particularly in an effort to extort a better deal for themselves is to us really reprehensible."

COURTESY OF ECOSTAR/DISH NETWORK

Charles Ergen , CEO of Ecostar/Dish Networks .

"The ball is firmly in EchoStar's court," Rosenthal said. "Unless ... they pick it up, all we can do is inform their unhappy customers, who are now calling us by the tens of thousands, about all the excellent alternative TV distribution services available to them with cable and with Direct TV."

Although EchoStar no longer has the right to broadcast the Viacom stations without violating

See VIACOM on page 3

Grant awarded to reconstruct UMass courses' PRS and OWL

By Michelle Rivera
Collegian Staff

A $295,000 teaching grant was awarded to the Provost's Office at the University of Massachusetts last week, and will be used to fund the redesigning of selected courses in six UMass departments.

The Creating Active Learning Through Technology grant, given by the Davis Educational Foundation, will create both active learning inside the classroom by using a Personal Response System (PRS), as well as outside the classroom by using Online Web-based Learning assignments, or OWL.

The six departments involved in the redesigning are chemistry, classics, economics, English, music and dance and resource economics.

"With these new Davis funds, we can continue to expand and improve OWL to make course materials more interactive, more visual, and available anytime and anywhere you have an Internet connection," said Richard Rogers, the Faculty Advisor to the Provost for Undergraduate Education.

Rogers is also the principal investigator of the new Davis grant, and is joined by five co-principal investigators: Professor Norman D. Aitken from the economics department and instructional technology department; Glenn Richard Caffery, director of the statistical lab in the resource economics department; Professor Daniel A. Lass from the resource economics department; Executive Director David M. Hart of the Center for Computer-Based Instruction; and Mei-Yau Shih, coordinator of teaching technologies at the Center for Teaching.

The investigators will work with designated UMass faculty members in redesigning selected departmental courses.

In the chemistry department, several UMass faculty members will work with general chemistry instructors to extend the redesign to the large lecture courses in general chemistry. Classics professors will redesign their large lecture courses on

See GRANT on page 3

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Majorie Agosin speaks about her life as a poet and Latin American Jew in her lecture last night. Agosin is a professor at Wellesley College.

Jewish poet captures memories from Chile

By Michelle Rivera
Collegian Staff

"Poetry is the most fundamental thread to give a voice to what is so forbidden," said Marjorie Agosin, award-winning writer and advocator for human rights.

Agosin spoke last night before a crowded room of University of Massachusetts students and faculty members about her life as a Latin-American Jew.

Agosin spoke of ideas about conceptualization in her book, "Angel of Memory", and focused on human rights, memory, Judaism, and being a Latin-American Jewish woman.

Agosin writes poetry in Spanish, and says the language is very important to her, calling it the language of her spirit and memory. Agosin feels that there are connections between the Spanish language and Judaism.

"Jewish writers who are writing in Spanish today are the new generation of writers that reclaim their ancient language," she said.

Agosin's connection with the Spanish language began with her displacement from the Chilean world through dictatorship, which connected her to the Jewish world. She was raised and lived in Santiago, Chile for 16 years where, in the early 20th century, her Jewish paternal and maternal grandparents had emigrated from Europe in the early 20th century.

It was then that Agosin said she began to understand what had happened to minorities living in a nation such as Chile, making her an observer of her own country.

In her book, "Angel of Memory", Agosin "connects the holocaust to fascism in Chile," and wants her book to be seen as a voyage.

Agosin read excerpts from her book, as well as from a new collection of poems she is currently working on that is dedicated in memory of her grandmother. Agosin said that everyone has a responsibility to memory. " A world without memory is a world deprived of human rights," she said.

Visiting Professor of Judaic and Near Eastern Studies, Jyl L. Felman, gave the introduction for Marjorie Agosin.

"Now, I speak from the heart and passion of another Jewish woman writer, myself," said Felman. "The magnanimity for your vision released a joy in me that I have not felt for years."

"It is not often that a writer gets the privilege to be 'introduced by another writer," said Agosin, as she took the podium.

The readings ended with a discussion, and Agosin took several questions from UMass students and faculty.

"I very much enjoyed the students and being with the people and I found there was a lot of spirit here," Agosin said at the end of her address.

Agosin is currently a professor and chair of the Spanish department at Wellesley College.

The sponsors of the event last night included Judaic and Near Eastern Studies, the Center for Latin American and Caribbean Studies, Hillel House, the departments of English, women's studies, communication and media studies and Dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, Lee R. Edwards.

Debate team triumphs

By Amanda Kofck
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Policy Debate Team participated in the Cross Examination Debate Association's East Regional Championships. The team was also named The Cross Examin-ation Debate Association's East Debate Program of the Year by secret debate society SAMBA (Society Advocating More and Better Argumentation.).

"The only thing that makes them secret is the handshake, everyone knows who they are," said David Gove, the co-chair of the debate team and sophomore computer science major.

The novice and junior varsity teams were sent to represent UMass to debate on the United States and European relations. Alex Ambroz, a junior and finance and operations management major, received Top Speaker Overall in the novice division and Randy Brueckner, a freshman and legal studies major, succeeded to the quarter-finals of the novice division before losing.

Cailin Campbell, a sophomore

DEBATE from page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantanatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salsbiker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Poppas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagatic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kuggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Lita Lynch
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Sutger
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED AND OPERATED ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN ON-LINE SINCE JANUARY 1996. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
MDC DESIGN

Weekly Calendar of events

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

March 10 - March 15 2004

Today

Mount Holyoke College — Teresa Lean, co-chair of the Southwest Network of Environmental and Economic Justice and Joni Adamson, professor of English and Folklore Students at the University of Arizona, will give a lecture entitled, "Environmental Justice Networking on the US-Mexico Border," at 7 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium.

University of Massachusetts — Rabbi Shmuley Boteach, world renowned author of "Kosher Sex, Dating Secrets of the Ten Commandments," will be speaking about Kosher sex at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Smith College — At 8 p.m., the annual "Word! Five College Student Festival of Staged Readings" will be held in Hallie Flanagan Studio in Mendenhall Center. This festival highlights original works by students from all five campuses. This year's presentations will be: "Nothing But the Truth" by Bryan DeGuire, "Re: MISSION" by Nissa Perrott, "Spilling Venus" by Lenelle N. Moïse, "The Last Laugh" by Nikki Tai, "The Meritocracy: A Fable" by Justin Mitchell, and "Untitled" by Anoush Froundjian.

Tomorrow

Amherst College — Ann Maggs, vocalist, accompanied by guitarist Freddie Bryant , will perform "Heartstrings: Love Songs with Guitar" at 12 p.m. in Buckley Recital Hall of the Arms Music Center. The Performance will feature music by Astor Piazzola, Django Reinhardt, Antonio Carlos Jobim, Fats Waller and others.

Amherst College — Gideon Rosen, professor of philosophy at Princeton University, will give a talk titled "You Should Have Known Better: Culpable Ignorance in Law and Morality," at 4:30 p.m. in Cole Assembly Room in Converse Hall. This lecture is part of the Lecture Series on "Ethics, Metaphysics, and Psychology of Belief."

Mount Holyoke College — At 7 p.m., there will be a panel discussion entitled, "Are all Mothers Created Equal?" in Gamble Auditorium. Panelists include: Asha Bandele, features editor of Essence magazine; Professor Safiya Bandele, Director of the Center for Women's Development at Medgar Evers College; Joan Morgan, and Rebecca Walker.

Friday 12

University of Massachusetts — Early Registration for the two-day workshop "Cultivating the Wisdom of Our Intuitive Minds" on March 27 and March 28 with Ron W. Jue Ph.D is due by March 12. For further information contact Phyllis Robinson at (413) 659-3081.

Amherst College — From 6 p.m. to 7:30 p.m., Dr. Phuntsog Wangmo, under the sponsorship of the Shang Shung Institute, will teach a workshop on Traditional Tibetan Medicine entitled, "Healing Points on the Human Body (HPHB)" at Webster 217. This workshop will also meet on March 13 and 14 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. The fee for the full weekend workshop is $75 for students with a valid I.D., $150 for all others. Individual sessions are $15 for students and $30 for others. Discounts are possible. To sign up, call 413/369-4928 or contact the Asian Languages and Civilizations Department

Saturday 13

Mount Holyoke — The annual Spring Flower Show at the botanic garden will show until March 21 in Talcot Greenhouse. The show features many different kinds of blossoming spring bulbs and plants. The show is free and open to the public. Groups are welcome with advance notice. Please call 413-538-2116 for more information.

Smith College — John Putnam Demos, member of the history department of Yale University and author of "Entertaining Satan: Witchcraft and the Culture of Early New England", will give a lecture entitled, "Hard Thoughts and Jealousies: The Goody Parsons Witchcraft Case" at 2 p.m. in Wright auditorium.

Sunday 14

Smith College — Luiz de Moura Castro, world renowned pianist, will perform in concert in Sweeney Concert Hall at 4 p.m. Castro made his debut recital in the Teatro Municipal in Rio de Janeiro, at the age of nine. He has appeared with orchestras throughout the world and currently teaches at the Hartt School of Music, Hartford.

Monday 15

Mo-Hampshire College — At 6 p.m., a planning meeting will be held for the annual conference, "From abortion rights to social justice: Building the movement for Reproductive Freedom, in room 105 of Franklin Peterson Hall. The conference will be held from April 2 to April 4. Dinner will be served (with vegan-friendly options).

Attorney general halts gay marriage licenses

By JOHN CURRAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ASBURY PARK, N.J. (AP) — The day after New Jersey's first gay marriage was performed, the state attorney general Tuesday ordered city officials to stop issuing marriage licenses to same-sex couples and performing gay marriages — or face criminal charges.

Attorney General Peter C. Harvey also warned officials marriage licenses issued to same-sex couples are invalid. Letters were sent Tuesday to the city clerk, mayor and deputy mayor, who married two gay men Monday. Harvey told Deputy Mayor James Bruno he was wrong to do so.

"We urge you to carry out your official duties in a manner consistent with the well-established court decisions and advice set forth in the accompanying letter to avoid the initiation of legal action by our office," Harvey wrote. More marriages could mean "potential criminal prosecution." A conviction could result in a fine up to $10,000 and possible jail time, a spokesman for the attorney general's office said.

Frederick C. Raffetto, an attorney for Asbury Park, said a decision would be announced Wednesday about whether the city intended to abide by the order.

Meanwhile, same-sex couples continued to file for licenses through Tuesday afternoon; 10 of 18 applications had been completed, officials said.

Gay marriage has so far been rejected by state courts. Last Nov. 5, a judge ruled nothing in the state constitution guarantees same-sex unions as a right, and that the appropriate forum to change marriage laws is the Legislature. The ruling is being appealed by gay activists.

"The state is bound by the court, and the court has held that it is not legal," Gov. James E. McGreevey said. "Ultimately we're a nation of laws and we need to abide by the laws."

See GAY on page 3

Don't Put

Discrimination

into Our Constitution

We, the undersigned members of the University of Massachusetts community, believe in equality for all people, and oppose any constitutional amendment that would write discrimination into the Massachusetts Constitution creating second-class citizens by defining marriage as a union between a man and a woman.

Because the Constitutional Convention will reconvene on March 11th...

We urge all justice-loving people to immediately contact their elected representatives at (617) 722-1455 to make their feelings clear.

Bette Abrams-Esche, Edmund Ahern, Patricia Aithea, Chang AnChi, Matthew Arnold, Margaret Arsenault, Natalie Begin, Rochelle Begin, Charlie Belmar, Joyce A. Berkman, Gloria Beruske, Jen Bindeman, Bradley Blackwell, Melissa Blanksteen, Suzanne Bodian, Stefan Borodo, Mitch Boucher, Chrystal Boyce, Prof. John Brentlinger, Elaine Brigham, Gretchen Brinson, Eduardo Bustamante, Eduardo Bustanno, Heslic Harmer Button, Chris Caboilu, Santos Cabrene, Beth Caissie, Vanessa Calantropo, Elena Callahan, Monica L. Callahan, Julie Callon, Andrew Campbell, Nancy Campbell-Patteson, Maryjane Canavan, Gabriel Carlson, Rachael Caplin, Seth Cassidy, Ashley Childs, Laura Clark, Alisha Clarke, Gretel Clarke, Dan Clawson, Justin Cobb, Sarah Cohen, Rachael Cole, Keri Connell, Joe Connolly, Carine Corsaro, James Craig, Amy Cramm, Margaret Cunha, Chelsea Dacres-Smith, Ibrahim Dahlstrom-Hakki, Jeanette Davis, Brandi Dawson, Heather Deirdre, Adrian d'Errico, Alex Deschamps, Matt Deshaies, Laran Diehl Saito, Sara Donahoe, Elissa Dunn, Kevin Eddings, Megan Ehnelon, Emily Einhorn, Nikki Enia, Isabel Espinal, Kyle Faget, Diane Fedorchak, Lauren Feinman, Kasie Feral, Ann Ferguson, John T. Finn, William Fischer, Daria Fisk, Elizabeth Fitzpatrick, Tom Fleener, Richard Ford, Fran Fortino, Lindsay Franke, Lisa Freitag-Kestler, Debra Friedman, Melissa Fugiero, Patrick Getty, Kara Green, Pat Griffin, Larry Goldbaum, Naomi Goldberg, Caroline Goodman, Jamie Goodwin, Daya Gore, Lydia Guerra, Isabella Halsted, Lee Haripko, Amanda Hattoway, Jay Heath, Haner Hernandez, Emmalyn Hicks, Linda Hillenbrand, Jacob Hirsch, Grant M. Ingle, Lily Jampol, Lindsay Jarvis, Pamela Juenglng, Yohana Kahtzeff, Ramzi Kanazi, Miliann Kang, Shannon Keller, Lisa Kent, David King, Mathew King, Kathleen Kinnas, Alyssa Krupczak, Katharine Kyros, Sarah Lancaster, Beth Lang, Wesley LaRochelle, Chris Lawn, Jessica Leary, Karen Lederer, Sara Lennox, Sarah Levine, Aristides Lima, Juliana Leslie, Adam Litvinoff, Robin F. Lubezoff, Lucinda Lucey, Joseph Luvera, Sarah MacIntyre, Dorren Maczka, Michele Leaf, Jaime Mailloux, Leo Maley, Elizabeth Malloy, Sandy Mandel, Melissa Mannke, Annie Mara, Linda Marchesani, Melanie Marcou, Linda Matson, Linda McDonald, Michael McKinstry, Jaime McLaren, Tammy Means, Elizabeth Meech, Luis Melendez, Roberta Merrington, Mike Michalski, Julie Miles, Chris Montoya, Barbara Morgan, Susan Moser, Mark Math, Chris Nadeau, Josue Nasumento, Yesenia Nazario, Linda Nazo, Kathleen Nowicki, Matt Noyes, Juna Obedin-Maliver, Tamara Ohler, Marc O'Neil, Michael O'Neil, Mark Nelson, Elizabeth O'Rourke, Matt Ouellett, Christopher Padula, Christy Page, Max Page, Ray Paquette, Laura Patch, Matthew Pearlson, Amy Pereira, Saul Perlmutter, Jordan Peterson, Carrie Pierson, Douglas Plavin, Aditya Prasetyo, Mustafa Qazilbash, Shereen Rahimi, Anthony Ratcliff, Lance Reynolds, Roger Rhinehart, Kathy Rhines, Kevin Rhines, Sandra Ridinger, Jason Roberge, Kia Roberts, Dean Robinson, Emma Rose, Sarah Rutherford, David Ryan, Molly Ryan, Christina Sapienza, Nathan Sanford, Cristina Sanza, Chizu Sato, Paul Schank, Alex Schlicher, Nicholas Schlicher, Ginny Schneider, Kate Schneiter, Andria Schwartz, Maggie Shar, Naheed Sherzai, Greta Shultz, Ariana Sicairos, Jean Sienkewicz, Emily Silverman, Anna-Laura Sloan, Sarah Smelik, Kaitlyn Soligan, Melanie Southworth, Jenny Spencer, Joseph Steig, Zachary Stephens, Eileen Stewart, K.C. Strahorn, Aaron Streilner, Helena Strizhiver, Kate Sullivan, Amy Swartz, Matthew Taylor, Lisa Temkin, Ann Marie Torres, Ian Trefethen, Christina Turner, Jen Turner, Marina Tzakosta, Paul Vasconcellos, Shelley Vellerman, Carol Wallace, Kelly Wardner, Stacy Wasserman, Kathy Weilerstein, Theresa Wesley, Donna Weston, Donna White, Mary White, Vanessa White, Frances Wilkins, Maureen Williams, Alexis Witherspoon, Talia Yagodin, Felice Yeskel, Ximena Zuniga

Echostar blamed for dropping channels

VIACOM from page 1

copyright laws, the media company is blaming EchoStar for dropping the channels.

"I think its safe to say had there been any progress in negotiations, had there been any suggestion from EchoStar right up until the last minute that they were remotely prepared to still make an offer, that we'd still be on the air," said Marty Franks, executive vice president of CBS.

To support this, Franks noted that EchoStar's contract with Viacom expired on Dec. 31, and that the media company had nevertheless allowed continued retransmission of its content to EchoStar's customers.

"We extended, we extended, we extended and then [EchoStar] ran to court," Franks said. "We extended again after court. It's hard for me to see how [Ergen] could suggest that we pulled them down."

Ergen claimed in his message, repeatedly broadcasted yesterday in place of MTV2, that Viacom had attempted to increase the cost of retransmission of its content by 40 percent. Rosenthal claimed that Viacom had requested a total increase of 6 cents per month per customer in order to provide the service, amounting to less than a 10 percent increase in total cost to EchoStar.

"Their 40 percent number, to the best we can determine, is just a lot of malarkey," Rosenthal said.

Rosenthal argued that the less-than-10 percent increase in total cost Viacom says it requested is not unusual or unreasonable.

"To put this in perspective, I'd also point out that EchoStar recently raised its rates to subscribers by as much as $3 per month," Rosenthal said. "I'd also point out that what we were seeking for all our channels together ... was substantially less than $2 a month per subscriber that distributors paid for ESPN alone."

According to Franks, EchoStar proposed paying 40 percent less for retransmission rights of Viacom channels to its customers in the new contract negotiations, which was unacceptable to Viacom.

"I guess we didn't feel that the quality of our offering had declined quite that much," he said.

In the message in place of MTV2, Ergen said another source of contention is Viacom's requirement that EchoStar pay to carry channels it has no interest in. Viacom executives claim that this is now an issue for Ergen, but that the main issue is the cost of the channels.

"This is a price negotiation, pure and simple," Rosenthal said.

"This is about price," Franks said.

Ergen has also complained that the cost of Viacom's channels to EchoStar exceeds the cost of the channels to other television distributors. A variation in prices of content to different distributors is standard practice between media companies and distributors, Franks said.

"[Ergen's complaint] would suggest that every deal is roughly the same, and that every multi-channel distributor brings the same attributes to the [negotiating] table," he said. "He brings different plusses and minuses to the table, and that results in a different negotiation that leads to a different deal."

Debate team named program of year history major, and David Ryan, a senior physics major, made it to the finals in the junior varsity division and finished second place overall. Ryan received an award for being the eight Speaker Overall in the division.

See DEBATE on page 1

The competition was held at Marist College in Poughkeepsie, NY on Feb. 27-29. Besides UMass, approximately 30 other schools competed in the East Regional Championship.

During the debates, six teams of two debate in a preliminary round. The winners go to "out-rounds," which are like play-offs, according to Gove.

The current policy debate team at UMass is three years old. In the past, UMass has had successful debate teams but the popularity dwindled in the 1990's and then the team became nonexistent, according to a press release written by the debate team.

In 2000, four people formed a new debate team at UMass, but they weren't recognized as a Registered Student Organization by the Student Government Association until the end of the spring semester, 2001, according to the press release.

There are now 12 people on the student-run debate team and they are always accepting new members.

According to the press release, "debate isn't merely some student activity, it is a major part of their institution's competition with other schools. No school we have debated against or heard about is entirely student-run like we are."

The debate team aspires to compete in more debates and belong to more debate associations, such as the Cross-Examination Debate Association, for which they pay a member fee of $50, according to Gove. Most funding comes from alumni.

The UMass Policy Debate Team meets every Monday night at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Students interested are encouraged to check out the website www.debate.vze.com or email at debate@stuas.umass.edu.

The UMass Policy Debate Team is holding a mock tournament on Apr. 24 and 25. Flyers will be posted when the location is decided.

Grant to revamp UMass classes

See GRANT on page 1

Greek Mythology and Greek Civilization courses.

From the economics department, chosen faculty will redesign the introductory macroeconomics course. English professors will address issues of participation and democracy in the English course "American Identities." Faculty in the music and dance and the Fine Arts Center department will redesign "The Lively Arts" and "American Popular Music".

Lastly, the resource economics department will integrate PRS and OWL activities in and out of the classroom for introductory statistics.

"These changes will continue to demonstrate that UMass Amherst is out in front in leveraging teaching technology to improve student learning," said Rogers.

This grant is an extension from two previous grants; the first being from the Pew Center that allowed the departments of biology and microbiology to redesign their large lecture course, "Introductory Biology", and the second being part of the newly completed Davis Educational grant which has funded course redesigns in six departments to use technology to bring active learning to their courses.

In a continuation to the previous grants, the new grant will assist in personalizing any large lecture experience for UMass students. This integration will heavily rely on OWL for pre-lecture activity, homework assignments and post-lecture quizzes.

"The second Davis grant allows us to continue those efforts to perfect the Personal Response System, known as PRS, using the handheld infrared transmitters, or just 'clickers,' to allow all students to participate in a lecture rather than only the extroverts and those eager to raise their hands every time the professor asks a question," Rogers said.

The Davis grant was initiated March 1, and will run for two years.

The Davis Educational Foundation was established by Stanton and Elisabeth Davis after his retirement as chairman of Shaw's Supermarkets, Inc.

Gays get a "no"

See GAY on page 2

McGreevey urged gay couples to take advantage of New Jersey's recently passed domestic partnership measure.

"I'm very disappointed," said Kara Snow, 43. Snow, who arrived at 4 a.m. to make sure she was first in line when the city clerk's office opened. She said she hoped to wed Friday — though the state might intervene first.

Absolute Nutrition Center
Weight Loss and Body Building Specialists
Slim down before spring break!
Get Ephedra while you can!
Try University Nutrition Heart to Beach Girl Tanning
549-5083

Tired of the Dorms?
"IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE"
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant st.
Now accepting applications for June 2004

Every Wednesday is COLLEGE NIGHT
at
The Waterfront
in Holyoke
FEATURING:
$1 DRAFT
$2 SHOOTERS
$2 WELL DRINKS
Hosted by: DJ KT
Spinning Hip-Hop & Reggae all night long
NO Cover Charge
21+ Only 10-2AM
920 Main St. (Lower Rd. to Holyoke)
413-533-2292

NEED A SUMMER JOB IN AMHERST?
University Conference Services is currently accepting applications for FULL and PART TIME SUMMER EMPLOYMENT for Summer Conference Housing
Pick up an application package at Conference Services Office, 918 Campus Center, or online
www.aux.umass.edu/conferenceservices
Completed applications are due by 5pm, April 9, 2004

UMASS HOCKEY VS. UMASS LOWELL RIVER HAWKS
2004 HOCKEY EAST QUARTER FINALS
MARCH 11TH, 12TH, & 13TH
7PM
Senior Defenseman Nick Kuiper
Senior Defenseman Thomas Pöck
Junior Forward Greg Mauldin
Senior Forward Mike Warner
DOORS OPEN AT 5:30PM
STUDENT TICKETS FREE!
BERKSHIRE DC • CAMPUS CENTER
MULLINS CENTER

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass right to pursue alcohol changes slowly

As the University of Massachusetts continues to debate the merits of multiple recommendations made by the UMass Alcohol Task Force to curb excessive alcohol use, University administration needs to always keep one very obvious campus group in mind: the students.

The task force's report includes many new and potentially controversial changes for the campus, including sending letters home to parents when their children break liquor laws, instituting community billing as a part of dormitory life, and putting professional security staff in all residential buildings.

Some of the proposals are good. The report calls for a number of changes that could be helpful and positive in changing a perceived cultural problem centering on alcohol at UMass, things that could benefit the student body regardless whether or not there is a problem now, especially increased programming for students.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, however, stands in agreement with the Student Government Association in denouncing several key parts of the task force's report. While we do believe alcohol abuse and alcohol-related events like vandalism and riots and disturbances following Red Sox games in the fall are problematic, we also recognize that for any changes to be effective, the student body as a whole is going have to accept changes that are made.

That means the recommendations need to have palatability — something that a number of the task force's suggestions fall short of.

A number of the proposed changes have drawn the ire of students for a perceived lack of understanding of the University's student body by the task force. Community billing means innocent students could be charged with destruction caused by others, the theory goes. Segregating the student body by age means a lack of community, they say. Administration needs to remember such reservations as they move forward with new alcohol policy plans, or implementation could be severely undermined.

Thus far, the University has proceeded wisely by floating ideas slowly without making them appear threatening or imminent. This is a good start. It stirs debate and gives administrators a chance to determine what public perception will be — something vital, if changing policy is going to have a positive impact at UMass.

We encourage administrators and the student body to continue the stream of communication regarding alcohol policies that has been central to public policy debates on campus all year. If the student body point of view is kept in mind as administrators plan changes, there are several positive changes that could be put in place based on the task force's recommendations. If student input is disregarded, however, the entire point of the process — improving campus life — will be undermined. It'll be a shame if all of the hard work that went into the report goes for naught.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

University walking a tightrope

Scott Eldridge'll

With the notion of sending parents letters about their child's alcoholic transgressions, the University of Massachusetts administration has proposed to blur a line between student and parent responsibility.

As members of a large bureaucratic school, UMass students are forever reminded that they are responsible for their actions. Signing into residence halls, signing for transcripts, enduring lines at any of a large number of offices, seeing advisors and managing money, schedules, jobs and health are persistent reminders that from freshman year till final graduation (or whatever other end is found), we are in charge of our own fates at UMass.

But for as many students as there are on campus, there are as many balances between parental contribution and student control.

Students should bear the brunt of the responsibility for making sure their academic success is paid for, and likewise take the responsibility for all other UMass-related successes, obstacles or easements.

The financial scenarios run the gamut from wholly independent and self-supported students who pay their own way to entirely subsidized scholars who have their financial freedom from one place or another. Equally, parents are as involved as imaginable (daily phone calls, checkups on the weekend or in some cases the homes students live in) to entirely distant (void of contact, dependence or even interest.)

Safely, it can be assumed that every student acts differently and feels differently as to how their lives here should intertwine with their parents' world, if at all. But with a proposed letter home for when students slip up these distinctions are ignored.

There are students here who will incur the whole weight of UMass when they graduate – debt from loans, the quality of their transcript etc... – whose parents are effectively not involved in their UMass experience. Should these parents be informed that their son or daughter drank too much or partied too loudly?

Equally there are students who will have all their bills paid out of a parent's checkbook. While it seems that these students are more obligated to answer to their parents for their actions based on financial responsibility, it can't be assumed that there isn't a relationship where these students are on their own.

What if a student were to be arrested at UMass, by the UMass police department, charged and convicted for some crime (for argument's sake we'll assume they really did do it). The parent who signed the check to the Bursar's Office would not likely serve time or be responsible to pay any fines from this, so why are they invited into other aspects of their children's adult world?

It's safe to assume that all the students here are legally adults and those who are not are in a certain minority. Bearing the weight of their legal and illegal actions, students should also be treated like adults. Again, a letter home to their financiers doesn't treat them justly.

There might be some logic to this concept as a whole – putting added pressure on the student from those who pay the bills, but then wouldn't it make sense to send a letter home to every Massachusetts taxpayer? Maybe a monthly newsletter letting all the taxpayers know who broke policy on their dime should go out.

This borders on absurdity, and with good reason. We can't assume that every parent or taxpayer has a vested or even passing interest in a college student's drinking habits.

And, while we're on the thought of financial and therefore behavioral responsibility of parents, should the burden of sorting out bill-paying woes fall on the student and check signee? Wouldn't it follow that if a parent should be involved in their child's alcohol consumption because they pay the bill, they should be able to take a hand in dealing with the Bursar's office?

But such a parity doesn't exist, and probably for good reason. Students should bear the brunt of the responsibility for making sure their academic success is paid for, and likewise take the responsibility for all other UMass-related successes, obstacles or easements.

It gets blurry when someone tries to draw a line between where parental responsibility ends and student responsibility starts and it is, to say the least, dangerous to pick middle ground and carve it in stone. As much as it is a pain to stand in line, or stay on the phone waiting for answers to our queries, the University would be wise to leave parents out and let students remain in control.

Otherwise, the administration is putting responsibility where it might not exist and taking it away from the very students it should be modeling as responsible adults and civic participants not keeping students in limbo between adulthood and childhood.

Scott Eldridge II is a Collegian columnist.

A lack of academic potency

S.J. Port

It's Saturday night at 11:30 p.m. The DuBois library closed an hour and a half ago; the Amherst College library closed half an hour ago; and Rao's has finally, kindly, ushered me out in order to close shop. I have two political science exams and three papers due in the upcoming week, and I live in the dorms.

Most of the weekend has been sacrificed to studying, re-reading, and writing. I say 'sacrificed' only because it would have been fun to see the final hockey game of the season, taken time out for a movie, or had a beer with a friend. But, alas, the work to hour ratio is disturbingly disjointed this week, and the lessons I truly enjoy are now anxiety-producing.

Since I live in the dorms, most of this work has taken place outside of my dorm room –a single in Van Meter Hall. Lugging books and a laptop, I've nestled into coves in every library, coffee house and bookshop this side of the Connecticut River just to get some peace and quiet.

"Stop," you say. "Did you just admit to having a single?"

Why, yes, I did, however a single with sophomores blasting music to the tune of beirut on either side of me and across the hallway does little –even with ear plugs—to promote focus.

Furthermore, a single dorm room is fantastic in the interest of privacy, personal pursuits, and one's sanity, but there is nothing more compelling than a room full of other scholars undertaking studious pursuits to motivate oneself. This is not to say the single is not a beautiful thing, cause it is. My single has allowed me on most weeknights to study uninterrupted whenever I like, for however long I like, in comfort. Long gone are the nights spent yawning under fluorescent lighting in the hallway so as not to wake my sleeping roommate.

However, come weekends, or times like the wee hours of the morning, when focus seems futile and only the collective resilience of a group hard at work can keep me going on my own path, a single doesn't cut it. Van Meter, like many other dorms, has no available quiet space for residents to study in. The singular "lounge" is in fact the entryway lobby where the communal television and vending machines are also found. The basement area is used as a stage for concerts, shows, meetings, yoga ... you name it, four or seven days a week. There is no space designated as a study zone, and no computer lab (an amenity several dormitories boast). There is a single classroom, located in the southern wing, accessed by a key signed out with the cluster office. The classroom has old, decrepit couches, and few if any tables; it looks more like a basement storage area than a welcoming study space. If the cluster office is not open, this room is not available for students to study in; the hours that the classroom is available coincide with library hours and thus does not extend a students possible study timetable.

On either side of Van Meter sits Commonwealth College honors living areas: Butterfield and Orchard Hill. Butterfield, once a rogue abode for anarchist heathens, has been renovated and redesigned as Commonwealth College's freshman living programs. Non-freshman honors students, however, reside in the hall in singles as academic peer advisors or as resident assistants. Butterfield is quieter than Van Meter, has no influx of loud performances, and is equipped with several study lounges.

The two sibling buildings share a cluster office. Due to this fact, Butterfield students can access Van Meter with their UCards during most of the day and late into the night –whenever the cluster office is open. Van Meter residents do not have access to Butterfield. Even those of us who are honors students residing in Van Meter cannot access the tranquility of Butterfield's lounges. Nor do Van Meter residents have access to study areas in Orchard Hill or in any other dormitory on campus. Students who live in dormitory halls without designated academic lounges or labs should be encouraged academically with the opportunity to use facilities in other residence halls.

All students should be encouraged to pursue their education to the fullest possible extent. We are an educational institution, and that means putting stock in study areas, books, classrooms, language labs, computer labs, and quiet motivating spaces to create a campus atmosphere that makes studying attractive. Anybody who says a dingy cubicle in the basement is as motivating as an invitingly clean wood table and comfortable chair under warm lighting is either lying, the person who will be asked to pay for this wood table, or more driven and less shallow than me.

The atmosphere at the University of Massachusetts is not conducive to academic rigor.

Residence halls without study areas lack what makes a university academically potent: promotion of a mission of erudition in academia.

Undergraduate students on campus struggle to find quiet, comfortable areas in which to study, write and conference. Residence halls without study areas lack what makes a university academically potent: promotion of a mission of erudition in academia. The establishment of respectable academic lounges by the University, both in the dorms and on campus, as well as extended library hours would promote self-edification to students.

S.J. Port is a Collegian Columnist.

Getting the spring break fever

Hannah Drake

What do a tanning salon, a fitness center, airlines, and a tropical island all have in common? Simple. They love spring breakers.

People have been getting memberships and going to the gym religiously in order to look their best while wearing their least, making it almost impossible to get onto the good cardio' machines without calling two weeks in advance to reserve a half hour timeslot. And I'm serious when I say people get ferocious over these precious workouts.

They start out nice enough: "Excuse me, but I signed up for this machine at 5:30 p.m., and someone else signed up for that one." They tell you, and you look at the clock and see it's 5:35 p.m. You give them your apologies and hop off like it's no big deal, which really, it shouldn't be. Personally, I rebelled against the sign-up system for a while. I like the freedom of seeing an empty elliptical glider and hopping on. It's welcoming.

But I gave in on my most recent trip to the gym mostly because I wanted to be able to bug someone if they were on my machine, just as I had been bugged several times before. And I wanted to be sure that people would leave me alone while I furiously burned off calories during the all-too-short timeslot of a half hour.

The competition over time at tanning salons is similar. You have to make appointments well in advance, whereas any other time of year you can just stroll right in and lie or stand while your skin is being turned a delicious golden brown. Some places even have cool themes to their tanning rooms to make you feel like you're at an amusement park. Who cares that you're also inviting wrinkles to decorate your body earlier in life than they previously would have? Who cares that you're upping your chances of skin cancer? That doesn't matter right now. You're going to Cancun, and you don't want to burn when you get there.

Sunscreen? Forget it. Nope, you're sure that the best way to prevent burning is to make sure you have already acquired a base tan, which is technically almost-burnt skin. Thus, business in the tanning world is booming right now. Owners are thanking the tanning gods for their beloved spring breakers: guys suddenly don't care about whether or not going tanning is "metro," the girls who normally will tell you they don't go tanning because it's bad for you are going now because they need that base tan, and they still have their permatanned regular customers.

And the airlines! Do I even need to put in writing how psyched they are to have a thing called "spring break?" If you check out prices now for last minute trips, your eyes will pop. Even getting a flight is almost impossible. Same thing goes for tropical islands. I could have said hotels, or motels, or bars, or shops, but all of these businesses will be infinitely grateful for the spring breakers. Hotels and motels are booked, plus bars, nightclubs, and tourist shops know they will be making ridiculous amounts of money during spring break.

Spring break is a good system: tanning salons, fitness centers, airlines, tropical islands and various businesses are more than willing to take our money for that precious week in March.

I'm no different. I have the spring break fever, too. I would go tanning if I could; I can't because I got laser surgery. But I still got my tan, except it's from a bottle. You'll see me at the gym; I'm definitely in the population of new-found gym-rats. I'm going to be on a flight, spending money, and basking in the sun.

So all in all, I think spring break is a good system: tanning salons, fitness centers, airlines, tropical islands and various businesses are more than willing to take our money for that precious week in March. And we're more than happy to spend it. We are content because, as college students, we're just happy to be on spring break.

Hannah Drake is a UMass student.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

Passion of the blind

Elizabeth Carter

Things have been building up lately, piling on top of each other so much so I can barely see beneath the pile. Yet somewhere beneath the mire, I pulled myself back, took a deep breath and caught view of some insight. This sudden insight made me wonder if maybe amid all the hustle and bustle of our tightly packed schedules, overworked days, and scant sleep schedules we have begun to miss the point of so many things.

Life seemingly is becoming so "in your face" and rushed for all of us that it seems that all we can see anymore is what's on the surface. After all, the surface is what's closest. For accepting things at face value is easier than delving into their greater implications; who has time for that anyways? This "surface acceptance problem" seems to have imbedded itself in all areas and social strata's of society. It appears that so many people are no longer able to rise above the quagmire of everyday living to see deeper and beyond the facades. So many aspects of life are veiled.

So what is it I'm talking about? Well last week I went to see a movie. I thought this movie was excellently made. It was that type of movie that you walk out of the theater feeling as if you've gained something you didn't have when you came in, and it was called "The Passion of the Christ." Now let me state flat out, I'm in no way Christian, I've never been baptized (and I'm not afraid of burning in hell for it.) and in spite of being well versed in the bible and considering it a worthwhile read, I don't agree with the doctrine on a whole.

So why is it that I would think "The Passion of the Christ" is a good movie? Well for a number of reasons. The first being that even if you watched that movie and had no concept of what religion it was referring to, or that it was even about religion you would still receive a very profound message from the movie as a whole. That message being that once a man lived who loved humanity so much that in spite of the fact that much of humanity hated him, tortured him and made him suffer what seemed a thousand deaths, and despite the fact that he could have stopped all this personal suffering, he did not. Why? Because he knew that there was a dire lesson held in his self-sacrifice. People needed to learn from him that no matter how great your suffering is, never grow hard and unforgiving, never stop loving. For though it's easy to hate, the true strength of man lies in his/her ability to love and to forgive. And what a nice world we would live in if everyone felt that way.

That was the true message of the movie, "The Passion of the Christ," as to whether or not that's what God's been saying I couldn't tell you. Yet for many people, the deeper meaning of this movie has been bypassed, and entirely missed. An outcry is occurring from both camps over the misinterpreted messages of this movie. Christians of all kinds are sending hate mails to Rabbis and Jewish people proclaiming their hatred of Jews because of what they did to Jesus (in the movie that is). On the other side of the argument the Jewish community is outraged with the movie claiming it promotes anti-Semitism due to the harsh manner in which the Pharisees (Jewish elders) were portrayed.

Though it's easy to hate, the true strength of man lies in his/her ability to love and to forgive. And what a nice world we would live in if everyone felt that way.

So who is right? Quite frankly neither! The reasons for this being that both sides are only focusing on what is apparent at the surface level. Yes on the surface the Pharisees were very cruel to Jesus, and they showed that very clearly in the movie. However if they had been nice to him and maybe just sent him home with a slap on the wrist for all his blasphemous preaching, I somehow doubt we'd have modern Christianity like we do today (and what a shame that would be). If it wasn't for the Pharisee's cruelty Jesus' message would never have been dispelled — he even explained in the movie that everything that must happen will happen (or something similar to that).

So it seems that the Christians who are running out of "The Passion of the Christ" with newly inspired anti-Semitism are the Christians who bring shame to the religion, because by hating Jews they're doing exactly the opposite of the movie's (and possibly the religion's) greater message. And similarly the Jewish community needs to understand that if a person is so small minded as to hate all Jews over a Mel Gibson movie, they're not Christians, they're imbeciles. All in all if everyone would just take a step back and stop interpreting everything for face value they might come to realize that both movies as well life have far greater implications to them, but only if your eyes are open wide enough to see them.

Elizabeth Carter is a Collegian columnist.

I want my MTV...back

Molly Eggleston

This past Tuesday I was flipping through the channels from bed in my dorm room. I've had a bad case of the flu this week so television has been a very important part of passing my time. Leaving my room has been difficult because I've been so sick, and I have spent hours in bed watching TV. As I flipped to my favorite channels I found that none of them were on. I had seen the warnings scrolling across the bottom of the screen for the past few days but I didn't expect the channels to really be taken off the air.

It was really upsetting. The missing channels are MTV, MTV2, VH1, BET, Comedy Central, and Nickelodeon. That's a great deal of channels to suddenly have to go with out.

I loved watching "Nick at Night" every evening. During the daytime, the music channels are the best to watch to find a video or a show that's funny.

The Dish network, which provides cable television to the dorms on campus, is having issues with the contract renewal for these channels. According to The Dish Network, Viacom, the company that provides the missing channels has been making unreasonable demands in their contract renewal. They want to increase the cost 40 percent and are forcing other channels that many viewers don't want into the contract.

According to Charlie Ergen, the CEO of the Dish network, other alternative channels are being offered. Channels like Disney, Fuse, and Great American Country are being advertised as being offered as free alternatives until this dispute is over. I went to watch Disney and Fuse, but of course, they are not being offered on campus. Not only are we missing the majority of our music channels but, we are not getting the bonus channels that were introduced to help ease the problem.

The Dish network is also offering a one-dollar credit to all Dish network subscribers. We, as college students who live on campus, have the cost of our cable included in our housing fees. We are missing out on our channels but not getting our dollar back. I know it's just a dollar, but it's a dollar that we deserve. Will we ever get to see it? Probably not.

I am very frustrated by these passing events, and believe that many other students will be too. A large portion of college students' favorite channels are missing.

I am very frustrated by these passing events, and believe that many other students will be too.

A large portion of college students' favorite channels are missing. How can we go about fixing this problem? Complain about it. Contact Viacom, the MTV networks, Housing services and the Dish network with your complaints. Viacom can be reached at 212-258-6000. MTV network is available at 212-258-8000. The Housing services can be reached at 545- 4803. Charlie Ergen's email is ceoofdishnetwork@dishnetwork.com. You can check out the website at www.dishnetwork.com.

This is a problem that affects a great deal of people and cannot continue. The only way to solve it is to apply pressure to those making decisions. Viacom should not be allowed to continue withholding our favorite channels. I may have to work for it, but I want my MTV.

Molly Eggleston is a Collegian Columnist.

A change is needed in 2004

Johnny Donaldson

Election day is approaching. We have narrowed down the pig pile of Democratic candidates to Massachusetts Sen. John Kerry, who looks more like a melted candle than any other previous presidential hopeful. We are facing the moment of truth: the moment where we decide to either A) take a look at the state of the country and decide to fix it or B) let the fat-cat incumbent have office for another four long years.

Yep, 2004 is the year when we'll know whether America is sick of George W. Bush's inept, dangerous idea of presidential duty, or whether we are gullible enough to buy even more of his creative lies and allow him to rule for another term.

Me? You may not have guessed yet, but I'm willing to do without Bush and his cronies for the rest of my life. Who needs to be led down – yet again – the weedy path to war, to economic instability, to environmental destruction and to Bush's special brand of fundamentalist Christian, narrow-minded moralizing?

We all know by now that the war in Iraq was a sham, that Bush wasted the lives of countless American servicemen and women and even more innocent Iraqi's to cement his own bullheaded, short-sighted machismo. His now-known-to-be-false declarations of WMDs in Iraq were just the work of an angry, overgrown frat boy seeking to correct an insult on him and his property. Since that "insult" was as catastrophic as Sept. 11 that required the man with the itchy trigger finger to send over military action to a desert country, while hostile, had nothing to do with the attacks. But boy did Bush's war-mongering briefly make him – and, by extension, America – look strong and tough. (No, it just made us look more stupid and egotistical than we already are perceived to be.)

So we know all that now. Now Bush wants to move away from the controversy of the war to some new controversies that will – in his mind at least – make him look like the ideal candidate for the 2004 presidency. He wants to exploit the tragedy of Sept. 11 for his own gaining, using horrifying images of death and destruction from that day to further his own end. He's using the grief and pain of the families of victims to help promote himself as some sort of modern American hero, bravely leading the country after the worst man-made tragedy since Pearl Harbor. All hail, the self-made deity George W. Bush and his use of emotional manipulation to fraud a public still hurting – almost three years later – from one of the biggest mass murders in American history! Forget that he has, is, and probably will continue to use the terrorist attacks as his own personal "heroic" photo opportunity.

When he's not busy riding on the coattails of suffering to score himself a political victory, Bush is busy surfing the waves of ignorance and discrimination – all in the name of preserving the "sanctity" of marriage. Bush has been vigorously pushing for an amendment to the Constitution to ban gay marriage. Bush wants to take the living will of the people, the document that has, for over 200 years, protected our rights as citizens in this country of ours, and use it to forbid a percentage of those citizens from having equal rights. And this is the man that represents the American people? If he represents us, than all the strides we, as a people, have made in favor of equality the years will be rendered moot. With Bush at the helm, we are basically saying that we are nation of people who are separate but equal, where only certain folks receive freedoms. Another person has no right to tell another person what to do, unless the person's activities negatively affect others. Loving a person, regardless of his or her gender, should not come under any legal jurisdiction. No one has the right to put limits on who anyone can love, even if they don't personally find it "moral."

Now Bush wants to move away from the controversy of the war to some new controversies that will – in his mind at least – make him look like the ideal candidate for the 2004 presidency.

Bush's nefarious recent activities also extend to include outsourcing jobs to foreign countries despite the fact that our economy has been ailing since Bush's 2001 inauguration. According to the AFL-CIO website, the economy has lost 2.9 million private sector and 2.8 million manufacturing jobs, leading to a unemployment rate that's been at it's highest since 1983. Bush's Council of Economic Advisors has said it would have established 3.9 million new jobs (upwards of almost 325,000 a month), but is currently 1.8 million shy of its goal. Bush ignores the workers he courts with his tasteless, but manipulative ad campaign designed to prey on their patriotic, full-blooded American beliefs. He sends needed jobs overseas to, as he says, boost our economy and forgets the millions of struggling Americans lost with sources of income. How does this help? Yes, outsourcing costs less in taxpayer money than hiring within, but without jobs those Americans can't even pay their taxes. Bush serves his own special interests, not the people. Hopefully, we won't lose sight of that as November draws near.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

GRAD STUDENT SPEAKS OUT AGAINST FEE

The University has, through the International Programs Office (IPO), stepped up its campaign against those opposed to the International Student Fee, as reported in The Collegian last week. This demonstrates just how worried the University is by what we're doing and shows how successful our rally was. They are speaking through IPO to try and play us off against them, when our gripe is with the University. This is shameful, sending out IPO cap in hand to try and collect from us so that the University does not tell them off.

What's even more insulting is that the University is tacitly threatening us all, even while they have proposed an unjust fee, which violates various stipulations of our graduate contracts, and the basic rights of our undergraduate colleagues. They are speaking as the high and mighty while we are grieving the fee through the proper legal channels.

In attempting to use the mechanisms which we are protesting against as a way to leverage our paying of the fee, the University realizes just how calamitous it would be if we don't pay; not financially, not for us as individuals, but because the University would have to work out an appropriate, respectful and non-discriminatory way to pay for this fee.

The campus and the community are on our side, as shown by the nearly 1000 people who have signed our petition (http://www.petitiononline.com/survfee/petition.html) and support from resolutions by the Massachusetts Society of Professors, the Graduate Employee Organization and proposals under debate by the Student Government Association.

Please consider the establishment propaganda being disseminated when judging what we do, and thank you all for your support.

Craig Sinclair
Department of Comparative Literature

THE REAL CONTRADICTION OF RELIGION AND POLITICS

Although I am writing to address the entire student population, these words come in direct response to Ben Duffy's "Religion and politics: the contradiction," printed in the March 2 issue of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Duffy argues that the separation of church and state is unnecessary and that "society has the right to hold individuals to moral standards, even those grounded in religion." Specifically, Duffy's argument centers on the debate surrounding gay marriage. Duffy does not hide the fact that the standards he speaks of are founded in "Judeo-Christian ethic." I must question, then, why Christianity should be the basis behind state law?

It is true that Christians make up a large portion of our population, but to be American does not necessarily mean to be Christian. Our citizens are Islamic, Buddhist, Agnostic, Atheist, Hindu, Unitarian Universalist, Wiccan, Pagan, Druid, Mormon, and the list continues ad-nauseum. It is pretentious and ignorant to assume that one set of beliefs should be the standard by which all are judged.

Duffy sites the Civil Rights and Abolitionist Movements as examples of the necessary link between Church and State. He is right when he says that both of these movements invoked beliefs from the Bible as defense for their causes. It is ridiculous, however, to conclude: "What exactly makes murder immoral, if not because the Bible says so?" I believe it was Athena who established a justice system to prevent murderous revenge, and this had nothing to do with Christianity.

I often hear that gay marriage is immoral and does not coincide with the Christian sacrament. Were marriage simply a matter of religion, this argument would be valid. Unfortunately, marriage is not just a religious institution; it carries with it 1,049 rights, including the right to make decisions on a partner's behalf in a medical emergency; the right to petition for same-sex partners to immigrate; the right to assume parenting rights and responsibilities when children are brought into a family through birth; adoption; surrogacy or other means; the right to share equitably all jointly held property and debt in the event of a breakup and since there are no laws that cover the dissolution of domestic partnerships; family-related Social security benefits, income and estate tax benefits, disability benefits, family-related military and veterans benefits, the right to inherit property from a partner in the absence of a will...

Are you getting sick of this list yet? I have mentioned 13 different rights denied to homosexuals. There are still over a thousand more. The Civil Rights and Abolitionist Movements did not succeed merely because they mentioned religious belief; they succeeded because they were concerned with the basic rights of human beings. I thank Ben Duffy for comparing these movements to the fight for same-sex marriage; indeed, they are quite the same.

Heather Comtois
UMass student

ANGRY STUDENT AGREES THAT RESLIFE IS UNFAIR

I'm so glad Morris Singer wrote that article in the Collegian on Monday, March 1. It was the article entitled, "The questionable duties of RAs". I agree with him 100 percent. I think he could have expanded upon it even further to include the questionable duties of Residence Directors. I have been through the judicial process three times now, and all I've gotten out of it was the realization that, contrary to the real world, you are guilty until proven innocent. Being that administration always backs up administration, you will never win. The verdict is always the same: GUILTY.

I just recently found out that the Resident Assistants and the RD are not required to show you your write-up or even read it to you. The RD can charge with as many charges as he/she feels fits the "crime" even if a lot of them fit only by a very long stretch of the imagination. Basically, once you are charged, you can only drop charges not add any, so they have to be sure they didn't miss any charges to put on you. The RA can write you up for anything that he/she wants to, with no eyewitnesses to say otherwise, and it's his/her word against yours. You know what that means... you lose.

I find it so interesting that Singer actually got a Resident Director to admit that the judicial process isn't one based on truth. If that's the case, why do they call it the judicial process? Now that the RAs have their own union, it's even harder. They have been given even more power to abuse. My sister's an RA in one of the towers, and she is constantly telling me about how certain RAs love to write-up people they don't like, and people from everyone else's floor but their own. While the RAs are constantly babysitting us, who's babysitting them? Same thing goes for the RDs. What is their main purpose? They obviously don't do too much checking up on the RAs.

I would love for someone to do an article on the duties of RAs and RDs. What does their job entail? We get a Code of Student Conduct, which tells us the rules we must follow. Why aren't we given a list of rules that they are required to follow also? Why do we have to go to the RD or another RA to write-up RAs? There should be write-up sheets available to residents, just like there are for RAs. All residents should be given a Code of Administrative Conduct for the Dorms. I think that would balance things out significantly.

Lynn Budd
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Classic Dylan show on CD after 30 years

By Scott Eldridge II
Collegian Staff

Halloween 1964 has long been an important day for Bob Dylan fans. But for those who could never lay their paws on a bootleg copy of the concert that night at New York's Philharmonic Hall, it has been 40 years of "not sure why" fanaticism.

Now, the Oct. 31 concert has earned its listing in the Dylan catalogue as "The Bootleg Series Volume 6" and when released (March 23) fans will be able to replace their blind fanaticism with vivid reality. As another chapter in Dylan's book of live releases, "Live 1964" continues in the tradition of capturing the artist at his best.

Bob Dylan
'Live 1964'
Columbia

At the age of 23 and just under two years after truly breaking onto the music scene, "Live 1964" shows a Dylan who is enthralled with political speak, folk sound, and the joking character that peppered his early career.

A tremendous album, the two discs include such social justice songs as "The Lonesome Death of Hattie Carroll" and "Who Killed Davey Moore" that made Dylan a synonym to political artist. "Talking World War III Blues" and "John Birch Society Blues" show a humorist who quips very heavy joker.

The album is a mix of Dylan's variety of song as much as he is a mix of politics, humanity and musicianship. Love songs and lost songs alike ring out from the Philharmonic stage and appropriately do so from the feeling of the moment.

Needless to mention to anyone who has seen a stop on Dylan's never-ending tour, the lyrics have stayed but the sound and the feeling has changed. With "Live 1964" the sound and the feeling alike are set in their time and place and bring you there.

On more than amicable terms with Joan Baez, Dylan shares the stage with the songstress whose sweetness emerges to soften some of the harsh Dylan edge. Baez joins the troubadour in his second set, as the two trip over a version of "Mama, You Been On My Mind" and struggle to agree on the lyrics.

But the satin strength of Baez shows more beautifully on "Silver Dagger," with Dylan's signature harmonica adding to her melody. Silver Dagger, a traditional song reworked by the two, is a sad song of ill-fitted men for lovely brides. Perhaps a subtle foreshadowing, but more importantly Baez's voice is a pleasant inter-

See DYLAN on page 7

It's all 'Roses'

New teen rocker emerges

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Remember how when Britney Spears shook and shimmied her way up the "Total Request Live" countdown, we were inundated with a horde of blonde-haired, hip-swiveling clones? Remember Willa Ford? No? Well get ready, because another young, blonde teen pop starlet has unleashed a legion of MTV girl zombies.

Katy Rose
'Because I Can'
V2

The unexpected sucess of Avril Lavigne at first seemed like an antidote to the plastic bubblegum image-making of the Britneys and Christinas who ruled the world just a few years earlier.

Her earthier, skate-punk girl image and pop songs, not built from whirligig dance beats, offered a fresh alternative for the little sisters who failed to appreciate, the superficial pleasures of Queen Brit. Unfortunately, what seemed like new and different quickly turned as stale and flat as the previous pop empire. Lavigne's ubiquitous singles (when were they not plastered all over the radio?), the girl's trendy new fashion sense and even the girl herself were everywhere. She became as hated and as overexposed as the jiggling princesses that came before her.

Only adding fuel to the fire are the record companies shamelessly chipping away the Lavigne monolith by developing their own faux-punk, rebel-grrl upstarts. First we had Fefe Dobson, asking us to take her away. Now we have Katy Rose, panting about being in "Overdrive."

"Because I Can" is the debut album for Rose, the 17-year-old daughter of a 1970s session player who has worked with acts like Crosby, Stills and Nash. The album certainly reflects that a teenager made it; there's none of the precociously coy sexuality that marked the previous generations of pop girls. Rose's lyricism and voice show off the kind of brattiness that are the hallmarks of a true teenager.

Not surprisingly, Rose's thematic concerns aren't of a variety any more complex than young love. Considering the girl's age, that's not a problem. And her wry lyrics offer a convincing balance between attitude, edge and vulnerability. It's possible that only a musician this young, one still touched by the naiveté and raw, the overwhelming emotion of youth, could capture Rose's sense of heartbreak and ardor – the first flush of a new crush ("Overdrive," "I Like") to the pain of having your heart

COURTESY V2

The youthful Katy Rose's first cd shows both talent and flaws.

See ROSE on page 7

Totally 'monster'-ous

Oscar award winning actress saves film

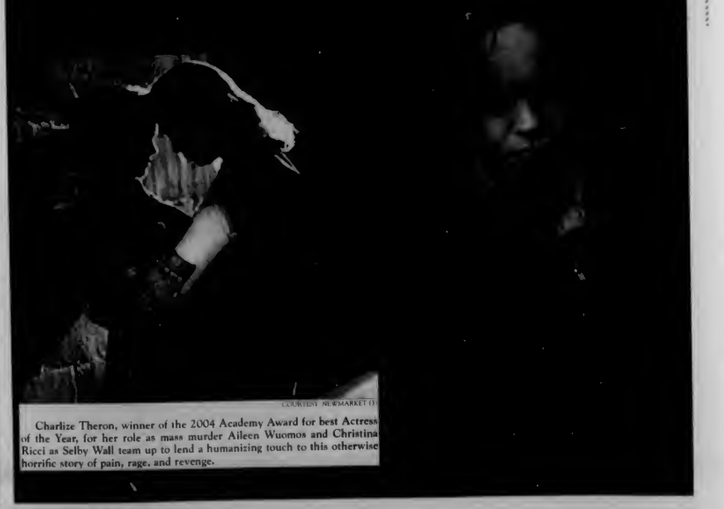
By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

It's a strange reverse form of narcissism — the actor who gets ugly for their art. In Hollywood, more than anywhere, a person's primary instrument is their looks, and it can be both a boon and a limitation to the wannabe serious actor. Tom Cruise disfigured his face with latex scars and a Phantom of the Opera mask in "Vanilla Sky;" Brad Pitt went all gnarly and snaggle-toothed in "Fight Club." The perverse backfire, though, of such stunts is that by erasing their looks, these actors seem even more vain than usual. It's as if they're saying, "Hey, this is what I'm willing to do for your entertainment."

'Monster'
Directed by Patty Jenkins
Starring Charlize Theron Christina Ricci
Newmarket
Rated R
111 mins
Grade B

Nicole Kidman, with her pristine elegant beauty, gave sharper, more commanding performances looking like herself in "The Others" and "Moulin Rouge" than she did by playing Virginia Woolf in that didactic bit of feminist chick-lit, "The Hours." There, her performance seemed to be centered on that blobby prosthetic nose.

Charlize Theron has a similar curse to Kidman. She's a statuesque, Amazonian-blonde with the angelic face of a good-girl supermodel, but for the true-to-life serial killer drama "Monster," Theron gained 30 pounds, let her complexion mottle into the ruddy skin of a lifelong alcoholic and grew hair so straw-like it could have been plucked from a scarecrow. It's a startling physical transformation, since we can barely see Theron, but for her eyes, yet the magic is that the transformation isn't just physical. Theron digs deep into the wounded psyche of Aileen Wuornos, the woman to be declared America's first female serial killer by a typically hyperbolic media in the late 80s (she was executed in 2002), so much so that her performance transcends the gimmickry of her appearance. Her transformation isn't just physical, but mental too.



Wuornos was a destitute, sometimes homeless prostitute thumbing her way along Florida's highways throughout the 1980s. A victim of childhood abuse and incest, she made her way through life beaten and battered by circumstance, until she met Selby Wall, a lesbian who offered her the hope of love, adoration and redemption in her life. But when she's raped by a John and forced to kill him in self-defense, it's as if a lifetime of resentment has come bursting to the surface. Wuornos begins to kill her Johns, but it's not out of simple bloodlust. It's out of the desire to feel alive, to feel as if though she has control of her own life. Wuornos kills out of the desire to be important.

"Monster" is a good movie posing as a great one, but it has a feral emotional pull. Some will accuse the movie of humanizing Wuornos – and that it does, deftly — but will any of those critics see the sense of desperation at the film's core, the way Wuornos was hurtling toward the abyss?

Watching "Monster" may reminded one of "Boys Don't Cry" the terrific 1999 drama about Brandon Teena, a transgender man (born Teena Brandon) who was raped and murdered by former friends when they found out he was really a she. That was a better film than this, with a galvanizing humanity that lingered far more than it does here, but both films share the same uneasy evocations of gender tyranny. In both films, the central characters are women betrayed by the men in their lives (Wuornos is hurt early on by an abusive father) and both pay the price for that betrayal: Teena is brutally killed by her so-called friends; Wuornos finds something akin to empowerment, but only by slipping down the rabbit hole of self-deception and dehumanization.

The movie would have held more of a grip had the director, Patty Jenkins, given the movie less of a schematic feel. At nearly two hours, "Monster" feels a bit repetitive, as a loop of angrily dramatic scenes of a dissolute Wuornos raging at the injustice of the world. Jenkins knows how to craft a scenes in a way that makes it so that each one evokes the maximum sadness possible, but what she doesn't quite do is string them together into a cohesive whole. It hardly helps matters that Jenkins has the winking, hipster heavy-handedness that plagues too many independent filmmakers. Scoring the first romantic kiss between Wuornos and Wall (played, with a wide-eyed girlish innocence, by Christina Ricci) to Journey's "Don't Stop Believing" smacks, not of poignancy, but of a leaden, smirking irony out of place in the context of the film. Nor does Jenkins stop to take the time to delve into Wuornos' past; her childhood is glossed over in order to get to the romance and path to murder.

But the real talking piece of "Monster" isn't Jenkins' indie-school direction, but Theron's mesmeric performance. The actress throws her body around as though it were a sack of potatoes, talks in a jutting, angry drawl and stares out through accusatory eyes that convey a mixture of despair, fearfulness and weariness. Theron doesn't just look like Wuornos, but becomes her and it's a display of acting as bravura as any. It turns "Monster" into more than a halfway decent bit of cinematic dramatization. Theron rivets your attention to the screen.

COURTESY NEWMARKET (2)

Charlize Theron, winner of the 2004 Academy Award for best Actress of the Year, for her role as mass murder Aileen Wuornos and Christina Ricci as Selby Wall team up to lend a humanizing touch to this otherwise horrific story of pain, rage, and revenge.

People in the news

Compiled by Associated Press

Don Johnson
"Miami Vice" star loses home

A California bank has filed legal papers to force actor Don Johnson to put his Aspen-area property up for sale at auction to pay a nearly $1 million debt.

City National Bank of Los Angeles asked a court to put liens on the property and suggested a public auction as an option for collecting $930,000 from the former "Miami Vice" star.

The bank said Johnson has refused to make payments on a loan he took out in October 2002.

Johnson's publicist said, however, that the actors are in the process of refinancing the loan and the issue will become moot.

Johnson has been a familiar face in Aspen for years and was one of the founders of the now-defunct Planet Hollywood in Aspen. He has starred in the television show "Nash Bridges" and had a role in the movie "Tin Cup," which starred another Aspen resident, Kevin Costner.

Last September, a judge in Los Angeles County said Johnson owed the bank $921,891 and $21,891 in attorney fees.

Barbra Streisand
Streisand sinking to the bank

A man sued by singer Barbra Streisand for posting photos of her Malibu mansion on the Internet claims Streisand has refused to pay his $220,000 legal bill after he won the case.

A judge in December dismissed Streisand's $10 million invasion of privacy lawsuit against Kenneth Adelman, his Internet service provider and a photo agency that distributes his work. Streisand was ordered to pay Adelman's legal fees and costs.

Adelman, a retired software engineer, filed court papers Thursday seeking to force Streisand to pay the legal fees from the original case plus $15,000 spent to enforce the first order. A call to Streisand's lawyer, John M. Gatti, was not immediately returned.

Streisand said Adelman's photos could contribute to a problem with stalkers. Adelman said he posted the photos – taken from his private helicopter – for scientific research on the coastline.

Superior Court Judge Allan Goodman ruled that pictures taken of California's coastline are part of everyday life and Streisand has permitted magazines to publish photos of the interior of her home in the past.

Peter Jackson
Epic move rites battle

Peter Jackson won't be returning to the Shire any time soon.

The Oscar-winning director is planning to film "The Hobbit," the prequel to "The Lord of the Rings," trilogy by J.R.R. Tolkien, but two studios must first fight over legal rights to the film.

Jackson said New Line Cinema has the rights to make the movie, but MGM has the rights to distribute it.

"I guess MGM's lawyers and New Line's lawyers are going to have a huge amount of fun over the next few years trying to work it all out," he told reporters recently in Los Angeles, according to AP Radio. "I'm obviously busy for a couple of years on 'King Kong' so those lawyers can just go at it for a long time."

"The Hobbit" tells the story of Bilbo Baggins, who found the ring and eventually passes it on to his nephew, Frodo Baggins. Frodo's journey to Mount Doom to destroy the ring is the basis for the "Rings" books and films.

Jackson said if he were going to direct the movie, he'd want it to feel like the rest of the trilogy. On Sunday, Jackson won an Academy Award for best director shared the adapted-screenplay award with his two co-writers for the final "Rings" film, "The Return of the King."

"I'd want Ian McKellen to be back as Gandalf, I'd want it to feel like it was part of the same mythology that we've done with 'Lord of the Rings,'" Jackson said.

"The Return of the King" swept this year's Academy Awards, winning all 11 categories in which it was nominated.

Jackson is in the middle of remaking "King Kong," due out next year, starring Naomi Watts.

Tom Ford
From sequins to scenes

Tom Ford wants to go from designing clothes to directing movies.

Ford, who simultaneously designed the Gucci and Yves Saint Laurent lines, will show his last collection at Paris fashion shows on Sunday, but he's already making other plans.

"I am very serious about wanting to make a movie. As a director. It's true that I've signed with CAA (Creative Artists Agency)," he told Women's Wear Daily for Friday's editions. "I am actively looking for a project. Whether I'll ever find it, I don't know. I know it sounds kind of silly."

Ten years after he reinvigorated Gucci, Ford says he didn't leave the company because of money: "It really was a question of control."

One of Ford's most recent high-profile creations was Charlize Theron's nude, beaded Oscar dress. Now, the 42-year-old says he probably won't design anymore.

But he added, "I love fashion. I mean, fashion has been very good to me and I can't put fashion down and I love what I do, so who knows? ... All I know is that I need to get to my ranch in New Mexico and spend three or four months riding my horses and just being alone."

Patrick Stewart
Policy smacking sexism

Hollywood is guilty of "extremely irresponsible" depictions of violence against women, "Star Trek" actor Patrick Stewart said.

Stewart, who played Capt. Jean-Luc Picard in the television series "Star Trek: The Next Generation" and several movies, singled out director Quentin Tarantino for criticism.

"The entertainment industry has been extremely irresponsible in perpetuating and stereotyping the violent attitudes of men to women," Stewart said Friday as he helped launch an Amnesty International campaign to stop violence against women. "It's a lazy and sensationalist approach. I condemn it entirely."

The 63-year-old British actor said he found Tarantino's "Kill Bill – Vol. 1," starring Uma Thurman as an avenging assassin, "a deeply offensive film."

Stewart, who said he witnessed his father hitting his mother as a child, said he now regrets some of his own film appearances.

"I don't want to be specific, but I have been involved in sequences both in the theater and in film which, with hindsight, I realize were offensive because they were perpetuating a stereotype," Stewart said.

"Violence against women diminishes us all," he added.

"If you fail to raise your hand in protest you are part of the problem."

Mindy Cohn
Not just playing mothers

Mindy Cohn, who played plucky Natalie on the 1980s sitcom "The Facts of Life," is on TV again.

She co-stars as a Maggie the Cook in the new WB sitcom "The Help," about a rich family and their hired help, which premiered Friday.

Cohn, 37, said she's never had a maid or a cook. "I'm very private and I'm also persnickety about how things should be," she told AP radio recently. "I have a mother who trained her daughters to make their own bed, and clean their own house. I enjoy keeping house, it's never been a task for me so I've never had help." But she does like the idea of cooking for people, especially her family.

"There is something very organic about going to the market every evening and getting fresh food and having people over and cooking it just to have family and friends over every night," she said. "There's nothing better than having people sit around a table and talk."

Cohn has been busy since graduating from college after "The Facts of Life." She voices the character Velma on the WB animated series "What's New, Scooby Doo?" and has been in several independent films.

'Tambourine Man' back in the lime-light

DYLAN from page 6

Legendary 1964 concert is finally available for younger Dylan fans.

lude and, an honest repose to Dylan's sometimes harsh sound.

Standing alone, Dylan can hold his own ground. His ability to take about whether or not "Mary had a little lamb" is a protest song one instant, and deflects naysayers the next shines through. It is work like this that carried Dylan's musical evolution through to his next release and later served as his entrance into the electrified music that would mark Dylan's revolutionary role in music.

This might be the true resonance of this album: one of the last of the young artist, one of the first of a changing musician. While Dylan-historians and over-fans will tell you that the artist had electricity on the mind starting in high school, his change came as a shock to most and the fact that it started in the studio days after this Halloween concert is an important footnote.

New pop rocker still too young

Rose's first album heavy with juvenile tunes destroyed ("Lemon").

ROSE from page 6

Rose sets herself apart from the Lavignes and Dobsons of the world via the neo-new-wave sounds of the production. Whereas the poppiest of pop-punk infuses the albums by her two rivals, Rose adopts a sonic texture that - while hardly an original – is decidedly unique to the demands of the mainstream pop world. The music establishes a maturity offset by Rose's youthful voice and lyrics.

The weakest element of "Because I Can" is Rose herself. She sings well enough, but her girlish, plain-spoken voice lacks the verve and range of Lavigne's. She's got attitude to spare in her own words, but there's little emotional connection in her voice. In effect, the impact of her songs is muted.

There's a bushel-load of hooks swirling throughout "Because I Can," especially in the first half, which is marked by rocker tunes like "Catch My Fall," "I Like" (which rips off the guitar riff of Led Zeppelin's "Kahsmir") and "Watching the Rain." With "Because I Can" Katy Rose shows some promise. Let's see if she'll capitalize on that promise, as she grows older.

KIA of NORTHAMPTON KIA
* Up to 5 quarts of premium oil
*KIA Oil Filter
*Check all fluid levels
OIL & FILTER CHANGE
Including FREE 25 Point Check
*No other discounts apply
KIA'S ONLY Tax environmental tax extra
$19.95*
WITH COUPON ONLY
SERVICE HOURS:
Mon-Tues-Wed-Fri 8 am til 5 pm
Thursday 8 am til 7 pm
135 King St., (Rte. 5), Northampton, MA
413-587-9540
1-800-323-5615
Save an additional 10% off all non-discounted service work
STUDENTS with college ID

SPRING BREAK
Why go home?
Stay with us
Great Student Rates!
Call us today
Howard Johnson EXPRESS INN
401 Russell Street/Rt.9, Hadley
413/586-0114
University Lodge
345 No. Pleasant Street, Amherst
413/256-8111

Change your mind this summer:
stay.
• Get the Gen Ed courses you need
• Enjoy smaller class sizes
• Keep on track for graduation
• Choose from over 200 courses and degree programs
• AND take 6 credits or more and we'll waive the registration fee!
Watch for our money-saving coupon in your mailbox.
umass.edu/contined
413-545-2414
UMassAmherst Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

HIPPODROME
The $10,000 Sexy Survivor Series
How far will you go?
The $10,000 Sexy Survivor Series
10+ COLLEGE DIVAS

GOLD'S GYM
NOW OPEN!
Bring in this coupon and receive:
$100 OFF OR FREE TRIAL
COMPETITION, PLEASE!
THERE'S A REASON WHY WE'RE #1
BEST EQUIPMENT. BEST RESULTS
COME CHECK US OUT!
GOLD'S GYM
10 UNIVERSITY DR.
(413) 549-6565

Stone wins No. 500

BASEBALL from page 10

thing for him."

Several members of the team congratulated coach between games, but put their game-faces on for the second contest of the double header.

After the game assistant coach Ernie May along with senior captains Sean Sarno and Mike Athas presented Stone with a plaque noting the victory.

"A lot of them knew about it and a few of them came and congratulated me after the game and that was it," Stone said. "At the end of the second game they gave me a plaque with the number on it, but it didn't have the date because we didn't know when it was going to happen."

May, who has been an assistant for Stone over the last six years, knew the team had been discussing the mark prior to the game, but retained their focus. He understood that Stone was looking to get the win, but didn't want it alter the focus of his squad.

"I think it's good that we got it out of the way and moved forward," May said. "The players have been talking about it among themselves and obviously coach knew about it. He stayed focus and made sure that everyone was focused at the game at hand."

May believes that part of Stone's success has derived from his unaltered approach to every season. Regardless of the team or circumstances, Stone has pressed that fundamentals are the key to success.

"Consistency is a big thing for him, every year he introduces the same philosophies," May said. "He never really strays away from his plan it's his consistence that helps him maintain is winning ways.

"He is definitely deserving of all the recognition and he was definitely excited, but he was obviously more excited to get the win. He's always going to say team first."

No. 1 St. Joseph's anything but ordinary

ST. JOE'S from page 10

A cheerleader for his first two seasons, Hartshorn was working three jobs - at the U.S. Postal Service, as a beer vendor at Veterans Stadium and in construction - when he decided to try to fulfill his late grandmother's wish of seeing him play college ball.

After tryouts, Martelli called Hartshorn into his cluttered office. The coach made it sound as if Hartshorn would be cut, then told him, "You're going to be with us."

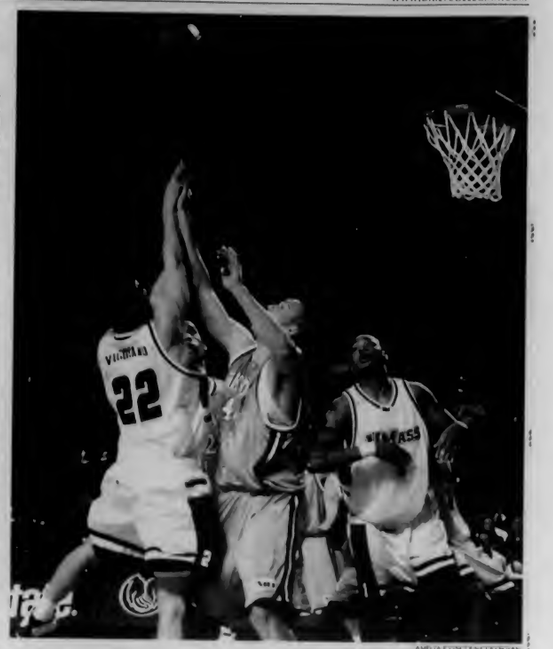
"I'll never forget that feeling of what he did for me," Hartshorn said.

Picked No. 17 in the preseason poll, the Hawks beat Gonzaga in their opener and kept winning. Their next game is Thursday night in the quarterfinals of the Atlantic 10 tournament, against the St. Bonaventure-Xavier winner.

With a team that sometimes plays four guards and was outrebounded 984-904 this season, the Hawks have plenty of doubters.

How far they go depends on Nelson and West, along with their opponents' potential inside game.

A half-mile from campus, a KFC restaurant urges them on with a sign that reads: "Go Hawks, 27-0."



A few blocks closer, a McDonald's runs an Allen Iverson promotion.

This is a city driven by pro sports and filled with fans accustomed to failure. Interest in these Hawks didn't really pick up until the Eagles lost the NFC championship game.

Phillies outfielder Doug Glanville went to Penn, a rival school. He's switching his allegiance this month.

"If we aren't in it, we kind of root for the other teams to represent Philly well. So everybody is supporting Saint Joe's," he said.

"It's an amazing story."

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Jeff Viggiano, seen here shooting over Rhode Island's Jon Clark, will look to team with Rashaun Freeman, right, in leading the Minutemen past Duquesne in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Minutemen to face Duquesne

MEN'S HOOP from page 10

to do that from here on out."

In a 98-92 double overtime loss to the Owls, the Maroon and White benefited from a season-high 18 3-pointers made, as well as having all five starters scoring in double figures, including 23 points from sophomore forward Jeff Viggiano and 18 points from freshman guard Art Bowers.

In falling 69-65 to the Spiders, however, UMass relied almost solely on a gargantuan effort from six-time A-10 Rookie of the Week Rashaun Freeman. The sophomore forward poured in his second-highest point total of the season with 27 points on 9-of-11 shooting from the field and a 9-of-12 effort from the free throw line, and also chipped in with seven rebounds.

However now entering the post season, where a loss would send the Minutemen home, Lappas knows that the winning formula lies somewhere in the middle of these two vastly different efforts.

"We have to have some sort of balance," Lappas said. "We want to be able to get the ball to Ray on the block and have him carry some of the offensive load, so we don't necessarily have to rely on our perimeter players making a ton of shots.

"But at the same time, we have to have some disparity in our offensive game that will take some of the pressure off of Ray."

The Dukes, meanwhile, ended their season on a sour note with losses in eight of their last 11 contests – all league games – after beginning conference play 3-2.

Head coach Danny Nee, a recent beneficiary of a two-year contract extension, will look to powerful forward Elijiah Palmer, along with guards Jimmy Tricco and Bryant McAllister to carry the load against UMass.

A 6-foot-7 senior, Palmer leads the team in both scoring (14.1 points per game) and rebounding (6.1 rebounds per game), while also shooting an efficient 55.4 percent from the field.

Tricco, a perimeter player who stands 6-foot-8, poses a match up problem for the Minutemen and has been impressive in his last four contests, recording double figures in each and averaging 13.5 ppg over the stretch.

McAllister checks in as Duquesne's second leading scorer with an 11.2 ppg average, and has scored in double figures in 20 of his 27 games on the season.

A request from the family of the late Jack Leaman

The Leaman family has requested that in lieu of flowers, donations be made on Jack's behalf to the UMass Athletic Association, 308 Mullins Center, Amherst, MA 01003.

Rita and Laurie thank you for honoring th is request.

MOVIEPHORIA:

The feeling you get when you download a hit movie for the first time.

THE NEWEST WAY TO GET HIT MOVIES: DOWNLOAD THEM. STUDENTS GET 25% OFF* ALL MOVIES AT COLLEGE.MOVIELINK.COM

Movielink movies on demand

birthControl.com Helping you to make the right choices

For non-prescription

Birth Control Needs

visit:

www.birthcontrol.com

We have the Today Sponge Available

NEW THIS WEEK!
MONA LISA SMILE
SCHOOL OF ROCK
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Wiffle Rock

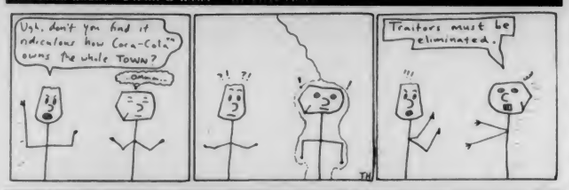
2-5 player teams
Medium pitch speed

MAY 1 & 2 @ TOTMAN FIELD UMASS
WIFFLEBALL TOURNAMENT
$1000 cash
FOR WINNING TEAM

Entry info--
www.wifflerock.com
Hotline 508-429-7093

ROCK 102 WAQY Springfield's Classic Rock

I WENT TO COLLEGE ONCE • By [illegible]



DAMAGED GOODS • By [illegible]

GET FUZZY • By [illegible]

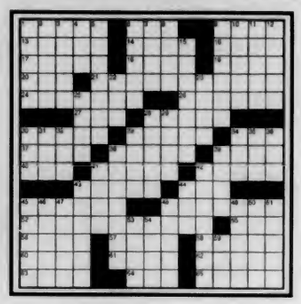
MR. STICK ROBOT'S LAUGH O'RAMA • By [illegible]

THE ZOO • By [illegible]

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"In a nation ruled by swine, all pigs are upward mobile."

-Hunter S. Thompson



TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 Looked toward
6 007
8 Gather leaves
13 Snapshot
14 Eeyore's pal
15 Mount — of Sicily
16 Nest
18 Natural impulse
19 Border on
20 Alfalfa the —
21 Document
24 Light-emitting projectiles
26 Get ragged
27 Verne do
28 Broad smiles
30 Gregorian —
33 Stately trees
35 Sweet potatoes
37 Female relative
38 Harvest machine
39 Garden green
40 Comic — Lillie
41 Skirt panels
42 Stogies
43 Aldo and Lamar
44 Cheer
45 City near Pompeii
46 Sow's young
47 Organization
55 Edge
56 Wedding-cake section
57 Jacket style
58 Sidesaw
60 Cuff
61 Castle in chess
62 Gigantic one
63 Fields shouts
64 High pie
65 Great Lakes fish

DOWN
1 Struggle
2 Secret romance
3 Large blossoms
4 Breakfast item
5 Lineage
6 San Antonio team
7 Coastal city
8 Barns of baseball
9 Shows surprise
10 Lunch-counter sit (with)
11 Rookie of Notre Dame
12 Cafe customer
13 Beehive
22 Sooner than soon
23 McKellen and Rubin
25 Bite corn
29 High winds
29 Tumpikes (abbr.)
30 Urban transport
31 Shake
32 Nurses org.
33 Mend
34 "Maria Lisa" singer
35 Envy
36 Earth, in combos
38 Braggart
39 Eye makeup
43 Secluded valley
44 Ballpark sights
45 Pulls on guard
46 Grandpa of Bravo
48 Unitrust (2 wds.)
49 Disney's Little Mermaid
47 Slice
48 Cuts a notched edge
49 Male world
50 Kind of wave
51 Paid out
53 Cyclotron target
54 Hunk
59 Enthusiasm

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Burrito
- Hungarian Noodle Bake (vegetarian)
- Garden Vegetable Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Extra Crispy Fried Chicken
- Italian Meatloaf
- Native American Stew (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 47
- Low: 38

THURSDAY
- High: 44
- Low: 28

FRIDAY
- High: 40
- Low: 18

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln
COPY EDITOR
Glen Straub
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Jennifer DiMeglio/ Dave Pessah

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
WED. ·Reggae Night dance party
THU. ·Special Brew
FRI. ·Open Irish Seisiun
SAT. ·The Lonesome Brothers
March Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Just deal with your problems, other people have it so much worse.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Grab some extra fruit from the DC. It comes in handy.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Always cover your mouth when coughing.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
It's chillier than normal today. Wear a hoodie under your coat.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Don't make others pity you.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Go ahead and do what you need to do.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Reveal something new and interesting about your self to an acquaintance.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Getting out of the rut you are in is quite important.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't step on mouse traps, they really hurt.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
It's always either too hot or too cold for you.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Know all the facts before you jump into anything.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Eat more raisins. They are yummy, and good for you.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APARTMENT FOR RENT

N. Amherst, 1 Bedrm, 1 1/2 mi. UMass Deck, $625, Pets OK. Hdwd floors Avlb. 4/1 maybe sooner. 549-2062

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

EMPLOYMENT

Gymnastics Instructor Preschool, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening & weekend hours available. 3-20 hrs/wk, flexible work environment, Gymnastics center w/ loose foam & resi pit system. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, MA 01301 (413) 773-3646 x.423

EMPLOYMENT

Get hands-on legal experience with a legal assistant internship this fall. Work directly with attorneys and clients and earn 9 to 15 credits. No experience required. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office for an application, due 4/2. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Two job opportunities on Nantucket Island beginning in May. Office assistants with decent typing, computer and telephone skills. Some errand running. Salary + housing. Tele. 508-228-3942 or send resume to PO Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 or fax resume to 508-228-8778

EMPLOYMENT

Native speakers of any Dravidian language sought E.G. Tamil, Kannada, Malayalam, Telugu Contact John Kingston 545-6837 voice mail JKingston@linguist.umass.edu

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Fun at Life-Tech Ventures live-in counselors and instructors at Presidential Summer Camp in Charlton, MA Available to anyone who honestly likes being with children Call 800-433-8375 naturesclassroom.org

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley 5 bedroom Newer home close to UMass big yard 2 full bathrooms, sunny living room. Call 549-4270

SERVICES

Math/Physics tutor available; $30/hour; $20/hour (travel); Call Dr. Kline (413-552-3805)

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst, PhilosophyDialogue.net

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39 413-584-8857.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

WANTED

Your 10 year old BMX bike $75, Will pay more for Mongoose or GT, Patrick, 508-934-9274

Place your own classified ad! Visit the Campus Center Basement or call 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Puttin' their Dukes up

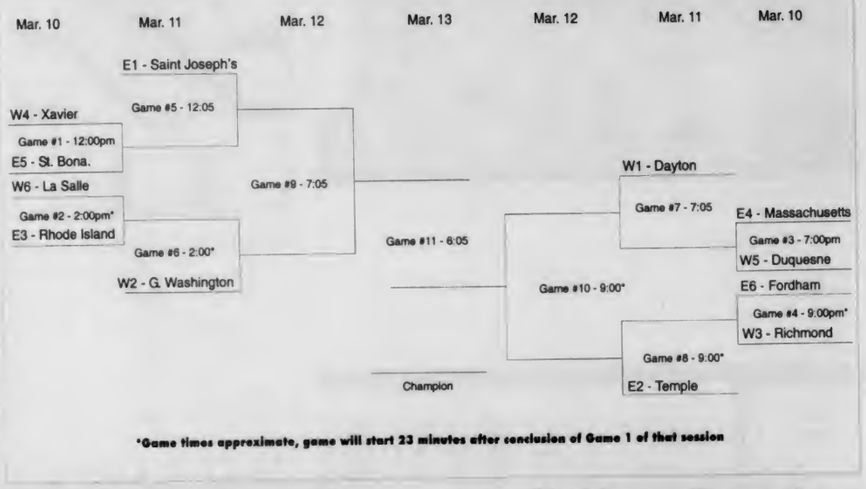
Minutemen to face Duquesne in first round of A-10 Tournament

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

With a seat next to play-by-play voice Bob Behler left open in honor of the late Jack Leaman, tonight the Massachusetts men's basketball team will begin its quest to attempt to do what its former coach, commentator and most dedicated supporter preached that it could: make a run in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

The A-10 East Division's fourth seed, the Minutemen (10-18 4-12 A-10) will face West Division No. 5 seed Duquesne (11-16 6-10 A-10) at the University of Dayton Arena, with tip-off set for 7 p.m. The winner of the contest will move on to meet tournament host and West Division top seed Dayton.

UMass is hoping to avenge an 88-62 road loss to the Dukes in Pittsburgh, Pa. on Jan. 18, in which Jack Higgins scored a career-high 24 points to help send the Minutemen to what was their sixth consecutive loss.



However after a pair of promising performances in narrow losses to A-10 rivals Temple and Richmond, Massachusetts coach Steve Lappas feels his team is on the right course heading into the postseason.

"There's no question, we're learning and improving," Lappas said. "This is what happens when you start three first year players; they're going to have their growing pains, but they're also going to learn from them and get better.

"We played a couple good games over the past week, we just weren't able to keep it together until the final buzzer and we need

See MEN'S HOOP on page 8

2004 ATLANTIC 10 MEN'S BASKETBALL CHAMPIONSHIP
UD Arena - March 10-13

*Game times approximate, game will start 23 minutes after conclusion of Game 1 of that session

Stone records 500th win as Minutemen complete sweep of doubleheader at Rider

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

On Sunday Mike Stone, head coach of the Massachusetts baseball team, did something that no other coach has done in the history of New England collegiate baseball.

He won is 500th game.

The Minutemen opened their season by sweeping non-conference opponent Rider in a double header at Richard F. Daly Field, winning the first game 6-5 and the second game 15-2.

In classic Stone style, he was pleased with reaching this coaching milestone, but was reluctant to show any emotion. He was more excited about starting off the season on a high note.

"Honestly year to year you want to focus on a good season and the number of wins that you have. It was more important that we got off to the season on the right foot," Stone said, "It was nice to get to that point I guess, but the most important thing is we're getting ready for a successful season.

"I guess if you hang around long enough it's going to happen, but I feel good about the fact that we got off on the right foot"

Stone arrived at UMass after coaching the University of Vermont for five years, accumulating a record of 54-90-2. Stone left UVM to coach UMass in 1988 and hasn't looked back since.

"We just have better players and more people that are interested in having a good ball club," Stone said, "When I first came here we had some pretty hungry guys and we practiced hard. The kids here are hungry they want to be good players."

Since his hiring as head coach at UMass, Stone has led the Minutemen to an array of success in the Atlantic 10. During his tenure the Minutemen have won seven A-10 regular season titles, two A-10 Tournament crowns coinciding with two NCAA Tournament appearances.

He has also brought UMass to the championship of the Beanpot Baseball Classic, (including Boston College, Northeastern, and Harvard), four times in the last seven seasons.

Senior second basemen Cullan Maumus has seen the work ethic that Stone has instilled in his players. He was pleased that the team could help Stone achieve this milestone, but understands that to coach it's just another number.

"We work hard every year, I've been here for four years so I feel good for him, Maumus said, "I don't think he thinks of it as anything too big, but the players feel good to do some-

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

New England's winningest college baseball coach, UMass manager Mike Stone recorded the 500th and 501st wins of his coaching career when the Minutemen swept a doubleheader at Rider on Sunday.

See BASEBALL on page 8

Nothing ordinary about unbeaten St. Joseph's

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA – Practice was in full swing. Jameer Nelson leading a three-on-one fastbreak with Delonte West charging up the wing. A perfect picture of what makes Saint Joseph's run so well.

Just beyond the baseline, three little girls in frilly dresses crayoned their coloring books. Near mid court, two dads parked baby strollers.

Over in a corner, some tots tossed a tennis ball off the wall, occasionally dodging loose rebounds.

Hey, is this any way for a top-ranked team to hold a scrimmage? Piling players into a van, taking them to a high school gym and letting anyone wander in?

"I like to think we're a little unique, a little unusual," coach Phil Martelli said. "We do things a bit differently."

Sure would be hard to imagine Bob Knight, Jim Calhoun or Coach K doing it like this.

Then again, it's hard to argue with the results on Hawk Hill: a 27-0 record, the first No. 1 ranking in school history and a chance to become the first team to enter the NCAA tournament unbeaten since UNLV in 1991.

Pretty nifty for the Jesuit university with only 3,400 undergrads, no athletic dorms and a cramped, cinderblock home court that looks more like an intramural gym.

Tucked in west Philadelphia, the campus sits across the street from a Dollarland store and is bounded by Overbrook Avenue – as in Overbrook High, where Wilt Chamberlain rose to fame.

The NBA, however, has not drafted anyone from Saint Joseph's since 1987.

"It's not a big school. There's not a lot going on. It's mainly known for academics," said Nelson, considered by many the best college player in the country.

"I'm getting all I deserve here. I can't ask for more. I'm not greedy," he said. "I would love to play in a 15,000-seat gym, but that doesn't matter to me. That 3,500 seems like 35,000."

And when the Atlantic 10 needed Alumni Memorial Fieldhouse for its women's tournament, Martelli gladly moved his workout.

"The whole thing, it's like a movie," athletic director Don Dijulia said.

But which movie – "Hoosiers," where the tiny school overcomes all odds to win, or that Philly classic "Rocky," where the sentimental favorite loses in the end?

What it lacks in size, on and off the court, Saint Joseph's makes up for with unbridled passion.

Then there's the Hawk, of course.

The mascot starts flapping its wings in warmups and does not stop – even for the national anthem – until the final buzzer, about 3,700 times a game.

Three years ago, Sarah Brennan was inside the costume when a Drexel cheerleader deliberately knocked her down. Bruised and lying on her side, she kept flapping one arm.

"My beak hit the floor and cracked. But we're just relentless," she said last week. And then she repeated the battle cry of all Saint Joseph's fans: "The Hawk will never die!"

Still, this is no Duke or Stanford. No Dean Dome, Rupp Arena or Pauley Pavilion is in sight.

"We don't have everything they have," Martelli said. "But the locker room doesn't play the game. The coach's office doesn't play the game. We are what we are."

Usually, that's unflappable. In January, though, Martelli snapped and called a St. Bonaventure fan a "nitwit." When he got home, the coach wrote her an apology.

Martelli has a soft side, too. Robert Hartshorn found out firsthand.

See ST. JOE'S on page 8 cLOUDDEAD balances hip-hop and electronic music on 'Ten'

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

Minutemen set to host first playoff series at Mullins
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 100

Viacom, EchoStar nearing agreement

By Jonathan D. Salant
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — DISH Network owner EchoStar and CBS parent Viacom expressed optimism yesterday that they soon would settle a dispute that has left millions of satellite television customers without popular channels.

Martin D. Franks, executive vice president of CBS Television, told lawmakers at a hearing that he expected a solution in a "very timely fashion."

"I can give great assurance that we are making progress," Franks said.

David Moskowitz, EchoStar's senior vice president and general counsel, said after the hearing that he is hopeful "we'll reach an agreement very soon."

EchoStar Communications Corp. pulled the plug on CBS programs in more than a dozen cities Tuesday and also dropped Viacom Inc.'s cable channels — including MTV, Nickelodeon and BET — from its satellite network. As many as 9 million customers in all 50 states were affected.

Members of the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on telecommunications and the Internet urged both sides to settle before the NCAA men's college basketball tournament gets under way next week. CBS will broadcast the games.

"Let's cut to the chase and see if we can't come to an agreement, especially as March Madness begins," said the subcommittee chairman, Rep. Fred Upton, R-Mich.

The dispute mirrors fights that have occurred between broadcast networks and cable companies.

In 2000, Time Warner removed ABC from its cable systems in New York and six other cities while haggling with the Walt Disney Co. over how much to pay for its cable channels. In January 2003, some 400,000 Cox Communications customers in Washington, Cleveland, Dallas and Houston lost the Fox network for a week in a dispute over whether the cable company should also carry two Fox cable channels.

The chairman of the Federal Communications Commission Chairman said such disputes benefit no one.

"That's what sometimes happens in the market," Michael Powell said. "Consumers usually lose and so do both parties. It usually doesn't happen very long."

EchoStar says it is being required to carry several Viacom-owned cable channels in exchange for the right to also carry 18 CBS-owned stations in 16 markets.

The company also charged that Viacom with seeking rate increases of up to 40 percent over the length of the contract, which would total potentially hundreds of millions of dollars.

Viacom officials disputed that, saying EchoStar was fighting over what amounted to 6 cents more per customer per month.

The dispute overshadowed the original purpose of the congressional hearing: renewing the law designed to encourage the development of satellite TV systems as a competitor to cable television. The law expires Dec. 31.

The FCC reported in January that the satellite providers, which did not exist 10 years ago, have captured almost one-quarter of all households that pay for TV.

Satellite company representatives said the law needs to be changed to make their services more competitive with cable's. For example, cable customers in Columbia, Md., midway between Washington and Baltimore, get both cities' television stations, but satellite customers only get Baltimore channels because Columbia is considered part of that viewing area.

Senators debate election process changes

New staircase to be added in Orchard Hill parking lot

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Staff

Two separate injunctions filed by Speaker Jared Nokes and Attorney General Mark Morrison against Steve Hoeschele's elections were announced at last night's Student Government Association meeting.

"An injunction is an immediate stoppage to an act," Morrison explained to the Senators.

For this spring's elections, Hoeschele, chancellor of elections, and his elections commissioners have decided to use Instant Run-off Voting. IRV would change the ballot to have a ranking for each candidate, and voters would rank their choices.

When Hoeschele was up for approval by the Senate last semester, he made it known to the Senators that he was in favor of IRV, but he would consider the opinions of the Senators if he were to change the procedure. Morrison reminded the Senate of this last night.

The chancellor of elections has the option of changing the way the votes are counted as long as the method fits under the SGA's Constitution.

To educate the students, Hoeschele has readied posters to explain the change before they cast their ballots on March 24 and March 25.

Morrison does not believe that this change is constitutional because of the definition of "plurality."

"I think the plurality clauses in the bi-laws and the constitution cannot be overlooked," Morrison said. "It's either chicken or beef, there is no either-or."

ANDY TAM/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Senator Dan Pozmanter speaks heatedly over a motion during last night's SGA meeting.

ANDY TAM/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Senator David Bettencourt addressed Senators' responsibility to work for students at last night's SGA meeting in the Campus Center.

Because of the timing of the injunctions, the Judiciary branch would not be able to hear the case until after the elections are held.

"As attorney general, Morrison should know that this would be an ex post facto ruling which would require the election to be thrown out, wasting the time of all the candidates and approximately $5,000 of student fee money," Hoeschele said in his announcement to the Senate.

He continued to note that if the elections were to be thrown out, Nokes would be next in line to finish out the term.

"I'm sure Speaker Nokes is aware of this," Hoeschele said. Morrison was hopeful that the elections would not be overturned.

"The reason I asked for an injunction along with the ruling petition is so that IRV may be halted and the elections aren't thrown out and the money is not wasted that way."

Nokes explained his concern that the Judiciary branch could force the injunction before the elections, stopping the election process. He was concerned that this would be a breach of separation of powers.

"I firmly believe that they're not allowed to do that ... they can only issue a ruling using the facts from the hearing ... I don't think that would be within their power. If they are overstepping their power, we need to have some reaction from the Senate to make sure we have the balance that we're supposed to have."

Morrison disagreed.

"They have the right to say that we won't allow something damaging to continue ... With something this timely, it would be impossible for them to rule by their deadline."

Hoeschele also announced the SGA Debates will be tomorrow night shown live on UVC-TV 19 at 8 p.m. WMUA will re-air it March 22 at 8 p.m.

During the rest of the night, the Senate heard 16 motions, passing 12.

In a first of a series of space allocation motions, the Registered Student Organization Advocacy Committee brought and passed two motions to the

See SGA on page 2

New Haitian prime minister arrives to build new government

By Paisley Dodds
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Gerard Latortue, a former U.N. official chosen to lead Haiti out of political turmoil, returned from the United States yesterday to begin the arduous task of building a government. Loyalists of the former president said they wouldn't accept him.

His arrival came as the U.S. military announced an escalation in its mission in the Caribbean nation, promising Marines will move quickly to stop Haitian-against-Haitian violence.

"They will intervene to protect life," Gen. James T. Hill, commander of U.S. Southern Command, told reporters at the Pentagon.

Since Sunday, Marines have killed at least four Haitians, including a driver who sped toward a checkpoint and a gunman who fired on an anti-Aristide demonstration. On Tuesday, the American troops shot to death two Haitians who opened fire near the outgoing prime minister's private residence.

After walking off a plane that brought him from Florida, Latortue shook hands with police officers and embraced relatives and friends. He was also greeted by members of a council that chose him to be the new prime minister.

Once critical of ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, he has said his first priority will be to unite a population divided between those who oppose the former leader and supporters who want to see him returned to power.

Aristide fled Feb. 29 amid international pressure to step down and a bloody rebellion that left more than 300 dead. The once popular slum priest, elected on promises to champion the poor, lost support as Haitians accused his government of corruption and attacks against his political opponents.

In the Central African Republic, Aristide still maintained he is the legitimate leader of Haiti and that U.S. officials forced him from office. Yesterday, his lawyers said they were preparing cases accusing authorities in the United States and France of abducting him and forcing him into exile.

U.S. officials have denied they forced Aristide from office, saying they helped him escape Haiti with his life as rebels advanced on the capital.

Staff Sgt. Timothy Edwards said Marines were patrolling near the private residence of outgoing Prime Minister Yvon Neptune on Tuesday when they were shot at. The Marines fired back and killed at least two gunmen, he said. No peacekeepers were wounded.

The gunmen's bodies were not recovered but that is common. Peacekeepers must call health authorities to collect the remains, and family members sometimes take bodies away before they can be reported.

In a separate incident, several people got out of a car late Tuesday and opened fire on Marines, who shot back, U.S. Maj. Richard Crusan said. Three people then fled on foot, he said.

A body was still on the sidewalk early yesterday near where the shooting occurred. Crusan and others refused to say whether the victim, who had been shot in the head, was involved.

"We found him this morning," resident Savoy Toussaint said of the body. "He doesn't have a face so we can't identify him."

Many Aristide supporters were angry over Tuesday's decision by the U.S.-backed advisory council to name Latortue prime minister.

"He doesn't understand the reality of the country," said Jacques Pierre, 49. "He doesn't understand our hunger."

The 69-year-old Latortue is a former foreign minister and spent part of his career with the U.N. Industrial

See HAITI on page 2

MBTA makes environmental efforts

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority will reduce bus idling, use cleaner-burning fuel on commuter trains, and donate land for a bike path under a $1.3 million settlement with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency agreement announced yesterday.

"The agreement stems from the EPA's enforcement action against the MBTA for numerous pollution violations, including excessive idling of diesel buses and illegal discharges for many years into Boston-area rivers.

Under the agreement, the T will pay a fine of $328,274, and undertake environmental projects estimated to cost $1 million.

"This settlement will improve air quality for all Boston-area residents, especially for the region's children who are particularly vulnerable to asthma and the ill effects of diesel exhaust in their indoor and outdoor environments," Robert W. Varney, EPA regional administrator, said in a prepared statement.

The MBTA agreed to meet the state's five-minute idling law for all of its 995 buses. And its 33 commuter trains based at Boston's South Station will operate on lower-polluting low sulfur diesel fuel for at least three years.

"The settlement represents the end of an era when bus operations were neglected at the T," said MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo.

In 2002, the EPA cited the MBTA for buses that idled for more than one hour, and in one instance in Roxbury for 2 1/2 hours.

Diesel exhaust contains fine particles which can cause lung damage and aggravate respiratory conditions, such as asthma and bronchitis. Roxbury has an asthma hospitalization rate 178 percent above the state average, the EPA said.

The MBTA also will donate an easement on a one-acre strip of land so an existing bike path along the Mystic River can be extended, the EPA said.

Separately, Pesaturo said the MBTA is investing $350 million to upgrade maintenance facilities and bus operations. Two-thirds of the fleet is scheduled to be replaced this year.

—Associated Press

ANDY TAM/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Simon wannabes

Judges observe UMass Idol hopefuls during auditions last night in the Campus Center basement.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantanatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salnitker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Puppo
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagstic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATORS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jackson Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kiggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
GRAPHICS ADVISER Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTING EDITORIAL Paige Crum
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marinilli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS AN INDEPENDENT, STUDENT-OPERATED, ADVERTISING-REVENUE-FUNDED NEWSPAPER. THE PAPER BEGAN AS SCOUT FOUR-PAGE NEWSLETTER IN 1890. THE COLLEGE SCOUT IN 1902, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN AND HIS INCORPORATED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
MDC DESIGN

For the Record

Correction: Because of a reporting error in yesterday's Page One story, it was stated that Viacom had attempted to increase the cost of retransmission of its content by 40 percent. The correct percentage is 60.

policelog

Student injures head after running into door

WednesdayMarch3

3:28 p.m. A party reported a bicycle theft from outside of Cance Hall sometime Monday night. The value of the stolen item was estimated at $150. A report was taken.

ThursdayMarch4

5:47 p.m. A person reported that a hawk had flown into the window of the lounge in Mackimmie Hall. Emergency Health Services was notified and contacted the environmental police who took the hawk, which was an endangered species, to a local veterinarian for treatment.

6:53 p.m. A person reported that her debit and credit cards were stolen between 11a.m. and noon from her unlocked room in John Quincy Adams Hall.

FridayMarch5

1:39 a.m. Michael Garraoui, 23, of 374 North Pleasant St., Amherst, was arrested during a traffic stop on Massachusetts Ave. He was charged with operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol, marked lanes violations, negligent operation, speeding and failure to use a turn signal.

12:23 p.m. Officers responded to a call in North Village in an effort to resolve an ongoing domestic dispute. The officers took one party to Pittsfield.

12:43 p.m. A medical emergency was reported at the School of Management. One person suffered a seizure and was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

8:38 p.m. Robert O'Brian, 20, of 405 Prospect St., Norwood, was arrested for violating liquor laws in lot 33. He was charged with being a minor in possession of alcohol and possession of a class D controlled substance.

10:53 p.m. A witness reported that two SUV's were involved in a chase, one crashed into the other at the intersection of North Pleasant St. and Eastman Lane. An area check was unable to locate the vehicles and a report was taken.

SaturdayMarch6

3:14 a.m. Brian Smith, 23, of 19 Woodlawn St., Chicopee, was arrested during a traffic stop. He was charged with operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol, a marked lanes violation, failure to stop/yield and obstructing an emergency vehicle.

4:33 a.m. Police responded to a report of a domestic disturbance in John Adams Hall and arrested Victor Foh, 20, of 175 Willard St. #12 Lowell. He was charged with assault and battery.

6:48 p.m. A party reported breaking and entering on a vehicle in lot 21. The faceplate for the stereo of the vehicle was stolen. A report was taken.

10:19 p.m. A medical emergency was reported in Kennedy Hall. The responding officer reported that one subject had cut his head open running into a door. The subject was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

SundayMarch7

2:58 p.m. Officers responded to a report of annoying telephone calls in Washington Hall. The officers reported that the caller had called several times and made unwanted sexually suggestive comments. The party was advised of her rights regarding phone service.

10:42 a.m. A maintainer reported soot and burn marks in McNamara Hall. According to University of Massachusetts Police Department this damage was constant with the burn marks found earlier this year in McNamara Hall.

7:25 p.m. A party reported that her X-box video game system had been stolen from a public lounge sometime during the previous night at McNamara Hall. A report was taken.

-Compiled by Tom Coyle

New Haitian prime minister arrives in Haiti

HAITI from page 1

Development Organization in Africa. He had also worked as an international business consultant in Miami.

It was unclear whether Neptune, who was appointed by Aristide, would remain in Haiti.

Latortue said his first priority is to unite the nation, a difficult task as both rebels and Aristide militants threaten more conflict if improvements do not happen quickly enough for them.

Anne-Marie Issa, a member of the council that picked Latortue, said the new leader likely will choose retired army chief-of-staff Gen. Herard Abraham as minister of security or defense and businessman Smarck Michel as minister of planning. Both were finalists for the prime minister post.

"It's for sure the priority is security," she said.

Latortue told the council he would either restructure the police or reconstitute the army to improve security, Issa said.

Haiti's army, which ousted Aristide months after he became the nation's first freely elected president in 1990, was disbanded in 1995 after a U.S. invasion restored Aristide to power.

Issa said the seven-member council will continue advising Latortue.

"We are the eyes of the people until they have a parliament," she said.

Latortue and interim President Bonifece Alexandre will begin organizing elections and building a new government for Haiti. Under Aristide, the prime minister's position was largely ceremonial.

Aristide has been staying in the presidential palace in the Central African Republic since March 1. Yesterday, a South African delegation visited him there to discuss his long-term asylum plans, Foreign Minister Charles Wenezoui told The Associated Press.

Associated Press reporters Ian James and Peter Prengaman in Port-au-Prince contributed to this story.

MITCHELL ZACHS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

New Haitian Prime Minister Gerard Latortue, of Boca Raton, Fla., is surrounded by media as he readies to board a plane to Haiti at Miami International Airport yesterday.

SGA supports hiring of Student Activites Center director

SGA from page 1

Senate.

The first motion, co-sponsored by Dan Pomeroy, chair of the RSO Advocacy committee, and Senator Meredith Rice, asked for a permanent director for the Student Activities Center to be hired, under the vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life's new "student first initiative."

"You need one person at least who is going to stay," Pomeroy said.

Currently, the office is run without a director, but staffed by graduate students who have been trained to help advise students.

"The students need to stand up and say what we want it to be," Rice said.

The second motion asked for the secretary of the registry to have the power for emergency space allocation.

Last year, the Senate removed the agency, which handled space allocation and did not replace it. The RSO Advocacy committee has been working on creating a new system, but offered to put this one temporarily in place in order to deal with any emergencies that may come up.

Another heated debate was over adding a staircase behind the Grayson/Field buildings in the Orchard Hill Residential Area connecting to the purple parking lot. This motion ended in the sponsor of the motion, Zsuzsu Cook, chair of the Finance Committee, drawing maps with chalk on the blackboard behind the Speaker about where the proposed staircase would be in relation to the staircase the Senate approved of last week behind Van Meter to the same parking lot.

"I am opposed to unnecessary convenience," Senator Olaf Aprans said. He complained that this would impede the Frisbee games that students often play on the hill.

Overall, the mood at the meeting was light in comparison to last week's heated debates over the Pledge of Allegiance. With some serious moments, a lot of laughter was heard consistently.

Nokes also noted this change of atmosphere.

"It's a productive atmosphere, and helps us get things done," he said.

It's easy to upload your resume and search for new job postings from any computer!

When you're searching for the sun on spring break, you can search for a job too!

To register for an account with us call 545-2224 or email ccnhelp@acad.umass.edu with your full name, SPIRE #, major, and year or graduation. We will email you a username, password and instructions on how to use the system.

Once you have your username and password go to www.umass.edu/careers

CareerServices

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS
OOPS!
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
75 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
Have a Safe & Memorable Spring Break!!!!
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
Now Open Sundays Noon to 11pm

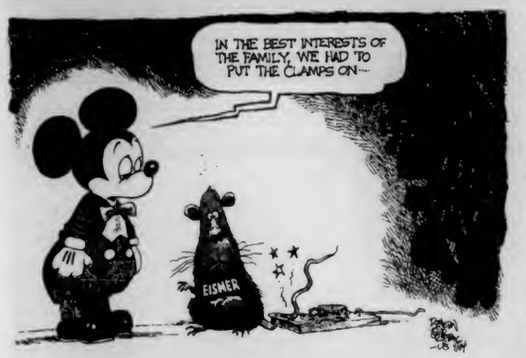
EDITORIAL OPINION

NYU falls lead to appalling journalism

For the fourth time this school year, a student at New York University has committed suicide by leaping from a tall structure.

Diana Chien, 19, leapt to her death on Saturday, and police are alluding to problems with her boyfriend as a possible cause for her suicide. The tragedy of Chien's death was only the beginning, thanks to the work of tasteless, shoddy journalism.

On Sunday, the New York Post published a chilling photograph apparently taken seconds after Chien jumped from her boyfriend's 24-story apartment building in Manhattan. According to the Associated Press, the Post originally ran the photo on the inside of its Sunday edition; but today, upon learning the girl's identity, the Post re-ran the photograph on the front page, with the headline "Death plunge No. 4: NYU's grief." The picture is in full color, and takes up the entire front page, with the girl's limp figure accompanied by the headline and the first few paragraph's of the story.



The Post's treatment of the story is an appalling display of cheap, irresponsible journalism. After the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, newspapers all around the country were forced to contemplate running pictures of people who jumped from the inferno inside the World Trade Center towers, making the ultimate choice to end their lives by their own accord, and not suffer a long, painful death inside. Some newspapers refused to run the pictures, and some, including the Post, chose to include them as part of the story. That debate had merit, because the pictures of the victims put in the most impossible of circumstances were, in some part, a part of the story on the whole. The Massachusetts Daily Collegian never displayed any of those photos, but we understand the views of those publications that felt it was important to include them.

This is a different story, and should have been handled much differently by a newspaper as popular as the Post. The fact that the photo ever ran in the first place is subject to argument, and the further exploitation of a community's tragedy in order to sell more newspapers shows a horrendous lack of journalistic integrity. The story could have been told just as well without the photograph to accompany it, and running the photo a second time, this time in large, full-color format, shows that the Post has completely disavowed its responsibility to inform in favor of sensationalizing a poor young woman's plight, as well as that of the people who knew her.

The story isn't much better, though it was more competently written than the front page was designed. It references the three previous student suicides at NYU, and although it reports that one of the students "jumped from the sixth floor of a Greenwich Village apartment building after smoking a joint and declaring, 'I can't take it anymore,' " it was otherwise professional and responsible in its handling of this tragedy. It can be assumed that, as at most papers, the writers had nothing to do with the layout of the front page, so the onus falls on whichever editor was in charge of that job. That person, or those persons, has shown an incredible lack of character and compassion for the subjects they cover.

Newspapers exist to report facts. They also exist as businesses, and the Post must compete in a tenacious market. So it is understandable that the Post's large, crass headlines and sometimes fluffy news coverage is vital to securing the paper's niche in the New York news landscape. However, a person's death should never be treated simply as fodder for the Post's brand of attention-hounding journalism. The Collegian will make every effort to insure to its readers that no such mishandling of a tragedy such as this will occur within its pages.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

A plea for bathroom reform

Gilad Skolnick

About a week ago at around 3 a.m., I entered my empty bathroom to brush my teeth and perhaps even go all out and floss, when I saw a female from my floor enter the bathroom and go into one of the stalls. She came out of the stall and we both exited the bathroom. It was strange. She was well aware that she was in the wrong restroom and it didn't bother her. For some odd reason, I was not ashamed, embarrassed or uncomfortable to have a female in my presence when I brushed my teeth.

The bathroom is one of the more touchy subjects in our society. So touchy that people are always looking for a different word to call it. It's been called the restroom, powder room, lavatory, the loo, water closet, the john, and, apparently in Montreal, they simply call it the toilet.

Still segregating the sexes in this day and age, the bathrooms use a separate but equal philosophy. Many would argue though that a great injustice in the bathroom structure lies in our society, and thus, I call for a bathroom reform.

I do not ask for the soap dispenser to be filled regularly or for toilet paper that is thick enough so that I can't see through it, as that would be too much to ask of the cash strapped institution of the University of Massachusetts. What I ask for is something that requires a new way of thinking — perhaps as one would say — outside the box. What I ask for is a relaxation on the rules regarding bathroom usage.

Several semesters ago, transgender students began to protest the bathroom situation at UMass, demanding gender-neutral bathrooms in many dorms. This was so students who do not identify with their assigned gender at birth or with either gender could feel comfortable entering the bathrooms without going into the "wrong" bathroom. This movement filled The Massachusetts Daily Collegian with many columns for and against doing so, along with a table that was always manned by someone in the Campus Center. Since then, the movement for a "restroom revolution" to transform the way we think about bathrooms has died down, either due to the UMass administration's unwillingness to bend or lack of energy and time.

Often I find male bathrooms to be empty while a long line stretched out the door from female bathrooms. This is due to the evident fact that males are quicker than females at relieving themselves; yet, whenever bathrooms are built, both the female and male bathrooms are built of an equal size.

Not only would gender-neutral bathrooms help students make it to the bathroom in urgent times when the capacity of their bladder was poorly judged, it would result in shorter lines for girls in small bathrooms and make brushing the teeth a more friendly environment. Maybe it would even end the smell of urine in some halls and globs of toothpaste in water fountains by those who are desperate for co-ed teeth brushing.

Currently, if you walk into the "wrong" bathroom to brush your teeth, you could be subjected to being "written up," which can lead to being kicked out of the dorms. I am not suggesting for co-ed group showers or a nudist dorm, but rather relaxing some of the more archaic rules. Many times I have witnessed people experiencing difficulty in making it to "their" bathrooms on time, often due to alcohol or other reasons. Should they risk the explosion of their bladder rather than go into the "wrong" bathroom? Should they relieve themselves in public rather than go to the closest bathroom?

What I ask for is something that requires a new way of thinking — perhaps as one would say — outside the box. What I ask for is a relaxation on the rules regarding bathroom usage.

Just several decades ago, UMass dorms were either all-female or all-male, and females could attend a male dorm only one Sunday a month, in which case the dormitory room door had to stay open and three feet had to be on the ground at all time. Today's co-ed dorms are an idea that was unheard of at that time, an idea as strange as co-ed bathrooms are today. Today, schools such as Harvard University and the University of New Hampshire, as well as many others, have co-ed bathrooms with no problems.

At UMass, sexual assault does remain a problem and an issue that needs to be dealt with. The fact is that gender-specific bathrooms have not shown in the past to prevent sexual assaults and a perpetrator is not prevented from entering such a bathroom simply by a "no men allowed" sign. Statistically, most assaults on women are not done by complete strangers, but rather by someone that the victim already knew. By creating gender-neutral bathrooms, a greater number of people would be allowed to enter these facilities, making them less empty and isolated.

Residence halls should be able to vote in a fair and democratic system if they want to have gender-neutral restroom facilities. Women and men should each be able to vote if they want to make their own bathrooms gender-neutral, with a minimum number of gender-specific bathrooms in each building.

Fifty years ago, women wearing men's clothing, such as pants, was taboo and unthinkable, and co-ed gym classes was an inconceivable concept. Imagine how ridiculous a notion those ideas must have been then. I don't think society will crumble now if we allow all genders to use the same bathrooms in college. Gender segregated bathrooms are an example of an attempt to hold onto the past, but we are in a new age of equality. Why not create some equally accessible bathrooms?

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

A couple quotent quotables

Matt Brochu

I make a reference to AOL Instant Messenger at least once per column, so I figured it was about time to address a few issues, and I'll get right to the point.

There are three things I hate about AIM.

1) Smiley faces

2) Chain messages — just because it's finals week, there's no need to send me that IM with those two retarded-cow-snowmen-things humping, one labeled "finals" and the other labeled "me." Here's the deal. I'll re-label one with "you" and the other with "your computer" because you need to realize that it's a problem when forensics experts could identify your rear end in a rear end line-up from one glance at the imprint In your computer chair.

3) People who have no control over their AIM profiles. For those of you thinking to yourselves, "Is he talking about me?" have you ever seen "Dumb and Dumber"? Well, take a look at Lloyd's toilet scene. In the AIM world, that would be you, except you're explosively number-two-ing unnecessary quizzes, links and pathetic quotes ... and there isn't enough psychological Imodium in Western Massachusetts to help you out.

Let's be honest, other than your cell phone number and your stupid Spring Break countdown (2 DAYS!!) you have absolutely nothing worthwhile to say in that little AIM profile space.

Let's be honest, other than your cell phone number and your stupid Spring Break countdown (2 DAYS!!), you have absolutely nothing worthwhile to say in that little AIM profile space. So when a problem arises that you're not mature enough to deal with directly, yet at the same time you want to cry out for pity, what are you going to do? Find a sad, overused quote, slap it in there (maybe in — oh, I don't know — lavender font), and wait for a reaction. And if you've done that, well, congratulations ... I hate you. Here are a few quotes that shouldn't be used under any circumstance, because, well, they suck.

"Don't cry because it's over. Smile because it happened." — Unknown

All right, so you just broke up. I'm sorry. Really, I am. But honestly, your life really is as bad as it seems right now, and it's pretty much all your fault. Chances are you got cocky, let yourself go, gained a few pounds, started getting jealous whenever he went out with his friends, and now he's gone. You're pretty similar to Marla Hooch from "A League of Their Own" (ya know, the ugly one) at this point. You have no options, and you can't walk while balancing a book on your head to save your life. So yeah, it happened, but you have no reason to smile. It's definitely over, so you might as well cry me a river. Baby go on and just ...

"Wear cute pajamas to bed, because you never know who you'll meet in your dreams." — Unknown

This quote may be the reason I wear my matching tank top and panties set to bed each night, but there's a University of Massachusetts translation too. Screw cute pajamas, wear warm pajamas to bed because you never know when some moron is going to pull the fire alarm at 4 a.m. forcing you to wait outside until the firefighters arrive.

"Pain is weakness leaving the body." — Marines Billboard

Who looks at a billboard while driving and thinks, "Oh, that one's going in my profile as soon as I get home." I mean, if it was, "Pain is a baby leaving the body," then maybe I'd understand.

"Smile, it makes people wonder what you're thinking." — Unknown

OK, so if we're at a party and you smile at me, I'm thinking one of two things: 1) You're checking me out, and if you could talk to me without throwing up all over my shoes, then you'd be all over me right now, or 2) You just farted, and you think that everyone else is clueless. So I smile back, because I'm pretty sure you're about to stand up and crop-dust the room with it, which you subsequently do. So take your obligatory lap around the room, but I know exactly what you're thinking. Yes, someone did notice, and yes, it smells like eggs.

"You know you're in love when every time you meet is like the first time you fell in love." — My friend Lukasz

Then I guess I've never been in love, because I don't really remember the exact moment when I fell in love. I do remember the first time I said, "I love you," to someone other than my mom or my guinea pig. What did I get back? One of those, "And I love spending time with you!" cop-outs. Happy memories, Luke. Good stuff. If you need me, I'll be getting hammered and playing freeze tag on the crosswalks by Southwest.

So just stay away from these quotes and you'll be OK in my book. And if any of your friends cross the line, warn the (expletive) out of them. Needless to say, this is probably part 1 of a 7 part series; so if there's a quote that you think I missed, feel free to hit me up at mjbrochu@student.umass.edu. I'll be sure to include the one response I get in my next column.

Matt Brochu is a Collegian columnist.

A longing for homemade food

Stacy Kasdin

When I was in second grade, my mother was deemed Mrs. Entenmanns. Whenever we had class parties and all the kids would bring homemade cookies or brownies, my mother would send me in with a box of Stop and Shop's finest, and my teacher would say, "Mrs. Entenmanns was up all night baking again!"

For my birthday, my mother would take me to the grocery store and let me pick out what kind of cupcakes I wanted to bring in for the class. I always picked the ones with pink icing and sprinkles, because I figured if I wasn't getting home baked, at least I could be unique and not have plain old chocolate and vanilla like everyone else.

The lack of home cooking in my house never really bothered me, but it caused me to become fascinated with the concept of home cooking in general, and particularly the concept of leftovers. Continuing on through elementary school, I was always incredibly jealous of the kids who brought last night's meatloaf in for lunch. I recall offering to trade my bag of chips and my cookies for a piece of Jessica M.'s mom's home-baked pound cake, which was always wrapped in tinfoil. Not in a plastic Ziploc baggie, but in tinfoil. As is obvious, the tinfoil fascinated me as well, since my lunch was always in baggies.

More than I was jealous of the meatloaf, I was downright resentful of the kids who brought thermoses of soup and spaghetti-o's for lunch. Mind you, I didn't like spaghetti-o's, and wasn't a particularly big fan of soup, but I thought it was the greatest thing that they had this hot, dinner-esque lunch in their lunchbox. Now don't get me wrong, I did occasionally get leftovers in my lunchbox. Every Saint Patrick's Day, my mother, who teaches second grade, would bring in green bagels and cream cheese for her class. Thus, I got leftover green bagels for a week or two. Sure, I got made fun of for bringing "moldy" bagels in for lunch, but hey, it was leftovers.

However, there was always the sacred once a month or so when my mother would break out the fryalator and make fried chicken cutlets. Home cooked, from scratch and everything. Then I would get cold fried chicken cutlet sandwiches in my lunchbox and feel like the luckiest kid in the gym/cafeteria. It was extremely detrimental to my well-being when the Italian market opened up down the street from my mom's school. They sold pre-made fried chicken cutlets, which ousted the fryalator. I still got cold chicken cutlet sandwiches for lunch, but it just wasn't the same.

For me, home cooked food wasn't an everyday thing, but a treat, which I only got on special occasions when we would all go to my maternal grandmother's house.

She was the master at cooking Jewish soul food. She made brisket, baked chicken, some kind of potatoes with breadcrumbs on them which my family called, "New Brunswick potatoes" (a name my mother's cousin came up with, because my mother and her family used to live in New Brunswick), which I later adapted to, "North Brunswick potatoes," (because we lived closer to North Brunswick than New Brunswick, and I kept forgetting it was New Brunswick), and my favorite, noodle kugel. Every holiday I ate like I was stocking up for hibernation.

To this day, I have no idea how Nana made those things, but I do know that they were amazing. In my later years of high school, she began to get sick and could no longer cook for and host the holidays, so we began to have the holidays at our house. We would order the majority of the food from a local catering service, but Nana would always make brisket and bring it along. It was her specialty, and my cousin refused to eat anything else. It's a good thing the caterers weren't attending our dinner, because throughout, all anyone could say was how Nana's food was indescribably superior. When she passed away, we were left with catered food and an assortment of insatiable cravings. The food is certainly no comparison, but we have been making do as best we can.

Although I've come to accept the lack of home cooking in my own home, I have never lost the fascination with it in general. This past summer I went to a friend's house for his birthday and his mother proceeded to stuff us silly with food. Every time I turned around there was a plate of fresh baked brownies on the table, a simmering pot on the stove and smoke wafting up from the barbeque. Every night I was there we ate a home cooked meal, which, to my further amazement, consisted of products from each food group, and was then followed by dessert (home cooked, of course). Since then I have been begging him to ask his mother to send a strawberry pie up to school. I fully intend on moving into their house this summer ... or at the very least, stealing his mother.

Stacy Kasdin is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Spring

INTO A NEW HOLIDAY SEASON

St. Patty's Day approaches

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

It's that time again. The grass, pushing tender green, shoots through the ever-thinning snow and the green beer is set to soon flow again in the annual celebration of Saint Patrick's Day. Besides being a good day to break out your best green garb and gorge yourself on boiled meats, March 17 is a holiday dating back centuries, with its roots founded firmly in the Emerald Isle.

The namesake of this verdant holiday is British born Maewyn Succat in 387 A.D. The son of Roman dignitary Calphurnius, Succat was kidnapped at the age of 16 and sold into slavery in Ireland. Raised by Pagans and renamed Patrick, he was trained in sheep herding as well as the practices and language of the ancient Celts.

According to legend, at the age of 20, Patrick experienced visions from God, telling him to go to the coast. There he tagged along with a troop of sailors and made it back to England. Though he had achieved his freedom Patrick was unable to shake the spirit of Ireland from his heart.

In March of 433 A.D. Patrick returned to Ireland and was ordained as a bishop. Reunited with the land that he loved Patrick set about his task of converting the native Pagans into Christians.

From his works on the island, one of the most

See ST. PATS on page 6

The not-so-known holiday

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

There are holidays and then there are Holidays, and March 20 is most definitely a Holiday. Not exactly clear on what the special occasion is?

How does the Vernal Equinox sound? That is right: it is the first day of spring — absolutely no more winter — it is a double-threat Holiday. On top of it being the first official day of spring next Saturday, it is also Ostara.

This Pagan holiday is a celebration of a day that symbolizes new life as well as awakening. In many ways it is considered the mid-way point between the extremes of light and darkness (i.e. summer and winter).

Closely linked to the Christian holiday of Easter, which is in fact a permutation of the equinox celebration, Ostara and its descendant holiday get their names from the Teutonic goddess of Spring and the dawn, whose name is Oestre or Eastre.

Unlike most holidays, Ostara is not fixed to a specific day of the year. It falls somewhere between March 19-22, depending on when the first full moon occurs or after the Equinox happens to be.

The irony behind most of the imagery that many Christians associate with

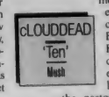
See OSTARA on page 6

Electronic and hip-hop music come together on 'Ten'

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

"Elvis, What Happened?"

cLOUDDEAD poses this rhetorical question in their opening "Pop Song," off their inspired, ambitious, and devastatingly gorgeous second album "Ten." We might want to ask MCs Why?, Odd Nosam and Doseone the same question.



This album flies so far off the radar that it often times gives the impression that it was sent as an alien signal to show we humans how it was done. Hopefully, like other great artists who have established the otherworldly mothership connection, this bold piece will send sparks up and down the music community to get those creative juices flowing.

When DJ Shadow set out to prove "Why Hip-hop Sucks in '96" on 1996's "Endtroducing," he created a hallmark (albeit a bit overrated) hodge-podge that spoke volumes without uttering a word. While Shadow himself retreated to the shadows, often popping up in less successful collaborations, something amazing happened to hip-hop: It stopped sucking as much.

Sure, MTV was busy gorging itself on bombastic displays of opulence, violence and misogyny, but the underground was going through something of a second renaissance with astute, inventive and literate artists paving the path for the diverse array of output currently coming out of labels like Def Jux, 75 Ark, Priority, Anticon, Warp and Mush.

Hip-hop stars began taking compositional cues from electronic musicians. The discovery — still lost on most rock musicians — that hip-hop could be equally progressive and far less alienating than the dance floor fetishists drooling over the latest technology was a revolutionary step forward.

Thanks in part to the mainstream media's diverted attention to thugs and pimps, hip-hop stars were allowed to embrace challenging new music. Examples range from Outkast's enchantment with Aphex Twin to cLOUDDEAD's enchantment with Boards of Canada (downloaders alert: Boards of Canada recently remixed cLOUDDEAD's "Dead Dogs Two"). The experimental trio's first album as a collection of six 10" records that focused on the pastoral soundscapes whose synth washes brought a much- needed utopian aesthetic to the often overly gritty terrain of modern hip-hop.

With Doseone's nasal voice, the scattershot slam verses, unusual samples, and abstract tonal expressionism, cLOUDDEAD had allowed hip-hop to not only permanently come off the streets and into a floating dreamworld, but removed the literal interpretation of "hip" as a prerequisite to maintaining a superficial cool at all times. cLOUDDEAD's is too smart to be only touted as cool.

After a hiatus doing a barrage of touring, solo work and appearing alongside Themselves, Reaching Quiet, Aesop Rock, Boom Bip and various others, cLOUDDEAD are back with all the essential stated elements in place. Opening with a fake accent and ending with a secret track of Why? Intentionally electrocuting himself under a running faucet, cLOUDDEAD's much-awaited follow-up does throw in everything, even the kitchen sink.

COURTESY CLOUDDEAD.COM

cLOUDDEAD's musical style of hip-hop mixed in with electronic music beats is as unique as their asthetic appearance.

It's hardly a disjointed, unlistenable affair though. The guiding principle of the album is a keen, almost Beatles-esque grasp of melody that makes the aptly named ten-track album "Ten" such a rare and enjoyable feast for the ears. Grating guitars collide with warm pads so vivacious and feathery that they make one wonder about the irony lying behind the band's name. These little fluffy clouds are far from dead, though the issue of mortality does arise at various points throughout the album.

It's hard to know what to make of these songs thematically outside of the unifying concept that there are 10 of them. Certain words and concepts reappear throughout "Ten" like the swarming of ants, the prevalence of guns, and the beauty of ugliness of dead dogs, but it's hard to establish a communicative coalescence in the wryly cynical, vaguely political verses.

While the liner notes admit that some song's verses were written without express knowledge of the other stanzas, cLOUDDEAD would seem to be working in the realm of dada and surrealism without the obligatory nihilism and Freudian overtones. What else are we to make of verses like "I'm sick of keen eyed teens keying/ car doors in the middle of the night/ The won't believe their donning dangling carrot cams?"

There's a sense that the hyperbolic realism may be gearing the listener in some kind of direction on songs like "Son of a Gun" where the three vocalists chant "The makers of guns will never go hungry/ may their children always play murder weapons since stick." Regardless, unless you feel like concentrating a researched thesis on the lyrics, it will take a fiercely focused listen to decode the multitude of cryptic messages that cLOUDDEAD litter Ten with.

The reason then that cLOUDDEAD's drip-hop should be designated as music for the advancement of hip-hop (as an Anticon comp recently boisterously boasted) lies in the fact that their mini indie symphonies transform the preposterously long legacy of gentrified 4/4 beats into a schizophrenic game of Candyland and bring Four Tet to a brand new audience.

The second track begins with an absurdly short loop of a skipping record, which instantly sounds like there's no way that doseone and company could ever rap their way out of this one. When they do, a burst of analogue synth seems to break the tension, only to lead the track into even more elliptical patterns filled with psychedelic flute bridges straight off of Manitoba's "Up in Flames." You know you are in for a challenging album. The song proceeds to erupt into child-like sing-along and blissful cooing with vocal riffs on empty space grafted to a Casio tone line and wonderfully melds into the next track by funkdafying the skipping turntable needle into a Mid-eastern-tinged groove.

"Rifle Eyes" opens with a clever play on the British sensation of Hi-NRG and then proceeds to pops off caps as dramatic hits, but never lets them overpower the mournful acoustic guitars and whimsical backwards-masked strings. "3 Twenty" may be the first hip-hop track to ever acknowledge the influence of Flying Saucer Attack. "Dead Dogs Two" laments with funereal organ about the difficulty in seeing decaying road kill "under a sky so blue."

There's a myriad of other surprising elements that cLOUDDEAD pull from their bag of tricks on "Ten." To list them here would detract from the deranged magic that a first listen will surely bring to new fans. It'd be redundant to pun on how the album ranks, but rarely do I get enthusiastic enough to disregard my own urge to keep a hipster cool. This is album is truly a ten.

Academy of Country Music nominations announced

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Alan Jackson, who received a leading eight Academy of Country Music nominations Wednesday, can justify celebrating as early as he wants because "It's Five O'Clock Somewhere."

The ode to leaving work early for the bar, a duet with Jimmy Buffett, was recognized in four categories: single, video, vocal event and song of the year; it was composed by Jim Brown and Donald Rollins.

Jackson was also nominated for entertainer of the year, top male vocalist, and best single and songwriting mentions for "Remember When."

The duo Brooks & Dunn and Toby Keith had five nominations each, including entertainer of the year. Other nominees in that category, besides Jackson were Tim McGraw and Kenny Chesney.

Nominees are determined by the 3,000-member academy based in Burbank. Winners will be announced May 26 in a live telecast from Las Vegas, with Reba McEntire as host of the CBS show.

Martina McBride was the lone female in the best album class for "Martina."

Other album nominees were George Strait's "Honkytonkville," Brad Paisley's "Mud on the Tires," Brooks & Dunn's "Red Dirt Road" and Keith's "Shock 'N Y'all."

The best new artist nominees were Dierks Bentley, Pat Green, Buddy Jewell, Josh Turner and Jimmy Wayne.

Alabama, Diamond Rio, Lonestar, Rascal Flatts and Trick Pony will compete for best country vocal group, while Blue County, Brooks & Dunn, Montgomery Gentry, The Bellamy Brothers and The Warren Brothers were up for best vocal duo.

The nominees were announced at a news conference at the St. Regis Hotel in Los Angeles.

— Anthony Breznican, Associated Press

COURTESY BULLDOGSTONE.COM

Alan Jackson is nominated for eight ACM awards.

www.dailycollegian.com

Absolute Nutrition Center
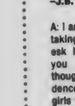
Weight Loss and Body Building Specialists
Slim down before spring break!
Get Ephedra while you can!
19 University Drive
Next to Beach Club Tuesday
687-5089

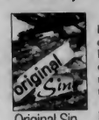
TAMALES
Great Mexican food that's good for you!
Extended Hours at The Hatch
Due to overwhelming demand, the Pizza and Tamales stations at the Hatch will



Clouds Dance Theatre
雲門舞者
來自美國紐英格蘭名校巡演
Free Admission
Wednesday, March 24th
7:30-9:00 p.m.
UMass Amherst
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
(413) 454-2511
Thursday, March 25th
8:00-9:30 p.m.
Smith College
Sage Sweeny Concert Hall
(413) 585-3150
http://students.brown.edu/bts/cdt/opening.htm
Clouds Dance Theatre is a wonderful and professional folk dance troupe from Taiwan, and they have performed extensively outside of Taiwan, including international dance tours in Holland, Germany, and Isreal. They have been extremely well received by international audiences. The aims of the dance troupe founders are to inherit and to carry on the art of Taiwanese folk dance, to help foster professional artists within Taiwan, and to offer audiences a chance to understand and appreciate Taiwanese folk dance through performances.

'Eve' finds the winner, while playing a balancing act

Advice from Eve:



Q: There is this really cute girl in one of my classes that I like. I don't know her, but I want to ask her out sometime. I have no idea if she's single, or if I'm even her type. I have rejection issues, so how can I go about getting her on a date without ending up as a failure?
–J.B.

A: I am a firm believer in taking risks. Just go and ask her out. But first, you need to act as though you have confidence. I'm sure some girls would disagree and prefer passive guys, who are all nervous and such. But I'm almost positive a girl would at least consider you if you just took that extra leap of courage and went for it. Just know that the worst possible thing that could happen is that she isn't interested. Expect that and maybe you'll be pleasantly surprised.

Q: I have a huge crush on my best girlfriend's brother. I know he likes me too, but it's so awkward when the three of us are together. We've gone out alone a couple times, and I believe the drama this may cause is worth it. I'm tired of sneaking around, what do I do? –K.R.

A: You really should have confronted her about this before anything happened. But now all I can say is if you truly like this guy, then go for it. You have to talk to your girl though. Tell her about what you have already done, and what you want to keep doing with her brother, but do it carefully. If she's your good friend she will know what's best and may OK the whole idea. Please get her consent though. Never ruin a friendship over a guy — especially if she's a good friend to you.

Original Sin

Eve

I somehow managed to lose my voice this weekend. I don't know if it's because I talk too much or I tried to speak over my instincts, but my throat is suffering.

Whatever I had said has now led two very different guys to switch personalities and neither one of them has any idea about the other. A little scandalous, I know, but I promise it was unintentional.

I bumped into the first guy a few weeks back, and I was surprised to find he would like to bump into me again if he could. Well, of course he could! He is attractive, smart, interesting ... why not? However, I happen to know this guy quite well. Well enough to remember he was the hottest thing on our high school market, and any girl in her right mind would happily bow at his feet ... maybe even touch them if they could. And I know he knew it.

But I was never the type to fall for guys like that. I needed to be the center of attention. And two dominating personalities would never work — at least back then.

That was four years ago, and apparently people change. No one would recognize him now. And I assume no one really did when all of our old friends met up on Friday and saw his utmost interest in wooing me.

Of course, I am very skeptical in these situations. I had to see if he was serious and so I tested him. He passed. Instead of asking me over at the end of the night, he asked me to lunch the next day. Since lunch, he has called me consistently just to see how I am.

Congratulations. We have a winner. If only this article could be published at our reunion! Ironically, quite the opposite happened the next night with another guy. But I must admit I feel badly about the incident because I pushed it to happen. One of my closest male friends is my ex-boyfriend's good friend and maintains loyalty to the both of us. He has been through almost, if not all, of our drama and has surely seen me at my worst of times. I love the guy. He always seems to see only the good in anything that is bad, and could never dream of hurting those who may deserve it. A pure soul.

My ex ended up cheating on me with a girl he knew our friend was in love with. Not a pure soul.

And even though that broke the two of us, he stood by his side. I, on the other hand, spent months convincing our friend to open his eyes and see the disrespect. As time passed by, I realized maybe two hurt people could come together and find happiness with each other. But he wouldn't have it. He admitted it was a hard offer to refuse, but it would be unacceptable. I knew this already, and I didn't care. I insisted that he thought about the possibility, and came to my own conclusion that this pursuit was worthless. He stood strong, and I had to respect that. However, last weekend we forgot about the wrong and felt what seemed right ... well, at least I did. It was all so innocent in the beginning, but he couldn't continue. And then it was over.

Too dangerous to explore and too late to take it back. I realized the ironic turn of events for both of the guys, and how unconventional their actions were. But then I question; were any of these character slip-ups for real? Maybe. Maybe not. And whatever may be, it was worth it.

Eve is pen name for a love guru attending UMass who knows the ins and outs of every relationship. You can ask Eve for advice by e-mailing her at eve_originalsin@yahoo.com. "Original Sin with Eve" runs every Thursday in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Rappers promote education

By William Kates
Associated Press

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Five of hip-hop's biggest rap stars held class Wednesday for nearly 2,700 Syracuse high school students in an unprecedented session to promote the importance of education and civic responsibility.

The classroom was the Carrier Dome, where rappers Fabolous, Reverend Run, Doug E. Fresh and Raz B joined rap mogul Russell Simmons for two hours to answer questions from students from the city's five high schools.

"If you don't start somewhere, you don't go nowhere. It's about creating awareness. Hip-hop has tremendous power and we can use it to make positive change," said Doug E. Fresh, a pioneering rapper who now writes children's books which mix rhyming and rap.

The summit was put on by Simmons' Hip-Hop Summit Action Network, which has staged similar rallies in 17 major cities in a drive to register two million young voters. However, Wednesday's gathering was the first time a summit has been held in partnership with a school district as part of a school day.

"Everything the artists had to say was phenomenal," said Natasha Alford, a senior at Nottingham High School who will pick between Villanova and Spellman College to study broadcast journalism.

"Today showed that we can come together, we can be positive. We can learn something from these artists, that they have something to offer other than what's in their videos or on their records," Alford said.

"It was very motivating and uplifting," said Emmy Thatvihane, a junior at Fowler High School. "It's good for us to see that they are real people. That they had obstacles and challenges. If they can make it, then we can make it, too."

The summit started with a short documentary on rap and performances by two local groups. The remainder of the event — with a few interludes of music and spontaneous dancing — was devoted to questions and answers.

Several students asked about hip-hop's place in school and its educational value, but other questions dealt with topics ranging from racism in the rap industry to whether the hip-hop voting block could be a factor in the upcoming presidential election.

COURTESY ELEKTRA

Fabolous answered questions from high school students at a hip-hop summit in Syracuse, N.Y. yesterday.

Two female students asked about the violent and sexually explicit lyrics contained in some rap songs. The rappers defended their lyrics saying they were doing nothing more than reflecting the reality of the world they came from.

"I try to talk to my generation in a language they understand," said Fabolous. "Where I'm from, where they come from, they understand what I'm trying to say. Sometimes it comes out a little harsh, a little strong, but its real talk, and they understand it that way."

Despite some public criticism, Syracuse Superintendent Stephen C. Jones decided to host a hip-hop summit as a tool to reach students the district traditionally has had trouble connecting with: kids who are at risk.

About 60 percent of the district' high school students attended the summit. The remaining 2,000 students had a half-day of class.

In preparation, many teachers provided special curriculum using rap in their classrooms over the past month, Jones said.

"It shows our youth that we celebrate them. That we respect them. That we believe in them and they have a message that they can give to us. This was school for us, even the adults," said Jones, adding he is already planning to host another summit next year.

The history of the Ostara holiday

OSTARA from page 4

Easter actually stems from the ancient foundation of Ostara in rebirth and life. For example eggs, bunnies, candy, Easter baskets, new clothes — all these traditions have their origin in the Pagan holiday.

As such a blatant and powerful symbol of life, the egg has become one of, if not the most recognizable symbols of the spring holiday. According to Pagan lore, the traditional Easter egg hunt has quite a horrible history.

In an article on www.witchvox.com entitled "You call it Easter, we call it Ostara," it says:

"Eggs were decorated and offered as gifts and to bring blessings of prosperity and abundance in the coming year; this was common in Old Europe. As Christianity rose and the ways of the "Old Religion" were shunned, people took to hiding the eggs and having children make a game out of finding them. This would take place with all the children of the village looking at the same time in everyone's gardens and beneath fences and other spots.

It is said, however, that those people who sought to seek out heathens and heretics would bribe children with coins or threats, and once those children uncovered eggs on someone's property, that person was then accused of practicing the old ways."

Though she goes on to state that there are no documented cases of this happening, it is still a pervasive piece of Pagan lore.

A traditional Ostara feast would consist of ham and numerous other meats, this stemming back from the ancient days of its celebration. Animals weren't slaughtered during winter so people had to eat sparingly and the meat they had was cured with excessive salt. Thus when spring came around and fresh meat as well as greens, like dandelion greens, nettles and asparagus, were easily obtainable, people would eat with great zeal.

Many modern day Pagans will eat sparingly during different parts of the year, but by choice more so than necessity. By eating a pure diet devoid of toxins and manufactured chemicals, they attempt not only to purify their bodies but also to improve their health and appearance in the long run.

Finally a tradition universal in spring holidays that is a favorite for children of all ages — the giving of candy. Most Pagans do not embrace the notion of a rabbit that drops a basket of candy for children. Many of them promote ancient fairy lore that dictates that on holidays one is to leave offerings to the spirits in order to stay in their favor. It just so happens that the traditional gift for Ostara is sweets, supposedly though if the fairies are not honored with your gift they will bring mischief to your holiday celebration.

Either way you look at it as Easter or Obstara it is a very sweet holiday. If you are interested in learning more about Obstara or any other Pagan holiday contact SPIRALS located on the second floor of the Student Union or check them out online at umass.edu/rso/spirals.

Information from witchvox.com was used in this article.

Time for another St. Patrick's Day

ST. PATS from page 4

indelible symbols of St. Patrick's Day emerged, the shamrock. He utilized the native shamrock as a visual aid in explaining the Holy Trinity, to the nature oriented Pagans.

Christian lore holds that one day, Patrick stood on a cliff and, with his staff, banished all the serpents from Ireland forever. The term serpents, being a thinly-veiled metaphor for the Pagans, which he had set out to convert.

Unfortunately for Patrick returning to his beloved island was not to be a terribly long-lived achievement. Less than 30 years after returning to Ireland Patrick passed away on what is now celebrated as St. Patrick's Day March 17, 461.

St. Patty's Day is more than just the celebration of the life of a man and has many more symbols than the type of clover he used to teach people about his religion. Some of these date back from traditions before even the rise of Christianity.

One such figure is that of the Leprechaun — the traditional wee people who are noted for their love of gold and trickery. The word leprechaun is Gaelic for shoemaker. Which is fitting because according to Celtic mythos they worked as the shoemakers of the Fairies.

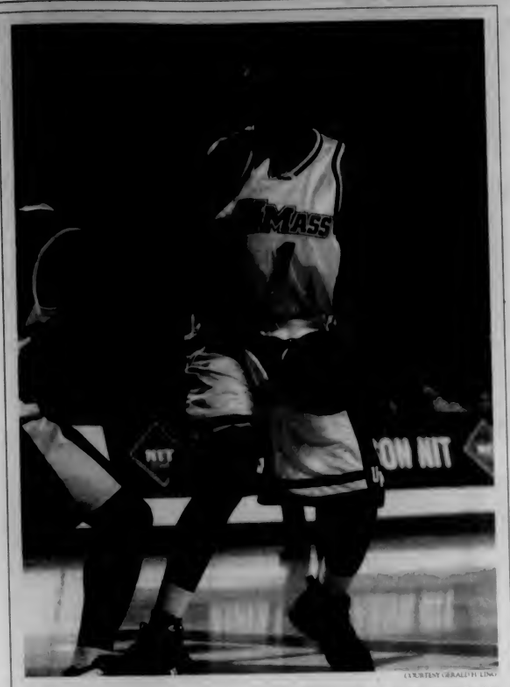
The allure of these creatures lies in their crocks of gold. Legend holds that if you ever encounter a Leprechaun and manage to capture it, it must pay you with its gold in exchange for freedom.

What a reward. Though there have been many throughout history that have claimed to have captured one of these sly critters, none have as of yet managed to obtain the grand prize.

If hunting for a Leprechaun this St. Patrick's Day is your idea of fun, then the best of luck to you. Firstly, all legends hold that they only reside in Ireland, but beyond that there is much dissension as to the Leprechauns favored habitat. Some believe they live in the roots of trees, others say tunnels under dales and still another rumor insists they live in hedgerows along the country lanes of Ireland.

Whatever you choose to do in celebration of St. Patrick's Day, be it a green beer-drinking contest, hunting for four-leaved clovers, or turning over stones in hopes of finding a Leprechaun's hold, you can do it with proper knowledge of the holiday's history.

Information from www.patricksuniverse.com was used in this article.



Amherst Laser & Skin Care Center
"Because you are worth it"
Laser Hair Removal
Both Men and Women
Any Area of the Body
Bikini * Face * Chin * Lip * Underarm * Leg * Back
Facials, Massages, & Microdermabrasion
Laser treatment available for acne and facial veins
Call Now for a free initial physician consultation.
Student Discounts available with a valid Student I.D.
Amherst Laser and Skin Care Center
Bob Weitzman MD- Medical Director
196 NORTH PLEASANT STREET - SUITE 11
AMHERST, MA 01002 - 413-253-2214 - FAX 413-253-2216
www.amherstlaser.com

Spring break is almost here!
Chicago Pizzaria
Friday/Saturday/Sunday Special
Large cheese pizza $5.00
LOCATION: 150 Fearing Street
Located on the corner of Fearing St. and Sunset Ave.
FREE DELIVERY 549-6073
Open Hours
Sun-Wed : 11am-1 am
Thurs-Sat : 11am-3am

Wiffle Rock
2-5 player teams
Medium pitch speed
MAY 1&2 @ TOTMAN FIELD UMASS
WIFFLEBALL TOURNAMENT
$1000 cash
FOR WINNING TEAM
Entry info--
www.wifflerock.com
Hotline 508-429-7093
ROCK 102 WAQY Springfield's Classic Rock

You have options!
Everyone asking what your plans are after graduation?
Massachusetts School of Law graduates ACHIEVE!
Get the same edge that MSL graduates enjoy in almost every professional realm.
Law
Business
Government
Education
Healthcare
Law Enforcement
A Juris Doctor degree puts you ahead of the competition.
A Juris Doctor from MSL affords you the freedom of that competative advantage without the worries others suffer behind a mountain of debt.
Interested? Come check us out
MSL
Massachusetts School of Law
Woodland Park
500 Federal Street
Andover, MA 01810
(978)-681-0800
www.mslaw.edu

Collegian Arts
NEW THIS WEEK!
MONA LISA SMILE
SCHOOL OF ROCK
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

COURTESY GERALD H. LINO

Sophomore forward Rashaun Freeman became the first Minuteman to garner Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year honors since teammate Anthony Anderson received the award in 2002.

UMass falls to Duquesne to conclude season

HOOPS from page 10

backcourt by Viggiano and was slow to get up.

Helped to the bench with an apparent injury, McAllister was replaced at the free throw line by seldom-used reserve guard Tyler Bluemling, who proceeded to sink both free throws to push the Dukes' lead to 75-71 with 32.2 seconds to play.

UMass concludes what was its third consecutive losing season under coach Steve Lappas, but with a talented core of promising young players, will look to the future in hopes of furthering what has been a painful rebuilding process.

The Minutemen will graduate only walk-on Paco Kotaridis, and should benefit from the return of center Gabe Lee. In addition, 2003 top-100 recruit Lawrence Carrier will join the squad after sitting out a season under Proposition 48.

He will be joined by big men Jeff Salwoski of Bristol, Conn. and Oliver Lamoureux, a native of Canada.

Minutewomen fall to Hofstra

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Three straight losses is not exactly the best way to start off a season, especially when you have high expectations like the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team.

But that's how the Minutewomen (1-3) have fared thus far, coming up on the short end of a 10-8 loss to the Hofstra Pride (1-1), Tuesday at Shuart Stadium.

Hofstra	10
UMass	8

Senior attacker Hope Zelinger led the Maroon and White in scoring again, netting her third hat trick of the year with three goals on the day. Freshman Brianna Bubeck had her second straight two-goal game, while Tracey Drown, Lindsay Cassell and Samantha Sepulveda all tallied one apiece. Drown and Cassell also marked two assists in the game.

Becky Thorne and Jill Wienecke also had three-goal games for the Pride, making what resulted in a heavy contribution to their win. Kimberly Hillier, Catherine Guerriere, Mary Romano and Jen Maget also lit the scoreboard with one each.

The Minutewomen encountered some turbulence very early when Thorn fired a laser past goalkeeper Joey Rubin, unassisted, just 40 seconds into the game. Weinecke added to the troubles less than 20 seconds later with another unassisted goal, giving the Pride a 2-0 lead after just one minute of play.

The Maroon and White slowly clawed their way back after Bubeck knocked in a feed from Drown at 5:09, followed by a Drown goal off a free position shot three minutes later. But the Pride swiftly regained the lead with two quick goals off free positions shots by Maget and Guerriere to push the lead back up to two.

Cassell closed the lead to one once again at 14:44, but the rally was extremely short-lived. Weinecke took a pass from Bridget Eder less than ten seconds later to net her second goal of the game, and Thorn got her second half a minute later to keep the Pride out of striking distance.

Zelinger finally marked her first of three at 19:40, but the Blue and Yellow responded again with two more quick goals from Hillier and Romano, giving them an 8-4 lead going into the break.

The second half kicked off with Weinecke's third goal eight minutes into the game. However, the Pride would be held scoreless for the next 20 minutes of play while the Minutewomen were mounting a comeback.

Zelinger started another rally for the Maroon and White at 40:24 when she pushed a Cassell pass through the back of the net for her second goal of the game. Bubeck followed up 30 seconds later with her second as well, and Sepulveda closed the lead to one with 15 minutes to play and momentum on their side. Or so it seemed.

The Pride defense quickly put the clamps on the UMass rally, and Thorn put the nail in the coffin with three minutes to go, unassisted, to seal the doom on the late rally.

The Minutewomen will be spending next week's spring break in upstate New York, as their road trip will lead them to Albany and Syracuse.

The Albany Great Danes (1-4) will be led by Senior Alexis DiDomenico and freshman Kate Fontana, who both lead the team in goals (seven).

The Syracuse Orangewomen (1-1) are coming off a tough loss to No. 3 Maryland in which they too were unable to convert a late rally. They will be led by SU's all-time leading scorer Leigh-Ann Zimmer.

McCain lashes out at MLB

By Frederic J. Frommer
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Major league baseball has a "legitimacy problem" due to suspicions concerning steroid use among players, Senator John McCain said Wednesday, urging the sport to institute a stronger drug-testing program.

"Sports organizations that allow athletes to cheat through weak drug testing regimes are aiding and abetting cheaters," McCain, R-Ariz., said at the start of a hearing of the Senate Commerce Committee.

"Each of you, and particularly major league baseball, has a legitimacy problem," he said, addressing top baseball and football officials in attendance. "As your athletes get bigger and stronger, the credibility of your product in the eyes of the public gets weaker."

Baseball commissioner Bud Selig and union head Donald Fehr were scheduled to testify, along with NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue and union chief Gene Upshaw.

In his prepared remarks, Selig said major league baseball would like to have stronger testing but couldn't get the union to agree.

"I realize that we have work to do," he said. "We need more frequent and year-round testing of players. We need immediate penalties for those caught using illegal substances."

The committee also is examining legislation sponsored by Sen. Joe Biden that would ban over-the-counter sales of androstenedione, a steroid-like supplement that Mark McGwire used the year he broke the single-season home run mark, and the newly detected steroid THG.

Biden criticized the players union for resisting stronger testing for steroids.

"The union's wrong, here," said Biden, D-Del. "Baseball is the national pastime, but it's the repository of the values of this country.

"There's something simply un-American about this. This is about values, about culture, it's about who we define ourselves to be."

Last year, five to seven percent of the tests on players came back positive, even though they knew when the tests were coming. That level triggered more tests later this year, although a player won't face a year's suspension until a fifth offense.

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
M DC DESIGN
Flyers • Newsletters • Posters • Banners • Business Cards
And other layout platforms
Phone: 413.545.1864 Fax: 413.545.3699
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003

Mass Attack to open first-ever home playoff series tonight

HOCKEY from page 10

ciation.

"They're very cognizant of the fact, and their teammates are very cognizant of the fact that they've only got a few games left," Cahoon said.

"Their leadership has been a constant since the beginning of the year right through the end. They've represented themselves in a really positive way, they're classy kids, and hopefully we can support that by playing really well and extending the season well into the future."

There are scores to be settled on both sides of the ice tonight. The River Hawks (10-21-7, 7-12-5 Hockey East) come in as the sixth seed, after their season went into a minor tailspin following the forfeit of five wins, three in conference.

The Minutemen, who were swept by Lowell in a home-and-home set in early January, were the biggest benefactors of those forfeits, gaining two wins that give them a one-point edge over fourth-place New Hampshire.

On the flip side, UMass junior forward Greg Mauldin was severely injured during the teams' meeting on Jan. 3, when River Hawk Jerramie Domish put a hard hit on Mauldin that required him to be hospitalized overnight. While no animosity was expressed by the Minutemen, the subplot is clear.

UMass fans must show class

HOCKEY FANS from page 10

Capraro's galvanizing overtime goal against Boston University on Dec. 6, 2002, and the unthinkable sweep of the vaunted Maine Black Bears in Orono, Maine last spring.

However, just as the program has turned around under the guidance of coach Don Cahoon, now the culture around the club must evolve. It is time for the atmosphere around the team to follow.

It's duly noted that the Minutemen play on a campus of more than 20,000, in what is almost a city setting in the middle of the quiet Pioneer Valley. This is not a small-town team, nor is it a small school. Large, fervent crowds should be expected for a team that has become one of the biggest draws on campus. The players have said that a large, loud assembly of UMass supporters makes it a whole lot easier to play well.

But a line needs to be drawn, and tonight is the perfect opportunity to do it. I have watched crowds swell to wall-stretching proportions this year, marveling at the fact that I've had to stand up from my press box seat just to see over the thousands of standing, chanting, screaming fans. It's truly wonderful to see the campus get behind a team the way it has this year.

But it is time to recognize that everyone who calls the Mullins Center home for a few hours every weekend (myself included) represents the University of Massachusetts, not just the athletes on the ice. It's preposterous to think that a throng of 6,000-plus people will always be civil, with no vulgar words spoken. Besides, it's hockey, not opera, and more than a little zeal is expected. But there are limits. The Minutemen have become an attraction not only for students, but also for the community at large, just as massive crowds came to see the men's basketball team during its all-too-brief time in the national spotlight, there are many people from all around the region who attend UMass hockey games. That includes families, which of course include children.

As someone who is as big of a fan of free speech as the next guy, I wouldn't begin to denounce someone for speaking his mind at a hockey game — of all places. This isn't about making UMass look like a ridiculously clean place, full of virgin ears and penitent tongues. Among this University's greatest attributes is its diversity and working-class nature. Everyone should be able to enjoy themselves at the hockey game, from the family of four over in section F, to the rowdiest student pounding the glass in section U. But there is a place for temperance and respect, and tonight is a perfect place to start.

An important aspect of the Minutemen's successful execution of the power play is to the program's progress, so is the environment that welcomes the outside world to UMass hockey. With more and more television coverage, college hockey is becoming a national sport, and if the Minutemen manage to put it together this year, you can bet that there will be more than a handful of cameras following them next year. It's important to remember that even as this campus celebrates the program's success, it must also foster the culture of the team, so that newcomers feel welcome, and the region-wide exposure that seems inevitable at this point won't set the university up for an embarrassing incident.

Please, come to the game tonight, and have a blast. But remember that everyone in the building represents this school, and it will be much sweeter to watch the Minutemen advance, knowing that the campus community is progressing right along with them.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at merritt_collegian@yahoo.com

Jacobs quick to put teammates first

JACOBS from page 10

about making space for people and not letting people come in and run you out of the rink," Cahoon says. "He's able to back down the 'enforcers' so-to-say. The guys who go out and try to physically intimidate players. He backs them down and keeps them at bay and he's been terrific in that role."

"As a hockey player, I'm just a hard worker who will do anything for my teammates and to help my team," Jacobs says.

"I don't think I'm as much an enforcer, but more of just a hard worker and a guy who will enforce whenever I need to protect any teammate because I know they'd do the same for me."

The bond Jacobs has formed with his teammates in his two years since arriving from Cushing is an important one. Oftentimes, he is their eyes and ears on the ice, watching intently over their every move and remaining eye-ready to instantaneously arrive at their side.

Very simply, it is a matter of loyalty and reciprocation. Jacobs glows when he speaks of the fraternal-like bond he shares with his Maroon and White brethren, for he knows that as quick as he explodes onto the scene of a vicious slash or wayward forearm in support of a teammate, those he so often protects would arrive that much quicker in defense of him.

"My teammates, by far are the most satisfying thing about playing hockey," Jacobs says. "I'm always trying to help my teammates out in any way, and just do whatever I need to do to protect them, because I know they would do the same for me.

"The guys on this team are unbelievable, and getting to play with them has been the biggest opportunity of my life."

Jacobs' impact on his teammates cannot be measured by the pain he inflicts on the ice on their behalf, or the bumps, bruises and references to his maternal heritage he routinely enjoys as a result of such scrappiness.

He is a locker room presence; the guy everybody loves when it's time to have fun, and whom everybody listens to when it's time to get down to business.

Climbing on top of the net, ceremoniously tossing the puck into the empty Mullins Center Practice Rink stands and flailing around like he just won Olympic Gold, watching Jacobs celebrate a goal in practice reminds you not that he has a mere two career tallies, but rather that he is a source of energy amongst his teammates who often provides much-needed loosening-up throughout a bitterly long and punishing season.

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

Jacobs is widely considered the heart and soul of a team that recently concluded the most successful regular season in program history.

"In the locker room, there might not be a bigger presence," Cahoon says. "He's a really entertaining guy, and he's well-respected and well-liked by his teammates, and he's appreciated."

"Anyone out there watching the game or reading the newspaper doesn't knows how valuable that kid is to us," says Pöck, a Hobey Baker Award finalist. "From his personality to his character, he's just huge and we're glad to have him on our team."

Yet again, for Jacobs, his character is just one half of a two-way street.

"The other guys look to me to keep them up and keep them going," he says. "But at the same time, they've helped me a ton with my game along the way.

"No matter what, my teammates keep pushing me. Even when we're losing or having a bad practice, we push each other and push ourselves."

While Jacobs is a lightning rod for team chemistry amongst the Minutemen, he is clearly a marked man around Hockey East and throughout UMass' non-conference schedule.

Having ruffled a full season's worth of feathers this year after injuries kept him out of much of 2002-03, Jacobs has cast himself in the role of the villain.

A role he very much enjoys.

"For sure, that's my game to go out there and piss people off and get them frustrated and all kinds of things like that," Jacobs says. "I just love it, I really love it."

"I'm sure that other teams we play recognize that at this point in time, his presence will be felt out there," Cahoon adds. "I don't think Stephen's too worried about it, and I hope they recognize what he can do if given the chance."

Regardless of team's growing awareness of him, the large bull's eye between the two and the seven on Jacobs back is hardly a hindrance. In fact, Cahoon believes it helps nullify the intimidation factor when facing some of Hockey East's biggest bullies.

"We've had success going in to places like Maine, as well as other schools who play a more physical brand of hockey like BU and New Hampshire, in part because of Stephen's ability to inflict his will on people," he says. "That means a lot to us, and we need him to do that in big games."

"We need a guy like him in the lineup. There are guys like [Patrick] Foley at New Hampshire and [Dustin] Penner at Maine, and we needed one too. We needed that guy who wouldn't back down from anyone and who would be the equalizer."

For the 6-foot-1 213-pound forward, that means establishing, and often renewing, acquaintances with some of college hockey's foremost goons, including a certain infatuation with Foley — the Wildcats senior captain — that came to a head with the two exchanging multiple pleasantries in the Minutemen's 4-1 victory over UNH on Feb. 6.

"I love talking trash," Jacobs says. "I always look to get to the stars to try and get them off their game, but I'll go after anyone I can try and draw a penalty from.

"I love talking with Foley because he's supposedly a real smart kid academically but he's really bad at talking [trash]. It's pretty funny."

Amidst the Information Age and the era of the Internet, and with opposing Hockey East school's scheduled to face each other on three separate occasions over the course of a season, it becomes quite easy to drag such encounters down to a personal level. Something Jacobs says does not happen until the time is right.

"It should never get to a personal level. You just can't let it affect you because it's all part of the game," he says. "But come summer time I'm sure we'll have our change to drop 'em and fight, because we'll see each other."

Heading into the best-of-three first round of the Hockey East playoffs tonight at the Mullins Center, Jacobs knows the time for complacency has long-since passed him and his teammates by.

The UMass-Lowell River Hawks represent the first step in a quest for the Minutemen's first Hockey East championship, an elusive goal that they narrowly missed last season.

For Jacobs, it begins with memories of Hawks forward Jerramie Domish's vicious hit-from-behind on Mauldin that resulted in a five-minute major and a game disqualification during UML's 3-0 win over UMass on Jan. 3.

While the team has downplayed the situation, the onus silently but surely falls on the shoulders of Jacobs to continue to uphold the duties of the role he has played so well all season long.

"[My teammates] don't have to say anything, they know it's going to come," Jacobs says. "Whenever you see a guy get hurt like that, everyone, including myself, wants to get right out there and do something about it."

"There's no question games like [this Thursday] get you fired up to go out and be aggressive. It's the playoffs — a whole different season — and it's time to come with it."

Nonetheless, Cahoon coaches Jacobs to be reactionary, in order to make sure he takes an eye for an eye rather than setting his teammates back.

"We usually don't try to initiate that sort of physical play, but we know that if other teams do, we can respond to that," he says. "Without Stephen in the lineup I don't know how effective we'd be.

"If people are going to take runs at Greg Mauldin or Thomas Pöck or Stephen Werner, then [Jacobs] is going to neutralize that. "I just tell him to be smart and don't put your team at a disadvantage. If you're going to be taken offthe ice, make sure someone's coming with you. If you're going to put your body on someone, make it worth it.

"Don't be slashing people, don't be high sticking people, just level someone. If you level someone, 50 percent of the time you're not going to get called because maybe it's a good check, and the other 50 percent you might get two minutes in the box but you'll have everyone on the other side thinking before they touch the puck.

Because as Cahoon will attest to:

"Aggression has to be thoughtful, it can't be uncontrolled."

Kaplan rebate offer:
Enroll today and get $100 back!
Receive $100 back through Kaplan's Rebate† when you enroll in an LSAT, MCAT, GMAT, GRE, DAT or TOEFL course between March 1st–March 31st.
Call or visit us online for more information or to enroll.
Limited time offer!
KAPLAN 1-800-KAP-TEST kaptest.com/rebate
Test Prep and Admissions
† Test names are registered trademarks of their respective owners. This offer applies only to classroom courses and 15-25 and 30-hour tutoring programs and cannot be combined with any other offer. To be eligible you must enroll between March 1–March 31, 2004. Certain conditions apply. See redemption forms for complete details. Redemption forms are available at kaptest.com/rebate and at Kaplan centers.

LAUNCH YOUR CAREER
Apply now for a Legal Assistant Internship at the Student Legal Services Office
•Serve the campus community while enhancing your resume
•Earn up to 15 credits working 36 hours a week or 6 to 9 credits working 26 hours a week
Student Legal Services Office
922 Campus Center
(413) 545-1995

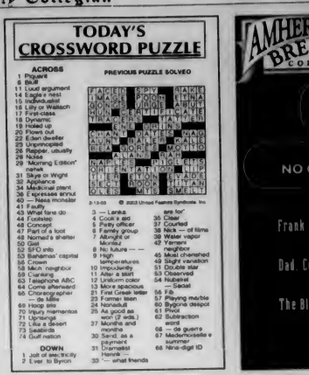
birthControl.com
Helping you to make the right choices
For non-prescription Birth Control Needs
visit:
www.birthcontrol.com
We have the Sponge Available

GOLD'S GYM
NOW OPEN!
Bring in this coupon and receive:
$100 OFF OR FREE TRIAL
COMPETITION, PLEASE!
THERE'S A REASON WHY WE'RE #1
BEST EQUIPMENT, BEST RESULTS
COME CHECK US OUT!
GOLD'S GYM
10 UNIVERSITY DR.
(413) 549-6565

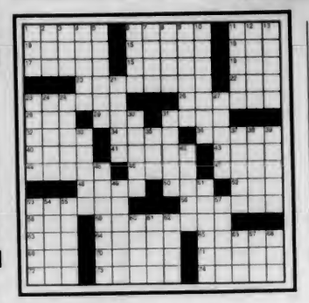
UMASS Campus Recreation
Still Time To Enter:
Softball (M/W/C).....A.S.A.P.
Co-rec Soccer.....A.S.A.P.
Volleyball Special.....A.S.A.P.
Officials Needed:
Softball Clinics.....3/22, 3/24, 3/25
Co-rec Soccer Clinics.....3/23, 3/24, 3/25
Volleyball Special.....3/23
Call for clinic attendance requirements, times and locations.
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: www.umass.edu/umim

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"The world is round; it has no point."



-Adrienne E. Gusoff



TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Piquant
6 Bluff
11 Loud argument
14 Eagle's nest
15 Indescribable
16 Fuel mixture
17 First-class
18 Dynamic
19 Holed up
20 Flows out
22 Eden dweller
23 Unprincipled
25 Rapper, usually
29 Nobelist Wiesel
30 "Morning Edition" partner
31 Skye or Wright
32 Appliance
34 Medicinal plant
36 Expresses ennui
40 — Nalas monster
41 Faulty
43 What fans do
45 Ballet bend
48 Concept
47 Part of a loaf
48 Normal's shelter
50 Gist
52 SFO info
53 Bahamas' capital
56 Crown
58 Much mischief
59 Lessen
61 Telephone ABC
64 Come afterward
66 Chopping apprior — de Mille
69 Hoop site
70 Inquiry memorabox
71 Uprising
72 Lease-signer
73 Lasso
74 Gulf nation

DOWN
1 Jolt of electricity
2 Ever, to Byron
3 — Lanka
4 Could it aid
5 Petty officer
6 Family group
7 Allnight or Monday
8 No future — —
9 High
10 Rear features
11 Innocuously
12 Affair a start
13 Uniform color
18 More spacious
21 First Greek letter
23 Former teen
24 Nonskid
25 As good as
26 Pro — (vets)
27 Months and months
28 Send as a payment
31 Dramatist Henrik
33 "— what friends

34 — for (prepare)
35 Clear
37 Courted
38 Nick — of films
39 Water vapor
42 Yeoman's neighbor
46 Most cherished
47 Ocean motion
51 Double star
53 Observed
54 Nuisance
— Sadat
55 Fib
57 Playing marbles
60 Bygone despot
61 Ruler
62 Rubber source
68 — de guerre
67 Medal/obsolete summer
68 Nine-digit ID

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
For Amherst

THURSDAY
• High: 48
• Low: 31

FRIDAY
• High: 40
• Low: 26

SATURDAY
• High: 48
• Low: 24

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
• Oriental Beef & Vegetables
• Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
• Spicy Black Bean Burger (vegan)

DINNER
• Roast Turkey
• Stuffed Shells (vegetarian)
• Ginger Black Beans (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andrew Tamulynas
COPY EDITOR
Erika Lowles
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Samantha Nielsen

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Get started as soon as you get the opportunity.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Pay attention to those virus warnings from OIT.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Share your cough drops, not your cough.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Be more accepting of others, and their different habits.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Wear something bright; it will put everyone around you in a good mood.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Don't forget to take the lens cap off.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Keep duct tape and nail polish remover handy. They are the only tools you need.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Go get some ice cream. Enjoy the weather with a frosty treat.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Measure twice; cut once.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Don't bother watching television. You can't watch "Newlywerds" anyway.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Take your time and be patient. Good things will come.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Listen to the Dropkick Murphies. It will put you in the mood for green beer.

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
UPSTAIRS at the ABC
NO COVER CHARGE
Frank Manzi
Dad. Come Home
The Blarney Pilgrims

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 bedroom Brandywine apartment starting June 1. $755/month negotiable – includes heat, water, cooking gas. Spacious, quiet with balcony and parking. 549-9489

N. Amherst, 1 Bedrm, 1 1/2 mi. UMass Deck, $625, Pets OK. Hdwd floors Avlb. 4/1 maybe sooner. 549-2062

EMPLOYMENT

Get hands-on legal experience with a legal assistant internship this fall. Work directly with attorneys and clients and earn 9 to 15 credits. No experience required. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office for an application, due 4/2. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

EMPLOYMENT

Local Business is hiring marketers Part Time $10-15/hr Call Alison @413-627-9043

ATTENTION LAX PLAYERS Play & Coach – Have fun – Make $$$ Top Boys Sports Camp in Maine looking for staff to instruct & coach LAX. Awesome Summer! Work with kids! Top salaries, FREE rm/bd/trvl allow. Apply online ASAP: www.campcobbossee.com

Native speakers of any Dravidian language sought E.G. Tamil, Kannada, Malayalam, Telugu Contact John Kingston 545-6837 voice mail JKingston@linguist.umass.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Two job opportunities on Nantucket Island beginning in May. Office assistants with decent typing, computer and telephone skills. Some errand running. Salary + housing. Tele. 508-228-3942 or send resume to PO Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 or fax resume to 508-228-8778

Gymnastics Instructor Pre-school, grade-school, team positions open. Afternoon, evening & weekend hours available. 3-20 hrs/wk, flexible work environment, Gymnastics center w/ loose foam & resi pit system. Greenfield YMCA 451 Main St. Greenfield, MA 01301 (413) 773-3646 x 423

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.around-campus.com

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley 5 bedroom Newer home close to UMass big yard 2 full bathrooms, sunny living room. Call 549-4270

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst, PhilosophyDialogue.net

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

TRAVEL

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

WANTED

Your 10 year old BMX bike $75. Will pay more for Mongoose or GT. Patrick, 508-934-9274

EGG DONORS NEEDED: Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.reproMedChoices.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Game on!

UMass to open first-ever home playoff series tonight

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Saturday, March 6 was a night that Mike Warner, Thomas Pöck, and Nick Kuiper will always remember.

As the lone seniors on the Massachusetts hockey team, they were honored in a brief pre-game ceremony, and their jersey numbers were painted on the boards, as well as put up in lights on the Mullins Center's south wall. It was a night dedicated to the three senior captains for the dedication and hard work they've put in during their four years at UMass, celebrated on their final regular season game in front of the Amherst faithful.

But Saturday, March 6 is a thing of the past, and those three men have one more shot at going out with a bang. Tonight, they'll lead the Minutemen into the Hockey East Quarterfinals against UMass Lowell (7 p.m., Mullins Center), and while last Saturday was "Senior Night" at the arena, this weekend holds a little more weight for the trio.

"This means a lot for us three," Kuiper said. "The first two years we didn't even make the playoffs, and last year we had a good run at it. I really hope this year we go further. It's the best part of the year, and I'd like to play here as long as possible, so hopefully we can play in the National Tournament, and definitely make the Hockey East final."

The trio has come a long way since walking into Amherst as doe-eyed freshmen in 2000. In their time in Amherst, the team has gone 51-74-13 overall (.340), with a 32-57-7 (.333) Hockey East mark. But that belies the growth that has fostered during those four years, culminating in this weekend's historic series. It is the first time that UMass has ever hosted a Hockey East playoff series, something that means a lot to the players who have seen the highs of last year's improbable run to the conference semifinals, and the lows of missing the playoffs the first two years they were here.

"After two years of missing the playoffs, it was hard to imagine [a home playoff series]," Warner said. "Going into last year's playoffs, we hadn't played a playoff game yet, and if you'd asked me at the end of my sophomore year if we could be in the FleetCenter the next year, and the next year playing for home ice, it would have been hard to imagine.

While the achievements of last year's team — the highest victory total in the program's history (19), and a stunning upset of third-place Maine in hostile Alfond Arena — are glowing memories for the three captains, this year is different. This year, the Minutemen are the favorite going into the quarterfinals, as owners of the third seed.

"Last year was good, it was what we needed, so this year we came in with different expectations," Pöck said. "Expectations of winning, of going back to the FleetCenter, and then maybe taking it a step further and going to the final game. What we did last year was great, but now we have a better chance, a better team, and I'm pretty sure we could do more if everything's right."

The Minutemen (16-11-6, 12-9-3 Hockey East) didn't exactly charge into the playoffs as they did last year, when they won three of their last four games to secure the sixth seed in the Hockey East tournament. UMass hasn't won a game since Feb. 6, a 4-1 decision over New Hampshire at the Mullins Center. Finishing 0-6-1 wasn't exactly the way the seniors wanted to go out, especially after last weekend's sweep at the hands of the Northeastern Huskies, who missed the playoffs by one point. Still, there's room for optimism.

"It definitely would have helped our confidence if we had a better weekend against Northeastern, but what's done is done," Kuiper said. "It's the start of a new season really, and we're going to come out hungry and ready to win every night."

Said Warner, "what they did for us Saturday at senior night was a really nice thing. We didn't get to do what we wanted to do, so we want to go out with a bang at the Mullins Center, not to mention the fact that it's the first playoff series at home ever for UMass."

The trio has provided senior leadership through the trials and tribulations of what has been an up-and-down season; something for which UMass coach Don Cahoon showed plenty of appre-

See HOCKEY on page 8

Senior defenseman Thomas Pöck, a Hobey Baker Award finalist, will lead UMass into the Hockey East playoffs against UMass-Lowell.

Fans must show class

Andrew Merritt

Tonight will be one of the most historic nights in the history of the Massachusetts hockey program. For the first time since joining Hockey East in 1993, the Minutemen will play a conference playoff game in front of their own fans. A large turnout is obviously expected, and the buzz around the game is that a repeat of the program's first-ever sellout on Feb. 13 is a distant but legitimate possibility.

Students should plan to get tickets early, and arrive at the Mullins Center well before the 7 p.m. opening face-off.

But showing up is only half the battle.

Throughout its history in Hockey East, the burgeoning UMass program has had enough ups, downs, and in betweens to last a few more decades. There were the rough years, when the team scrambled to post double-digit victories period, let alone in conference play. There were also great moments, like Chris

See HOCKEY FANS on page 8

The ultimate teammate

Jacobs an enforcer on and off the ice

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Controlled aggression.

It is an intense discipline, one that is derived not from God-given prowess, but from a lifetime of focused mental and physical chiseling.

To conquer the uncontrollable urge to release one's anger means a lifetime of hardening not for the soft of heart, for aggression is a relentless force, one that few can harness, let alone master.

When a hockey player exudes this, he is of a special breed. He is a throwback; a reminder of the days when there were no helmets and no holds-barred, and an elbow to the mouth or a puck in the eye meant a few stitches or a bag of ice and a keen ear for your line to be called.

Gone, however, are the days when rosters at every snow-covered State U. from Portland, Maine to Portland, Ore. were chock-full of such unbreakables, replaced instead by sleek skaters and cerebral forecheckers needed to comply with the now-fully entrenched era of dump-and-chase and the neutral zone trap.

Needless to say, Stephen Jacobs is arguably more appreciated within the Massachusetts ice hockey program than any of its marquee names.

While Thomas Pöck is redefining how a defenseman plays at the University of Massachusetts, Gabe Winer is climbing toward the elite level of Hockey East netminders and Greg Mauldin and Stephen Werner have established themselves nationally as premier offensive dynamos, Jacobs is the life force of a team that has revolutionized the sport of hockey in the Pioneer Valley.

"It's hard to say how important he is if you're the average fan," senior tri-captain Mike Warner says of Jacobs. "In the locker room, he's more important to the team than anyone — from the leading scorer to the goalie. The kid just brings 100 percent complete heart to every game, and cares more about his teammates than about any stat.

"Every team should be fortunate enough to have someone like that kid."

In watching the Minutemen, it's hardly difficult to notice what makes Jacobs such a catalyst amongst his teammates. His style of play exemplifies that of his favorite National Hockey Leaguer, Tie Domi. The guy you respect and love when he's on your side, but wouldn't mind driving through the Plexiglas if caught him donning another sweater.

Yet as reigning Hockey East Coach of the Year Don "Toot" Cahoon attests, Jacobs' game goes well beyond pure primal instincts.

"From a coaching standpoint, we recognize what he means to us, because he's a big part of who we are and what we do," the fourth-year UMass coach says. "Stephen is a power forward for us who is a mainstay in the line-up simply because when we play our most important games, and we need his physical presence, we can depend on him to be in a mindset so that he can fulfill that role.

"He creates a lot of disturbances out there, and can take people off their game to open things up for his line mates to get scoring chances."

Regardless of how it's labeled, Jacobs style of play is undeniably one festered through hockey bloodlines that takes shape on the ice night-in and night-out through nothing more than hard work and determination.

"Hockey's always been a part of my family," the Westminster, Mass. native says. "My dad coaches at Cushing Academy, I went there to play four years for him and its just been something that's always been in my life since I was little.

"I just always try to be myself and work hard out there. My father always told me to just keep my head down and keep working no matter what, and that's all I try to do."

What big No. 27 is, is the Mass Attack's resident tough-guy. The wacko whose first inclination after being force-fed the top of the opposing team's bench door is not to locate who did it, but who can pay for it.

There's no question he is on the ice to enforce, and while such a role is relative in college hockey with the mandatory cage nullifying the melees that break out almost nightly around the NHL, the task nonetheless remains a vital one that requires guts and produces little glory.

"It's not about fighting, it's

See JACOBS page 8

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

Jacobs' first career goal was the game-winning tally in a 5-3 win over Maine in the first game of the 2002-03 Hockey East playoffs.

COURTESY GERALD H. LING

A Westminster native, Stephen Jacobs came to UMass after playing four years for his father at Cushing Academy.

Minutemen fall just short to Dukes in A-10 Tournament

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

And that's your season.

Playing its first game following the death of former coach, color commentator and longtime supporter Jack Leaman, the Massachusetts men's basketball team played inspired basketball, but couldn't hold a nine-point second half lead in falling 79-76 to Duquesne in the opening round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament in Dayton, Ohio.

Duquesne	79
UMass	76

The Minutemen (10-19 4-13 A-10) conclude the season losers of three in a row and eight of nine, while the Dukes (12-16 7-10 A-10) have now won three in a row after losing five straight, and move on to face host Dayton tonight in the quarterfinal round.

Sophomore forward Rashaun Freeman's inside basket with 10 seconds to play brought UMass to within two at 75-73, but a pair of Martin Osimani free throws pushed the Dukes lead back to four with 8.6 remaining in the contest.

Junior Brennan Martin then pulled the Minutemen to within a point at 77-76 with a deep a 3-pointer from the corner, and UMass again was able to foul Osimani on the inbounds pass.

The junior guard, having scored just two points in 31 minutes of play on the night, sank both free throws to give Duquesne a 79-76 lead with 1.8 left on the game clock. Jimmy Tricco then stole the ensuing inbounds pass to seal the win for coach Danny Nee's squad.

Freeman, who was recently named Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year, tied a game-high with 18 points and grabbed 12 rebounds for UMass, while fellow A-10 All-Rookie Team selection Art Bowers matched Freeman's output with 18 points of his own.

The Minutemen also received solid contributions from freshman guard Maurice Maxwell (16 points), as well as sophomore forward Jeff Viggiano (10 points).

Tricco, Elijah Palmer and Jack Higgins all tossed in 14 points for Duquesne, and Kieron Achara and Bryant McAllister chipped in with 13 and 12 points, respectively.

The Maroon and White scored six points in a row to take a 71-67 lead at the 2:32 mark of the second half, but the Dukes evened the score on pair of free throws from McAllister and a Higgins baseline jumper.

McAllister then capitalized on a Minuteman miss when he converted a turnaround jumper in the paint at the 1:10 mark, giving Duquesne a 73-71 edge.

After the Maroon and White missed a 3-point attempt, McAllister was fouled hard in the

See HOOPS on page 7

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, MARCH 12, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 101

Neil Young will preform at Mullins on Sunday, March 21

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

UMass wins game one of playoff series against UMass-Lowell

SPORTS, PAGE 8

SGA election causes legal controversies

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association judiciary filed an injunction against the use of Instant Run-off Voting Wednesday, but the chancellor of elections still plans on going ahead with his plans. The injunction could jeopardize the validity of this spring's elections.

"I didn't expect the Judiciary to issue an injunction without a hearing before hand," Chancellor Steve Hoeschele said.

Associate Chief Justice Keith Kelley issued the injunction, or stoppage, of the use of IRV on this spring's ballot. IRV is a voting method currently used in Ireland and Australia. It uses a ballot that asks the voters to list the candidates in order of preference, not just one choice.

"The Chancellor of Elections of the SGA, Steve Hoeschele, is hereby ordered to halt the use of the IRV Format of election until we are able to ascertain its constitutionality," Kelley wrote.

Kelley also scheduled a hearing for March 31. The elections are March 24 and March 25.

Hoeschele advocated for IRV and still plans on implementing it because he feels that the Judiciary branch did not follow the proper proceedings to file the injunction because they issued it before they had a hearing.

"Therefore, being that the writs of injunction ... are not valid by the by-laws of the SGA, the Elections Commission will continue with its unanimous plans ... for an instant runoff ballot," Hoeschele wrote in a memo to the Student Judiciary.

Jared Nokes, speaker of the senate, and Attorney General Mark Morrison filed two separate petitions for an injunction against the IRV.

Nokes filed his injunction last Friday at 3 p.m. in hopes of having a hearing in time before the elections. After a request for a hearing has been made, the by-laws state that the Judiciary must wait seven calendar days before they can hold a hearing. However, the Judiciary did not react until Monday, making a hearing before the elections impossible. In Nokes' reading of the by-laws, he says that the Judiciary can only make a ruling after a hearing.

"They have issued, without a hearing, an injunction ... to halt the use of the IRV format and conduct

See SGA on page 3

Candidates debate key issues

Southwest gatherings a major concern

By Ikaika C. Arnado
Collegian Staff

Candidates running for the positions of Student Government Association president and Trustees last night, debated on various issues concerning the future of the University of Massachusetts. The debate was televised live on UVC-TV.

Recurring themes of the debate were budget cuts, fee increases, high-priced textbooks and student confidence at the University. The candidates also addressed the issues of the Registered Student Organization space allocations, African, Latino, Asian and Native American appointed seats, and the Southwest Residential Area celebratory gatherings.

The presidential candidates who attended the debate were Eduardo E. Bustamante, Mark E. Morrison, Patrick G. Higgins and Eoin A. Moore. Moore made a spectacle of the debate, reminiscent of last year's Cornelius Nuggent who was banned from the event because of profane language and content he used in the debate. It was also reported that presidential candidate Brian Long missed the debate and attended the hockey game.

The candidates for Trustee were David Carr, Matthew Murphy and Timothy Daly.

The candidates introduced alternative ideas that would save student money. Many of the candidates, both for president and trustee, brought up issue of enormous fees charged to students.

"I think we need to consider an alternative for [high text book prices] I spent $600 for four classes last semester," Bustamante said. "I would like to implement the system used in all Illinois State University and have a system were student pay a flat $100 fee for all their text books, to rent them."

On the issue of the ALANA Caucus, most of the candidates supported the recognizing of appointed seats. Candidates who where once against the issue have now changed their stance and support recognizing non-white students.

"It is completely unbelievable that as support service across this campus are cut, that we're standing by and doing noting," said Higgins. "As president, you need to be on the forefront of that; you need to show ALANA students on this campus that SGA isn't simply for white people."

All of the candidates supported space allocation. Campus Center Student Union Commission, the organization that jumpstarts new registered student organizations, was cut last spring.

"We passed a motion that allowed for mandatory emergency space allocation," Higgins said. "The fact is that we forgot about RSOs; we left them out in the cold. I think SGA needs to recommit to them."

On the issue of the Southwest celebratory gatherings, some of the candidates felt the disturbances are a product of students' low confidence and pride in the University.

All of the presidential candidates were against the issue of notifying parents when a student is caught with alcohol on campus. They agreed that the majority of students are responsible enough to manage themselves on the issues of alcohol.

"I was the first student representative to stand up and say that I completely feel against any form of parental notification for anything, with the exception of when a student is directly endangering themselves," Morrison said. "The University has the obligation and a responsibility to protect students, to educate students and allow to students to understand that they can right the wrongs themselves."

Many of the candidates felt that students feel powerless and are apathetic to the issues concerning the University.

Morrison said creating a campus culture that makes students proud to go to UMass is a priority responsibility he would like to engage in. This would alleviate tension between the administration and the students, he said.

Right now, student rights are a big issue for Morrison. He cited examples of police walking into dorm rooms and students who are suspended without due process.

Candidates for the student government trustee position gather last night for the live UVC debates. The trustee debate was followed by the student government president debates.

EchoStar brings back Viacom

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

Students lamenting the loss of some of their favorite television programming in recent days were rewarded for their patience when the EchoStar Communications Corporation and Viacom, Inc. reached a deal yesterday, bringing missing cable channels back into University of Massachusetts dorms.

The agreement between the two companies ended nearly 48 hours of downtime for transmission of MTV, MTV2, VH-1, Nickelodeon, Comedy Central and BET on the Housing Services Cable Network, the cable television service that provides content to all of the dormitories. The channels are among a host of networks EchoStar was forced to pull early Tuesday morning when Viacom refused to extend retransmission consent over two months since its contract with the satellite television distributor expired.

"It's great to have our networks back in front of all our viewers, and to bring a new service, Nicktoons, to DISH Network subscribers," said Mel Karmazin, president and chief operating officer of Viacom.

"We understand that this has been a difficult few days for our customers, and we thank them for all the encouragement they have given us throughout," said Charles W. Ergen, chairman and chief executive officer of EchoStar.

The deal between EchoStar and Viacom suffered delays as Ergen balked at negotiating channel tying — the bundling of channels for distribution — and retransmission consent in a single discussion. Ergen also complained of what he called an "exorbitant" cost increase to EchoStar to continue carrying Viacom content on his DISH Network.

No executive from either company would give details about the length of the new contract, but Ergen noted that it does fall between the typical three- and seven-year duration.

Although Ergen had claimed Viacom had requested a fee increase of 40 percent, he conceded in a teleconference yesterday that, as Viacom executives maintained over the course of the channel blackout, the increase was six cents per customer per month. The total cost to EchoStar for the Viacom channels is under $2 per month, which would put a six-cent increase at far less than 40 percent.

Ergen remained confident yesterday that EchoStar has not suffered any long-term damage as a result of the service gap. Ergen said subscriber defection has not been an issue for the distributor, and that pulling the channels may have built loyalty among his 9.425 million-subscriber base.

The channel downtime has made customers say; "That company really fights for me ... and I'm really proud to have DISH net-

See TV on page 2

Terror blast kills 192 people

A damaged train car is stopped in the Atocha train station in Madrid yesterday after bombs rocked trains in three stations, killing at least 192 rush hour commuters and injuring more than 1,200.

Gargano relates high hopes

SCOTT EUNDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Michael Gargano, vice chancellor for student affairs, addresses the faculty senate on the status of university admissions for the fall semester.

By Julie O'Donnell
Collegian Staff

Incoming freshmen will experience an array of new and updated programs this summer, according to Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs, during his address to the faculty senate yesterday.

Gargano is pleased at the evolution of student activities and the development of new programs for freshmen. He also expressed his satisfaction with the rapid communication to accepted students.

"We have now admitted the entire freshman class and all students will receive financial aid packages by March 21," he said

This year, the University received 18,200 applications which is up from last year's 16,500.

About 1,000 more out-of-

See GARGANO on page 3

Explosion on tracks three days before general election

By Mar Roman
Associated Press

MADRID (AP) — A series of bombs hidden in backpacks exploded in quick succession Thursday, blowing apart four commuter trains and killing at least 192 people and wounding more than 1,400. Spain at first blamed Basque separatists but a shadowy group claimed responsibility in the name of al-Qaida for the worst terrorist attack in Spanish history.

Panicked rush-hour commuters trampled on each other, abandoning their bags and shoes, after two of the bombs went off in one train in the Atocha station in the heart of Madrid. Train cars were turned into twisted wrecks and platforms were strewn with corpses. Cell phones rang unanswered on the bodies of the dead as frantic relatives tried to call them.

"March 11, 2004, now holds its place in the history of infamy," Prime Minister Jose Maria Aznar said.

The bombing came three days ahead of Spain's general election on Sunday. A major campaign issue was how to deal with ETA, the Basque militant group that is seeking greater autonomy.

Campaigning for the election was called off and three days of mourning were declared.

The bombings occurred exactly 2 1/2 years after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks in the United States, and was Europe's worst since the 1988 bombing of a Pan Am jetliner over Lockerbie, Scotland, that killed 270 people.

The 10 backpack bombs exploded in a 15-minute span, starting about 7:39 a.m., on trains along nine miles of commuter line from Santa Eugenia to the Atocha terminal, a bustling hub for subway, commuter and long-distance trains just south of the famed Prado Museum. Police also found and detonated three other bombs.

"An act of barbaric terrorism has engulfed Spain with profound pain, repulsion and anger," King Juan Carlos said on national television.

Worst hit was a double-decker train at El Pozo station, where two bombs killed 70 people; fire

See BLAST on page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundos
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagatic
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorensen
Assistant Distribution Josh Kuggins
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Crum
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is independently funded through advertising revenues. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life during the College Years. In 1911, the Weekly Collegian. In 1914 and the Daily Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been recognized since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
M DC DESIGN

For the Record

Correction: Because of an editing error in yesterday's correction, it was incorrectly stated that Viacom had attempted to increase the cost of retransmission by 60 percent. The correct statement is that Viacom said EchoStar attempted to reduce the cost of retransmission by 60 percent.

Campus Perspectives

By Scott Eldridge II

What is your favorite UMass sport?

junior
Exercise Science major

"Men's Lacrosse because they win a lot."
Kirsten Mallett

freshman
Undeclared major

"Basketball. I've always been a big fan of basketball."
Cat Meier

junior Theater major

"Hockey. It's everything, it's the adrenaline and the passion of the sport and the players in the sport."
Michelle Romano

freshman
Undeclared major

"Hocky because it's so rowdy, and it's fun to see so much school spirit."
Emma Colgan

freshman
Mechanical Engineering major

"Biking. It's just a fun sport."
Adam King

junior
Exercise Science major

"Lacrosse and Hockey. They're the only two teams that are getting any success right now."
Corey Mossop

New staff for press relations

The University of Massachusetts Amherst has recently named Edward Blaguszewski the new director of news and information for the News Office. Blaguszewski follows former director Barbara Pitoniak, who retired from the position in December.

As director of News and Information, Blaguszewski will be responsible for planning and developing media and information policies for UMass, and serving as the University's spokesperson for the press.

"UMass Amherst has an outstanding story to tell, and I look forward to working with my colleagues to promote the University's achievements to many audiences," Blaguszewski said.

During the past 25 years, Blaguszewski has worked as a journalist, a campus communicator, and a national media relations consultant. Since 1999, he has served as the director of university relations at Pennsylvania State University.

Blaguszewski says that he is looking forward to working in a new environment, and in a new position, that he believes will be full of challenges.

"Clearly, UMass has suffered through a difficult period, but it is a resilient place with many outstanding faculty," he said. "The future of the Commonwealth and its young people is very much tied to the success of UMass, and I view this job as an opportunity to spread the word about the University and to contribute to its success."

Blaguszewski returns to Massachusetts after spending 11 years in Pennsylvania. As Cambridge native, he earned his B.S in journalism from Boston University in 1977. He worked as a journalist until 1990, in positions such as copy desk chief at The Recorder in Greenfield, the local news editor at The Morning Union in

See NEWS on page 3

Haitian protest turns violent

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — A shootout between police and protesters killed two men and injured seven during a demonstration in support of Jean-Bertrand Aristide Thursday as the exiled Haitian president planned a return to the Caribbean.

The violence erupted as hundreds of protesters marched through the Belair neighborhood of Port-au-Prince yelling "Aristide has to come back! We don't want Bush as president!"

Shots were fired and some protesters pulled out pistols. Police fired tear gas, and a shootout between protesters and police ensued, witnesses said.

Two young men were killed, and seven others were being treated for shotgun wounds, hospital officials said.

U.S. Marines, who are in Haiti to try to restore order, said they were patrolling near the protest but had nothing to do with the shootout.

Marines raided a house near the presidential palace before dawn Thursday in their first action of a new mission to disarm Haiti's many factions.

The search produced no weapons, but "The message out of this is, we are looking, and we will continue to do so," Col. Charles Gurganus said.

Aristide is in the Central African Republic, but he and his wife will fly to Jamaica, just 130 miles from Haiti, for a temporary stay early next week, Jamaican Prime Minister P.J. Patterson said Thursday. There they will be reunited with their two young daughters, who were sent to New York before Aristide left Haiti on Feb. 29.

Aristide has said the United States forced him out of office and claims he is still Haiti's democratically elected leader.

— Associated Press

EchoStar, Viacom reach agreement

TV from page 1

work," Ergen said.

According to Christian M. Tenczar, a spokesman for HSCN, the University was in the process of completing a deal with DirecTV to alleviate the channel downtime through its service agreements with EchoStar. The deal was expected to be completed by Monday, he said. A service switch would not have brought any change in HSCN's channel lineup.

Now that EchoStar and Viacom have completed a deal, the University has backed away from pursuing other options of attaining the Viacom content, Tenczar said yesterday.

Ergen will now be obliged to carry Viacom's new Nicktoons on his DISH Network, as a result of the agreement. In the negotiations with Viacom, the media company told EchoStar negotiators that if they did not carry Nicktoons, they would not be able to broadcast the Super Bowl next winter on their retransmission of CBS, Ergen said.

The new agreement is bittersweet for EchoStar, as the cost of continuing to carry Viacom content has increased by the requested 6 cents, and with the obligation of carrying Nicktoons, which Viacom has pushed other major television distributors to carry as well.

"It wasn't the best deal that we wanted, but it was good enough," said Marc Lumpkin, a spokesman for EchoStar.

"This agreement with Viacom allows DISH Network to remain the lowest-cost, all digital TV provider in the country," Ergen said.

As a result of the deal with Viacom, EchoStar has agreed to drop all litigation against the media company. EchoStar had recently engaged Viacom in a lawsuit over the packaging practices it has demonstrated in negotiations with television distributors working on both cable and satellite infrastructures.

Speculation has been brewing that EchoStar has desired to use this opportunity to put an end to channel-tying practices, but Ergen denied this in his teleconference.

"We believe we should be offered the chance to buy CBS by itself," he said, "[but] our dispute really wasn't about tying."

Investors raised concerns in yesterday's teleconference that upcoming negotiations between EchoStar and other media companies may lead to similar issues with other channels. According to Ergen, EchoStar's next major negotiation is with FOX.

"I don't anticipate big problems there," he said.

EchoStar's stock closed up 1.23 points yesterday. Viacom closed down 0.36 points.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Above: Charles W. Ergen of EchoStar. Below: Mel Karmazin of Viacom.

Absolute Nutrition Center
Weight Loss and Body Building Specialists
Slim down before spring break!
Get Ephedra while you can!
63 University Drive
Next to Bank One Building
665-8083

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
Have a Safe & Memorable Spring Break!!!!
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
Now Open Sundays Noon to 11pm

SPRING BREAK
Why go home?
Stay with us
Great Student Rates!
Call us today
Howard Johnson Express Inn
401 Russell Street/Rt.9, Hadley
413/586-0114
University Lodge
345 No. Pleasant Street, Amherst
413/256-8111

Every Wednesday is College Night
at
The Waterfront
In Holyoke
FEATURING:
$1 Draft
$2 Shooters
$2 Well Drinks
Hosted by: DJ KT
Spinning Hip-Hop & Reggae all night long
NO Cover Charge
21+ Only 10-2AM
920 Main St. Lower Rd. to Holyoke
413-532-2292

SGA election controversy

SGA from page 1

the elections in a different format that has not been questioned to the judiciary," Nokes wrote in a memo to the Senate. "Less than one month after President Carr called the judiciary into their session, they have abused their power."

He continued saying that the Judiciary did not "include any description of damages or any rationale" to keep Hoeschele from using the IRV method.

"The Judiciary has exceeded its authority and the Senate must now act to defend the balance of powers and ensure this type of action does not continue," he wrote.

Morrison, in contrast, does not believe that the Judiciary has stepped out of its bounds.

"I was expecting [the ruling before the hearing] because I don't think the Judiciary would allow something that could potentially damage the elections and take away the ability for the students to vote fairly," Morrison said.

He believes the Judiciary was thinking of stopping it this year because "the timing is bad."

"It's not that they are violating due process," he said. "It's not that they're just going to say 'no you can't do it' and disregard it. They're addressing the issue in the best means that they have."

In Morrison's estimation, if Hoeschele does go through with the IRV as he has planned, this would cause the elections to be called invalid.

"If Steve goes ahead with this, he is violating something that the Judiciary did, and the elections will be thrown out," he said.

Same-sex weddings stopped

By David Kravets
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The California Supreme Court ordered an immediate halt to same-sex weddings in San Francisco on Thursday, as Massachusetts lawmakers gave preliminary approval to a constitutional amendment to ban gay marriages in the only state where they have been ruled legal.

Teary-eyed couples were quickly turned away at San Francisco's City Hall, where 4,161 gay couples have tied the knot in the last month.

"We were filling out the application, and they told us to stop," said Art Adams, who was the first to be denied as he and partner Devin Baker sought a license. "It's heartbreaking. I don't understand why two people in love should be prevented from expressing it."

The high court moved to block any more marriages, at least for now, until they decide whether San Francisco Mayor Gavin Newsom had the power to authorize such unions. The court said it would hear arguments in May or June on whether Newsom had that authority.

On the other side of the country, Massachusetts legislators returned to the Capitol to consider a constitutional amendment that would strip gay couples of their court-granted right to marriage but allow civil unions.

The amendment won approval during three preliminary votes, before the Legislature recessed just before midnight Thursday. Lawmakers planned to return March 29 to resume deliberations.

Massachusetts took center stage in the national debate over gay marriage following a landmark decision by its highest court in November that was reaffirmed last month. The rulings set the stage for the nation's first legally sanctioned gay marriages on May 17.

Lawmakers seeking to put a gay marriage ban before Massachusetts voters were unsuccessful during a joint House-Senate session last month.

San Francisco's mayor waded into the debate at about the same time, ordering his administration on Feb. 12 to issue same-sex marriage licenses.

Newsom's defiance of California law prompted officials in several other cities and counties across the nation to follow suit, and President Bush last month cited the San Francisco weddings when he announced that he supports changing the U.S. Constitution to ban same-sex marriages. Lawmakers in dozens of states have also taken up the issue.

The high court's unanimous decision Thursday marked a victory for conservatives who have been fighting for a month to block the rush to the altar by gay couples.

Had the court declined to intervene, the legal battle over gay marriage in California would have taken years as gay marriage lawsuits traveled through the state's lower courts.

Increase in student communication announced

GARGANO from page 1

state applicants applied and around 1,000 more in-state students applied, Gargano said.

He expects a freshman class of 4,250, which is also up from last year's class. He said the University does plan on accommodating all of these new students despite the current housing crunch.

"Our next big step is conversion," Gargano said. "We are going to convert them to positive students."

Because the number of out-of-state students has grown, he plans to hold numerous receptions at unique and exclusive places around the country.

For instance, he said a reception in New York City might be held at a prestigious place like the NBC studios, somewhere families normally would not visit.

"We want to send a message to the students about the University," he said, "so they can say, 'look at the doors open for me.'"

A new marketing plan is underway for out-of-state students that will allow alumni to branch off to other parts of the country like California and Colorado to begin recruiting more students.

"A lot of students can't get in to state schools in California," he said, "so they all go to Colorado."

Gargano plans to promote the University and use the weather to its advantage.

"Instead of hiding the bad weather, we're going to promote it," he said. "We are going to use the four seasons as a strategy."

Currently, there are 1,200 alumni around the country working on recruiting students from states like Texas, Georgia and Virginia.

In addition to the recruiting program, the University is starting a new office that involves parents of new students.

"I found that the number one question from parents is, 'how will my relationship with my son/daughter be?' "

This new Office of Parent Services will allow for much more communication between parents and students. It will also give parents much easier access to billing inquiries and general questions about student services.

New students will also be welcomed this summer with new programs at orientation where parents are now being strongly encouraged to attend.

"We'll be having parent and student skits that address important issues on campus like eating disorders, roommate conflict academic integrity and diversity," he said. "We are going to set the stage for our expectation for student behavior."

Gargano also talked about the progress of the Alcohol Task Force.

"We are evaluating the proposals now," he said. "It's a global issue. We are changing the culture of the institution and changing the student behavior."

He said that a variety of services have to change on campus to have an affect on the alcohol problem.

"It is like 30 years ago when they told us that tobacco was bad, they were only tackling that one issue," Gargano said, "and today, the problem is just as bad. We can't come close to changing alcohol when we don't tackle everything else."

The alcohol problem must be looked at as an opportunity for cultural and behavioral change, Gargano said, and if the momentum is repositioned change may be seen on campus.

News Office finds new staff member

NEWS from page 2

Springfield, and editor-in-chief of the Monadnock Ledger in Peterborough, N.H.

When Blaguszewski found the opportunity to work at a university in his home state he was pleased, he said. His wife, Jane, a children's book author, is also a Massachusetts native, and Blaguszewski said she is happy to be returning to the large community of writers living in western Massachusetts.

Blaguszewski officially assumes the position as director of News and Information on March 22.

— Kate Walsh

Possible al-Qaeda involvement in blast department inspector Juan Redondo said. One corpse was blown onto the roof.

BLAST from page 1

At the Santa Eugenia station, "there was one carriage totally blown apart. People were scattered all over the platforms. I saw legs and arms. I won't forget this ever. I've seen horror," said Enrique Sanchez, an ambulance worker.

Forty coroners worked to identify remains, the national news agency Efe said, and a steady stream of taxis carried relatives to a sprawling convention center that was turned into a makeshift morgue.

Three days of national mourning were declared and thousands of people took part in spontaneous anti-terror rallies across the country Thursday. The government called for nationwide anti-ETA demonstrations on Friday evening, and millions were expected.

Who carried out the highly coordinated attack was a mystery. The government put the Basque separatist group ETA at the top of its list of suspects, although a shadowy group claimed responsibility in the name of al-Qaida.

The Arabic newspaper Al-Quds al-Arabi said it had received a claim of responsibility issued in the name of al-Qaida. The e-mail claim, signed by the shadowy Brigade of Abu Hafs al-Masri, was received at the newspaper's London offices and said the brigade's "death squad" had penetrated "one of the pillars of the crusade alliance, Spain."

"This is part of settling old accounts with Spain, the crusader, and America's ally in its war against Islam," the claim said.

Spain had backed the U.S.-led war on Iraq despite domestic opposition, and many al-Qaida-linked terrorists have been captured in Spain or were believed to have operated from there.

Spain's government is studying the reported al-Qaida claim but still believes ETA is more likely responsible, a senior official in Aznar's office said.

Spain's security forces were not ruling out "any line of investigation," Interior Minister Angel Acebes said.

The United States believes Al-Masri sometimes falsely claims to be acting on behalf of al-Qaida. The group took credit for blackouts in the United States and London last year.

The purported al-Qaida statement also claimed the terror group would soon hit the United States with a major attack. "The expected strike against America, is now at its final stage — 90 percent ready," it said.

If the attack was carried out by ETA, it could signal a radical and lethal change of strategy for the group that has largely targeted police and politicians in its decades-long fight for a separate Basque homeland.

But after police found a stolen van with seven detonators and the Arabic-language tape parked in a suburb near where the stricken trains originated, Acebes said: "I have just given instructions to the security forces not to rule out any line of investigation."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, MARCH 12, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Voting for SGA elections a necessity

The Student Government Association's debate for the positions of President and Trustees took place last night. Voting for the positions will begin on Thursday, March 25.

Voting in these elections, as well as other elections held on for campus for similar student positions, is an important and necessary process that must be taken seriously by the student body. Far too often we hear the cry that the student's voice is not heard. Voting in these elections is a student's chance to make this voice heard loud and clear. It will ensure that the democratic process is carried out, and that the best choice for the position will be elected.

It is a tumultuous time for students around the country, especially at the University of Massachusetts. The nation as a whole is faced with political controversy and frustration that hasn't been seen in decades. If this wasn't enough, those attending higher education in the commonwealth of Massachusetts must deal with recurring budget cuts and persistent funding shortcomings. Undoubtedly, being a college student in this day and age can be frustrating. However, small steps can be taken to ensure that the student body has the opportunity to see that changes are made.

Becoming an active participant in the world around you starts at home. This includes keeping up-to-date with the events on campus. SGA elections are important events that greatly affect the way the campus as a whole functions. Hot-button issues on this campus, which are sure to not only come up but also be deciding factors in the SGA elections, include political turmoil within the SGA, minority representation on campus controversies regarding the Alcohol Task Force's recommendations for cracking down on alcohol consumption on campus.

Keeping up-to-date and evaluating the positions of the candidates running for SGA offices will allow students to make smart, informed decisions. It will ensure that the chosen officials reflect the majority opinion of the student body. There are a variety of ways to stay informed on the elections. Besides reading the coverage in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, the debate will be aired on UVC-TV 19 UMass television during the week of voting. Students can also quickly reference issues that are important to candidates on a variety of flyers and posters up around campus, and The Collegian will be running profiles on the candidates after spring break.

The Collegian encourages all students to become active and participate in the voting process. The voice of the student body cannot be heard unless the voter turnout in elections such as these is high. The officials elected to the SGA speak for all students on campus. In these turbulent times, getting students involved in the upcoming election is essential to fostering intelligent, informed discussion and decision on campus.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Enjoy it while it lasts

Becky Martins

In life, nothing lasts forever.

College is no different.

We can all attest to the fact that time flies. Good things never seem to remain for long. Many times, once we get accustomed to something, it changes. This is a common pattern that occurs throughout life, including during our undergraduate years in college. As freshmen, we are thrown into an entirely new situation, in which for the first time, we are alone and responsible for ourselves. Everyone we grew up with is now miles away, either starting over or continuing on without us. For some, this year does not lack a few homesick days and nights.

By the time we are upperclassmen, though, college is a way of life. Independence is the norm. We take care of ourselves. We even adopt the label, "adult." Essentially, adolescence seems like a distant memory.

After college, our lives are not over. They just change. There will be other times of happiness in our lives ... but nothing will ever compare to these crazy years.

But as soon as we become adjusted to our university existence, graduation comes and we are left floundering. Until this point, our lives were always defined by school. Now, aside from attending graduate school, there is no more left to attend. We grow older and are forced to leave our years of carefree living behind.

Life no longer consists of doing homework, partying and working minimum-wage jobs. Instead, the time comes to get a career, have a family and live in the real world. The bills our parents once paid for us become our responsibility. We eventually turn into authority figures, reprimanding our children over things we once did ourselves. We leave our fun, lighthearted college days behind, never to return to them again.

I am only a freshman. Constantly, I am reminded I have plenty of time left to enjoy these four years, decide on a major, etc. But while this is true, I can still see how fast the experience will go. It is already halfway through second semester. In a couple of months, summer will come and school will let out. Old friends and I will reunite for the first time in months. I will see how people have changed and how different life is. But this is no longer a tough concept to deal with. We all live separate lives now: ones in which we have new friends, different manners of living, and other places we call "home." Upon first glance, one would think we have made the first and last major transition in our lives. But things will only keep changing. By next semester, we will be sophomores. College will pass as quickly as high school did. In a few years, when our undergraduate work is over, we will simply scatter again. There will just be more goodbyes to say this time.

As graduation looms nearer, college students cannot help but think about what comes next. For some, these four years will be the best times of their lives. Where else will we be able to clear our schedule for the day just because the weather is nice? At what other point before retirement will we have the option of beginning our day at noon? When else will we have over a month of vacation in the winter?

For others, leaving college marks the beginning of the rest of their lives. We finally become fully responsible for ourselves and our actions. We no longer have parents to answer to. We can determine which direction our lives take.

Hopefully, though, we are ready for such a change.

In a perfect world, good things would last forever. We would never be forced to end our favorite experiences. Instead, we would be able to relive the good times again and again. But obviously, we have little control of what happens in life. Our only option is to appreciate what we have and enjoy what comes our way.

After college, our lives are not over. They just change. There will be other times of happiness in our lives; happiness with more depth than the minor thrills of college. But nothing will ever compare to these crazy years. Sure, we complain about stress, bad professors, and a lack of sleep. But when it comes down to it, it was all worth it. So enjoy these years while they last, and make the most of them. Once they are gone, all we will have left are our memories.

Becky Martins is a Collegian columnist.

Advice spoken from experience

Leah Wyner

When phrases like "alcoholic" and "problem drinker" come up in conversation, certain images come to my mind. First, I picture a person passed out on a couch in front of a blaring TV next to an empty bottle of whiskey. Then my mind drifts to a guy in a bar drinking scotch on the rocks spending money that his family desperately needs. Then I see police barreling through a door to break up a bar fight that inevitably started with, "I'm sorry, but did you just look at me?" I consider all of the people I know that become completely different when they're drunk, and I think of how alcohol is used as a method of "loosening up," a way for people to say and do things they don't have the guts to say and do while sober.

But one thing that never comes to mind is myself. Drinking was rarely a huge problem for me; I would just go out and have a few and that would be it for the most part. Occasionally though, something strange would happen. After fulfilling my "few drinks" quota, I would feel the need to have just "one more shot." Predictably enough, one more shot turned into two, two turned into three, and sometimes three turned into more. So every few months I would have a very blurry, awful night. It didn't happen a huge amount of times, but it happened.

However, what I experienced earlier this semester brought awful to the next level. It made any "bad" nights in my past seem like occasional visits to worship the porcelain goddess. With the help of Bacardi, Vodka, Jaggermeister, and God knows what else, I managed to put myself in great danger, scare my parents nearly to death, and place a terrifying, unnecessary burden on the shoulders of my best friends.

I don't care to discuss the night in great detail, but what I will talk about is what I learned from it. First of all, I figured out that I have issues with alcohol. Although I may not be sitting alone in a bar spending my family's rent money on scotch, or passing out in front of the Spanish Channel cradling an empty bottle of Jack, my problem is just as important. My issue is the occasional loss of control, that little voice that says, "Oh, just one more."

I'm not implying that the stereotypes of problem drinkers lie. However, they don't represent a good amount of problem drinkers, and so people tend to believe that if they aren't guzzling the rent money or lying unconscious in front of the latest Spanish soap opera, then they don't have a problem. And that's where the danger begins.

With that in mind, I did some research, and I learned that there are a lot of things about drinking that I don't know, and I figured that if even a self-proclaimed party guru doesn't know everything there is to know about drinking, it's a pretty safe bet that a lot of other people don't either.

There were some stretches this summer when an American soldier would be killed every day, on some days two or three. Soldiers even began to ask why, publicly criticizing their superiors.

Interestingly enough, hangovers aren't necessarily a bad thing. If you're one of those people who have a few beers and wakes up the next morning with a splitting headache, consider yourself lucky. The ability to get smashed and never spend the next day dry-heaving and popping Tylenol is actually a warning sign. It means that either your body has built up its tolerance and ability to process alcohol faster, or that due to any number of reasons, you are genetically predisposed to handle alcohol better, and more likely to become dependent on it.

Black-outs are another warning sign, especially if you experience them when you're not completely inebriated, or early on in your drinking career. Even if you only forget short amounts of time, it's still something to be worried about.

Something else colleges can't stress enough is that the weekend drinker is at more urgent risk than the person who drinks moderately every day. Of course the moderate everyday drinker is at a higher risk for debilitating diseases later in life, but when it comes to immediate danger, the weekend party animals are the ones at risk, and the ones who constitute most of the alcohol fatality statistics.

I'm fully aware of the fact that I'm writing this for a newspaper at a college referred to affectionately as "the zoo." What I hope is that maybe hearing all this will help. My advice is just to be careful.

I'm lucky. For one, I have parents who went out of their way to support me, never missing a beat. I also have these incredible friends that are strong, supportive, and smart, the type of friends you would gladly wait a lifetime to find. My horrible night could have easily been much worse without them by my side, and I will never be able to express how grateful I am to them. But not everyone is as fortunate as me, with friends and family that will do everything in their power and anything it takes to help.

If you can be a smart drinker, by all means go for it. But if you find yourself exhibiting any warning signs, or even if you just have an inkling that drinking is becoming too big a part of your life, just take a step back. Take it easy for a while. Go home next weekend, order takeout Chinese food, and spend Saturday night watching "Law & Order" with your family. Trust me, it's actually a really good time.

Information from UMass Health Center was used in this column.

Leah Wyner is a Collegian Columnist.

ACLU not all it claims to be

Ben Duffy

It's no secret to me, and indeed to mainstream America, that the American Civil Liberties Union is out of control. Nothing demonstrated this quite so clearly as the recent California Supreme Court decision that ordered Catholic Charities within the state to provide contraception to its employees within its package of health benefits.

The ACLU "crafted the statutory exemption" in this particular case, Catholic Charities v. Superior Court. It commended the decision, saying on its website, www.aclu.org, "We're delighted that the court understood that this law promotes women's health and ends gender discrimination in insurance coverage without violating religious liberty," said Louise Melling, director of the ACLU Reproductive Freedom Project.

The ACLU may plan to provide pro-bono services to challenge a similar law in Nevada. Richard Siegel, president of the Nevada chapter of the ACLU, says it is "very likely" that a court challenge of Nevada's law will be on the agenda at the next meeting of the Nevada ACLU.

The ACLU was founded in 1920, as a "non-profit and non-partisan" organization dedicated "to defend and preserve the individual rights and liberties guaranteed to every person in this country by the Constitution and laws of the United States." Gee whiz, that sure sounds nice, doesn't it? It sounds like something that all patriotic, freedom-loving Americans could get behind. You'd have to be some sort of fascist monster not to embrace such an organization.

The problem is that the ACLU is full of crap. First of all, they are anything but non-partisan. They claim that they have no political leanings, and no agenda beyond preserving the constitution. They usually polht to two facts to demonstrate their supposed "non-partisanship." The first is the fact that they are currently representing Rush Limbaugh in court in his struggle to keep his medical records out of the state's hands, and the second is that they once defended a group of Nazis who were prohibited from organizing a march through Skokie, Ill. in 1978.

Well, congratulations! In the 84-year history of the organization, they've come to the aid of right-wingers two whole times. No, the ACLU has a distinctly hard leftist agenda, and they've become experts at twisting the Constitution to suit that political agenda. Whenever anyone stands up to them, they wrap themselves in the American flag and claim that anyone who isn't with them is just un-American.

The idea that Catholic Charities is not a religious organization is laughable. I've got one question for the ACLU and the Supreme Court of California: How is the organization funded?

Catholic Charities v. Superior Court is a great example. California law states that all employers that provide medical coverage for their employees must include in it coverage for contraception. The state makes an exception for religious organizations that choose to exempt themselves on the grounds that it violates their religion to do so. California did not overturn this law, but only determined that Catholic Charities is not a religious institution. The ACLU agrees, and hasn't made it clear yet how they will attack Nevada's almost identical law.

The idea that Catholic Charities is not a religious organization is laughable. I've got one question for the ACLU and the Supreme Court of California: How is the organization funded? That's a no-brainer. It's funded by the Catholic Church, which is in turn funded by the Sunday collection basket, and essentially by individual Catholics.

Most of these people, I would assume, wouldn't want their money to be used for such purposes. At the very least, they're voluntarily giving their money to an organization that opposes birth control. But in California today, these people will be forced to fund a behavior that they find incompatible with their consciences. According the ACLU, this is exactly the kind of "freedom" that they stand for.

Seventy-four percent of the employees of Catholic Charities in the state are not Catholic. Any card-carrying ACLU member would tell you that their intention was to insure the rights of those employees. But since when are contraceptives a "right?" And for that matter, since when is it an employer's "responsibility" to provide such rights? Give me a break, if you can't see the innate agenda behind this one, you need to open your eyes. No one is telling these employees that they can't have contraceptives, only that they have to pay for them out of pocket.

The ACLU has no concern for the millions of Catholic Californians who will now be funding an industry, through their weekly donations, that they find objectionable. What about their rights? What right does anyone have to tell them that they have to purchase contraceptives for someone regardless of their personal beliefs?

Don't be fooled by their rhetoric — the ACLU is no friend of the Constitution, the American Way, or the average American. They're also anything but non-partisan.

They have an agenda to advance, and they've got a by-any-means-necessary approach to accomplishing it. They're a dangerous organization, and the people need to be recognized as such.

Ben Duffy is a UMass student.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, MARCH 12, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Still 'Rockin' in the Free World'

DARRON BOYCE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Musician Neil Young is shown here during an interview at the Pfister Hotel Tuesday, March 2 in Milwaukee while on tour with his band Crazy Horse. He is touring around the United States in support of his new rock 'n' film, "Greendale," due out this summer. Sunday, March 21 the Canadian rocker has a stop on the tour at the Mullins Center on the University of Massachusetts campus in Amherst.

U.N. opens its doors to filming

Penn and Kidman will star in 'The Interpreter'

By Edith M. Lederer
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Director Sydney Pollack had been all over New York City, but never inside the United Nations until he scouted locations for "The Interpreter."

Over the next 14 weeks, Pollack will spend nights, weekends and holidays here filming his thriller about a U.N. interpreter (played by Nicole Kidman) who overhears a conversation that could cost her life. Sean Penn is the co-star.

Pollack signed a contract with the United Nations last Friday giving a green light for the first feature film to be shot inside the 39-story Manhattan landmark, said U.N. Undersecretary-General Shashi Tharoor. To avoid disruption to U.N. activities, there will be no filming during working hours.

Pollack, who won producing and directing Oscars for "Out of Africa" in 1985, said most Americans "don't know what the U.N. looks like and don't understand how the U.N. works, and don't know what its day-to-day business is, so we're terrifically excited to be able to do all of that."

"I am ashamed to admit that I went to school here in New York. I got married here, I worked here, I walked by this building a thousand times," he said. "I had never been inside it until the first location scouting trip, and I was awed by it. And I was also embarrassed that I hadn't ever been in, and that's also true of both Sean and Nicole."

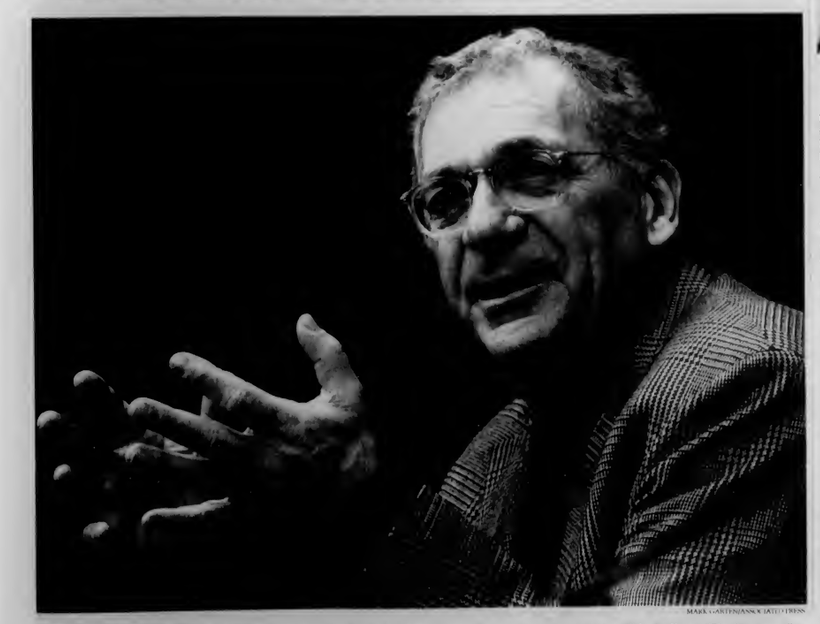
Secretary-General Kofi Annan decided to allow the filming because the United Nations was intrinsic to the story, Tharoor said, and the script "in many ways was faithful to the values this organization stands for."

"We felt it was going to get a lot of people into the movie theaters to see things of the U.N., and learn things about the U.N., who would not otherwise have paid much attention to this organization," he told a news conference.

While the United Nations is an integral part of the movie, Pollack stressed that "The Interpreter" is first and foremost a thriller and a love story with chases and people in jeopardy.

Kidman's character comes from a fictional African country called Matobo "with a lot of civil strife, ethnic cleansing, a country whose leadership has changed fairly radically," Pollack said. Penn plays a secret service agent trying to prevent the leader of a country from being killed.

The two see the world through different eyes: the interpreter "believes very much in the power and sanctity of words, and ... believes that if they're used properly they can be as powerful as bullets or weapons; the agent has "the mentality of a cop" who only reads people through behavior and has contempt for words, Pollack said.



In addition to entertainment, he said, every film has an underlying theme.

"It's a film that very much is anti the use of violence for settling problems between people and between countries," Pollack said.

Asked whether Penn's strong stand against the U.S.-led war in Iraq could taint the movie, Pollack said, "He's taken very strong positions about the Bush administration and about the war in Iraq. Whether that will have anything to do with an audience reaction to the film or not, that remains to be seen. I don't know."

"The Interpreter" has a budget of about $80 million. Pollack hopes it will open around Thanksgiving. The United Nations won't have script control, but it will be shown the footage, he said.

Pollack and Tharoor have been negotiating about U.N. officials and ambassadors possibly playing themselves — but Tharoor said Annan will not be in the movie.

MARK GARTEN/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Film director Sydney Pollack gives a news conference Tuesday, March 9 at the United Nations to announce that he will begin filming "The Interpreter" at the U.N. Sean Penn and Nicole Kidman will star in the diplomatic thriller.

TV and movie lunch boxes on display at Lexington museum

By Nancy Rabinowitz
Associated Press

LEXINGTON — Remember that Star Wars metal lunch box that was the envy of your third-grade classmates — or how your child insisted he or she simply could not venture into the cafeteria without one?

That essential lunchtime accessory is now a museum piece showing where popular culture, personal expression and old-fashioned American marketing meet — all for a place to put one's peanut butter and jelly sandwich until the lunch bell rings.

The colorful days of movie and TV heroes and heroines adorning metal lunch boxes are on display in a new exhibit at the National Heritage Museum, offering visitors a nostalgic look at a bygone era.

The 64 metal lunch boxes, a traveling exhibit from the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., were arranged to impart the message of "what a powerful force children as consumers became over the course of the 20th century," said Hilary Anderson, director of the museum's collections and exhibitions.

The exhibit, which dates from the late 1800s to the mid-1980s, further examines "how popular culture in the 20th century has become a mode of personal expression, how we interact with popular culture, how objects give us access to memory. It doesn't take a lot of prompting to get someone's lunch box story," Anderson said.

The Smithsonian has 250 lunch boxes in its collection. An exhibit of 120 lunch boxes and thermos bottles is scheduled to open at one of its museums, the National Museum of American History, on April 13.

Officials at the Smithsonian hope to bring the exhibit, which has already toured museums in California, Washington, Kentucky and Georgia, to public venues like shopping malls, airports and libraries through 2006.

JULIA MALAKIE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bruce Coates and his wife Isobel Coates, of Edinburgh, Scotland, look at lunch boxes displayed in the "Lunch Box Memories" exhibit at the National Heritage Museum, Monday, March 8, in Lexington. The lunch box at top is called VW Bus, 1960, center is Mod Tulips, 1962 and bottom is The Beatles, 1965.

"A typical reaction to this exhibit is 'oh my God,' and then quickly followed by 'oh, look at this,' and then stories of ownership and school and lunch unfold," says David Shayt, the Smithsonian's cultural historian in the division of cultural history.

"That, too, is part of history, rather than telling the audience what to think and what to believe. It is a reminder of the pervasive influence of mass culture."

The exhibit, on display through July 18, begins with a kiosk titled, "Too Far From Home," which focuses on the idea that people were away from home when the noon bell rang and hunger set in. Featured are a tobacco tin from the 1880s, a coal miner's lunch pail from the 1890s, a lard pail from 1900 and a collapsible lunch box from the 1880s.

"I kind of like this one here, the hometown airport, even though I'm not interested in planes," said Regina Sutton, 60, of Lincoln, a retired information design analyst for Verizon.

"I remember Roy Rogers and Hopalong Cassidy because they were television shows when I was a child," she recalled.

The rising popularity of television in the 1950s gave rise to lunch boxes with images of Hopalong Cassidy, "The Man from U.N.C.L.E.," Roy Rogers, "The Lone Ranger," "Howdy Doody," "Laugh-In" and other cultural icons.

"I never carried a lunch box, but going through all of the images from all of the television shows, that brought back a lot of memories," said Nancy Hicks, 61, a retired secretary from Leominster. "When I went to school I went home for lunch every day. In high school I carried a paper bag. I probably tucked it in my handbag. It wasn't cool in high school to carry a lunch box."

Minutemen face Crimson

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Three wins in a row don't mean a whole lot during most regular seasons. A three-game win streak in baseball is just a nice weekend, in hockey only good for a half-month of prosperity. In a 14-game season, however, three games can make or break tournament hopes, as well as the chance at a winning year.

Not that the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team needs extra reason to play well Saturday, when it takes on Harvard at 1 p.m. on Garber Field. The Crimson (1-1) come to Amherst off a 15-4 trouncing at the hands of Bucknell last Friday, thanks to the impeccable goaltending of Bison netminder Matt Baran, who didn't allow a goal until the third quarter in a 17-save effort.

The Minutemen (2-1) will have a chance to all but erase the memory of a 12-7 loss to North Carolina on the opening weekend of the season, and begin a five-game in 15-day odyssey on a high note. It is the first of three games over spring break for UMass, a time that coach Greg Cannella relishes.

"I think it's a good thing. I look forward to it every year," he said. "The younger guys stay with the older guys off-campus … it's like going on the road and sharing hotel rooms with each other. Their focus is excellent over spring break, there's nothing else going on, it's all lacrosse."

The last time the two teams met, on April 16, 2003, the Minutemen (2-1) escaped with an 11-6 victory despite being routed on faceoffs, 18-3. The draws have been a focus all year for the Minutemen, and sophomore faceoff specialist Dane Collins will be called upon to improve upon last year's total. It won't be an easy task, though, as Harvard's Alex Vap, who won 17 of the draws, returns as a senior this year.

Preparation has been a key this week for Collins. "We worked hard at it," Cannella said. "We're still working hard at it this week, Dane's watching tape. We've challenged the faceoff guys, we've challenged the wings. So we've addressed it, we have confidence in Dane and the wings to scrap it up."

UMass enters the game without four vital cogs in its machine. Attackman Jeff Zywicki will sit out with a recurring back injury, midfielders Sean Morris (mononucleosis) and Greg Scott will both be inactive due to injury, as well as junior defensive stalwart Matt Garcia, who is nursing the ankle he sprained against UNC on Feb. 28.

"Because of a couple of guys that are hurt, we have some young guys out there, so we are inexperienced, we're young," Cannella said. "We do have some good senior leadership, and upperclassman leadership."

The absence of Zywicki and Morris, who combined for 55 of the Minutemen's 195 goals in 2003, has put the onus on other offensive threats to bring the scoring. Senior Kevin Glenz has answered the call, with eight goals and two assists this season. Glenz was named ECAC Player of the Week on Tuesday, after scoring six goals and two assists against Hartford — including five goals in the second half.

Cannella said he would continue to call upon Glenz, and a few others, to fill in where Zywicki and Morris are missing.

"I think the [Neil] Lundbergs and [Chris] Doyles and [Ryan] Connollys and Glenzes and [Matt and Gene] Tundos, Jack Reid, Aaron Paskalis, … as people that have experience, we need them to go out there and play as hard as they can, make the plays we need them to make," he said.

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Senior defensemen Bo Pritchard has been a vital cog in the Minutemen's defense this season. UMass takes on the Crimson of Harvard tomorrow at Garber Field for a 1 p.m. face-off.

Softball heads down south

By Becky Horowitz
Collegian Staff

Southern bound.

The Massachusetts softball team heads to Miami this weekend to compete in the Blue and Gold Classic.

The Minutewomen (6-9) enter this weekend's competition with a week off and a weekend split behind them. The young squad has managed a combined 5-5 record for its last two tournaments.

Freshman utility player Candice Molinari is leading the team in batting average (.343) and has earned herself a place in the starting line-up. The Atlantic 10 rookie of the week is 3-5 on stolen base attempts and has been perfect on the field.

Sophomore Katie Joe Kelley is batting .205 and has a team-high four homeruns, including her first career grand slam and two game winners.

After a slow start, junior right-hander Kelli Arnold has settled down. Arnold holds a 3-1 mark on her last four starts with a 0.83 ERA and a save. She has struck out 19 and allowed three earned runs in 25.1 innings.

UMass is scheduled to tee off against Virginia Tech (14-6) and Miami of Ohio (3-6) today at 10 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. respectively.

The Hokies are riding a six game win streak and have muscled 15 homeruns and a cumulative .321 batting average. Kelly Brown leads the team in hitting with .441 and has scored 21 runs.

Along with consistent run support, Virginia Tech has two starting pitchers at 4-1. Rachel Pacheo has a 1.28 ERA and 34 strikeouts in 38.1 innings. Karie Morison has a 1.53 ERA and has mustered 29 strikeouts in 32 innings. Although the Hokies are off to a strong start, UMass holds a 15-1 lead in the series.

The Red Hawks, on a four game losing streak, have not played since Feb. 22 due to the cancellation of the first Pitch Classic. The team is hitting .217, has a combined ERA of 1.92 and is 13-18 in stolen base attempts. Bianca Paz leads Miami batting .421 and has reached on five of her seven stolen base attempts.

The Red Hawks hold a 3-2 lead in the series with UMass.

Saturdays match with Florida International (7-14) is scheduled for 1:30 p.m. The Classic will be the fourth and final time FIU will host a tournament this season.

The Golden Panthers are hitting .219 with only two homeruns and are 25-31 in stolen base attempts. Jacque Vetters is hitting .262, has both of her teams' homeruns and has stolen a team high seven bases.

The Minutewomen faced FIU in last weekends FAU Worth Invitational falling to them 5-0. The series between the squads is even at 2-2.

Bracket play will take place Saturday at 4 p.m. and 6:30 p.m. and continue on Sunday with the consolation game at 10:30 a.m. and the championship game at 1 p.m.

In its 30th year, UMass softball is just four away from 900 total wins and currently has an overall record of 896-391-4.

The Maroon and White will remain in Miami to practice through Tuesday and do not have another game scheduled until they take on Boston University on March 24 at 3:30 p.m.

St. Joe's falls to Xavier

HAWKS from page 8

conference tournament.

"Going 3-1 against the Top 25, not a lot of teams can say that," coach Thad Matta said. "I believe we are one of the top 64 teams in the country."

Xavier, ahead 74-37 with 7:56 remaining, has won 11 of its last 12 games.

"I think we're pretty good," Chalmers said. "We've come a long way since early on. Right now, we're clearly one of the hottest teams in the country."

Nelson was booed loudly after confronting Xavier's Justin Doellman in the final minutes. Nelson hit the floor hard on an attempted dunk with Doellman in his face and took several seconds to get up. When the senior guard rose, he ran to the other end and glared at Doellman while fans called for a technical.

Martelli put an arm around Nelson's neck as he spoke to him, then replaced him in the lineup.

"We tried to make it tough for Jameer and West," Sato said. "The last time we played them, they made everything."

The Musketeers - who lost at home to the Hawks 81-73 in January with Nelson and West combining for 61 points - scored nearly at will from the start, with Sato and Chalmers slashing to the basket.

Already ahead 25-16 with just over six minutes left in the first half, the Musketeers went on an 18-5 run until the intermission, with Sato and Chalmers combining for 11 points.

Warner brothers shine

HOCKEY from page 8

goal at 11:03 of the second, a power play tally assisted by Jarman. The two took off on a 2-on-1, and Jarman slipped the puck over to the Austrian at the hashmarks, where Pöck had an open shot at the near side of the net, and buried it to send the teams to the locker rooms with a 5-1 UMass lead at the end of the second.

Despite scoring first, Lowell could never sustain pressure, and although the River Hawks peppered Warner's goal with 42 shots, they didn't show any signs of life until midway through the third, when they scored two goals to cut the deficit.

Ben Walter snuck in to the left wing post, and chipped the puck over Warner's right shoulder. It trickled in to make the score 5-2 with 8:30 to go in the final period. Bobby Robins put back a rebound with 3:25 remaining, but the River Hawks got no closer.

The Minutemen came back from an early 1-0 deficit quickly, when Dusty Demianiuk broke up a play at center ice, and the ensuing loose puck got to Tim Vitek's stick, who took off on a breakaway. Vitek faked once in front of Davidson, and backhanded the shot over the goaltender's left shoulder at 10:54.

Greg Mauldin gave UMass the lead six and a half minutes later, when he blistered a slap shot off a Thomas Pöck feed, and the Minutemen carried the lead into the first intermission.

The two teams face off again tonight at the Mullins Center at 7 p.m.

Baker eligible for free-agency

By Chris Sheridan
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Vin Baker won his arbitration case against the NBA on Thursday, freeing him to sign with the team of his choice: New York or Miami.

"He'll make a decision in the next 24 hours, not sooner," agent Aaron Goodwin said Thursday night. "He's trying to figure out which one is a better fit for him."

In Baker's grievance against the NBA, which was argued Monday, arbitrator Roger Kaplan invalidated a league memo barring all 29 teams from signing Baker until his other grievance — against the Boston Celtics — is settled.

After being notified of Kaplan's decision, Goodwin spent the latter part of the day speaking with the Knicks and Heat when Baker decided he did not want to play for the Toronto Raptors — the third team that was pursuing him until the NBA sent out its March 1 memo barring any team from signing Baker.

Kaplan set an initial hearing date of April 12 for Baker's case against the Celtics, who terminated the remaining two and a half years of Baker's contract — worth $35 million — after he missed 10 games while on suspension for violating terms of his alcohol treatment program.

The NBA argued if Baker were to win his case against Boston, he'd have to return to the Celtics because his contract would be reinstated. The players' union argued Baker should have a right to seek employment elsewhere while his case against the Celtics is pending.

KIA NORTHAMPTON KIA
* Up to 5 quarts of premium oil
*KIA Oil Filter
*Check all fluid levels
OIL & FILTER CHANGE
Including FREE 25 Point Check
*No other discounts apply
KIA'S ONLY Tax environmental fee extra
$19.95*
WITH COUPON ONLY
SERVICE HOURS:
Mon-Tues-Wed-Fri 8-6
Thursday 8-7
135 King St., (Rte. 5), Northampton, MA
413-587-9540
1-800-323-5615
Some additional parts or services may be required
STUDENTS with college ID

NEW THIS WEEK!
MONA LISA SMILE
SCHOOL OF ROCK
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

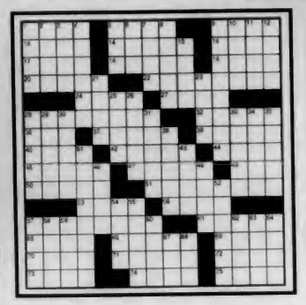
Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

birthControl.com
Helping you to make the right choices
For non-prescription
Birth Control Needs
visit:
www.birthcontrol.com
We have the Today Sponge Available

Spring break is almost here!
Chicago Pizzaria
Friday/Saturday/Sunday Special
Large cheese pizza $6.00
Location: 150 Fearing Street
Located on the corner of Fearing St. and Sunset Ave.
Free Delivery 549-6073
Open Hours
Sun-Wed : 11am-1 am
Thurs-Sat : 11am-3am

Panda East 熊貓
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
We bring Chinatown to you!
"Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!"
*Sushi bar!
*Comp accepted
*Delivery available!
Location: 103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, M.A. 01002
Open Hours:
Fri. & Sat.: 11:30 a.m.-11:00 p.m.
Sun. - Thurs.: 11:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Delivery: (413)549-0077
Telephone: (413)256-8923 (413)256-8924
Fax: (413)253-1173

fatTrax
SNOWBOARDS • BMX • SKATEBOARDS
40% OFF All '03 - '04 Pants & Jackets
30% OFF the Purchase of '03 - '04 Board, Boots, or Binding
15% OFF the Combo of Any of the 2
20% OFF the Combo of All 3
2 Locations!!!
19 North Street (Rt. 5) Easthampton, MA 413-586-8766
612 North Main Street (Rt. 83) East Longmeadow, MA 413-781-5142



TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Moved up and down
6 Floppy contents
8 Caspian Sea tributary
13 Knighted Guinness
14 Revises
15 "Nautilus" captain
17 Fiber
18 Kitchen appliance
19 Viewing feature
20 Tinamou
22 Frostbite symptom
24 Without a clan
27 Barn neighbor
28 Goes in all directions
30 Wasteland items
35 Road goo
36 Actress Ford
38 Not deadpanned
40 Poet's eyes
42 Gobs
44 Racehorses parent
45 Fork part
47 River mouth formation
48 Bounder
50 Cappuccino or its cup
51 Family
53 Applejack
56 Two-piece cookie
57 Requiring careful handling
61 Enthusiastic
65 Corduroy rib
66 Sinners
67 Lounge
68 Mad scientist's aide
71 Kelps
72 Like before
73 Clothing
74 Protein source
75 Downe archer

DOWN
1 Lineman
2 Message
3 Cop's hounds
4 Handwriting
5 German article
6 Physician's org.
7 Bird's beak
8 Black Uptick
9 Mysterious
10 Painter — Magritte
11 Grader — Akinzo Stagg
12 House sites
15 Half- pint
21 Pitcher Romero
23 Strong cheese
25 Turn pages
26 Miscalculated
28 Quite
29 Toss
32 Trellis
33 Clays
39 Decree
54 Nonhuman
55 Not well kept
58 Parrot's word
61 Giggles
62 Ms. Ryan
63 Name
64 Screenwriter James —
67 Husky voiced
68 Opera by Verdi
69 Choir selection
70 Taura
71 "Othello" heavy
72 Mammoth
73 Clock part
74 "Elvira, Mis- dust
75 Hearty loaves
76 Mock comparison
77 Hardened, as cement

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Quesadilla
- Sweet & Sour Fish
- Fiesta Rice & Cheese (vegetarian)
- Curried Chick Peas (vegan)

DINNER
- Veal Cutlets with Tomato Sauce
- Salmon Miso with Teriyaki Sauce
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 40
- Low: 25

SATURDAY
- High: 44
- Low: 21

SUNDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 33

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Scott Eldridge II
COPY EDITOR
Leah Wyner
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Irene Ros
PRODUCTION STAFF
Emilie Duggan/Shannon Farrington/Scott Pihl

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Famous remarks are very seldom quoted correctly."

-Simeon Strunsky

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The week is almost over. Don't worry. You'll make it.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't believe everything you here or see. Doubt everything.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Never tuck your shirt in anything but your pants, especially not your underwear.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Some people are just picky. Don't worry about trying to please them. You can't.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
It's electric! Boogie oogie oogie.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't let the weather fool you. Today sucks like every other day.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You're never around anymore. People miss you.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Why did you just let that happen?

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Get your stuff done and get out of the way.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Keep trying eventually things will happen for you.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your favorite person is moving far away. Show them how much you'll miss them.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Don't bite off more than you can comfortably swallow or chew.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 bedroom Brandywine apartment starting June 1. $755/month negotiable – includes heat, water, cooking gas. Spacious, quiet with balcony and parking. 549-9489

N. Amherst, 1 Bedrm, 1 1/2 mi. UMass Deck, $625, Pets OK. Hdwd floors Avlb. 4/1 maybe sooner. 549-2062

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Local Business is hiring marketers Part Time $10-15/hr Call Alison @413-627-9043

Get hands-on legal experience with a legal assistant internship this fall. Work directly with attorneys and clients and earn 9 to 15 credits. No experience required. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office for an application, due 4/2. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

EMPLOYMENT

Two job opportunities on Nantucket Island beginning in May. Office assistants with decent typing, computer and telephone skills. Some errand running. Salary + housing. Tele. 508-228-3942 or send resume to PO Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 or fax resume to 508-228-8778

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley 5 bedroom Newer home close to UMass big'yard 2 full bathrooms, sunny living room. Call 549-4270

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst, PhilosophyDialogue.net

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

WANTED

Your 10 year old BMX bike $75, Will pay more for Mongoose or GT, Patrick, 508-934-9274

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 12, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen tame River Hawks

Warner comes up big in the clutch

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

So, your starting goaltender suffers an injury the morning before your team's first-ever home playoff game. Cause for concern?

UMass Lowell	3
UMass	6

If you're the Massachusetts hockey team, hardly.

Junior Tim Warner, who has been relegated to a seldom-used backup role all season, made 39 stops, tying a career best, and brother Mike scored twice to lead UMass past sister school Massachusetts-Lowell 6-3 at the Mullins Center. The Minutemen take a 1-0 lead in the Hockey East quarterfinal series.

Warner was a midday replacement for sophomore Gabe Winer, who started all 31 regular season games for the Minutemen, playing all but 72 minutes this season. Winer was injured during a morning practice Thursday, giving Warner, who had only appeared for 68 minutes over four games all year, a shot at stardom.

He didn't disappoint.

Despite the three goals allowed, Warner was on top of nearly every Lowell rush, and made a number of dandy saves, with a little help from a defensive corps that played one of its best games of the season.

"Our 'D' did a good job tonight," said Warner in the post-game press conference, flanked by brother Mike and UMass coach Don Cahoon. "They kept most of the shots to the outside."

For Mike Warner, the senior tri-captain who will soon play his last game in a UMass uniform, Thursday night was a source of pride and redemption.

"It's been hard the last few years, having Tim work so hard and not have many chances to play," Warner said.

Warner went so far as to help brother Tim, potting two crucial goals, and coming one empty-netter short of a hat trick. Warner had an open look from center ice at Lowell's empty cage with 40 seconds to go, but was hauled down by the stick of a Lowell defender with no penalty called.

The Minutemen broke the game open with three goals in the second period, and added one more to finish the River Hawks off in the third. Stephen Werner started the outburst with one of the prettiest goals of UMass' season. Sitting in the box for tripping, Werner was released just as Senior defenseman

Thomas Pock gained possession in the UMass zone. He flipped the puck to Werner, landing it at his feet just before it crossed the blue line. Werner quickly covered the distance to Davidson with no defensemen in front of him, and slipped a backhand past the sprawling goaltender's left foot at 3:03 of the middle frame.

Mike Warner added to the total under three minutes later, when he and linemates Werner and Kevin Jarman crashed Davidson's net. The trio got a couple of shots off, before Warner managed to stuff it under Davidson's pads. Pock added the Minutemen's fifth

See HOCKEY on page 6

Forward Greg Mauldin scored an early goal against UMass-Lowell en route to a 6-3 victory over the River Hawks. UMass plays the second game of its series tonight at the Mullins Center for a 7 p.m. face-off.

Judge rules: No Brown

BOSTON (AP) — A Boston judge on Thursday blocked former Northeastern University head football coach Don Brown from taking his new job at the University of Massachusetts, finding that Brown "willfully and intentionally" breached his contract with Northeastern when he took the UMass job.

Northeastern sought the injunction to make a point about ethics in school athletics, and to prevent Brown from coaching its conference rival UMass, said Northeastern spokeswoman Emily Donahue. She said Northeastern does not want Brown back.

"We're very pleased that the court saw things our way. I think that we went in to really make a statement about fair business practices within intercollegiate athletics, and we feel that the judge understood that message," she said.

Brown said he was "extremely disappointed with the ruling."

"Obviously, I need to respect judge's decision and abide by his ruling," he said.

Brown said he planned to appeal.

Brown, 48, spent two years as an assistant with the Minutemen before leaving to become the head coach at Northeastern in 2000. He went 27-20 in four years at Northeastern, including 10-3 in 2002, when the Huskies won the Atlantic 10 championship and qualified for the Division I-AA playoffs.

In January, Northeastern gave Brown and his staff pay raises and a contract extension. That month, UMass had asked for permission to talk to Brown, and Northeastern denied the request, according to Northeastern. UMass claims the request was not denied.

Last month, Brown resigned from Northeastern to take the UMass job, prompting strong objections from Northeastern, which alleged that Brown illegally broke his contract with the school.

-Associated Press

Not quite perfection

By Rusty Miller
Associated Press

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — From perfect to pummeled.

Saint Joseph's first game as the nation's No. 1 team also was its first loss of the season, a shocking 87-67 collapse against unranked Xavier in the Atlantic-10 quarterfinals Thursday.

Xavier	87
St. Joseph's	67

The Hawks came in with a 27-0 record, three victories from becoming the first team since 1991 to enter the NCAA tournament undefeated. But they trailed Xavier by as many as 37 points, and the upset raises questions about how serious a contender the tiny Philadelphia school will be for the national championship.

The rout also tarnishes a magical run by a team that was one of the biggest surprises in sports this year, and it could cost Saint Joseph's a top seeding in the NCAAs.

"I'm assuming that the televisions wherever that committee is meeting didn't work," Hawks coach Phil Martelli said.

"This was our 20th game away from our own fieldhouse. We're 19-1 in those games. They [the committee] will understand that. The committee will do us right because of our body of work. Not 40 minutes."

It's the worst loss ever by a No. 1 team against an unranked team and equals the seventh-biggest loss by a top-ranked team against anyone. A partisan crowd began rubbing it in midway through the second half, chanting "Sloppy Joe's!"

Romain Sato led Xavier with 24 points and 11 rebounds. Lionel Chalmers scored 23, and Anthony Myles had 19.

Saint Joseph's backcourt stars Jameer Nelson and Delonte West were held to a combined 11-for-35 shooting, and scored 16 points each. Xavier (21-10) made 71.1 percent of its shots, while holding Saint Joseph's to 35.4 percent - its worst showing all season.

"Any loss is devastating, especially when you work so hard," Nelson said. "We take pride in our defense and we let ourselves down with our defense today."

Saint Joseph's, which took the No. 1 spot Monday after Stanford's loss to Washington, was limited to one field goal during a stretch of more than 10 minutes. And the Hawks' biggest weakness, their inside game, was exposed by the Musketeers, who outrebounded Saint Joseph's 43-18.

"They're a great team. They didn't go 27-0 for no reason. They made history," Chalmers said. "They're one of the great teams in the country. They deserve a No. 1 seed."

Chalmers added that he thought the Musketeers actually might have done the Hawks a favor.

"It might be better for them to lose early on," he said. "It might help them in the tournament."

Playing less than an hour from its campus, Xavier will face George Washington - a 79-50 winner over Rhode Island - in the semifinals Friday night. The Musketeers all but claimed an NCAA berth, regardless of what happens in the remainder of the

See HAWKS on page 6

St. Joseph's Jameer Nelson, left, puts his arm around teammate Delonte West near the end of No. 1 St. Joseph's 87-67 loss to Xavier in the quarterfinals of the Atlantic-10 tournament.

UMass heads south to face raging Bulls

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

After sweeping Rider last weekend, the Massachusetts baseball team is heading down south to play a three-game series against the University of South Florida. A foe as formidable as the Minutemen (2-0) will meet this season.

The Maroon and White will play its first game tonight at 7 p.m.

The Bulls (10-5), who have had the convenience of Florida weather, have already delved deep into their season and are a poised squad with a heap of talent up and down their roster.

UMass head coach Mike Stone, who earned his 500th win in the Minutemen's 6-5 victory over Rider in the first game of the doubleheader, is used to seeing talented squads this early in the season.

"We always play a good team early, so we always have a series every year where we're playing a top team," Stone said. "They're ready; they've been playing their inter-squad scrimmages before they even play other teams. I was just really pleased the way we looked Sunday. It didn't look like it was our first time on the field."

USF has taken care of the two Northeast teams that they've faced this year with a 4-1 win over Northeastern on March 2nd, and a 11-5 dismantling of Pennsylvania on March 9. Both victories came in the friendly confines of Red McEwen field, where the Bulls are currently 8-1.

Leading the way offensively for South Florida has been Matt McHargue, who is batting .361 with three home runs and 13 runs batted in, and Brian Baisley who is batting .286 but in 15 games has knocked in 16 RBIs.

Aside from their offense the Bulls have a solid pitching staff led by Kyle Schmitt and Chase Lirette who have 49 strikeouts between them.

"They have good pitching, they are going to be a solid team," Stone said. "I try not to focus on the other team and what their strengths are, I've got to focus on what our strengths are and how we're going to beat them."

Part of the strategy lays in the hands of starting pitchers Matt Torra and Eric Chown. Both earned victories in last weekend's doubleheader against Rider and have looked battle-tested in the early goings of this season.

Torra had a career-best 12 strikeouts in his first appearance for the Minutemen. The sophomore acquired the career mark in only six innings of work against Rider.

Pacing the offense for the Maroon and White has been Derrick Durepo, who has gone 5-for-8 with four RBIs and third basemen Adam Stojanowski who had five hits on the season, all of which were doubles. Stojanowski has also scored four runs for the Minutemen, leading the team.

UMass has been working out some physical kinks over the past week. In their first series the Minutemen had some sore muscles after getting adjusted to playing on a real field. Stone is hoping that after a week of practice his squad will be able to go the distance this weekend.

"Physically we have some issues to deal with but I think by the end of the week we'll be ready and we'll be focused, Stone said, "They'll be excited about going down to Florida and playing a good ball club in a good ballpark."

Senior second basemen Cullen Maumus, who went 2-for-9 with two runs and a double in the Minutemen's series against Rider, knows that South Florida is a step up from their first opponent.

"I think we'll anticipate a little higher level of play but we can't really change our game," said Maumus. "Every game we play we have to go into the same way, we play aggressive and fundamentally sound, we've just got to play our game."

Over spring break, UMass will remain in Florida and will play five games against a slew of talent from around the country, in Bradenton.

The Minutemen will face: Northern Iowa March 16, Iowa March 17, Wright State March 18, Wisconsin-Milwaukee March 19, and Miami of Ohio March 20.

Band blends old Southern soul and new music style

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Maine outlasts UMass into third overtime, wins HEA championship

SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, MARCH 22, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 102

Presidential candidates share light exchange in Boston

By Mark Pratt
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — President Bush and Sen. John Kerry engaged in some lighthearted, long-distance one-upmanship Sunday, exhorting a Roman Catholic priest to save the souls of Republicans and Democrats alike.

"I presume he's got quite a few souls to save in that crowd," the Republican president joked.

The Rev. Robert E. Casey, pastor of St. Brigid church, led the prayer to open the annual St. Patrick's Day breakfast.

"Father, I got a few Republican ones I want to add to the list if I can," quipped Kerry.

The breakfast, a tradition for more than 50 years, is a prelude to the annual South Boston St. Patrick's Day Parade, which draws hundreds of thousands. The gathering was attended by more than 400 people, including Gov. Mitt Romney, Attorney General Thomas Reilly, House Speaker

See BUSH, KERRY on page 3

Maine beats UMass in third overtime of stunning Hockey East final

Maine's Dustin Penner scored Maine's first goal in the Black Bears' 2-1 triple-overtime win over UMass Saturday night. The victory gave Maine its fifth Hockey East title, and ended the Minutemen's season at 19-12-6.

Lesbian minister acquitted from church charges

By Shannon Dininny
Associated Press

ELLENSBURG, Wash. (AP) — Congregants in the Methodist church where the Rev. Karen Dammann used to preach celebrated her acquittal Sunday, a day after she was cleared of violating church doctrine by living in a lesbian relationship.

"I'm very pleased," said Dodie Haight, a member of the congregation who sat through Dammann's trial about 95 miles away in the Seattle suburb of Bothell. "I don't think the jury had an easy task, but I think they gave it long, thoughtful, prayerful consideration."

Dammann, 47, was acquitted Saturday by a jury of 13 pastors of violating a church ban on ordaining "self-avowed, practicing homosexuals." If nine jurors had voted to convict, Dammann could have lost her ministry.

The United Methodist Church has repeatedly voted against loosening policies on homosexuality, but the response to the verdict in this small, central Washington town was warm.

Haight said she arrived at church early expecting protesters, but there were none.

"The people of the congregation have been incredible to us," Dammann said Saturday.

But there was concern about the fallout for the United Methodist Church, the nation's third-largest denomination with 8.5 million U.S. members.

"I believe the vast majority of United Methodists are in grief and shock today. I'm personally heartbroken," said Patricia Miller, executive director of the Confessing Movement, a conservative movement within the United Methodist Church.

"I think the issue is, a part of the jurisdiction has broken covenant with the rest of the church and has decided to go the way of the world, as opposed to being faithful to

The Rev. Karen Dammann, left, and her partner Meredith Savage react to the verdict after a jury of 13 pastors found her not guilty of practices "incompatible with Christian teaching," on Saturday.

See MINISTER on page 3

Ballot boxes sealed in Presidential reelection

By Stephan Grauwels
Associated Press

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Taiwan's High Court ordered all ballot boxes sealed Sunday as thousands of protesters demanded a recount of President Chen Shui-bian's re-election, saying it was marred by voting irregularities and an apparent assassination attempt that wounded the incumbent.

The court said it was sealing the boxes to preserve evidence, but it did not order a recount of Saturday's vote as requested by challenger Lien Chan. The opposition also said it would seek to nullify

Chen's narrow victory Saturday, arguing he unfairly received sympathy votes because of the election-eve shooting, which remained unexplained.

Chen, who campaigned on a China-bashing platform, and Vice President Annette Lu were shot and slightly wounded while riding in an open Jeep on Friday in Chen's hometown of Tainan.

Nobody has been arrested, and police have not identified any suspects. A $718,750 reward was offered for information leading to an arrest.

Chen won Saturday's election with 50.1 percent of the vote compared to 49.9 percent for Lien — a margin of just 30,000 votes.

But Taiwan's first-ever island-wide referendum, also held Saturday and championed by Chen, failed because many voters decided to boycott it. The ballot question was fiercely opposed by China, which saw it as a rehearsal for a vote on Taiwan independence.

China and Taiwan split amid civil war in 1949, and China wants the island to rejoin the mainland.

Lien has pushed for a more conciliatory approach toward China. His party argued that Chen did not have the legal authority to call the referendum and successfully rallied Taiwanese to skip the vote.

About 10,000 demonstrators gathered in Taipei clamoring for an immediate recount, police said.

See TAIWAN on page 3

Donuts not "just the thing"

BRISTOL, R.I. (AP) — A citizens' coalition is leading the charge against a New England institution: Dunkin' Donuts.

For weeks, Linda Arruda and as many as a dozen others have been meeting to stop the donut and coffee chain from building a store in the historic district of this quaint bayside town that's home to the nation's longest running Fourth of July parade.

"I want to help the downtown Dunkin' Donuts fail," Arruda told The Providence Journal, a button reading "Do Not Donut" pinned to her. "I will do my best to make it go out of business."

Some are pleased that there may be an occupant at the storefront at the corner of Hope and State streets that's been vacant for months. But the Preserve Historic Bristol, formed in January after townspeople learned of the Dunkin' Donuts plan, see it as a threat. The group wants Bristol to ban or at least restrict so-called formula businesses.

The Town Council is researching the legality of such a restriction, which, if adopted, would make Bristol the first in New England to have such a law.

"Bristol could lead the way," Town Solicitor Michael Ursillo said.

Joseph Prazeres, who owns five Dunkin' Donuts franchises in the East Bay, plans to open the shop in May. He'll apply for a remodeling permit this month, his attorney said.

Local shop owners complain that

See DONUTS on page 3

Spanish search for bombs' origin from train attacks

Members of Madrid's Kurdish community, left, hold up their flag to express their solidarity with the 202 victims of the Madrid train bombings at Atocha train station in the Spanish capital, yesterday.

By Andrew Selsky
Associated Press

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Investigators searched Sunday for the place used to assemble the backpack bombs that blew apart four train cars during morning rush hour earlier this month, killing 202 people and wounding more than 1,400.

Spain still grieves after the March 11 attacks. Thousands of people, including Madrid Mayor Alberto Ruiz-Gallardon, crowded the platform of El Pozo train station — where one train was bombed — for a funeral mass.

The Rev. Jose Manuel Peco urged mourners to "reflect upon what we are going through, and reflect upon our capacity for forgiveness and reconciliation," the news agency Efe reported.

With seven Moroccans, two Indians and a Spaniard in custody, investigators focused on where the bombs were assembled. An estimated 220 pounds of explosives were used for the bombs, which were stuffed into bags and detonated by cell phones.

Ten bombs exploded, and four others failed to detonate. One was taken apart and provided clues that led police to suspects.

"We're now looking for the place where the bombs were put together," an Interior Ministry spokesman, who identified himself only as Jose Antonio, told The Associated Press.

The attacks, three days for national elections, also shook Europe. Spy chiefs from France, Britain, Germany, Italy and Spain planned to meet in Madrid on Monday to review the attacks and discuss improving cross-border cooperation.

Spanish Prime Minister-designate Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero called for "much greater cooperation between intelligence services."

In an interview published Sunday in the daily newspaper El Pais, Zapatero also said "the focal points

See EXPLOSIVES on page 3

Taiwan court orders ballots sealed in Presidential election

VINCENT YU/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nationalist Party supporters hold up a placard as tens of thousands of people stage a sit-in protest near Taipei's Presidential Office yesterday.

TAIWAN from page 1

Speaking to the protesters, Lien said he was demanding that the government form a special task force with medical and criminal experts to investigate the attack on Chen and its influence on the election.

Late Sunday night, popular Taipei Mayor Ma Ying-jeou, who is also a high-ranking Nationalist official, addressed the protesters and suggested they should head home. He said police would avoid using force to clear out the area.

"We'll be extremely soft and just let people leave on their own, go home and rest," Ma told reporters.

Hours later, the crowd dwindled to just a few hundred people.

Politicians on both sides appealed for calm after mobs scuffled with police and pushed down barriers in the cities of Taichung and Kaohsiung. No serious injuries were reported.

Explosives yield clues for Spain

EXPLOSIVES from page 1

that produce fanaticism and violence" must be addressed, and ending the Israeli-Palestinian conflict was "absolutely necessary."

He repeated that Spain's 1,300 troops in Iraq would be withdrawn by June 30 unless the United Nations takes control of Iraq's occupation.

Asked if he thought whether the U.N. could meet Spain's deadline, Zapatero responded, "My impression is yes."

Suspicion for the Madrid bombings has centered on a Moroccan extremist group said to be linked to al-Qaida, which carried out the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks on the United States.

In a videotape, a man claiming to speak on behalf of al-Qaida said the group carried out the attack in reprisal for Spain's backing of the U.S.-led war in Iraq.

Five suspects — three Moroccans and two Indians — arrested March 13 are in prison following court appearances last week.

They can be kept jailed for up to two years while investigators gather evidence.

RAMON ESPINOSA/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Valencia (in white) and Mallorca soccer players pause for a minute of silence in memory of the March 11 Madrid train bombing victims, prior to a Spanish league soccer match in Valencia, Spain, yesterday.

Bush, Kerry trade barbs over breakfast

CHITA SOUZA/CLASSIC/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Gov. Mitt Romney, right, jokes about a rumor that Democratic presidential candidate Sen. John Kerry had a plastic surgery during the annual St. Patrick's Day breakfast in Boston, yesterday.

BUSH, KERRY from page 1

Thomas Finneran, Boston Mayor Thomas Menino and many other top city and state politicians.

Bush placed his call from the White House. Kerry checked in from his skiing vacation in Idaho.

Kerry drew a big round of applause when he identified himself by saying, "This is the next president of the United States."

Both Bush and Kerry had some fun at the expense of Romney, a Republican.

"Here's the way I like to put it about Massachusetts," Bush said. "I know there's a lot of talk about a Massachusetts politician who has his eye on the presidency, but tell Mitt it's not open till 2008."

Kerry, noting that the Democratic convention is headed to Boston this summer, addressed Romney directly, saying, "Hey, Mitt, by the way, I understand you're interested in our convention and I just wanted to give you a heads up. We do not want you to steer the concessions contract to Halliburton."

Then to Democratic Boston Mayor Thomas Menino, Kerry said, "Mr. Mayor, just say no, we refuse to pay $163 for a bag of popcorn."

The Pentagon is withholding about $300 million in payments to Vice President Dick Cheney's former company because of possible overcharging for meals served to troops in Iraq and Kuwait.

Kerry also joked about how badly he seemed to be doing late last year.

"I woke up in Iowa and my staff walked in and they said it was down to five the night before and I thought they meant the temperature and it turns out it was my poll numbers," Kerry said.

He also poked fun at himself over the controversy about his talks with other leaders.

"I've been told by a lot of foreign leprechauns they want me to win."

"Can you name them?" asked state Sen. Jack Hart, D-Boston, the host of the event.

"Not on your life," Kerry replied.

Kerry was not the only person who took swipes at Bush. Menino broke in with the news of a fire at the presidential library in Crawford, Texas. "Both books were lost," Menino said. "The president was extremely disappointed because he hadn't finished coloring one of them."

Romney and Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey, two of the few Republicans in the Democrat-heavy room, also came under fire.

"We have two rules," Hart said, turning to Romney. "The first rule is say nothing bad about the Irish. The second rule is say nothing good about you."

Finneran, poking fun at Healey's low profile in state politics, told her she should have stayed on vacation in Florida. "Nobody knew you were missing anyways," he said.

The breakfast featured five Irish music; a stirring rendition of "Danny Boy" by Rep. Marie St. Fleur, D-Boston; and a chorus of "When Irish Eyes are Smiling" featuring 10 members of the Boston Bruins, led by defenseman Hal Gill.

"Some people say Kerry is a left-winger," Gill said. "But I have played with him and he also plays right wing and some center."

The Bruins wore their traditional black and gold jerseys with green shamrocks on the sleeves.

Just after Bush's call, and before Romney took the microphone, a peace protester rang a bell for about 10 seconds before someone grabbed it from her. Police escorted her from the ironworkers' union hall where the event was held.

Kate Flaherty, 69, a retired woman from the neighborhood, said she was a member of Veterans for Peace.

About a dozen members of the group protested outside the hall, banging a small gong and holding signs with the names of American servicemen and women who have died in Iraq.

The group drew the ire of parade organizers last year when they walked at the end of the march. A judge's order prevented them from doing so this year, but they held a vigil outside of a neighborhood church instead.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Morkantaustas
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Stesuk
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salaiker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Logatic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kiggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
GRAPHICS ASSIST Charlie Higgins
ASST ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Crum
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lorfer
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Martelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AN OLD LADY, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1963, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1976. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1987. THE COLLEGIAN AND HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

Congregation pleased

MINISTER from page 1

ination will play out.

"We're just praying about what is the proper response to what has occurred," she said.

Church law prohibits the ordination of open homosexuals and the church's Book of Discipline declares homosexuality to be "incompatible to Christian teachings."

However, the denomination's social principles support gay rights and liberties.

Dammann declared her sexual preference in February 2001, when she sought a new church appointment.

She and her partner of nine years, Meredith Savage, married earlier this month in Oregon. They have a five-year-old son.

Dammann said she and Savage planned to stay out of the public eye for a few days rather than join her congregation, but said she hopes to return to Ellensburg as pastor.

She's been on family leave for more than two years, caring for her son, who has a respiratory illness.

Locals protest store

DONUTS from page 1

the store will drive up rents. Preserve Historic Bristol collected 2,200 signatures in a petition opposing a Dunkin' Donuts, and mailed it to the company's headquarters in Randolph, Mass.

Since then, the group has sought to bar any business that's required to have a standardized method of operation, such as decor or uniforms. Nationwide, nine towns in California, Florida, New York and Washington state, have barred such businesses.

Stacy Mitchell, a researcher with the Institute for Local Self-Reliance, said losing one locally owned store can have repercussions.

"You lose the distinctive character of your town," she said. "You lose your sense of place."

The East Bay Chamber of Commerce said the town needs to look at both sides of the issue.

-Associated Press

Seniors GET A JOB!
Get "The Edge" for your career transition:
• The Edge – The inside scoop from hiring managers
• The Edge Workbook – Your Quick Start Guide
• Internet Resource CD – Save surfing time for fun
Get The Edge – It's your future!
The Deal: All 3 for $24.95
Save 15 bucks ...go buy a pizza!
Order: www.transitionstrategy.com

Wiffle Rock
2-5 player teams
Medium pitch speed
MAY 1 & 2 @ TOTMAN FIELD UMASS
WIFFLEBALL TOURNAMENT
$1000 cash
FOR WINNING TEAM
Entry info--
www.wifflerock.com
Hotline 508-429-7093
Rock 102 WAQY Springfield's Classic Rock

What is your next step?
[Have you thought about graduate school at Northeastern?]
Our Advantages:
• Northeastern University has been top ranked by US News & World Report for universities that integrate classroom learning with real-world experience
• Innovative and expanded scholarship and financial aid opportunities for full and part-time programs
• Industry focused faculty with strong professional connections.
• Ground breaking programs that access Boston's top businesses and cultural organizations
NU offers a range of innovative full and part-time masters and doctoral programs in areas such as ▸ Bioinformatics, Biotechnology
▸ Business, Accounting
▸ Computer Science
▸ Criminal Justice
▸ Engineering, Information Systems, Telecommunication Systems Management ▸ Health Sciences, Pharmacy, Nursing, School Counseling
▸ Humanities & Social Sciences ▸ Education, Journalism
▸ Public Administration, Political Science
▸ Physics, Chemistry
Most part-time masters programs are rolling admissions, so apply early!
Register to attend one of our graduate information sessions at our Boston campus. Learn about our programs, how to apply, scholarship and financial aid information, meet Graduate School Representatives and take a tour of the campus.
March 23, 2004: 6:00pm - 7:30pm | April 21, 2004: 6:00pm - 7:30pm
For more information, a list of online chat events, or to RSVP for an event:
Visit - www.grad.neu.edu
Call - 1.617.373.5899
Northeastern
Higher Learning. Richer Experience.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 22, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Kerry wisely keeps Spain bombings bipartisan

Two weeks ago, the world witnessed arguably the worst terrorist act since Sept. 11. The train bombings of March 11 in Madrid, Spain are already being compared to the attacks on the World Trade Center. It is estimated that 202 people have died, and over a thousand have been injured.

The political and economical implications of this most recent tragedy, like its American counterpart, will surely be felt worldwide. The March 22 edition of Newsweek features a bloodied Spaniard on the cover, with the headline, "Europe's 9/11: A new threat to America?"

The events of March 11 will undoubtedly have an impact on the upcoming presidential elections in the United States; however, the person making the biggest news is not even in the running anymore. One-time presidential hopeful Howard Dean recently commented on the issue, saying that he feels President Bush's decision to send troops to Iraq was a factor in the Spanish bombing. Dean said: "The president was the one who dragged our troops to Iraq, which apparently has been a factor in the death of 200 Spaniards over the weekend."

The Bush campaign immediately set up a conference call with John Kerry's campaign, asking the Massachusetts senator to repudiate Dean's remark. When asked about the issue on his campaign plane last Wednesday, Kerry simply said, "It's not our position."

Partisan politics, which especially are brought to the forefront in an election year, took a backseat in the weeks and months that followed Sept. 11. The best interests of each party became secondary to the best interests of the country and the world, which is exactly what needed to be done. The reaction to the Spanish bombing tragedy was unfortunately not along these lines. Dean's remarks not only avoid the larger issues, but actually may hurt the campaign he was trying to help.

A scattering of reports from major newspapers around the country criticized Kerry for not taking a firmer stand on Dean's remarks. Some said that it could have been an opportunity for Kerry to take the upper hand on Bush. Kerry has instead focused his attention on the broader issues of Spain's recovery, and the possibility of the 1,300 Spanish troops in Iraq withdrawing from the country.

Kerry's lack of an in-depth response to Dean's remarks is a smart move by a candidate who understands the importance of bipartisan treatment of such a large-scale international tragedy. Dean's haste to turn the tragedy into a Bush vs. Kerry issue is not in the best interest of the upcoming election, the country as a whole, or the world as a whole. It was rushed and ill conceived, and did nothing to help the campaign of his Democratic candidate.

Only time will tell what effect the Spain bombing will have on the international community, and more specifically the U.S. presidential election. However, Kerry choosing to keep the matter as an international issue, and not use it to his advantage, is a refreshing decision, especially in light of the recent advertisement campaign of President Bush. The world as a whole mourned on March 11, and thankfully, Kerry refrained from turning an international tragedy into a campaign springboard.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Night shuttle overlooked again

Dan O'Brien

On a recent Saturday night, after being wicked awesome and kicking ass at beirut and Super Mario Bros. 3, I left my friend's Puffton Village apartment at 1:25 a.m., only to realize that I had missed the last PVTA bus back to campus. I stood at the bus stop for a few agonizing minutes, contemplating my fate. I decided to take my inconvenience in stride and make an adventure out of my mile-and-a-half walk back to my dorm.

"What new and exciting discoveries can I make in the mysterious town of Amherst?" I thought.

(All I found was a small stream that runs underneath N. Pleasant St.)

Anyone who has ever walked up N. Pleasant St. on a Friday or Saturday night knows how many students rely on public transportation to take them to the Puffton Village/Hobart Lane area. Yet, with all the proposed changes the University of Massachusetts administration would like to make its alcohol policy, the idea of a free-of-charge late night shuttle for students, also referred to as the "drunk bus" idea, has not been a topic of debate. Neither has extending the hours for PVTA bus routes.

Right now, too many students are faced with looking uncool by leaving a friend's apartment or a party by 1 a.m. just because they have to catch the last bus out of Puffton by 1:20 a.m. A late-night shuttle would ensure these students would arrive home without having to walk for two miles.

Aside from the fact that walking so far late at night just plain sucks, the primary reason this shuttle should exist is in the name of safety. Students should not be attacked or raped simply because they missed the bus. Fortunately, crimes like these have not been happening too often around Amherst, but they have happened in the not-so-distant past.

Aside from the fact that walking so far late at night just plain sucks, the primary reason this shuttle should exist is in the name of safety.

The shuttle should be in place to help individuals who are extremely intoxicated and might need hospitalization. Too often, people drink excessively and consequently, suffer alcohol poisoning. What if the person who is extremely intoxicated misses the bus? If there were a late night shuttle, the driver could call for medical attention.

There are many controversial recommendations being made by the UMass Alcohol Task Force to the University's alcohol policy. Some of these changes include sending letters home to parents of students who have been found in violation of the policy, having faculty members speak to fraternities and sororities about the dangers of alcohol use, billing dorm residents for vandalism done to their buildings, implementing a new "professional" security task force (which may include searching students' bags,) and restructuring living areas, which would separate freshmen students and students over 21 years old from the rest of the campus.

There are many flaws with these recommendations. First, sending a letter home to parents should be considered a civil rights violation. The act of a college or university sending a letter home to parents of a student who faced disciplinary action was illegal from 1976 until 1997, when an amendment was made to the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act. If a student is legally an adult, then any consequences should be subject to him/her. Isn't the point of college to try to get students ready for the real world?

Second, the faculty members speaking to frats and sororities on the dangers of drinking seems unnecessary because members of frats and sororities already have to attend alcohol education events.

Third, billing dorm residents for damage caused to their building seems unfair, but there probably is not any real fair way to pay for the damage unless the vandals are caught. It seems dumb, but students are already paying for it through their student fees. A fair way to implement community billing would be to decrease student fees that are already used to make repairs to vandalism damage. Either way, students are already paying.

Forth, a the professional security task force has real benefits and downfalls. It's probably a good idea to have real security, and not a five-foot one-inch, 100 pound girl working the security desk, especially in the wake of the rapes in the dorms last year. However, I think students, (the vast majority of whom are older than 18) should have the right to make their own decisions. Searching a student's bag in his own building seems like a civil rights violation.

Finally, the restructuring of campus living areas leads to many pros and cons. It might lead to making it easier for freshmen to meet other students and for students over 21 to drink. However, it could also lead to more isolationism on campus.

Some of the ideas that the administration might implement seem to only be good for curving the activities of problem drinkers, while punishing those who are just looking to responsibly enjoy a couple of brews with friends. If the University is committed to stopping problem drinkers, I don't understand how sending a letter home to Johnny's parents is going to get him to stop drinking. All of the Task Force recommendations are certainly not going to help bring Johnny to the hospital when he is passed out on the pavement of Hobart Lane because he has alcohol poisoning.

I applaud the Alcohol Task Force for trying to improve the quality of life on campus and for publicly discussing their ideas, leaving them open for debate. However, I do believe that walking alone at night does not leave many students feeling safe. A late night shuttle is a practical solution to a problem that scores of students have to deal with every weekend.

Dan O'Brien is a Collegian columnist.

A few dangerous minds

Mark Ostroff

"America has no king but Jesus!" –Attorney General John Ashcroft

I guess it turns out that when "small-government" conservatives are not out preaching about the beauty of "small-government," they're out finding better ways of expanding it. In fact, a new bill in Congress has been specifically written to do just that. And, as expected, conservatives are using God as their excuse for considering a bill that specifically "promotes federalism."

And right on queue, we see that they give it a benign, yet catchy title: the "Constitution Restoration Act of 2004," the newest if-you-say-no-you're-unpatriotic bill on the floor of Congress these days. Hey, what kind of patriot are you if you don't want to "restore the Constitution ..." right?

If passed, the bill (HR3799) will restrict the Supreme Court from reviewing any case where any level government or officer had acted on the "acknowledgement of God as the sovereign source of law, liberty or government."

According to Rep. Robert Aderholt, who introduced the bill, it "would preserve and restore the acknowledgment of God to our law and government." Don't forget, everyone, only Communists hate God.

This poor excuse for a bill is actually a bi-product of the Roy Moore fiasco some months back, involving a judge who erected a monument of the Ten Commandments outside of a courthouse, refused to take it down, and lost his job along the way. Although it was something that every radio-crackpot in the country bought into for a while, it soon became old news.

Apparently, not for everyone.

With the help of groups like the Christian Coalition, Roy Moore penned the bill for Aderholt to put on the House floor. The claim is that this law will simply settle problems without the jurisdiction of "activist judges"— Bush's domestic "axis of evil." But is there ever a sole ulterior motive? Even just looking at the people behind this should give you an idea.

Moore and Aderholt are working alongside the Christian Coalition, founded by America's redbaiting fanatic, Pat Robertson. Robertson is probably known best by his claim that he's been able to control storms. Recently, he even claimed that Hurricane Isabel was the wrath of God, angry at U.S. policy toward Israel. He once proclaimed, "The Antichrist is probably a Jew alive in Israel today."

The scary part in all of this is not that Jesus would set the basis of rule of law, it's that people who fetishize about Jesus would set this basis.

These days, he's been working for the Council on National Policy, a group highly financed by Sun Myung Moon. You may remember him as the leader of a cult called the Unification Church, or "Moonies." Moon believes that "we must have an autocratic theocracy to rule the world," adding, "the separation between religion and politics is what Satan likes most."

In fact, if there is anything that the CNP is best known for, it's that many of its top members are known "Dominionists," strongly advocating for American totalitarian theocracy. They believe that only when America has turned into a "New Jerusalem," Jesus will come back to earth.

According to "Institutes of Biblical Law," written by the movement's founder R.J. Rushdoony, "The fulfillment of that covenant is their great commission: to subdue all things and all nations to Christ and His law-word."

"Jesus," according to Rushdoony, "is head of the New Race." Rushdoony, along with politicians and convicted traitors like Oliver North fill the seats of the Council on National Policy.

Alongside stoning homosexuals, enslavement and the establishment of a Christian vanguard leadership, Rushdoony's book also proclaims that women are generally unhappy because they have assumed the dominating role of men. Women will be liberated only when they are "permanently in subjection."

Dominionist influence in Washington is overwhelming and I guarantee that this is not the first or the last time that any of these "patriots" have worked for "arbitrary rule" in this country. In fact, one of the largest investors in the "electronic voting" craze that has gripped the White House is Howard Ahmanson, a prominent Dominionist who openly admits his goal of "total integration of biblical law into our lives."

If this bill is passed, John Ashcroft could finally be getting what he wants: the green light to federally "legislate morality." (Whatever that could turn out to mean!) And no pesky Supreme Court "activist" could stop it. The scary part in all of this is not that Jesus would set the basis of rule of law, it's that people who fetishize about Jesus would set this basis.

From simply looking at how deep-rooted a bill like this is, it's bound to stretch far beyond its little purpose of letting fanatical government officials put up biblical monuments on a whim. In fact, Rushdoony himself advocates that lying about your intentions is not sinful when you are "fighting a spiritual battle against the Covenant breakers, the enemies of God." That just about lets everyone in Washington off the hook, doesn't it?

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian Columnist.

A student's perspective on the recent college tragedies

Allison Edles

In the past couple of months, many tragedies have been occurring on college campuses. Between the suicides at New York University, the rapes at Rutgers University and the student from the University of Massachusetts reported missing, parents sending their children off to college have more to worry about than ever.

These horrible occurrences have affected college students in many ways and affect each student differently. There are some students who have the mind set that it will never happen to them and others who take many safety precautions such as not walking alone at night or not going into bad neighborhoods. The recent occurrences have much advice to offer current and future students. And while all of these tragedies seem far away from students individually, they are real and their commonplace happenings should make students more aware.

No student should feel so pressured that death is more appealing than schoolwork, and no one should have to deal with the worry of being raped in their own apartment at 3 a.m.

At Rutgers University in New Jersey, the flagship New Brunswick campus alone has experienced many rapes and sexual assaults, including one suicide. On March 10, according to the Associated Press, a group of men burst into the ground floor apartment of a two-story house near the Rutgers campus occupied by several students at 3 a.m. There were three women and one man in the residence and the time. The three women were raped and the man was beaten. In addition, there had been prior incidences of rape and sexual assault before this one.

The University's response to the attacks was notification of its students via the campus e-mail network and bolstered police patrols. In situations involving rape and attacks, there is only so much prevention that can be done. The most important form is locking your doors and staying out'of bad neighborhoods, which is something that is instilled in people since they are young. However, when it comes to a university campus, no one expects anything to happen and may, perhaps, rely too heavily on campus security to take care of any threats or offenders.

In addition, on March 15, a similar situation occurred involving the forced entry and rape of women, some of whom were said to be students, and the assault of a man in an apartment one block away from the Rutgers campus, according to the Associated Press. This occurred in the same situation as the previous offenses and yet, the students of the university were still shocked, as well as the general public. In elementary school, students were often taught the importance of safety.

And, now that those elementary school students are in college, the dangers are greater because of the lack of supervision. There is a reason why all these rapes and assaults are occurring, and specifically recently. But, until that reason can be accounted for and the assaults prevented, students will have to revert back to those days of putting into action the simple concepts of public safety.

Besides rape and assault, the issue of suicide has been another topic that has unfortunately been in the news recently. At New York University, a current total of four students have jumped to their death from high-rise buildings on the NYU campus. On March 10, Diana Chien, a student at the University, jumped from a high-rise window, according to the Associated Press. Her death was ruled a suicide by the medical examiner.

According to Dana Delgar, a freshman at the University, "No one understands why this keeps happening." Out of the four deaths that occurred on the NYU campus during this academic year, only two were ruled as confirmed suicides. The issue of suicide is hard for many students to accept. However, with students' work loads piling up and living away from close friends and family, stress and exhaustion can be understandable and relatable. Perhaps one way to minimize suicide occurrences is a shift in focus. Rather than facing papers and assignments night after night, break it up and set aside time specifically for yourself and not school. It's hard to say exactly why it is people feel that there are no other options than taking their life, but if their concentration is shifted just slightly over to something that they enjoy, maybe it's a start.

College is when students, for the first time, experience a form of Independence that they never had before. However, with independence comes responsibility, as it is often said. No student should feel so pressured that death is more appealing than schoolwork, and no one should have to deal with the worry of being raped in their own apartment at 3 a.m. All campuses have their own tragedies and all campuses have their own ghosts. To ignore them is foolish, but to hold them as examples is dangerous. Students should be aware of the situations and learn from the outcomes.

Allison Edles is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 22, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

New age band's album a bit weak

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

ISAN — 'Meet Next Life' — Morr

It is hard to say exactly what the most disconcerting thing about Thomas Morr's fancifully cool record label is. Is it that much of the music could be construed as new age, or that music that might be construed as new age could be enjoyable?

Brian Eno and his ambient contemporaries have always straddled the line between Erik Satie delicacy and Tolkienian Enya wankery. ISAN, or Integrated Services Analogue Network (a pun on the ISDN modem technology), have been one of the signature acts on Morr Music since their signature "Salamander" LP debuted in 1999. Primarily having dealt in muted, minimalist synths of the analogue variety (as their name might suggest), ISAN now radically becomes the one-millionth indie band to throw a glockenspiel and acoustic guitar into the mix.

ISAN have always aimed their synthocidal musings more toward adjusting the recliner than tugging the heartstrings. The album "armchair techno" redefined what Satie meant by "furniture music," that aging hipster on the cover of Warp Magazine's "Artificial Intelligence," with his token joint and Pink Floyd jacket cover, got out of his chair and got maniacally abstract with his music. Reactionaries like ISAN toned it way down and began to once again pursue warm new wave and delicately precocious melodic minimalism in place of the growing trends in logic-defying drill n' bass and Autechre obscurism. Their breathtaking meditation on Seefeel's "When Face Was Face," definitely a low-end trophy amassed by performing atop the original vinyl, put them in the league of the gigantic aesthetes they had longed to become a part of.

"Meet Next Life" does not gaze so high, though its head seems to be constantly in the stars. As any pontificating midnight stroller can tell you, this often results in a few missteps. The glistening sweetness on "Meet Next Life" can at times suffocate the listener with its saccharine dew. The very title suggests "Somewhere Over the Rainbow" extended to its 63-minute totality for the Martian gardens. Some tracks like the "The Race to Be First Home" are so clout with preciousness that can detract one's attention from the better material that's found here. Not surprisingly, it's the tracks in which acoustic instruments dominate that refocus attention from blissful synthetic escapism to new age pandering.

ISAN does handle the sugary sentimentality better than, say, Moby for example. Close synthpop peer Skanfron's recent album title "Soothing Sounds for Robot" riffed off Raymond Scott's "Soothing Sounds for Baby," but ISAN's latest may be more deserving of the title. The entire album reads like Scott's "Sleepy Time" for insomniac machinery, "Lost in Translation" for skipping androids.

There's "Iron Eyes," the obligatory vocoder track, a lighter-than air tin-soldier glitch-march behind the child-like chimes of "One Man Abandon." And while the album may often times more closely resemble Jan Hammer than Harold Budd (not that there's anything wrong with that), "Meet Next Life" is filled with such cozy and encapsulating textures that, as is the case on most of the 4 a.m. Morr albums, it hardly seems to matter.

"Gunnera" floats in with rising strings and shuffling cymbals like Eno's "The Big Ship" before sifting ashore with tides of astral sine waves and idyllic, atmospheric motorized hums. Like each of the 12 tracks included on ISAN's eighth full length, there's a hazy, blunted softness shielding on "Gunnera" that grants the song a buoyant dreaminess. Call it smart production on the part of ISAN duo Robin Saville and Antony Ryan if you will, but the ethereal wall of reverberation may also be what accounts for the superficiality one senses in the too-tender new agey moments.

Maybe it's unfair to pin the battle of orks versus robots entirely on ISAN. As stated above, there are plenty of patches of wonderfully iridescent sonic embroidery to lose oneself in. It's a matter of entrancing oneself in the harmonic singularity of each glistening pattern without allowing the traumatic distance between the presently compromised self and that haunting memory of innocence to become too distracting.

ISAN's "Meet Next Life" is not their best work, nor their most original. Instead, it simply exists out in the nebulous region of the audio space time continuum, able to be properly experienced at the post-midnight hours of a cloudless evening while walking headphoned, neck-bent upward, enraptured with the joy of being between punctuated points of cataclysm, and assured that, if nothing else, there will always be next life.

Uncaged Cajun sound

Classic Louisianan music remixed

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

Louque — 'So Long' — Lava

If you are one of the masses who bought into the Coldplay phenomenon, have a passion for old-skool reggae or dub or are just searching for something that will hit a bit more of your soul than what is on the radio, Louque (pronounce Luke) may lit the bill.

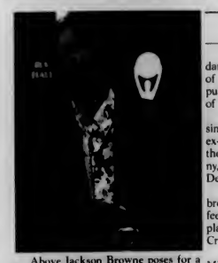
Fronted by Louisiana native Dustan Louque and his raspy, emotionally saturated voice, Louque's debut album, "So Long" is as eclectic an album as the ingredients in a great homemade gumbo.

The album kicks off with "perique" a slow tempo ballad laden with breathy vocals, heavy with Cajun accent to the point of incoherence. It is not at all indicative of the experience to come but it is a strong track that eases the listener into the more obscure tracks that lie deeper within.

"Whoa now" is a 180 redirection of emotional influence. With a jolly and light piano and slightly poppy sounding bass this track has a happy vibe, akin to an auditory version of a summer sunset. Fitting this tone Louque sighs out a story of selfless love.

With a Train like piano intro, "art" sets a moderate-quite pace, which is a balancing bland to Louque's use of vocal range in both tone and volume.

If one track on this album needed to be jettisoned based on which would damage the album's flow the least it would be "kenny the jet." Definitely a reggae inspired peace with a solid groove and perhaps some radio potential, the song seems a bit out of place on the album as a whole. This awkwardness is highlighted with the rap diatribe that dominates 30-seconds of its core.



"Still in waiting" and "lifeline" both show the band's ability to meld together their bayou bar sound and their light spiritually uplifting melodies. They manage this with moments of deep swamp-water jazzy riffs and equal amounts of ethereal piano refrains.

Their one cover song is done masterfully. Mazzy Star's "cry, cry" is given a deep soul soaked refinishing. With a mellow sound and smoky vocals Louque give the story a bit of a kick.

Rounding out the album are two of the bands greatest heart wrenching works. "I did" and "time will take" both have the tell-tale sound of tracks at the end of an album, the sort of softening and fading out that tries to seamlessly reinsert the listener into reality. Most definitely the most radio friendly track of the disk, "time will take" puts forth the bands best, the melting sound of their eclectic background and vocals flavored with that sultry accent yet still discernable.

Rockers honored with the ultimate award

Rock and Roll Hall of Fame adds new legends to the list

Above Jackson Browne poses for a photo after being inducted.

Below Jim Capaldi, left and Steve Winwood, both of Traffic, pose for a photo after being inducted.

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — With nimble dance steps, blistering guitar and a trio of 1980s-era hits, Prince extended his purple reign to the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame last Monday.

Detroit rocker Bob Seger, California singer-songwriter Jackson Browne and ex-Beatle George Harrison also joined the hall at its annual induction ceremony, along with ZZ Top, Traffic and the Dells.

Dressed in a white suit Prince brought the normally staid crowd to its feet with some vintage funk-rock. He played three of his hits: "Let's Go Crazy," "Sign O' the Times" and "Kiss."

A restless perfectionist, the Minneapolis-based singer often played every instrument on his discs. He said he was preoccupied early in his career with maintaining his freedom.

"I embarked on a journey more fascinating than I could ever imagine, but a word to the wise to the young artists – without spiritual guidance too much freedom can lead to spiritual decline," he said.

He also warned youthful musicians, "A real friend and mentor is not on your payroll."

Prince was inducted by outrageous rappers OutKast and soulful singer Alicia Keys, who said Prince influenced them as they grew up.

"There are many kings," Keys said. "King Henry VIII, King Solomon, King Tut, King James, King Kong and the three kings. But there is only one Prince."

Browne co-wrote "Take it Easy" for the Eagles, then was successful on his own with "Doctor My Eyes," "The Pretender" and "Running on Empty." The "No Nukes" concert organizer has mixed the political with the personal throughout his career.

"I want to thank you for allowing me to put my personal politics in my songs," he said. "Music is a very empowering thing. I'm thankful for having had a lifetime doing it. Thank you for this job."

Bruce Springsteen inducted Brown, noting with some jealousy that while he and his E Street Band usually drew an audience filled with men, Browne was a magnet for women. Springsteen called Browne a "bona fide rock 'n' roll sex star."

"Jackson was drawing more women than an Indigo Girls show," Springsteen said.

Browne performed "The Pretender," paused to thank his manager, then sang "Running on Empty."

Seger, who still lives in the Detroit area, burst from regional to national fame with the hits "Night Moves," "Old Time Rock & Roll" and "Like a Rock," the latter a longtime Chevy commercial theme.

Fellow Michigan singer Kid Rock inducted Seger, calling him one of music's most overlooked performers. "In the Detroit area, Seger is God," Rock said.

"Bob Seger's music not only influenced me, it taught me to be proud of where I come from. I still am," he said. "He set the bar for all of us who came from the Midwest."

Seger brought up his Silver Bullet Band for their first public performance in nine years. They sang "Turn the Page" and the wedding staple, "Old Time Rock 'n' Roll."

Michigan's governor declared Monday "Bob Seger Day" in the state.

Tom Petty and Jeff Lynne, two fellow members of the Traveling Wilburys, were on hand to salute Harrison. The guitarist joins John Lennon and Paul McCartney as Beatles also honored by the Rock Hall as solo artists.

Harrison's biggest hit, "My Sweet Lord," came in a burst of pent-up creativity following the Beatles' breakup. He recorded infrequently in the decade before his November 2001 cancer death, but a well-received posthumous disc came out in 2002.

Hirsute blues-rockers ZZ Top were an early MTV staple with the boogie hits, "Legs" and "Sharp-Dressed Man," helped by the presence of little-dressed women in their videos.

And they were a ready-made trivia question: the one member of the trio

Prince performs at the 19th annual Rock and Roll Hall of Fame induction ceremony on March 15 at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel in New York. Prince was among seven artists inducted into the hall Monday.

See ROCK AND ROLL on page 6

the source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

MondayMarch22

BOOKS

The Odyssey Bookshop will launch its "Science Fiction/Fantasy Book Group," a new group that will discuss works of sci-fi and fantasy on the third Monday of every month. This introductory meeting will begin at 7 p.m. in the Bookshop, located at 9 College St. in South Hadley.

Discussion this month will be on Philip K. Dick's classic, "Do Androids Dream of Electric Sheep?" which was the original inspiration for the film "Blade Runner."

TuesdayMarch23

MUSIC

The "Music at Noon Hour" series will have the cello styling of both Arthur Cook and Zoltan Kodaly as part of their first spring performance. The show will begin at 12:30 p.m. in the Sweeny Music Hall located in the Sage Hall of Smith College. As with all of the series' shows this performance is free and open to the public.

Kodaly will be performing his masterpiece, "Sonata for Cello Alone" which is heralded as one of the best works of the 21st Century. Cook is a heavily decorated musician who has received awards from several universities. Together they should provide an interesting bridge across a Tuesday afternoon.

BOOKS

Novelist Ernesto Mestre-Reed author of the acclaimed, "The Lazarus Rumba," will be at the Odyssey Bookshop of South Hadley to discuss his new novel, "The Second Death of Unica Avetano."

The new work focuses on the life of an indomitable Cuban woman. The discussion is scheduled to begin at 7 p.m. in the bookshop.

WednesdayMarch24

BOOKS

Master of mystery Robert B. Parker, creator of several best-selling mystery novels, returns to South Hadley to read from his 31st novel, "Bad Business." The reading will be held at 7 p.m. in the Odyssey Bookshop. Seating is limited and it is advised that those interested call in advance to secure a space. The bookshop can be reached at 413-534-7307.

ThursdayMarch25

LECTURE

William Ryerson, President of the Population Media Center will present his public lecture entitled, "Empowerment of Women Through Soap Operas." His speech will look at how the exciting soap operas of television and radio influence the life decisions that women around the world make.

The open lecture begins at 8 p.m. and will be held in the Browsing Room of the Neilson Library of Smith College.

PERFORMANCE

"Body of Work," a thesis concert with choreography by Division 3 students Kaitlin Hines and C. J. Holm will run through Saturday at Hampshire College's Main Danca Studio. Hines' performance will consist of a danced interpretation of the classic fairytale of "Bluebeard." In a debut work Holm will present, "Your Epidermis is Showing," a dark comedic dance performance that defines the, "in Crowd."

General admission is $6 and student and senior admission is $3. To order tickets or for more information, call 413-559-5889.

BOOKS

Smith College alum and Leverett resident Elizabeth Carlisle will discuss her work, "Earthbound and Heavenbent: Elizabeth Porter Phelps and Life at Forty Acres (1747-1817.)" The book is the true-life story of Phelps and the extraordinary times in which she lived.

The discussion will be held at 7 p.m. in the Odyssey Bookshop of South Hadley.

MUSIC

The "Magic Triangle Jazz" series and the Residential Arts Program continue their 15 season with a performance by the Sun Ra Arkestra, under the direction of Marshall Allen and featuring Michael Ray, Fred Adams and other acclaimed musicians.

The Concert will be held in the Besanson Recital Hall at 8 p.m., and tickets for this event are on sale through the Fine Arts Center Box Office for $7-$12 and are available by calling, 1-800-999-UMAS or via the internet at www.resarts.com.

FridayMarch26

MUSIC

In support of her second compact disk, "Fire," recording artist Magdaken Hsu-Li will perform at Hampshire College's Upper Robert Crown Center. A very versatile vocalist with a dedicated following, Hsu-Li is set to become a cross-cultural for of Tori Amos.

Her ability to fuse her Asian and American influences in her music sets her into a very high niche as a performer. The performance will begin at 7 p.m. and ticket information is available by calling 413-559-5652.

DISCUSSION

"New Ideas in German and European Studies," an interdisciplinary graduate student conference, will take place at the University of Massachusetts on Friday and Saturday. Professors Sara Lennox, Banu Subramaniam and Robert Sullivan will participate in the keynote panel discussion on interdisciplinarity on Friday evening at 7 p.m. in Herter Hall room 601.

Panels will include "Institutionalizing the Colonial Fantasy," "Fixed and Fluctuating: Gender, Sexuality and Queerness in Twentieth-Century Germany," "Fi-de-siecle Germany," "Searching for the Nation, Searching for the Self," and "(Re) Negotiations of History, Gender Subjectivity..." For detailed information about the panels, times and locations, please visit the conference Web site at www.umass.edu/germanic/conference.

weekly pinup

TUESDAY MARCH 23

Dennis Haskins, a.k.a. Mr. Belding from the classic TV show "Saved By the Bell" will appear in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center Auditorium at 8 p.m. Admission is $1, but seating is limited to roughly 660 persons. Haskin will discuss the experiences he had while involved in the making of both "Saved By the Bell" and "Saved By the Bell: the New Cllass."

the blog life:

Kelsey does it daily.
Greg does it twice a day.
Scott: Even more often!

Have no idea what we're talking about? Stop by and see. Join fellow bloggers for a weblogger meetup at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, March 25, at the Woodstar Cafe in Northampton. Don't miss this chance to discuss the blog life with local bloggers and learn more about this online phenomenon, while indulging in some caffeinated beverages.

Check out local web blogs at: masslive.com/weblogs

Thanks to the Woodstar Cafe, 60 Masonic Street for hosting this event.

AUTOS SPORTS NEWS WEBLOGS REAL ESTATE FORUMS

mass live.com

To advertise on MassLive.com contact us at 413-733-2000 or advertise@masslive.com. Affiliated with The Republican.

AMHERST PELHAM
Public & Regional School Districts
AMHERST, MASSACHUSETTS
Bilingual Tutors/Translators
for part-time, paid assistance during the school day for students speaking Amharic, Karnan, Sinhala or Vietnamese.
Contact: English Language Learners Office at 413-362-1857.
Amherst-Pelham Public and Regional Schools is an Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer
WWW.ARPS.ORG

Amherst Laser & Skin Care Center
"Because you are worth it"
Laser Hair Removal
Both Men and Women
Any Area of the Body
Bikini * Face * Chin * Lip * Underarm * Leg * Back
Facials, Massages, & Microdermabrasion
Laser treatment available for acne and facial veins
Call Now for a free initial physician consultation.
Student Discounts available with a valid Student I.D.
Amherst Laser and Skin Care Center
Bob Weitzman MD- Medical Director
196 NORTH PLEASANT STREET - SUITE 11
AMHERST, MA 01002 - 413-253-2214 - FAX 413-253-2216
www.amherstlaser.com

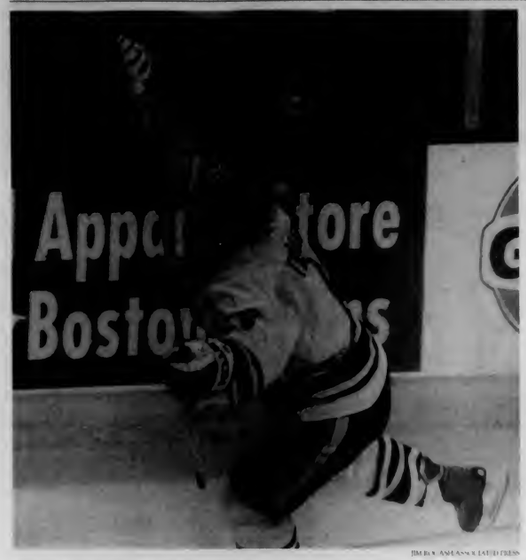
Excitement. Adventure. Surprise. Thrills.
This ain't your parents travel agency. it's yours.
London.....$316
Paris.....$377
Guatemala.....$429
Air accommodations & transfers
LONDON
5 nights, Beaver Hotel
From: $714
JAMAICA
Point Village in Negril, twin occup.
From: $782
One stop. No hassles.
We've got everything you need for your next trip.
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
Room 224 Campus Center Way
1 Campus Center Way
University of Massachusetts
(413) 256.1261
STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND

Rock 'n Roll's finest honored

ROCK AND ROLL from page 5

who didn't wear a beard down to his chest was named (Frank) Beard.

Traffic featured teen prodigy organist Steve Winwood, who later went on to solo success. The pastoral, jazzy Traffic had hits with "Glad" and "Low Spark of High Heeled Boys."



The Dells, a vocal harmony quintet that hit with "Oh What a Night" in 1955, were the inspiration for the film "The Five Heartbeats." With only one personnel change, a group formed in high school is still performing together more than 50 years later.

Rolling Stone magazine founder Jann Wenner was to receive a lifetime achievement award

Bob Segar was among the ranks of the recently inducted members of the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

NEW ON TUESDAY!
CHEAPER BY THE DOZEN
HOPE SPRINGS
MATRIX REVOLUTIONS
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Bruegger's
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

JIM ROSS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Junior Peter Trovato celebrates after scoring the tying goal against New Hampshire in the Hockey East semifinal Friday night at the FleetCenter in Boston. The Minutemen went on to win, 5-2.

UMass falls in final

HOCKEY from page 10

He then stepped in, pumped once, and fired a blistering slap shot that exploded in the top corner over Howard's glove. It was the fifth straight game with a goal for Mauldin, setting a new school record.

In the first overtime, the Minutemen clearly held an advantage, and outshot the Black Bears 19-8. Howard was at his best in the first extra period, though, making save after save, including arguably the finest of the game. With five minutes to go, Pock fired a long wrist shot that Howard stopped, but he allowed Pöck another shot on the rebound. In the middle of recovering from the first save, Howard went into windmill mode, and stuck his glove arm up, stopping a sure game-winner.

In the second overtime, Maine held the offensive advantage, outshooting the Minutemen 13-4, but both teams had a number of stellar chances. At 5:30, UMass' James Solon zinged a wrist shot from the goal line extended on the left wing. Howard made the initial save, but the puck popped up and over the goaltender, coming just inches away from ending the game before Howard reached back to grab it. Seconds later, Maine's Dustin Penner took off on a breakaway towards Winer's net, but the sophomore from Stoughton was up to the task, stifling the challenge.

The closest the Black Bears got to winning it in the second OT came from a Minuteman skate. Lyall took the puck around the net, and broke free of a pursuer just long enough to send the puck out front. However Jeff Lang was backing towards the Minuteman goal to prevent a Maine trailer from connecting with the pass, and accidentally kicked the puck back towards the net, where it hit the post before Winer covered it up.

The Black Bears took a 1-0 lead in the second period, after being thoroughly outshot by the Minutemen throughout. Penner sent a feed from the goal line extended to Michel Leveille on the point. Leveille's stick snapped on the shot, and the puck trickled precariously towards the net. Penner then finished off the play, getting enough of his body loose from a UMass defender to whip the loose puck underneath Winer. The Black Bears carried the lead into the second intermission.

UMass appeared to have the game's first goal at 9:28 of the first, when Mauldin, stationed in the left wing faceoff circle, snapped a nice pass from Pöck in the right wing corner past Howard. However, after a prolonged call to the video replay booth, video goal judge Tom Quinn ruled that Kevin Jarman had a skate in the crease before Mauldin fired the shot, nullifying the goal.

• • •

Friday night's semifinal was a rematch of the teams that met in last year's semis, except this time, UMass was the higher seed, hosting New Hampshire.

The story of the game came from the Warner family, as junior goaltender Tim made his third-straight start and played competently enough to stifle the Wildcat attack on numerous occasions, and older brother Mike scored the game-winner late in the third period, as part of a five goal explosion by the Minutemen. UNH took an early 2-0 lead, but UMass battled back, and junior Peter Trovato tied the game off a shot from Sean Regan. Regan's shot was deflected into the slot, and Trovato turned and wristed it past UNH goaltender Mike Ayers to tie the game at two.

UNH	2
UMass	5

Then, Warner gave the Minutemen the lead, and they never looked back. Sophomore Stephen Werner worked the puck out from behind the net to Jarman, who was held up before he could take the shot. Warner then darted in and chipped it over the leg of Ayers, giving UMass the eventual clincher, and its first entry in the conference final. Warner and Pöck added two more in the final three minutes to punctuate the victory.

sports@dailycollegian.com
sports@dailycollegian.com
sports@dailycollegian.com

This one ranks with the best

Andrew Merritt

There are a number of important moments in the history of the Massachusetts hockey program. Many of those dates are recent, such as Dec. 6, 2002, when Chris Capraro's goal with just 51 seconds left in overtime lifted the Minutemen to a 5-4 win over Boston University, galvanizing the team and its burgeoning fan base. There was the amazing victory on March 7, 2003 that swept the Maine Black Bears out of their own building for the first time in the playoffs, and the nail-biting defeat in the semifinals to New Hampshire a week later.

There is no question, no shadow of a doubt, that Saturday, March 20, 2004 will rank as one of the greatest days in the history of UMass hockey. Right now, there's good reason to think that this weekend was the most important, finest example of the evolution of the program. It was truly one for the ages.

No one could have expected, after a promising season that eventually fizzled into a lackluster finish, that the Minutemen could have made it this far. There were some very smart people who thought that UMass Lowell had a shot at beating the Minutemen in their own building last weekend. Even then, despite being the higher seed, UMass was clearly the underdog against UNH, the team that dispatched it last year. The Wildcats have a fine goaltender, a solid overall system, and they've become a mainstay at the FleetCenter in the last few years.

Conversely, the Minutemen backed into the playoffs, and one of their top offensive threats, defenseman Thomas Pöck, had such a quiet February that lumping him in with other Hobey Baker candidates was no longer as serious a consideration as it had been when he was scoring almost at will.

As has become a trend for the Minutemen, it was an unlikely pair that scored two of the most important goals in team history. Peter Trovato, a hard-working junior who never produced much offense, tied the Wildcats with a pretty shot that beat goalie Mike Ayers over his left shoulder. Then senior Mike Warner, whose leadership was just as important to this year's squad as the goal-scoring ability of Pöck or Columbus draftee Greg Mauldin, scored the ultimate grinder's goal, chipping a loose puck over a leg pad to give UMass the 5-2 win.

All of that was just a prelude to Saturday night.

There will be more epic games in hockey's future. There are more talented hockey players than the ones who donned the maroon jerseys Saturday night. There are goaltenders who would have found the superhuman strength to reach down and stop the puck that trickled through Gabe Winer's legs, and there are forwards who would have finished more of the breakaways and one-timers that the Minutemen threw at Jimmy Howard Saturday night. There have been, and will be, better coaches than Don Cahoon — and that's coming more from him than from this writer. Right now, this UMass team is hardly a blip on the national radar screen, simply "the other team" in the Sportscenter highlight that showed Maine's thrilling title win.

However, there may never, ever be a game as amazing, as draining, as uplifting and discouraging, as breathtaking as the one that was played Saturday night on that FleetCenter ice. It was a title fight at its best, going all 12 rounds, with quality punches from both contenders. It was a horse race with a photo finish, between two thoroughbreds — one of them more Seabiscuit than Secretariat, but still. It was the extra-inning, triple-overtime, down-to-the-wire extravaganza that we all secretly hope might break out when we buy that ticket for admittance.

Those naysayers who think that lots of scoring is the key to exciting hockey should take a look at the tape of the game — although it's probably a couple of tapes, this one went so long. Two sophomore goaltenders who represent some of the best and brightest in college hockey, standing on their heads, making so many saves that the other team's fans started cheering for each of them. So much pluck by the underdog Minutemen that the BU and UNH fans who held on to their finals tickets and stuck around for all six periods became UMass converts, matching the overwhelming Maine contingent chant-for-chant.

Saturday night was what sport is all about. Athletes stretched to the limits, jumping from tired legs in the sixth overtime just to avoid taking a costly too-many-men penalty, as UMass' Kevin Jarman did in one of the night's many indelible images.

There will be more games. There will be better players and teams, and in a few years, according to Pöck, a title on the Minutemen's mantel. But if UMass hockey is a religion, the faithful are reaping the rewards starting now.

No matter what comes in the next exciting years, one thing is for sure, without any doubt, Saturday night was an epic in every sense of the word, and the greatest hockey game I have ever seen.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at merritt_collegian@yahoo.com

Winer makes return to cage

GOALIES from page 10

Warner hadn't played in back-to-back games ever in his career before the Lowell series, so a rest wasn't an unreasonable consideration.

On the flip side, Warner had the hot hand. He didn't just play in the Lowell series, he shined, never giving up a truly bad goal. He has also been an important part of the Minutemen's preparation all year, and while no one pays to see a practice, those who managed to attend a session in the Mullins Center practice rink might have had a hard time identifying the team's top goaltender, as Warner often showed the moves and the fundamental awareness to earn playing time.

Winer initially didn't think he was getting the nod, either.

"There's no way I thought I was going to play after yesterday, but coach had a lot of confidence in me, and I'm glad I got to participate."

While Warner was relegated to the baseball cap seat at the end of the Minutemen's bench, he might take some solace in the fact that, despite Cahoon's decision to go with Winer for the biggest game in the program's history, there are many on the team — including Winer — who agree that the Minutemen got where they did because of him.

"Timmy did a really great job," Winer said. "He's the reason we got here."

Weight Loss and Body Building Specialists
Slim down before spring break!
Get Ephedra while you can!
34 University Drive
Next to Beach Club Tanning
549-5083

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 n. pleasant st. amherst 256.0733
145 main st. northampton 586.0153

Club Castaway Will Proudly present College Nights on Thursdays from 9p.m.-1p.m. $3.00 covers with valid college ID & Drivers Licensed, must be 21 years or older through March.
CLUB CASTAWAY
Hey ladies over 18 years old Earn big money for your Spring Break vacation. Come and see us and we will show you how to make the money that you need in the entertainment business
Rt. 5&10, Whately 665-8755

UMASS Campus Recreation
Still Time To Enter:
Softball (M/W/C).....A.S.A.P.
Co-ree Soccer.....A.S.A.P.
Volleyball Special.....A.S.A.P.
Officials Needed:
Softball Clinics.....3/22, 3/24, 3/25
Co-ree Soccer Clinics.....3/23, 3/24, 3/25
Volleyball Special.....3/23
Call for clinic attendance requirements, times and locations.
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: www.umass.edu/umim

Change your mind this summer:
stay.
• Get the Gen Ed courses you need
• Enjoy smaller class sizes
• Keep on track for graduation
• Choose from over 200 courses and degree programs
• AND take 6 credits or more and we'll waive the registration fee!
Watch for our money-saving coupon in your mailbox.
umass.edu/contined
413-545-2414
UMassAmherst Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.

SUPPORT YOUR CAMPUS DESIGN & COPY
earthfoods
Sweets and more
GREENO SUB SHOP
PEOPLE'S MARKET
STUDENT RUN BUSINESSES!

JAY LAPRETE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kentucky's Erik Daniels (14) and the Kentucky team watch UAB celebrate after Kentucky lost the second round of the NCAA tournament 76-75 Sunday in Columbus, Ohio.

A Blaze of glory

UAB gets first big upset over Kentucky

By Tom Withers
Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The NCAA tournament's top seed got sent back to its of Kentucky home.

Mo Finley made a 17-foot jumper with 12.2 seconds left and ninth-seeded Alabama-Birmingham hung on to stun the heavily favored Wildcats 76-75 Sunday in the second round of the St. Louis Regional.

Kentucky's Gerald Fitch missed a 3-pointer with 2.2 seconds left and Chuck Hayes' tip rolled off the rim just before the final horn.

The Blazers (22-9) advanced to the round of 16 for the first time since 1982 with their second big upset of Kentucky in the NCAA tournament.

UAB's win came almost exactly 23 years to the day that the Blazers beat Kentucky in the second round of the 1981 tournament — a victory the school had claimed as the turning point in its basketball program, which is celebrating its 25th anniversary this season.

This one might just top it.

Using a "40 minutes of Hell" attack that their coach Mike Anderson learned under Nolan Richardson at Arkansas, the Blazers took it to the Wildcats from the outset.

Richardson got to see every second of it, too, cheering and waving his arms in the stands for the Blazers like he was on the sideline coaching the Razorbacks.

"Forty minutes of Hell: Part Two," Richardson screamed in the middle of UAB's cheering section that had turned into a mosh pit. "I knew they had a chance."

For the second straight year, Kentucky came up short in its quest for an eighth NCAA title as the tourney's favorite. The Wildcats were the second No. 1 seed to be dispatched this weekend, following Stanford which got beat by Alabama on Saturday.

So in the span of 24 hours, Alabama, a state best known for its football, has rocked college hoops with two heart-stopping upsets.

Kentucky rallied all the way back from a 10-point deficit in the second half and took a 75-74 lead with 29.3 seconds left when Kelenna Azubuike dunked in a miss.

UAB called its last timeout before Finley made the shot that will go down in Blazers' history.

Dribbling on the right side, the 6-foot-3 senior used a pump fake to get Hayes in the air, and then stepped inside the 3-point arc to drain his jumper.

Kentucky called time to set up a play that ended with Fitch getting a clean look from the left wing. It went off the mark as did Hayes' attempt and the Blazers bounced off their bench in celebration.

AMELIA LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Doubled up

Sophomore midfielder Dane Collins and the Massachusetts lacrosse team lost a 10-5 decision to Brown Saturday in Cambridge. The Minutemen will host Sacred Heart at 3 p.m. tomorrow.

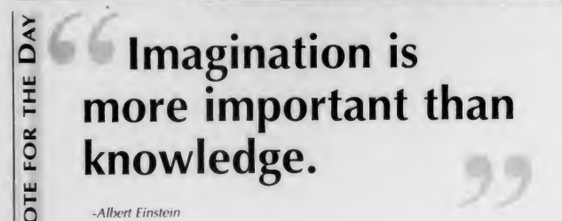
Clouds Dance Theatre
二零零四美國紐英格蘭名校巡演
Free Admission
Wednesday, March 24th
7:30-9:00 p.m.
UMass Amherst
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
(413) 454-2511
Thursday, March 25th
8:00-9:30 p.m.
Smith College
Sage Sweeny College Hall
(413) 585-3150
http://students.brown.edu/bts/cdt/opening.htm
Clouds Dance Theatre is a wonderful and professional folk dance troupe from Taiwan, and they have performed extensively outside of Taiwan, including international dance tours in Holland, Germany, and Isreal. They have been extremely well received by international audiences. The aims of the dance troupe founders are to inherit and to carry on the art of Taiwanese folk dance, to help foster professional artists within Taiwan, and to offer audiences a chance to understand and appreciate Taiwanese folk dance through performances.

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
"Results you can feel."
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

UMass Campus Recreation
Get those forms in by:
Weekend Flag football (M/C):.....3/24
Weekend Lacrosse (W).....3/24
Swim Meet (M/W).....4/5
Tennis Doubles (M/W/C).....4/20
Quickball, Diamond Derby (M/W)....4/20
World Cup Soccer (M/W).....4/20
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On the Web: www.umass.edu/umim

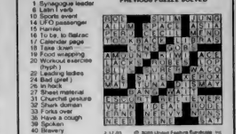
Sticking around for 2004-05? Interested in writing about UMass sports? Email the Collegian Sports desk at sports@daily-collegian.com, or call 5-0719

THE ZOO



BEETLE BAILEY

GET FUZZY

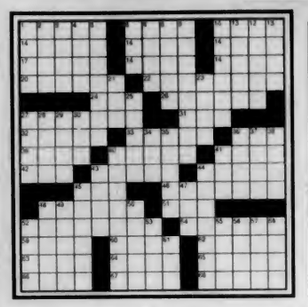


QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Imagination is more important than knowledge."

-Albert Einstein

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 Synagogue leader
6 Latin I verb
10 Sports event
14 Ship passenger
15 Harriet
16 To be, to Balzac
17 Calendar page
18 Take down
19 Food wrapping
20 Workout exercises (hyph.)
22 Leading ladies
24 Bird (prefix)
25 Bad actor
27 Sheet material
31 Churchill gesture
32 Shark domain
33 Forks over
35 Have a cough
38 Spoken
40 Bravery
41 Overhaul
42 "Ben-__"
43 Ignored
44 Wealthy industrialist
45 Morlock's cousin
46 Place to eavesdrop
48 Miniature chicken
51 Wrecked poster abbr.
52 Tex-Mex beans
54 Motorcycle attachment
58 Flimsy, as an excuse
60 Tailor's need
62 Provided medication
63 With, to Henri
64 Weak ending: Cheer
65 Mix
66 Rhyme maker
67 Bird
68 Out and about

DOWN
1 Stadium
2 Fabric
3 Fellow of Mostly
4 Corn cobs
5 Golf's __ Daniel
6 Callous
7 Sweater letter
8 Cry hoax
9 Libel house
10 Lullaby, at times
11 Street
12 Collect a wrong
13 Cutback cut
14 Lampoys
21 County
23 ¾ in debt
25 Aboveboard
27 Mime bear
28 Neutral shade
29 Caboose's place
30 New neighbour
31 Planned ending
35 Russian export
36 Flying geeks
37 Revealed object
38 Like a hermit
40 Zeal
41 Team cheer
43 "Beetle Bailey" dog
44 Sometime
45 Vanished
47 Mess with
49 "Wait-and-see"
49 Actress Arnold
50 Coincidents
52 Riverside part
53 Dirty
55 Abet
56 Plays for a fool
57 Mengzhou of Hubei
58 __ and ends
61 Super Bowl org

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
M DESIGN

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Meatball Sub
- Chili Nacho Boat
- Vegetable Chili Nachos (vegetarian)
- Gardenburger Chick'n Grill (vegan)

DINNER
- Savory Baked Chicken
- Crunchy Baked Cod
- Roast Vegetable Wrap (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 35
- Low: 15

TUESDAY
- High: 43
- Low: 25

WEDNESDAY
- High: 50
- Low: 33

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Caitlin Ott
COPY EDITOR
Andy Vogt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Katie Dwan
PRODUCTION STAFF
Russell Silva, Diana Mogilevsky

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Keep your head up; you fought long and hard.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Please excuse yourself after you do that.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Now that you've had a chance to relax, it's time to get back to work.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Eat more ice cream! Yummy and refreshing; what could be better?

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Never trust the weather from the day before. It tends to change daily.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You don't need a reason like St. Patrick's Day to wear green. Wear it every day.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Take this opportunity to reconnect with lost friends.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Go all out. Leave everything you have. Have no regrets.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Listen to The Beach Boys. They are dreamy.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Redeem your dignity by acing this next project.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Buy a whole pineapple, and slice it up. It's a delicious treat.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Get informed and vote.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 bedroom Brandywine apartment starting June 1. $755/month negotiable – includes heat, water, cooking gas. Spacious, quiet with balcony and parking. 549-9489

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

N. Amherst, 1 Bedrm, 1 1/2 mi. UMass Deck, $625, Pets OK. Hdwd floors Avlb. 4/1 maybe sooner. 549-2062

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Local Business is hiring marketers Part Time $10-15/hr Call Alison @413-627-9043

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Fun at Life-Tech Ventures live-in counselors and instructors at Presidential Summer Camp in Charlton, MA Available to anyone who honestly likes being with children Call 800-433-8375 naturesclassroom.org

Two job opportunities on Nantucket Island beginning in May. Office assistants with decent typing, computer and telephone skills. Some errand running. Salary + housing. Tele. 508-228-3942 or send resume to PO Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 or fax resume to 508-228-8778

EMPLOYMENT

Get hands-on legal experience with a legal assistant internship this fall. Work directly with attorneys and clients and earn 9 to 15 credits. No experience required. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office for an application, due 4/2. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

ATTENTION LAX PLAYERS Play & Coach – Have fun – Make $$$ Top Boys Sports Camp in Maine looking for staff to instruct & coach LAX Awe-some Summer! Work with kids! Top salaries, FREE rm/bd/trvl allow. Apply online ASAP: www.camp-cobbossee.com

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartender Trainees Needed. $250.00 a day potential. Local positions. 1-800-293-3985 ext 516

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling Amherst, PhilosophyDialogue.net

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

TRAVEL

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included. Mexico/Carribean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe $169 one way. Book on-line www.sta-tech.com or (212) 219-7000

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

Need to sublet your apartment for the summer? Looking for an extra roommate for next year? Advertise in the Collegian Market-place! Discounted student rates. Call 545-3500.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SportsMonday

Monday, March 22, 2004 — Sports@dailycollegian.com

Boston marathon

NEAL HAMBERG/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Maine's Ben Murphy (17) watches as his deflection of Mathew Deschamps' slap shot goes past Massachusetts goaltender Gabe Winer, with Dusty Demianiuk (24) and center Tim Vitek (20) looking on during overtime. The goal gave Maine a 2-1 win in the Hockey East championship game at Boston's FleetCenter on Saturday. It is Maine's fifth Hockey East title, and the longest game in Hockey East history.

Maine outlasts Minutemen in thrilling triple-overtime final

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Four hours, 36 minutes. A combined 122 saves by two sophomore goaltenders. 109:27 of play, with two and a half overtimes. Three goals, including a winning tip-in by a fourth-line center.

UMass	1
Maine	2

In the longest Hockey East game in history, and the fourth-longest ever in Division 1, the Maine Black Bears beat the Massachusetts hockey team 2-1 at the FleetCenter in the third overtime of the conference title game, on a goal from junior Ben Murphy at 9:27. It is the Black Bears' fifth Hockey East title, tying them with Boston College and Boston University for the most Hockey East titles in the conference's history.

Murphy slid into the slot in front of UMass goaltender Gabe Winer. Maine's Cameron Lyall sent the puck from the right wing corner behind the goal line out to Mathew Deschamps just inside the right wing faceoff circle. Deschamps one-timed the feed toward the net, and Murphy redirected it through three UMass defenders, sliding it along the ice between Winer's legs. With an exhausted, defeated Minuteman squad slowly trudging back to its bench, the Black Bears all jumped to the ice, joining Murphy at the opposite end in a celebration among piles of discarded equipment.

"Definitely this is the biggest goal [of my career]," Murphy said. "And the sweetest. We have about 15 minutes to enjoy it, then we've got to get ready for next weekend."

The Black Bears (30-7-3) move on to the NCAA tournament as the No. 1 seed in the Albany bracket, where they will play Harvard on Friday at 5 p.m. The Minutemen's season officially ended, as they were not selected to be in the 16-team tournament field.

UMass coach Don Cahoon, his voice broken and raspy after over four hours of hockey, asked the media at the post game press conference, "do you think I have words to describe that?

"It was an incredible exhibition of intestinal fortitude by both sides. Both teams rope-a-duped each other all night long. That game had a little bit of everything in it. The goaltending was immense at both ends, the game could have been over 10 times."

Maine's Jimmy Howard came just three saves short of breaking the all-time Hockey East tournament record of 65 stops, set by Chris Terreri in 1985. Howard made 63 saves, including 19 in the first overtime, and 27 in the three-extra sessions combined, earning tournament MVP honors, as well as a spot on the all-tournament team.

Howard said his hardest save of the night was "all of them in OT. I'm just glad it's over, I'm so tired."

That echoed the sentiments of just about everyone involved in the epic final, from the 38 players and three officials on the ice, to the 16,743 in attendance, to even the New England Sports Network camera crew that spent over 12 hours in the FleetCenter, pulling double duty after covering the noontime Bruins game that day.

For UMass, despite the ending of an up-and-down season, simply reaching the final was a landmark moment in the program's history. It was the first-ever Hockey East final appearance for the Minutemen, who clobbered New Hampshire 5-2 Friday night to earn the bid.

It is also the last collegiate game for UMass seniors Thomas Pöck, Nick Kuiper, and Mike Warner.

"I would be remiss if I didn't say that these three seniors are some of the greatest leaders that I have ever come across. They all played their hearts out tonight," Cahoon said.

For the second time in the playoffs, junior Greg Mauldin played the hero for the Minutemen, scoring with just 6:13 to go in the third period to tie the game at one. With Deschamps in the penalty box for an interference call stemming from a play where he sent Mauldin into Howard, the Minutemen worked the puck around the perimeter on the power play.

Mauldin had the puck briefly on the left wing point, and considered a shot before sending it over to sophomore Marvin Degon, who exchanged it with Pöck before sliding it back across to Mauldin.

See HOCKEY on page 7

JIM HAMBERG/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Helmets fly as Maine goalie and championship MVP Jimmy Howard joins his team celebrating its 2-1 triple-overtime Hockey East championship win over Massachusetts on Saturday.

Winer gets the call

Soph makes a return to net

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — If this weekend showed nothing else about Don Cahoon, it showed that he is a gambling man.

First, he went with junior Tim Warner in net, a goaltender who had played just over 70 minutes during the regular season, without a start until the quarterfinal series against UMass Lowell in which Warner became the improbable star and de facto starter. Warner continued to play well into the semifinal game Friday night against New Hampshire, making 27 stops in the Minutemen's 5-2 win.

Then, Saturday night, the Minutemen had their first real goaltending controversy, as Cahoon elected to go with sophomore Gabe Winer, who started every game this season before going down with a back injury prior to the Lowell series. Winer earned his spot as the team's No. 1 netminder through his play last year, when he shone as a freshman, leading the Minutemen to a team-record 19 wins. Winer's play had dropped off this year, however, and there was plenty of reason to believe that even though Winer was healthy — has been for a week now — Tim Warner would have earned the starting nod.

Still, it was the sophomore from Stoughton whose name was on top of the goaltender slot on the Minutemen's line chart.

"Gabe has played 60-some odd games for us over two years, and has been a terrific player for us," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "He had the advantage of beating Maine more than any other goalie but maybe the BC goalie in the last two years, and shut them out the last time we played them.

"I thought Timmy had played brilliantly for two consecutive weekends, and I was just thinking through it, and the logic of him being able to come back after not playing all year, two consecutive weekends, back-to-back, and be as good as I thought he'd need to be, it just seemed like Gabe was the logical choice."

There were plenty of reasons for arguing the merits of both players. Winer was the No. 1 goalie all year for the Minutemen, and although he wasn't quite as brilliant as he was last season, his stability came in handy a number of times for UMass. Not to mention, even though he hadn't played a game for two weeks, he still had more work, more experience this year. Not to mention the fact that

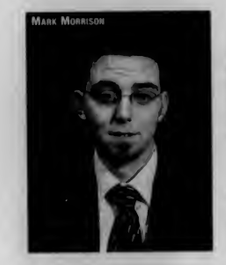
See GOALIES on page 7

Neil Young & Crazy Horse bring Greendale to Amherst
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Alabama is the new hoop heaven after a pair of upsets
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

Tuesday, March 23, 2004 — New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890 — Volume CXIV Issue 103



And the nominees for SGA are ...

Looking at the presidential and trustee candidates in this week's elections

By Melissa Blanksteen and Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

With Student Government Association elections for president and trustee and area government elections all slated to take place on Wednesday and Thursday, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian has compiled profiles of all of the candidates for SGA president and trustee below. See tomorrow's Collegian for additional SGA election coverage.

■■■

Mark Morrison

Brian Long

Brian Long, a fourth-year history student, has worked within the Student Government Association for all four of his years at the University of Massachusetts.

"I've served in almost every position ... from 'local' government, the legislative branch and the executive," Long said.

As a freshman, Long said he was his floor's representative to the house council for Coolidge Tower. His sophomore year, he advanced to the vice president of the house council. He became a commuter senator his junior year, and the following spring SGA President Dave Carr appointed him to his cabinet as the University policy secretary. He continued in this position this year.

"I've served on multiple committees, Task Forces and boards through this position," he said. He has also been the liaison to the Faculty Senate for the Student Senate.

Through this experience, Long said he wants to change school spirit most as president.

"There is none here on campus. I want to change that ... I want people to be proud," he said.

He plans on changing school spirit through reexamining athletics, Greek life and fine arts. Long would change athletics and fine arts by advertising the events more.

As for Greek life, "Greek life is looked on very poorly. Nobody wants to go and nobody wants to pledge. We need a better Greek community," Long said.

Long has long been outspoken about the Alcohol Task Force.

"I need to continue to be the most vocal person against the Alcohol Task Force. We don't want our rights violated," he said.

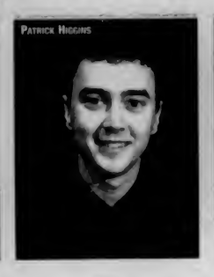
Long believes that the Office of ALANA Affairs (OAA) is moving in the right direction.

"The office is great. It's moving in the right direction," he said. "It's rough right now because of the director [needing a leave of absence] ... we need the office to do a good job."

The international student fee is also on Long's agenda. He plans on working with the graduate senate to "either remove it or have it spread out throughout the student body."

Eduardo Bustamante

Matthew Murphy



Eduardo Bustamante and Matthew Murphy

Creating a stronger student voice and making UMass a more affordable place for students are the top focuses of Eduardo Bustamante, candidate for SGA president and Matthew Murphy,

See PROFILES on page 3

Timothy Daly

Patrick Higgins

Erin Moore

Cornelius Nugent

Not pictured: presidential candidate Brian Long.

HEADSHOTS: SCOTT BLUEDOR/DAILY COLLEGIAN (4)

Presidential search may be down to two

By Dan Lamothe
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts presidential search committee may have narrowed its search down to two final candidates.

The Boston Herald and The Boston Globe reported Sunday that the 24-person search committee determining the replacement for former UMass President William M. Bulger is centered on just two candidates: current interim president Dr. Jack M. Wilson and Alan D. Solomont, a Democratic fundraiser and former University trustee.

The Globe attributed the report to anonymous search committee members and "others close to the process," and said the committee will meet on March 30. They could recommend one or both candidates for further evaluation at that time by the University's board of trustees.

UMass Amherst spokesman Patrick Callahan told The Massachusetts Daily Collegian last night he had no new information on the search.

"It's being handled by the Boston people," he said.

Callahan said he wasn't sure how much to trust the accuracy of the Herald story in particular, noting they referred to Chancellor John V. Lombardi as "Frank Lombardi" in their story.

Robert Connolly, a University spokesman for the search committee, declined to comment to The Daily Hampshire Gazette yesterday on The Globe's story, but W. Brian O'Connor, a UMass Amherst biology professor and search committee member, confirmed that Wilson and Solomont are indeed still candidates.

"Where the committee is on them, I can't say," O'Connor told The Gazette. "There are other candidates who were not mentioned."

Connolly told The Collegian in January that the plan is to name a president by the first quarter of the year, and to have the new president in office by July 1.

"The aim is to have the new president in office by then so he or she can get acquainted with the UMass system and fully up to speed, basically so he or she can be ready," Connolly said.

Wilson has served time for the University in the past as vice president of academic affairs. A former physics professor, he came to UMass to found UMassOnline, the University's Web-based learning initiative.

Solomont, a UMass Lowell graduate, was the chair of the Lowell trustees in 1993 when the five campus University system was created.

Reinstate the draft?

Federal legislation proposes unilateral service requirement

By Scott Eldridge II
Collegian Staff

Even a whispered sentence that contains the notion of reinstating "the draft" is likely to send a shiver through a whole group of young Americans. The stigma attached to a lottery of numbers sending men off to war created during the Vietnam era persists in the United States, and few are in a rush to return to that time of compelled military duty.

Yet, there are two bills, one in the U.S. House of Representatives and one in the U.S. Senate, that propose to revive the long-dormant Selective Service system — and with features previously unseen. If it passes, the revised system for those between the ages of 18 and 26 would be in place and functioning by June 2005.

S89 and HR163 first appeared in the legislative branch on Jan. 1, 2003. Also known as the "Reinstate the draft" bills, the new legislation is sponsored by Senator Ernest "Fritz" Hollings of South Carolina, a Democrat who goes back to the John F. Kennedy era, and Charles Rangel, a decorated veteran who has championed the bill to the House from his position as a New York representative. Hollings and Rangel are joined by a number of other representatives who signed the House bill.

But even with a bevy of 13 co-sponsors, the reinstatement of the draft has not surfaced on front pages of many newspapers. A search by The Massachusetts Daily Collegian for recent news stories produced only six items containing Hollings' draft proposal in U.S. media outlets and one Australian story. A hot issue in the 1960s and 70s, when another controversial war dotted newspaper front pages and nightly newscasts, Hollings' and Rangel's legislation has not had the same impact.

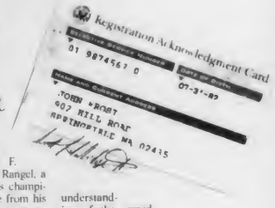
One perception is that Hollings' and Rangel's bills will not hold up and that returning to a draft, even while at a time of war, is not likely. According to the Center for Military Readiness, a non-partisan organization that studies trends and issues concerning the military, the bill can be considered a deterrent for Congress and a way of discouraging military authorization.

"Rangel suggests that all Americans should share the burden of defending America, and that such a requirement would foster more understanding of the armed forces and concern for those who serve, a CMR statement reads, in part. "He further claims that members of Congress would be more reluctant to authorize military actions if their own sons and daughters were subject to the draft."

The CMR also suggests that a military draft is more likely to draw on service men and women who are unwilling and unhappy to serve, which Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld has said is a more costly and time-consuming alternative to volunteer recruiting.

And Rums-feld has a lot of sway in whether there will ever be another draft. Currently, both S89 and HR163 lie dormant in congressional subcommittees awaiting opinions from the Department of Defense he heads.

"If Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld has anything to do with it, the draft will never see the light of day," wrote James Ridgeway wrote in the Nov. 20, 2003 Village Voice.



Rumsfeld has been quoted as saying that draftees served "no value, no advantage really, to the U.S. armed

See DRAFT on page 2

STEVEN SENNE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. Army Reserve soldiers carry racks of assault rifles as they are unloaded from buses at the Army Reserve center in Attleboro, Mass. March 15.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundos
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
Features Editor S.J. Port
News Editor Ferron Salniker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merrier
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagatic
Financial Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclyne Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kuggins
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenues. Established 1890. The paper began as Aggie Life, became The College Signal in 1903, The Weekly Collegian in 1918 and the The Weekly Collegian in 1958. Published since 1890. The Collegian has been incorporated since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
DC DESIGN
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Oklahoma City bomber goes to trial

Terry Nichols is escorted into the Pittsburg County Courthouse in McAlester, Okla., yesterday.

By Tim Talley
Associated Press

McALESTER, Okla. (AP) —Terry Nichols went on trial for his life yesterday in the Oklahoma City bombing and was alternately portrayed as an eager participant in the attack and a fall guy in a conspiracy wider than the government has acknowledged.

Nichols hated the U.S. government and worked hand-in-hand with Timothy McVeigh in assembling and detonating the "huge, monstrous bomb," prosecutor Lou Keel said during opening statements in the state murder trial.

"These two were partners, and their business was terrorism," Keel said.

Defense attorney Brian Hermanson countered that McVeigh and other conspirators were responsible for the bombing and Nichols was manipulated by McVeigh to take the blame.

"Timothy McVeigh set him up so McVeigh could cover up the others who acted in this conspiracy," Hermanson said.

Nichols, 48, is already serving a life sentence on federal charges for the deaths of eight federal law officers in the April 19, 1995 blast that killed 168 people. The state charges are for the 160 other victims and one victim's fetus.

Prosecutors brought the state charges in hopes of sending Nichols to the death chamber for his role in the bombing — the deadliest act of terrorism on U.S. soil at the time. McVeigh was executed in 2001.

Prosecutors allege that Nichols conspired with McVeigh to build the bomb in a plot to avenge the FBI siege against the Branch Davidian sect at Waco, Texas, exactly two years earlier.

Keel said Nichols bought 4,000 pounds of ammonium nitrate fertilizer for the bomb in 1994 and stole blasting caps to set it off. Nichols, who met McVeigh in the Army, also robbed an Arkansas gun dealer of weapons and gold and silver coins to help finance the plot, Keel said.

The blasting caps were stolen from a Kansas rock quarry and drill marks on a padlock at the quarry matched a drill bit found in Nichols' basement, he said.

The bomb was delivered in a Ryder truck that exploded outside the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building.

"This huge, monstrous bomb was detonated right in front of that building," Keel said. He said those not killed in the initial blast died because of glass that was sent "flying like bullets."

Keel said Nichols "had long been mad at the federal government" and was outraged by siege in Waco that killed about 80 people.

Hermanson said prosecutors are relying heavily on "assumptions and circumstantial evidence." He said the state is going to "leave things blank" in its evidence against Nichols, who was home in Kansas when the bomb went off.

The defense plans to show that Nichols was a patsy for a shadowy group of conspirators, possibly including members of the white supremacist and anti-government group Aryan Republican Army.

Before opening arguments began, two jurors and an alternate were excused because they are distant cousins of an attorney in the prosecutor's office, George Burnett. Judge Steven Taylor criticized prosecutors for "inexcusable conduct" in not revealing the links sooner.

Except for consulting on jury selection, Burnett is not prosecuting Nichols. But he is an assistant district attorney with the Oklahoma County district attorney's office, which is prosecuting the case.

Rumsfeld's opposition suppresses draft legislation services over any sustained period of time," referring to the shorter service times served — in this bill, two years — specifically in Vietnam.

DRAFT from page 1

In fact, Rumsfeld opposed the idea when Rangel introduced his bill, saying the country was fortunate to have a volunteer force.

"They [soldiers] want to be doing what it is they're doing. And we're just lucky as a country that there are so many wonderfully talented young men and young women who each year step up and say, 'I'm ready; let me do that,'" he said.

Hollings, on his senatorial Web site, said the bill is intended to spread the responsibility of maintaining the armed forces to more Americans. As it stands now, military service is voluntary as either enlisted, reserve or guard duty personnel sign-on of their volition. And while almost every male in the United States is sent his selective service card around year 18, none of them have ever been compelled to active duty.

"We all share the benefits of life in America, and under this plan, we all help shoulder the burden of defending our freedoms," said Hollings on the introduction of the bill.

"As we fight this war on terrorism and protect our way of life, we must once again listen to the words of President John F. Kennedy, who implored us to, 'Ask not what your country can do for you; ask what you can do for your country,'" he added.

Hollings said the Universal National Service Act of 2003 (the proposed name of the bill) is not a return to the draft of the Vietnam era, when according to the Veterans of Foreign Wars, 648,500 draftee soldiers served in Vietnam, and 1.7 million soldiers were drafted in total between 1965 and '73.) The draft has not been used since 1973 when it was replaced with the All Volunteer Force. But the Hollings and Rangel bills would bring back mandated military service, with some changes.

One difference is gender equality in military drafting. Hollings and Rangel's bills proposed male and female drafting. For many, when the issue of the draft emerged at the onset of the war in Iraq — now one year old — male and female drafting was considered the only equitable way of returning to the system.

According to a January 2002 Gallup Poll, Americans were split on the issue of drafting women. However, more than half of Americans feel it is fair for women to choose to serve, even in high-risk capacities (something that women have been restricted from in the armed forces.)

S89 and HR163 also propose an end to student waivers, with a clear stipulation that limits military deferment to students in high school, and no deferment for college students. The president could choose how many servicemen and women were needed, and the length of their duty.

"High school students could be deferred until they graduate, but in no case will that deferment extend beyond the age of 20," Hollings said.

This is radically different than past versions of Selective Service, when college students approaching a degree could be exempt.

The bill is not designed just for drafting military service people either. Hollings' proposal adds a civilian aspect for those who are not picked to serve within the armed services. These "civilians acting in support of the military" would also serve a two-year stint.

The bill also proposes that residents, and not just U.S. citizens, be available for selective service. The idea of residents being treated as citizens has come under fire in recent months, specifically when former Californian governor Gray Davis signed a law allowing non-citizens to get driver's licenses.

Hollings and Rangel are both veterans and both democrats. Hollings served in World War II and Rangel in the Korean War. In its writing, the bill is said to be a measure of insurance, to guarantee enough military personnel in the instance of "prolonged engagements." Hollings has expressed concern over the military's ability to fight two wars at once, despite Department of Defense assurances that this is possible with current personnel levels, which are around 1.4 million in all branches.

"I think Rangel is modeling the idea after other countries with required periods of service," said one staffer for Massachusetts representative John Olver.

"Still, I sure don't want to be drafted," the Olver staffer, who wished to remain anonymous, further opined.

Unlikely to gain much steam in subcommittees, the issue that has surfaced from time to time will likely go to rest again with Rumsfeld's opposition to the idea. Still, the idea of forced selective service doesn't rest easy, even with this understanding. Compelling any military or civilian service has triggered a negative response since Vietnam, and would likely provoke a public outcry of resistance.

U.S. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld.

Nine candidates address tough issues before election candidate for student trustee.

PROFILES from page 1

Bustamante has been a Senator this year, a member of the ALANA Caucus. He also works in the Office of ALANA Affairs. In this year's Senate elections, he won the commuter district with more than twice as many votes as any other candidate in the district.

Murphy, a freshman, has been a senator for the past year. He is also a member of the ALANA Caucus and involved in the Registered Student Organization Advocacy committee. In addition, has gained experience working with students, while working at Earthfoods Cafe. This year, he worked with administrators to extend campus gym hours, he said.

Bustamante said holding monthly community meetings while encouraging students to defend their rights is part of creating a "real democracy" within the SGA.

"I think UMass students get a raw deal, we get terrible funding from the state ... I think the SGA has been terrible at combating that," said Bustamante. "We have to have a fundamental change ... we need to use the SGA as a way to show that students have a voice."

The pair hopes to reach out to all students to encourage them to become more active and develop grassroots movements to increase the student voice on issues regarding fee increases and budget cuts.

Keeping with the theme of decreasing costs of being a student, the team is proposing the formation of a textbook rental system.

"The contracts are up for renegotiation, and we need to reexamine how we pay for text books," said Bustamante.

Murphy said there are a number of possibilities of revising the way textbooks are sold on campus, whether it be creating the textbook rental system, finding different vendors, or giving more support to programs like MassPIRG's Books for Books.

The candidates are also advocating increasing the amount of academic credits received for classes.

"Another important change is having four credits for a class instead of three," Bustamante said. "We have trouble getting into classes, students are always scrambling for classes, we get in to the ones we don't want and don't get into the ones we want. We've changed the grading system to mirror the rest of the universities in the nation, it seems rational to make this change."

Murphy said revising the credit system would reduce class size, open up more classes and allow students to not have to take extra classes to get needed credits.

Both Murphy and Bustamante aim to help students at the University cope with budget cuts by organizing students from all state education institutions to put pressure on the statehouse, and increasing support for programs like English as a Second Language. Murphy said that by hiring one full time faculty member to the ESL program, the University could hold 60 more ESL students.

In their 10-point platform, Bustamante and Murphy also advocate their support for diversity, vowing to fight for ALANA support programs and the Office of ALANA Affairs.

Bustamante and Murphy are also advocating bringing back physical education, which was cut over the summer as a part of to budget cuts.

Patrick Higgins and Timothy Daly

"Tim and Pat, it's as simple as that."

So runs the slogan that Timothy Daly and Patrick Higgins are running together as trustee and president.

Daly, a sophomore, has worked in the Southwest Area Government. He also worked as the student coordinator for the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA). In this position, he met with Office of ALANA Affairs directors, the student body president, communication services, legal services and the student trustee. Through this experience, he believes he has gained a "really strong" advocacy background.

Daly believes that the most important change, from a trustee candidate's point of view, is that all five representatives from the UMass campuses need a vote. Currently, two student trustees from the five campuses get a rotating vote, with the other three serving as more in the roll of advocates.

Higgins has been a member of the SGA Senate for two years. Last year, he chaired the Finance Committee, supplying Registered Student Organizations with supplemental funding.

This year, Higgins is the chair of the Ways and Means Committee, which budgets the Student Government's money.

Higgins sees problems with how student government has been running this year.

"We're not telling you what's happening," he said. "We've lost connection."

Higgins notes that he told many students on campus about the Alcohol Task Force's recommendation and was dismayed that they had not heard about it before.

"It took us [the SGA] until second semester to respond to it," he said. "We need to be more proactive."

He was also disappointed that there was only one SGA representative on the Alcohol Task Force. He believes the Task Fore "didn't get to the heart of the problem."

Daly believes that students need to be responsible for their own actions, he believes that making the campus dry is "ludicrous."

"It's going to turn into an ugly situation," Daly said on the possibility of the administration going ahead with the Alcohol Task Force's recommendations.

The Office ALANA Affairs is representative of the advising problem UMass has, Daly said..

"Things go along with other things. We need to look at our advisors programs," he said. "They need more funding."

Higgins said there is a huge disconnection between the Office and SGA, noting there has only been two motions in his two years supporting the Office.

He believes it is important that students fund the office, but he would like to see the University also take on some of the cost.

On the International Student Fee, Higgins believes that the International Student Fee was the "total wrong approach."

"I can't stand up and justify a fee for undergraduates. I'd be pushing Tim to remove this fee."

"In the meantime, we have to be realistic," Daly said. "It should be split out for all graduate and undergraduate students."

Scott Eldridge II/Collegian

Student Government Association presidential candidates (from left) Patrick Higgins, Mark Morrison, Eoin Moore and Eduardo Bustamante answer questions at the March 11 debate held in the UVC-TV studio.

Overall, Higgins and Daly believe that the student experience at UMass needs to be changed most.

"For a lot of people, UMass was not their first choice," Daly said. "We need to make students feel proud ... at the state-wide level, we need to focus on the positives."

"This is going to sound corny, but we are the leaders of tomorrow. The state needs to put more money into schools," Daly said.

Mark Morrison and David Carr

Building their campaign on years of administrative experience, Mark Morrison and David Carr are advocating for student rights and are proposing to create a stronger campus culture.

Morrison, running for president, began as a volunteer for the Orchard Hill Area Government. He later became treasurer, then governor of OHAG, and this year has been attorney general for the SGA.

"It's been great from just getting involved as a volunteer and to be actively advocating for student rights, to getting SGA back to compliance with its own rules," said Morrison. "I've learned about myself and other people ... I know what needs to be done in the executive cabinet."

"Our major focuses are driven by experience," said Carr. "It makes it easier to step into the role."

Carr served one term as a senator before he became the lieutenant governor of Orchard Hill. He later stepped up to become governor of the area, and is now in his second term as SGA president. Carr said that while working in Orchard Hill area government he was able to connect closely with students, and as president he has been able to form important relationships that will benefit his work as student trustee.

Morrison said student rights are one of his main focuses.

"Student rights is an important focus, from having professional security being able to check student bags, up to parental notification, it needs to stop," said Morrison. "We need to get in the way."

He also said police entering student rooms is a big issue, and mentioned taking legal action as a way to combat the issue.

Morrison also mentioned academic planning as a major focus. Having class syllabuses available online and teacher evaluations on Web sites not affiliated with the University would be essential to student success, he said.

Creating a stronger campus culture is also on Morrison's agenda.

"Having all students connected at some point is important, the only time an entire class interacts is during graduation and orientation," he said. "Creating something that would allow students to come together and identify with each other."

Morrison mentioned using alumni to help encourage this initiative.

Both Carr and Morrison agreed the SEVIS fee should be distributed among the student body.

"It's pretty violating, with the amount of international students, particularly graduate, we couldn't operate without them," said Morrison.

He argued that by targeting a small population, the success of the school is being hurt.

"In the long run we should change it, I would rather see the SEVIS fee doled out, if we doled it out it would be $1.08 per student," said Carr.

Carr and Morrison were also vocal on the recent recommendations made by the Alcohol Task Force.

"I believe that anybody that's not a student should not tell students how to live," said Morrison.

"I think It's all crap," said Carr. "The focus for a lot of administrative drawn groups never seems to be the student interest."

Carr said the group met on Wednesday afternoons, which made it difficult for students to attend.

"The recommendations were driven more by anti-alcohol beliefs than by prevention efforts," said Carr.

Carr admitted that the relationship between the executive cabinet and the Office of ALANA Affairs has "been a tough one" in the past, but said it is improving, and will benefit the student body as a whole.

Morrison said supporting ALANA students begins with outreach. He said that in addition to making a connection between the SGA and OAA, it is important to put pressure on the administration to keep the ALANA community in mind when making decisions.

"We need to say look you're making decisions, what are you going to do to help these communities," said Morrison. "We need to make ALANA students a priority, and keep the services maintained."

Eoin Moore and Cornelius Nugent

Cornelius Nugent, candidate for SGA trustee, and Eoin Moore, candidate for student body president, have an agenda of their own.

Nugent was banned from the debates after UVC-TV voted to keep him off with behavior they deemed as inappropriate last year debate's, including nonsensical answers and vulgarity.

"They said that they voted to keep me out because I used profanity, but I didn't," he said. "It should be known that they can't discriminate against me without a hearing ... it's illegal."

Although he has not had any SGA experience, Moore said he worked over the summer for Burger King for a week and McDonald's for a month, "which should count for experience."

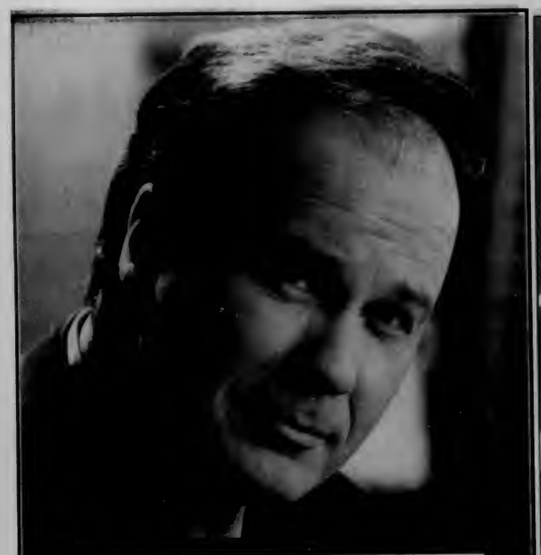
Nugent listed budget cuts as one of the issues he plans to focus on.

"I think it's time the University tighten its belt with the budget deficit," he said. "I think students should take up causes to remedy the situation themselves, like clipping coupons."

On the new international student fee, Nugent said the University should only attract wealthy international students in order to pay for the fee. Moore said he is keenly aware of the unfairness of life, and in response to the international student fee, he believes that any policy that will help make life unfair should be followed.

In regards to the recent recommendations made by the Alcohol Task Force, Nugent said he believes rioters should be allowed to riot themselves into extinction. Moore, although he was not aware of what the task force was, said making UMass a dry campus is "a wonderful idea."

"Ever since prohibition, this country has been going down the toilet," Moore said.



One change Nugent said he would like to implement is the vending of marijuana in the Blue Wall Pub. He said that it should be taxed heavily, and that the revenue should go to books for UMass students. The biggest change Moore would like to see is a decrease in the number of nerds on campus by 50 percent over the next 10 years.

"UMass would be a lot hipper," he said.

Nugent said the Office of ALANA Affairs should change its acronym to "Allegro," which he said means "fast" in musical terms.

"They are getting a lot of heat, and no one likes an uncatchy acronym," he said.

If he is not elected to be president, Moore offered himself as candidate to be the next director for the OAA.

The Student Activities Leadership Center Presents:

Mr. Belding On Campus:
Imagine, Leadership from Bayside to Amherst

Starring Saved by the Bell's Dennis Haskins

Tuesday, March 23
8:00 pm, Campus Center Auditorium
Admission ONLY $1

Sponsored by: Student Affairs and Campus Life

Clouds Dance Theatre

二零零四美國紐英格蘭名校巡演

Free Admission

Wednesday, March 24th
7:30-9:00 p.m.
UMass Amherst
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
(413) 454-2511

Thursday, March 25th
8:00-9:30 p.m.
Smith College
Sage Sweeny Concert Hall
(413) 585-3150

http://students.brown.edu/bts/cdt/opening.htm

Clouds Dance Theatre is a wonderful and professional folk dance troupe from Taiwan, and they have performed extensively outside of Taiwan, including international dance tours in Holland, Germany, and Isreal. They have been extremely well received by international audiences. The aims of the dance troupe founders are to inherit and to carry on the art of Taiwanese folk dance, to help foster professional artists within Taiwan, and to offer audiences a chance to understand and appreciate Taiwanese folk dance through performances.

This is a Smith College and University of Massachusetts Amherst event, proudly present by Chinese interregional Students Cultural Organization and Taiwanese Student Association, with sponsorships and supporting from: Ford Motors, Northampton Arts council, Smith College Fine Arts Council, Smith College Music Department, Smith College Office of the President, Smith College Office Of Student Activities, Smith College Office Of Institutional Diversity, Smith College Sophian, Smith College Theater Department, UMass Arts Council, UMass Campus Activities Office, UMass Fine Arts Center, UMASS Marketing Club, UMass Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund, UMass United Asian Learning Resource Center, UMass Yuri Kochiyama Cultural Center Cultural Enrichment Grant, Special help from: Association of Culture & Art Resources Development, Boston Intercollegiate Taiwanese Students Association, Council for Cultural Affairs, Cultural Affairs Bureau of Taipei County Government, Intercollegiate Taiwanese American Students Association, Overseas Chinese Affairs Commission, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, R.O.C., Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in Boston, Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in New York City, Taipei Dance Crew, Yihyi Dance Studio, Mrs. Yue-Jer Kao, Mr. Ming S. Tung, Mr. Ch Wang, Mrs. Rose Wang, Mr. Kevin Wang, Mr. Patrick Huang, Dawan Studios, Inc.), and more could be found online.

Seniors GET A JOB!
Get "The Edge" for your career transition:
• The Edge – The inside scoop from hiring managers
• The Edge Workbook – Your Quick Start Guide
• Internet Resource CD – Save surfing time for fun
Get The Edge – It's your future!
The Deal: All 3 for $24.95
Save 15 bucks ... go buy a pizza!
Order: www.transitionstrategy.com

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON
Make Nantucket Your Campus
Fall 2004

This fall, if you're ready for an adventure that goes beyond the classroom, surround yourself with the history, literature, and biogeography of Nantucket's unique island environment in UMass Boston's "Semester on Nantucket" program.

Offering twelve undergraduate credits, the Semester on Nantucket will be an unforgettable one, combining academic excellence with enriching personal experiences, as you explore one of New England's most distinctive places.

- Multidisciplinary curriculum team-taught by UMass Boston faculty
- Field station serves as an island laboratory, with dunes, ponds, beach, salt marsh, and well-equipped classrooms and labs
- Stay in furnished two-bedroom apartments near the center of historic Nantucket town
- Program runs on Nantucket mid-September to mid-November, then concludes with two weeks online

UMASS. BOSTON

For information, contact Kathy FitzPatrick:
617.287.7913
kathleen.fitzpatrick@umb.edu
www.ccde.umb.edu

Most nurses spend their entire careers in the same hospital. In the United States Air Force, it's unlikely you'll even spend it in the same state or country. You'll have the opportunity to practice nursing in as many as 20 different fields in a variety of nursing environments. And you'll feel a greater sense of shared responsibility when you have the opportunity to actually lead your team. Sound like the kind of career you'd like to have? Then call 1-800-423-USAF.

AIRFORCE.COM • 1-800-423-USAF

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 23, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Antidepressants need more regulation

The increasing use and dependence of drugs to combat and help alleviate ailments oftentimes creates concern among family and friends as to whether loved one's are actually being bettered by the prescribed medication.

Yesterday the government said doctors who prescribe their patients some popular antidepressants should monitor their patients closely for warning signs of suicide. The government emphasized that doctors should exercise even more caution when patients start taking pills or change a dose.

The Food and Drug Administration has appropriately asked makers of 10 drugs to add or strengthen suicide-related warnings on their labels.

It is not clear whether drugs actually cause suicide or whether the mental illness is to blame. But, as the old adage goes, it is better to be safe than sorry — especially when it comes to saving a person's life. Patients on these drugs who suffer from illnesses deserve necessary supervision, treatment and care and the government's actions should help safeguard against potential deaths in the future.

Since depression itself can lead to suicide, it is difficult to determine whether it is the illness or the antidepressants that lead to deaths. Studies have clearly showed that antidepressants have helped people recover from depression.

Nevertheless, last month, anguished families blamed the pills for their loved ones' suicides and pleaded for better warnings by the FDA. Indeed, some antidepressants can cause agitation, anxiety and hostility in certain patients who are prone to rare side effects.

The drugs in question are newer antidepressants: Prozac, Paxil, Zoloft, Effexor, Celexa, Lexapro, Luvox, which are called SSRIs or SSRI-like drugs, and Remeron, Serzone and Wellbutrin.

Manufacturers of these drugs should comply with the FDA to conduct necessary studies to determine whether they may lead patients to commit suicide. All of the drugs approved by the FDA undergo stringent tests, but exercising extreme caution in this case can help save lives.

The suicide complaints were first raised several years ago, and the government and the FDA should have taken bigger steps in researching the problem back then.

At the same time, the headlines about antidepressant medication should not scare family members and people who are advised to take the drugs. While there may be a small number of people who suffer rare side effects, the majority of the population can benefit from these medications when taken properly.

Whether the cause of suicides in patients is due to antidepressants or the mental illnesses, it is still excellent advice for doctors to keep a close eye on those patients. This includes running thorough exams to see if the medication is right for the patient and properly educating parents about what risks to watch out for.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorial represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Having a right to racism

Zach Oelschlegel

I am not racist. But at least I have the right to be.

This so called "right to racism" that I have is for the same reason why I can write about any topic I want to on my blog, it's the same reason I can mouth off to my friends, and it's why I won't go to jail for dropping the f-bomb, if I choose.

This right comes from what many consider to be the most important sentence ever uttered in the English language: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

This sentence has also fueled one of the greatest clichés in all of writing: the topic of censorship. "We need to protect our first amendment rights!" say the liberals.

"But what about our country's morality?" answer the conservatives.

In truth, I'm fairly happy with the system we have today. I'm glad that it's illegal for CBS to broadcast the breast of Janet Jackson or for profanity to be aired on television, but I'm happy that I have the right to free speech in the privacy of my house, my friends and my web log. To go too far on either side of the issue is where people's rights are infringed, or where you disrupt someone else's right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Where it gets tricky, however, is when it comes to the free speech that people don't want to hear. One of the greatest hypocrisies in America today is the urge to scream "Censorship!" when one finds out their favorite Comedy Central comedian isn't allowed to "express" himself in the exact way he would want to; yet many of these same people are often quick to praise governments like Germany for making things such as hate speech and Nazism illegal.

The term "censorship" today isn't so much about ensuring our complete and utter freedom of speech, but rather ensuring the freedom to say what we want to be heard. Such people will complain about things like the USA Patriot Act, or how they retain the right not support what America did in Iraq (a discussion where many basically told others to "shut up and support the troops," with complete disregard to one's 1st Amendment rights).

Regardless of these arguments, no one is willing to take a stand and respect the Ku Klux Klan's right to tell others how much they are hated, or allow Nazis to gloat over the Aryan race, because it wouldn't be politically correct, and because the vast majority of humans completely disagree with the Nazis and the Klan. Voltaire made this point perfectly when he said, "I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it."

When a government outlaws certain speech, in essence what it is doing is telling its citizens how to think by adversely telling them what they can't think. In terms of free speech, the Nazi government of 1938 and the German government of today are not all too dissimilar. Where in Germany in 1938 if you were a dissident against the Nazis you were likely to be killed, the opposite today is true. If you parade around Munich preaching that all blacks and Jews are the scum of the earth, you might be thrown in jail. However, if you look at the core of the two issues, are they not alike? Isn't it the same issue with different content?

Europeans don't always understand why Americans haven't banned hate speech. They see the world as a team, and we are just ruining the game plan. By allowing hate mongers to spread their filth across our Internet, we aren't acting as team players. Europeans don't understand the fact that our constitution will always allow these men to spread whatever ideas they like on whatever medium possible. It gives them another reason to hate George Bush, knowing that he has sworn to uphold this right to hate.

Ideally, there would never be the need to talk about this, because there wouldn't be any hate in the world. Despite my thinking that hate speech is wrong, it is still not my right to force others to think a certain way. I too was given a guarantee of free speech, and I am able to use that free speech to debate or persuade or notify that person that I think he or she is a schmuck.

The fact remains that they are guaranteed that right to be a schmuck, and unless they take away some of my life or liberty by what they say, I have no right to stop them. I'm writing this to reinforce the idea that fighting censorship isn't really just being allowed to say what we want to be heard. We aren't free to pick and choose what others might say with the same right we have. We need to be willing to give others the right to free speech because it means we too contain the ability to tell them that they might be wrong. Free speech comes with the price of hatred, hurt feelings and utter contempt. We need to respect the rights of the meatheads in this world if we ourselves are to get anywhere in the pursuit of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian columnist.

Aviva España

Yousef Munayyer

This past week I saw a picture that invoked much thought in me. The picture was of a young, teary-eyed lady carrying a sign above her head. On this sign was a black and white photo of Great Britain Prime Minister Tony Blair, and U.S. President George W. Bush with his hand around former Prime Minister Jose Maria Aznar of Spain.

The caption above the photo was written in Spanish. In English it would translate to, "This Photo Cost Us 200 Lives."

The train bombing that happened in Madrid on March 11 came only a few days before the election and surely had an effect on its outcome. However, it is not right to think that these bombings were the sole reason for the outcome of the election. Also, the outcome of the election is not a bad thing.

The people in Spain voted into power a left-leaning Socialist party that had been against the war on Iraq from the beginning. Aznar had come to power on a platform of coming down hard on terror, domestic terror that is. When the bombing in Madrid first happened, initial reports by the government indicated that it was a domestic terror group even though they had no evidence. This willingness to lie to their people further allied the then Spanish government with Bush and Co.

The ETA, a resistance group that uses terrorist tactics from the Basque-speaking areas of Spain, would be Aznar's main enemy in this fight against domestic terror. He had done a pretty good job. However, he led his country in the wrong direction, sending soldiers and support into Iraq. The majority of Spain's people did not want this. We have to remember that the people of Spain have seen terror, they have been affected by it, and they see it as their enemy. The election results after the bombings suggest that they are going to fight terror in a different way, maybe even a way that works.

Casablanca, Bali, Istanbul, Riyad, Madrid, these are all major cities around the world where Al- Qaeda has stuck and struck hard. How can we claim we are winning the war on terror? Do we think that just because we are rounding up some members of Al- Qaeda that terror will no longer be used in the world?

We have to understand that terror is unlike any enemy we have ever faced. And since it is not a conventional enemy we cannot fight it with conventional means. We need to understand that terror is an enemy that grows every time we attack it. Every time we kill a terror leader, two are created. Every time we launch an unfounded war against a Muslim country, the "madrasas" and Mosques of the most radical preachers fill up. Our actions against the Middle East have been the ammo used against us in the preaching of terror leaders. Every time we do something like this we create more and more young terror recruits.

Our actions against the Middle East have been the ammo used against us in the preaching of terror leaders. Every time we do something like this we create more and more young terror recruits.

Just two days ago, Israel launched an air attack against a car that killed Hamas' founder. The killing of the very old, paraplegic religious leader will cause a very violent backlash. Can anyone explain how this action serves Israel's interest? This is beyond illogical — it's self-destructive.

After Sept. 11, Osama Bin Laden said the United States would retaliate by attacking an oil-rich Arab country. Do we really enjoy making this guy look like a fortuneteller? The war on Iraq has been the most counterproductive effort in the "War on Terror."

No weapons, no link to terror. No wonder the Spanish, like so many other countries never wanted in. Sure, now all the leaders will tell you they fell victim to faulty intelligence. The Intelligence officials say that they provided good intelligence but the leaders manipulated it. Someone is lying.

Today, Richard Clarke, a former White House counterterrorism coordinator who left in 2003, will testify before a federal panel and tell them that Bush and Co. are doing a terrible job. With our attention in Iraq the worst proliferation in the world was going on, coming out of Pakistan. What has been done to secure our ports from bombs that could come in through fryight? After Madrid, many have been asking what has been done to protect our trains.

All this time in Iraq and Al-Qaeda has been on the loose. Even when we run them down, there will be others. We need to realize that terrorism is a direct creation of our foreign policy. Spain did, but like the sign said, it cost them 200 lives. I hope we figure this out before it costs us any more.

We cannot fall for this nonsense about Europe not being able to handle the heat. They chose to fight the war on terror a different way, one that may just work. Spain made that decision by casting ballots. They removed a government that acted against their will. That's not appeasement, that's democracy. The question is: can we handle that?

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

History revisited

Over the past months many articles have been printed in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian regarding the state of Israel. As some have misconstrued the facts regarding the history of Israel and Palestine, this article is being written to clarify the reasons for Israel's right to exist and absolve Israel from some of the charges it has been accused of.

Dave Finger

It has been said that the partition of Palestine by the United Nations in 1947 was unfair to the Palestinian people and that the U.N. instituted a colonized state of Israel. Some claim the U.N. should have left Palestine as it was controlled under the Ottoman Empire in its entirety. It is assumed that the Jews and Arabs (whose populations by the U.N. were estimated at 650,000 and 1,200,000 respectively) would then come to a plan of their own. The history of the region, as the U.N. recognized, proved that this accommodation would result in bloodshed and possibly the destruction of the Jews in these lands. Jews in Israel had either inhabited land for centuries in places such as Safed, Jerusalem and Hebron, or had purchased land from absentee European and Arab landlords including the desert area of Tel Aviv and the swamps of Hulah, both previously deemed uninhabitable.

In the 1920s, waves of violence against Jews by some Palestinians took place culminating in the Massacre of Hebron in 1929. Led by the grand mufti of Jerusalem, Haj Amin al-Husseini, almost 500 Jews were murdered or injured in the riot of August 1929.

As an official leader of the Palestinians, Husseini formed an alliance with the Nazis during WWII and led Palestinians fighting against the Allies and was later sought as a war criminal at the Nuremberg trials. Husseini's desires are described in his memoirs when he wrote, "Our fundamental condition for cooperating with Germany was a free hand to eradicate every last Jew from Palestine and the Arab world. I asked Hitler for an explicit undertaking to allow us to solve the Jewish problem in a manner befitting our national and racial aspirations ... The answer I got was: 'The Jews are yours.'"

While the Mufti's views did not represent all Palestinians, his efforts represent an organized movement that continues to exist, which believes Jews should not be permitted to live freely in any part of the area.

Examples of Jewish minorities being treated as second-class citizens in other Middle Eastern countries were also apparent to the U.N. In countries like Yemen, Syria and Iraq, Jews were banned from public office, forced to pay a tax to practice religion, and faced continuous violence. All of this was evident to the U.N., which recognized that the Jewish and Arab Palestinians could not coexist.

The area that became Israel in 1947 was composed of a Jewish majority with the official U.N. population estimate approximating 538,000 Jews and 397,000 Arabs living in the area. That area composed about 15 percent of Palestine as it stood under the Ottoman Turks, the last rulers of Palestine. The largest section of Palestine became Trans-Jordan in 1923, now known as Jordan. Those Arabs living within Israel were not expelled and as anyone visiting Israel today can see, many non-Jews still live there. While some may argue that Israel should not occupy all of its current land, Israel is justified in existing as an independent state.

Others charge that the suffering of the Palestinian people is the fault of Israel. First, it should be noted that the average Palestinian is living an existence that is horrible at best. Their economy is in ruin, and most live in poverty. It may surprise critics of Israel to learn that Israelis and their supporters also mourn the loss of Palestinian life and are troubled by their hardship.

While the Palestinians undeniably suffer, as many Palestinian intellectuals have learned including former Palestinian Prime Minister Mahmoud Abbas, the first group to blame should be the surrounding Arab countries who have done little to help the Palestinians. In March of 1976, Abbas was quoted in Falastin al-Thawra, the official journal of the Palestine Liberation Organization in Beirut, accusing the Arab armies of having abandoned the Palestinians after they "forced them to emigrate and to leave their homeland, imposed upon them a political and ideological blockade and threw them into prisons similar to the ghettos in which the Jews used to live in Eastern Europe." While countries such as Iraq, Syria and Saudi Arabia have supplied millions of dollars to terrorist groups, they have done very little in relief support for the Palestinians.

One should look no further than Kuwait to recognize how the Palestinian Authority shows its gratitude to countries that make efforts to help Palestinians. During the late 1980s the Kuwaitis made an effort to hire Palestinian laborers. How did the Palestinian Authority thank Kuwait for supporting them? After Iraq invaded Kuwait, Yasir Arafat traveled to Baghdad to personally congratulate Saddam Hussein on his conquest, a slap in the face to the Kuwaitis.

The Kuwaiti example was not the last time that Arafat acted contrary to the interests of the Palestinian people. Walking away from the Camp David negotiations in 2000 was one of the saddest events in recent history. After watching Arafat being offered 95 percent of what was desired, including part of Jerusalem and The Temple Mount, Prince Bandar of Saudi Arabia who took part in the negotiations called Arafat's actions "a crime against the Palestinians- in fact against the entire region." Without a Palestinian leader who can be trusted by the Israelis or fellow Arab states, it is certain that this conflict will continue.

In time, maybe we'll look back at this as a dark period in relations between friendly countries. With a complete understanding of this conflict and its history, peace is possible. Hopefully, a proper Palestinian state will be founded in the near future with Israeli neighbors. No matter what occurs, Israel is entitled to exist.

Dave Finger is a UMass graduate student.

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 23, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mullins gets crazy with Neil Young

Veteran rocker brings 'Greendale' to Pioneer Valley

By John Ciampa
Collegian Staff

Neil Young is nothing if not a loner. Like the subject of a song he penned on his 1969 self-titled debut, he has remained steadfast in his own mythical pursuit.

So when the rocker turned singer-songwriter, auteur, punk, post-punk (and back again) decided to try something new, he opted for a theatrical approach. Thankfully, Young brought along his crack outfit Crazy Horse instead of the Philharmonic.

"Greendale" is the title of Young's latest opus, and like most rock operas, its story is at times ponderous and obtuse. But then again, we still enjoy the Who's "Tommy" for its music, not its literary quality. The same holds true for "Greendale." Young raises issues of importance to be sure — there are struggles over class, free speech, corporate dominance and the environment — but the ability for this concept to work rests solely on its musical expressiveness and drive. For this reason, Young was wise to instill the support of his long-time collaborators, in "Greendale," Crazy Horse delivers.

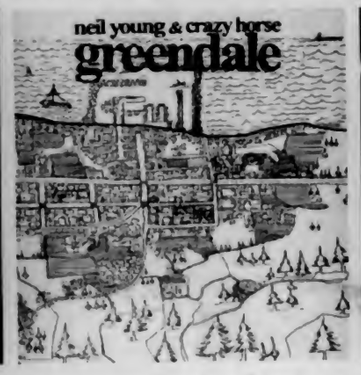
Playing a judicious two and a half hour set Sunday night at the Mullins Center, Young and the Horse fired on all cylinders. For an arena show, the sound was remarkably crisp and true. Young was in fine voice and his meaty and distorted guitar licks were clearly audible through the wall of sound mix. The rhythm section of bassist Billy Talbot and drummer Ralph Molina rollicked with ferocity, while Young's sidekick, Frank "Poncho" Sampedro, withdrew from his customary role of guitar to provide keyboard and occasional percussion support.

Neil Young and Crazy Horse
Mullins Center
Amherst
March 21

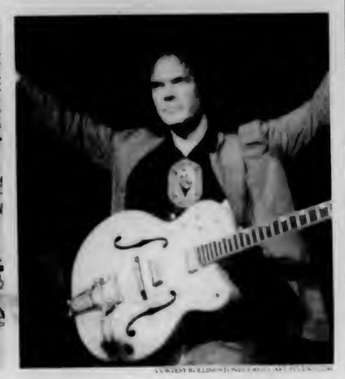
The "Greendale" stage set is both simple and effective for complementing Young's story. The primitive props mirror Young's penchant for effacement. And a cast of upwards of forty crew members and locally recruited extras (as they are for each tour stop) follow suit with dramatized performances that simultaneously express and poke fun at the shows intended targets.

If all of this production hullabaloo sounds scary to Young diehards hoping for razor-edged minimalism, the opening "Falling From Above," was a welcome sonic anchor. A prodding mid-tempo number that effectively set the opening scene, it benefited from a video screen backdrop which displayed the actors lip-synching Young's lyrics. From this point, a loose story begins to unfold where a typical Californian family in a typical California town moves through the post-Vietnam era with each member seeking to find their place in society.

In "Double E," a song in which the play's protagonist Sun Green comes of age, the band sounds especially fine, swaggering with grunge-laced bravado in a fifties style swing number. The show's turning point occurs during the double-shot of "Leave the Driving," and "Carmichael," where the family black sheep, Jed, gets in trouble with the law after coming home from Vietnam. The latter was especially evocative, featuring an extended atmospheric solo by Young and lyrics that eulogized Jed's victim — a decorated Greendale police officer.



Irony is often at heart of Young's sociological work, the best of which critiques the American mythos as acutely as anyone, and "Greendale"'s final numbers encapsulate his continuing work in this vein. The solo-acoustic "Bandit," universally searches for answers that don't exist, and "Grandpa's Interview," traces the inevitable loss of privacy and respect that are byproducts of a modern society.



Both "Sun Green," and "Bring the Rain," delivered "Greendale"'s weighty conclusions. The former is the protagonist's call to action and an ijdictment of the powers that be, while the latter is Young's most overt statement on environmentalism since "Natural Beauty," from 1992's "Harvest Moon." In the final song, Young and his band upped the musical ante and propped the crowd to its feet. With Sampedro dueling with Young on guitar and the entire cast surrounding the band, "Greendale" ended in a caterwaul of feedback and vocal chaos.

Before the first encore, stage hands rolled out some oversized amps that harkened back to Young's legendary "Rust Never Sleeps" tour. The crowd rumbled with restless anticipation as the tour's film document flashed up on the video screen and showed a skinny, thirty-some-

See NEIL on page 5

COURTESY REPRISE RECORDS

Neil Young (pictured here in previous performances) and Crazy Horse played at the Mullins Center on Sunday. The legendary group performed "Greendale," a rock opera penned by Young. "Greendale" tells the story of a small, fictional town and the tragedies that befall a family living in that town.

Dating service makes UMass a little more 'personal'

By Andrea L. Gross
Collegian Correspondent

After Marc Sylvestre heard his engineering peers at the University of Rhode Island complaining about a lack of time to meet other students on campus, he got an idea.

He conducted a search of the Internet, only to find that there was no personals Web site dedicated to students only. Sylvestre, a 2003 electrical engineering graduate, used his technical savvy to fix this problem, and created URIpersonals.com. This has since given birth to a UMasspersonals.com, a free site for students on the Amherst campus.

Started in 2002, URIpersonals.com was an instant hit and people were even organizing parties in which the users could meet one another. After awhile the buzz died down. Sylvestre and his URIpersonals team decided to give their website an exciting new twist in 2003 and created branches of their website for the other five New England universities: University of Mass-achusetts, University of Conn-ecticut, University of Vermont, University of New Hampshire and the University of Maine.

So far Sylvestre finds the turnout of his Web site, which requires a valid student e-mail address to create an account, to be good. He hopes he has created a digital medium that will really help students meet one another. "It's the beginning of something and we'd like to modify it to fit the needs of students," he remarked.

Some students at UMass are finding UMasspersonals.com to be a great way to meet others on campus.

This is the case for sophomore, A.C., a female who wishes to be referred to by her initials. A.C. has managed to meet up with three men from the site to see three different movies, three nights in a row.

"It is a great opportunity for students ... it is a way for you to go out and meet people and go on some free dates," said A.C. with a laugh.

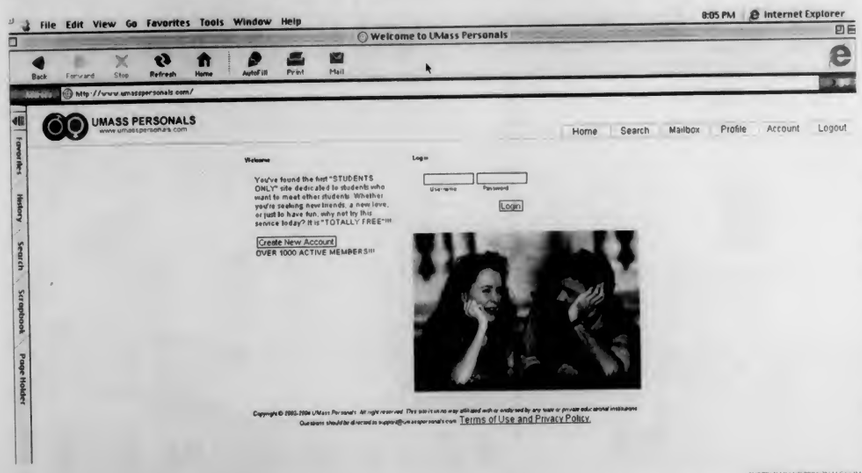
J.T., a male sophomore at the university who also preferred to only be referred to by his initials, had a similar response. "UMasspersonals is a good way to meet people on campus, but would be a lot more effective if more people joined," he said.

J.T.'s statement defines Sylvestre's ambitions for his Web site.

Sylvestre's Web site has about 1,200 users right now, and he hopes that number will increase to 10,000 by the end of May with a huge reformation he will be making on the website on April 15, 2004.

"We have agreed on a new name for the Web site which will allow us to include all schools in New England. The new name will be NE-Collegechat.com," said Sylvestre. "With this new name in mind, we are going to take a turn away from the dating/personals concept. The idea behind NECollegechat will be to provide students with a place to discuss common interests and meet like-minded individuals," he said.

A new feature Sylvestre calls "double matching" will be added onto the site, allowing students to find others who share similar interests and hobbies as they do. To support this, they will be installing their own instant messaging system.



Sylvestre is also putting an advanced filter system, which will help students find others only from the schools they prefer to.

"For example, a UMass student may want Massachusetts schools only or just Boston schools. Another example, a Harvard student may want to meet students from Yale only," Sylvestre said.

Some personal sites charge around $19 a month and Sylvestre feels the pages of these sites are "full of psychos." Since users of UMasspersonals.com are required to show proof that they are actually a student, he said it is a very safe place to find others.

Sylvestre is trying to "provide a quality service," and assures students that if someone is bothering them too much on the system they can block the user. He also keeps track of how many blocks a user gets. If one gets an excessive amount in a short period of time, they get booted off the system.

Students who wish to create a free account should log on to UMasspersonals.com. You never know, the person you have been looking for might just be a few clicks away.

COURTESY UMASSPERSONALS.COM

Created by Marc Sylvestre in 2003, Umasspersonals.com provides students at the University with a non-threatening way to get in contact with their peers. Similar dating sites have been started by Sylvestre at the Universities of Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Vermont and Maine.

Jolie, Hawke expertly cast in predictable flick

COURTESY TAKASHI SEIDA/WARNER BROS.

Ethan Hawke and Angelina Jolie are perfectly cast in the latest suspense thriller from Warner Bros.

By Ryan Aubert
Collegian Staff

A typical requirement for a film categorized in the thriller/suspense genre is a surprising revelation — both to the characters and to the audience. With "Taking Lives" there are numerous twists and turns but the major, intended shocker is so ridiculously predictable that the movie loses its punch.

Based on the Michael Pye novel of the same name, "Taking Lives" is about the search for a serial killer in Montreal who murders his victims and then takes their identity afterwards, essentially living their lives.

Angelina Jolie stars as Federal Bureau of Investigation Agent Illeana Scott, a creepy, yet masterful detective, who is hot on the heels of this killer. Agent Scott sleeps and eats with gruesome pictures of the killer's victims. The strikingly beautiful Jolie is believable as the freaky agent, perhaps because in real life she is a little freaky herself. She displays great acting ability, and adds to the eerie atmosphere.

The serial killer eventually gets sloppy and ends up with a witness (Ethan Hawke) to one of his murders. Hawke, as artist James Costa, plays a quirky man who seems innocent. Costa is a perfect character for Hawke, who can be the "nice guy" and yet simultaneously have that one edgy peculiarity in his personality.

Hawke and Jolie's characters soon fall in love and end up in a serious relationship. This seems to be a match made in heaven since both are tipped towards the weird end of the scale. However, all does not turn out well.

Kiefer Sutherland makes fleeting appearances in the movie, with his screen time being ominous yet enjoyable all the same. Film veteran Gena Rowlands turns up as the serial killer's mother but her character is odd and Rowland's performance makes the audience uneasy.

The movie succeeds in providing some suspenseful moments here and there. Close-up shots of various objects question the validity of certain clues. Some character's motives seem suspicious within the dark quality of the film. There is a constant feeling that something isn't quite right.

The film's pleasingly creepy and scary quality cannot overlook its most glaring flaw. The "big" surprise in the later half of the movie can totally be deciphered within the first hour. Perhaps audiences have become too accustomed to Hollywood suspense films and can tell what is going to happen. Or perhaps the filmmakers could have made a better effort to not make the surprise so obvious. Either way, the impact of the revelation is minimal, and the movie is a letdown.

The great acting of Hawke and Jolie cannot save this movie from predictability, a tragedy for a film operating in a genre that demands unpredictability. By the end, the audience asks itself, "That's it?" Yes, folks — that's all there is and congratulate yourself for figuring out yet another Hollywood ending!

'Taking Lives'
Directed by D. J. Caruso
Starring Angelina Jolie, Ethan Hawke
Warner Brothers
Rated R
103 mins.
Grade C+

KEN REGAN/COURTESY WARNER BROS.

Keifer Sutherland appears briefly in "Taking Lives," giving a standout performance.

Bayside's best comes to Campus Center tonight

'We laughed with him when he espoused the clever pun "a principal in a pal." We cried tears of joy right alongside him when Mrs. B. gave birth to their son in the Bayside elevator. We felt his pain when little brother Rod came in and ruined his class trip to Yosemite. And tonight at 8 p.m., "Saved By the Bell" fans across the Pioneer Valley will get the chance to hear him tell his story.

Dennis Haskins, better known to the world as bumbling principal Mr. Belding, will lecture at the Campus Center Auditorium tonight, discussing his work on "Saved By The Bell" and the ill-fated "Saved By the Bell: The New Class."

The 53-year-old Haskins has been in the acting scene for decades, but it is his work as Principal Richard Belding that has earned him a permanent place on the B-list of celebrities. In his 11 seasons as Mr. Belding, Haskins has been part of a #1 television sitcom cast, and a revolution in entertainment for young adults.

The knowledge he accrued working in the sitcom is vast, and Haskins, according to speakersinternational.com, covers a broad variety of topics in his speeches, including "the importance of education, following your dreams, TV production and getting work in L.A. as an actor."

After retiring from the Bayside legacy, Haskins appeared on a string of prominent television dramas, including "The Practice" and "The West Wing."

Tickets for the lecture are $1

— Meghan Healy

COURTESY MCSWEEN

Dennis Haskins, of "Saved By the Bell Fame," will speak about his time on the the show tonight at 8 p.m.

Young transports concertgoers from Amherst to 'Greendale' thing Young.

NEIL from page 5

When the band returned they did not disappoint. An hour-long encore of Springsteen-like proportion dropped bomb after bomb on the unsuspecting crowd. Beginning with "Don't Cry No Tears," off of the 1975 song cycle "Zuma," the band rattled off seven extended numbers of glorious noise. By this point, Sampedro had ditched the bench for good and stood side by side with Young, exchanging lick for lick.

"Country Home," and "Love and Only Love," were menacing, as was the classic "Powerfinger," a tale of lost innocence that condensed some of "Greendale"'s points into a terse, eight-minute workout. Then there was "Rockin' in the Free World," Young's late 80s stab at the first Bush administration, recycled with a slower, more troubling cadence, and redirected at the current White House.

With its raging guitars and bitter lyrics bouncing off of a giant backdrop of Old Glory, it was hard to imagine that less than a month earlier, Toby Keith was performing his jingoistic "Courtesy of the Red, White and Blue," on the same stage for decidedly different reasons.

In a recent interview, Young confessed that most stations would not touch the material found on the "Greendale" album. Perhaps it is because its sound does not fit neatly enough into their stringent formats, or that much of the album's material seeks to subvert the very basis for their existence.

More likely, it is because Young is now regarded as an aging artist, unable to connect older listeners to his newer material and younger ones with his "classics", which isn't so much unfair as it is unfortunate; Neil Young still has plenty of points to make, and we would all be wise to listen.

Fabulous Gift!
CLINIQUE Bonus is here!
With your Clinique purchase of $19.50 get this 7-piece gift, Free. Quantities are limited. Now thru Sun., April 4th.
Spring Gift
7-piece Gift
• Deluxe-size Rinse-Off Foaming Cleanser
• Dramatically Different Moisturizing Lotion
• New Repairwear Day SPF 15 Intensive Cream
• Lash Curling Mascara—Black
• Soft Pressed Powder Blusher Duo w/Brush
Pink Blush/Chestnut Blush
• Long Last Soft Shine Lipstick—All Heart
• Cosmetics Bag
Cedar Chest
ARTFUL FURNISHINGS · QUALITY LINENS · IMAGINATIVE GIFTS
Thornes Marketplace · 150 Main St., Northampton, MA · 413-584-3860

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888
www.bostonbartender.com

Wiffle Rock
2-5 player teams
Medium pitch speed
MAY 1 & 2 @ TOTMAN FIELD UMASS
WIFFLEBALL TOURNAMENT
$1000 cash
FOR WINNING TEAM
Entry info--
www.wifflerock.com
Hotline 508-429-7093
Rock 102 WAGY Springfield's Classic Rock

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING®
✓ Taught by Working Bartenders
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
Credit Cards Accepted
Learn to bartend in a weekend!
SPECIAL OFFER Only $199 Before April 2nd
Call now! Space is limited!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

MARK J. TERRILL/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tiger Woods lines up his shot on the first green for par during the first round of the Bay Hill Invitational in Orlando, Fla., Thursday. Woods will train with the U.S. Army in preparation for the Masters.

Boot camp for Tiger

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Tiger Woods sometimes adds green to his wardrobe in April, but that usually means a jacket from Augusta National — not fatigues from Fort Bragg.

The day after the Masters, the world's No. 1 golfer will swap his spikes for Army boots.

Instead of retreating to his lavish home in Isleworth, Woods will stay in the barracks at Army Special Forces headquarters and spend a week in military training.

"If I was never introduced to golf, I would be doing something like that," Woods said. "Hopefully, something in the Special Ops arena. It's the physical and mental challenge of it all. We'll see what happens."

No one is more curious than his father, an ex-Green Beret who trained at Fort Bragg, N.C., during the Vietnam War, and then taught his son to take no prisoners on the golf course.

"He's a very independent individual, and he plays an individual sport," Earl Woods told The Associated Press. "Quite frankly, he's not in the business of people telling him what to do. This will be a broadening experience for him."

This is clearly a case where father knows best.

Earl Woods first trained at Fort Bragg in 1963 following a tour in Vietnam, and he was assigned to a Special Forces unit at Fort Bragg before leaving for another tour in 1970.

He did not remember the years he was there, only the schedule he had to keep.

He was up every morning at 5:30 for inspection, where a single thread out of place on the uniform meant push-ups. That was followed by physical training, including a run in boots he had spent the night spit-shining for inspection. Then it was time to change clothes, work all day until dinner at 7:30 p.m., and start over in the morning.

"He'll learn a lot more respect. He'll learn a little bit about dedication," Earl Woods said. "And he'll learn an awful lot about himself, and how he can handle it. He'll come out a lot stronger than he went in."

Why would the world's best golfer, who earns close to $90 million a year, sign up for this working vacation?

Earl Woods only wonders what took him so long.

"He probably wants, in the recesses of his mind, to walk the steps I walked," the father said.

"He was always inquisitive about the training I put him through, the mental-toughness training. He wanted to know where that came from. I equated it to experiences I've had in the military, especially in Special Ops.

"Now, he wants to experience it."

Woods is to arrive at Fort Bragg on April 12, spend four days of training and conclude his week by conducting a junior golf clinic for families at Fort Bragg.

Soldiers will train him in weapons and military tactics before sending him on a mission as part of a Special Forces team. Bragg spokesman Lt. Col. Billy Buckner said. Also in the works is a lesson in skydiving and a tandem jump with the Army's parachute team.

"I don't think they're going to put me through the wringer as what they would do," Woods said. "But hopefully, it will be close."

Besides being the most physically fit among golfers, Woods' mental strength is what separates him from the others.

He has a knack for playing his best under severe pressure, such as winning the Masters in 2001 for an unprecedented fourth consecutive major. His record is 30-2 when he leads going into the final round.

But this mental toughness did not come from any boot camp.

Earl Woods never put his son through sleep deprivation. He did not scream 2 inches from his face. He did not make his son take 5-mile runs before going to kindergarten.

The training came in the form of gamesmanship.

"I tried to break him down mentally," Earl Woods said. "I tried to intimidate him verbally."

NEW THIS WEEK!
BEYOND BORDERS
DIRTY PRETTY THINGS
GOTHIKA
MAGDALENE SISTERS
THE RUNDOWN
SHATTERED GLASS
SINGING DETECTIVE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Excitement. Adventure. Surprise. Thrills.
This ain't your parents travel agency. It's yours.
London.....$316
Paris.....$377
Guatemala.....$429
Air, accommodations & transfers
LONDON
5 nights, Beaver Hotel
From: $714
JAMAICA
Point Village in Negril, twin occup.
From: $782
One stop. No hassles.
We've got everything you need for your next trip.
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
Room 224 Campus Center Way
1 Campus Center Way
University of Massachusetts
(413) 256.1261
STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

Kaplan rebate offer:
Enroll today and get $100 back!
Receive $100 back through Kaplan's Rebate* when you enroll in an LSAT, MCAT, GMAT, GRE, DAT or TOEFL course between March 1st–March 31st.
Call or visit us online for more information or to enroll.
Limited time offer!
KAPLAN 1-800-KAP-TEST kaptest.com/rebate
Test Prep and Admissions
*Test names are registered trademarks of their respective owners. This offer applies only to classroom courses and 15, 25 and 30-hour tutoring programs and cannot be combined with any other offer. To be eligible you must enroll between March 1-March 31, 2004. Certain exclusions apply. See redemption forms for complete details. Redemption forms are available at kaptest.com, Kaplan and at Kaplan centers.

Shaq ready for playoffs

By John Nadel
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — His eyes narrowed and his brow furrowed, Shaquille O'Neal has that look about him these days, the one that tells opponents to get out of his way.

The one that says it's almost playoff time.

The self-proclaimed "MDE" — Most Dominant Ever — is controlling the lane the way he did in leading the Los Angeles Lakers to three NBA championships from 2000-02.

Now O'Neal is looking for the other parts to fall into place for another title run.

"We're winning games, but we're not winning them pretty," he said. "We're still learning each other — we're going to be fine. The last few games, we've had 15-point, 17-point leads and let teams get back in it."

O'Neal put forth one of the most impressive individual performances of the season Sunday night, leading the Lakers to a 104-103 overtime victory over the Milwaukee Bucks.

The Bucks rallied from a 15-point third-quarter deficit and nearly won despite O'Neal's 31 points, NBA season-high 26 rebounds and seven blocked shots in 47 minutes.

The Lakers are as healthy as they've been since winning 20 of their first 25 games before Karl Malone tore a knee ligament that sidelined him for nearly three months.

That began a string of nagging injuries to O'Neal and Kobe Bryant, among others.

While they bring a five-game winning streak into Wednesday night's game against the Sacramento Kings, the Lakers have been winning ugly. And they've been doing so despite having all their key players available except backup forward-center Horace Grant, who they hope will be able to play in the postseason.

The Lakers, 47-23 and in third place in the Western Conference, have put together their latest winning streak against non-playoff teams, with the exception of Milwaukee, which has lost five straight and eight of nine to drop below .500.

And they were extended to the limit in all five games, perhaps an explanation for coach Phil Jackson deciding to give them Monday off rather than get in an extra day of practice to prepare for the Kings.

"We're fighting; we have a lot of fight," O'Neal said. "We can't do this against the more better, experienced teams."

He referred to the Kings (51-19) and the Minnesota Timberwolves (48-22), who visit Friday night, along with the majority of teams the Lakers face before the playoffs begin in mid-April.

Despite their recent struggles and all the other wacky things that have gone on, Jackson believes the Lakers can finish like they did three years ago, when they won eight straight to complete the regular season before going 15-1 in the playoffs.

"I think it's possible," Jackson said. "We're going to have to have that rejuvenation at some point, where you can get that energy shot. It's going to come from Shaq rebounding, defensively. That's where we get our strength as a basketball team is from his turn at the end of the season to a defensive, rebounding player."

O'Neal has averaged 15.6 rebounds in the last eight games to raise his season average to 11.4. He had 27 points, 23 rebounds and five blocks in a 115-110 overtime victory over Orlando on March 15.

Then came Sunday night's effort, when he surpassed the previous single-game high of 25 set by Minnesota's Kevin Garnett in an overtime game at Sacramento in December.

O'Neal fell two rebounds short of his career high, set in 1993 while he was playing for Orlando.

"He was a monster on the boards. It was just a huge night for him," Bryant said.

O'Neal was also a monster offensively, making 14 of 16 shots despite not attempting a shot until the opening minute of the second quarter. He had 10 rebounds by that time.

Hoop hype in Alabama

ALABAMA from page 10

teams seeded 12th — Pacific and Manhattan — each won a game.

There is a bit of hoops history in Alabama, although basketball is generally an afterthought here, with flashes of fan interest sprinkled through the years.

Coach Gene Bartow took UAB — based on an urban campus in Birmingham — as far as the round of eight after leaving UCLA in 1977 to start the Blazers' program. And plaid-wearing Wimp Sanderson led Alabama — which has a quiet, tree-lined campus in Tuscaloosa — to six appearances in the round of 16, just last season. Auburn made it to the round of 16.

But in a state where Alabama has won six Associated Press national football championships and Auburn one, basketball is still that "other" sport.

Crimson Tide coach Mark Gottfried reached the round of 16 three straight times while playing for Sanderson. So, he dismissed the idea that this is the best season ever for basketball in Alabama.

"We've had great teams in our state for a lot of years at Alabama, UAB, Auburn, even South Alabama," he said.

Still, Indoor sports are a tough sell in a state where winter is for hunting, March temperatures can reach 80, and late Alabama football coach Bear Bryant is a gridiron god.

For Dean, a former basketball coach who has spent much of his career talking up his sport in a football state, heaven could be around the corner.

"What I believe has to happen to really promote basketball in Alabama is for one of our teams to get to the Final Four," he said. "Whether Alabama and UAB can both do it, I don't know. But wouldn't it be great?"

Sure, but even the idea takes getting used to in Alabama. Sanderson made that perfectly clear Monday on his daily radio talk show, which he hosts in Birmingham with former Auburn basketball coach Sonny Smith.

"I'm tired of talking about basketball," Sanderson said 40 minutes into the program. "How about NASCAR?"

Where Will You Live This Fall?
Housing Assignment Office : 235 Whitmore : Phone 413-545-2100 : www.housing.umass.edu

Process:	Timeline:
Reserve your same room on SPIRE:	March 22-March 25 & April 2 - April 7, 2004
Displaced Student New Room Selection in Same Hall: For students displaced from their current floor or room due to academic or lifestyle programs.	Tuesday Evening April 13, 2004 > Look for information about time and location posted in your residence hall.
Displaced Student New Room Selection New Hall: For students displaced form their current building due to academic or lifestyle programs.	Thursday, April 15 - Friday, April 23, 2004 > Apply online @ the SPIRE website.
New Room Selection in Same Hall: For all continuing students.	Wednesday Evening April 14, 2004 > Look for information about time and location posted in your residence hall.
Housing Lottery For all current on-campus students wishing to change buildings and students displaced from their building.	*Thursday, April 15 - Friday, April 23, 2004 > Apply online @ the SPIRE website.
Roommate Pull-In: For students with a confirmed vacancy and a mutual roommate request	Tuesday, April 20 - Friday, April 23, 2004 > Come together to the Housing Assignment Office.

*On-campus students who do not participate in the room choosing process by April 23 must apply through the late process and may be assigned temporary housing. Juniors and Seniors who miss the April 23 deadline may not be housed or may be assigned to temporary housing if space becomes available. Visit www.housing.umass.edu for more information regarding late application dates and deadlines.

Stumbling at Garber

LACROSSE from page 10

to add a spark against Albany, but it proved to be too little, too late. Morris took 10 shots against Brown, and connected for one goal, but the Minutemen have clearly been hampered by the absence of Zywicki, their go-to attacker.

Today's game marks the midway point of the UMass season, and with no sure end to Zywicki's stint on the rehab table, the thought of giving him a medical redshirt to retain his services for the full 2005 season is beginning to gain credibility.

"I've discussed it with him," Cannella said. "I'm not sure at this point that's something he wants to do. Certainly we'll revisit it if he can't come back. After this weekend, Sacred Heart's our seventh game, and Hofstra [on Saturday] is our eighth, so would you rather play six, or would you rather play 14 next year? There's financial considerations there, and he's a Canadian citizen. So, we'll revisit that, but if he can come back strong, then we'd like to have him out there."

For now, Cannella wants his team to focus on working with the names that are on the field tomorrow.

"We have to concentrate on who we have right now. [Morris] is back playing, and probably not at 100 percent because of his conditioning, but he gave us a lift the other day, and played a great game for us. Ryan Connolly played a great game the other day, hopefully the other guys around him start feeling it, and everybody plays well at once."

If there's an intangible that's lacking in the Minutemen's arsenal, Cannella said it's confidence.

"Especially on the offensive end," he said. "We haven't shot that well, and maybe there's some guys out there that lack the confidence in themselves to beat somebody and get the ball on the cage. We tell them to keep shooting, keep going hard at the cage. Anytime you lose, it shakes your confidence, especially in our sport."

AMELIA LINCK/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Pat Larmon (8) turns away from Hartford's Tim Chisholm during the Minutemen's 13-7 win over the Hawks at Garber Field on March 2.

Zimmer leads 'Cuse past UM

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

An All-American is an All-American.

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team learned this simple truth the hard way, when it watched a shot by Leigh-Ann Zimmer of Syracuse sail past UMass goalkeeper Joey Rubin with five seconds left in regulation, lifting the Orangewomen to a 12-11 win over UMass on March 19 at the Carrier Dome.

Zimmer, a Division I North Region first-team All-American, led the ninth-ranked Orangewomen (2-2) past UMass (1-4) with her fourth goal of the game. Combined with her two assists, Zimmer is seven points shy of the all-time Syracuse scoring record.

UMass	11
Syracuse	12

The Minutewomen entered the game 0-6 all-time against Syracuse, and had it not been for two SU goals in the final 36 seconds of the game, the losing streak may have ended.

After falling behind 4-0 to start the game, Massachusetts made a valiant effort to rebound from a 7-4 halftime deficit, scoring six unanswered goals to start the second frame.

Junior captain Maura McGarrity initiated the second half flurry with an unassisted goal at 18:31. Thirty-nine seconds later, fellow tri-captain Tracey Drown put home a pass from senior attacker Hope Zelinger. The trio shouldered the Massachusetts effort, with Zelinger and McGarrity combining for all UMass points in the first half, and Drown adding three goals in the second.

"We really put it together in the second half, Maura had a great game and she wasn't even supposed to play," coach Carrie Bolduc said. "She hadn't played since going down in the Hofstra game with a high ankle sprain, but she practiced on Thursday and felt ready."

UMass concluded the 6-0 run with back-to-back goals coming from Drown, one of which was assisted by sophomore midfielder Keri Connerty. Connerty then netted a goal of her own, at 9:45. The UMass onslaught ate up 19:28, and left the Maroon and White with a 10-7 lead with time winding down.

The final minutes concluded in nail biting fashion, as Zimmer scored at 51:21 and junior Monica Joines of Syracuse capped off a hat-trick 2:55 later. After watching its lead shrink to a single goal, UMass extended its edge back to two on a McGarrity goal at 55:06.

Unfortunately for UMass, there was no answer for Zimmer, who scored 1:30 after McGarrity, narrowing the gap to 11-10. With 36 seconds left to go, senior Cristine Duran of Syracuse scored her first goal of the season. Stephanie Walker won the ensuing faceoff for Syracuse and passed the ball up to Zimmer with 10 seconds remaining. At 59:55, Zimmer's bounce shot struck nylon, smashing the Massachusetts hope for an upset.

Rubin tallied 11 saves in her second game between the pipes for UMass, while her counterpart from Syracuse, Jennifer Kasel, made nine.

"[Rubin] is doing a good job, she's poised and calm under pressure," Bolduc said. "The most important thing has been that our defense is jelling well with her, which is key to the team's chemistry."

UMass came in off a 10-day layoff, after the postponement of March 17's game against Albany.

Three strikes for Tennis

By Tim Ryan
Collegian Correspondent

For the Massachusetts tennis team, spring break was anything but.

The Minutewomen (5-10, 2-0 Atlantic 10) went on a three-game road trip to the spring break hot spot with hopes of bringing their record above .500. This hope proved to be out of reach for the squad. They went 0-for-3 against their southern competition.

The Minutewomen started their trip with a 7-0 loss to the Lady Owls of Florida Atlantic University on March 15. FAU easily took care of the Minutewomen with a sweep in doubles to start the match. Then the Lady Owls followed it up by winning the first three singles matches. After the third singles match was won by FAU, the rest of the matches were stopped, and the Lady Owls were given the 7-0 clean sweep.

The UMass squad tried to rebound against 12th-seeded Barry University last Tuesday, but the Buccaneers were too much to handle. Barry began the meet winning two of the three doubles matches, and earning the doubles point. The UMass win came from freshman Christine Liehr (Stuttgart, Germany) and sophomore Jana Bartoloni (Charlestown, Massachusetts) due to forfeit. In singles, Junior co-captain Sasha Edelstein took the No. 3 match because of a mid-match injury to her opponent. Senior co-captain Susan Hyams also won by default in the No. 6 match. The rest of the matches went in favor of the powerful Buccaneers, giving them the 5-2 victory.

The final stop on the road trip was at Lynn University on Wednesday, where the Florida team once again prevailed. In the loss, Susan Hyams was the highlight for the Minutewomen. Hyams, with partner Sasha Edelstein, won the No. 3 doubles match 8-3. She then went on to defeat Monse Palacios at No. 6 singles. Her efforts were not enough to surpass the strong Lynn University team, though. The Lynn team dominated play from here, giving them the 7-2 win in the meet.

The young UMass squad will have an extended break to recoup from the loss. Next up is Rhode Island in Kingston, RI on March 31.

Sulick and Busa star for UMass

SOFTBALL from page 10

Sophomore Lesley Ferrara followed suit, ripping one down the left field line. Senior Nicole Wilson pinch ran for Ferrara and immediately stole second to move the go-ahead run into scoring position. Sulick then followed with a single up the middle. FIU centerfield Jacque Vetters mishandled the hit, letting Wilson and Cahalan cross the plate to give UMass a 4-3 lead. Busa retired Florida International in their final at-bat to claim the title.

"She barely missed a homerun in the Virginia Tech game and didn't receive much credit in the win, but she came up real big in the FIU win," said Sortino of Sulick. "We put Jaime [Cahalan] in motion and Sulick just smashed it."

The Golden Panthers had previously beat UMass twice this season, including a 2-1 victory on March 13. With the Minutewomen clinging to a 1-0 lead, FIU third baseman Jennifer Owens doubled to left center before being thrown out at third by UMass centerfielder Aisha Franke. The damage had already been done as two crossed the plate.

Arnold suffered a combination of tough competition, as Sortino has called this "her toughest schedule," and didn't get much run support. Arnold lost two 2-1 decisions at the Blue and Gold, the first to Virginia Tech on Mar. 12, and then to FIU on Mar. 13.

After the low scoring output against the Hokies, sophomore K.J. Kelley kick-started the offense with her fifth homer this season, a deep solo shot to center. UMass never looked back, racking up nine runs on 11 hits against Miami-Ohio in a 9-2 win and finished the day with a 1-1 split.

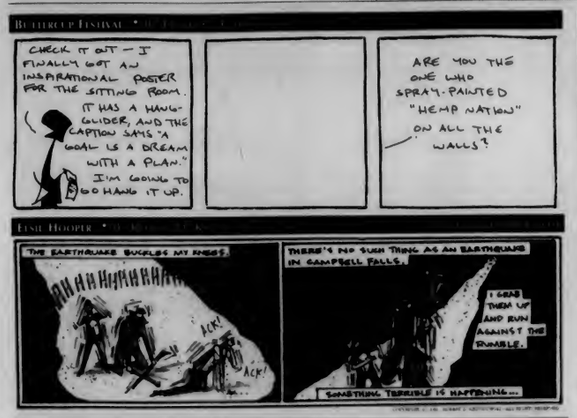
19th Annual MATHEMATICS COMPETITION

March 31, 2004 @ 7:15 in rooms 101-103 LGRT

Corporate Sponsers:
Microsoft Research
Nukove Scientific Consulting
Solutions by Computer
State Street Global Advisors

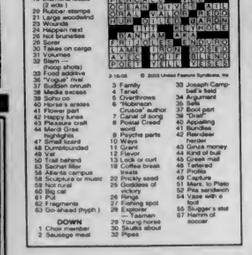
Individual Sponsors:
James Francis '86
Roy Perdue '73

FIRST PRIZE=$1600 cash
SECOND PRIZE=$1000 cash
THIRD PRIZE=$400 cash



2004

• Sign up in room 1623-D LGRT by noon March 31 and bring ID to competition
• The competion is open to all freshmen and sophomore degree students on the Amherst Campus
• Continuing education students and students who are closely related to members of the Math/Stat department are not eligible
• For additional information and sample problems go to www.math.umass.edu



Pubs in London. Clubs in Spain. Sleep it off on the train.
This ain't your parents travel agency. it's yours

London.....$316
Paris.....$377
Guatemala.....$429
Air, accommodations & transfers
LONDON
5 nights, Beaver Hotel
From: $714
JAMAICA
Point Village in Negril, twin occup.
From: $782
One stop. No hassles.
We've got everything you need for your next trip
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
Room 224 Campus Center Way
1 Campus Center Way
University of Massachusetts
(413) 256.1261
STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> OR IN PERSON >> OR SAIL AWAY

SUPPORT YOUR CAMPUS DESIGN & COPY
earthfoods
Scarlet's and more
GREENO SUB SHOP
CYCLE SURGERY BIKE
STUDENT RUN BUSINESSES!

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

THE HARP Irish Pub

413-548-6900 | www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
March Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"start your own tradition"

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- BBQ Pulled Pork Sandwich
- Chicken Pesto Pasta with Walnuts
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
- Parmesan Chicken
- Blackened Catfish
- Harvest Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 43
- Low: 26

WEDNESDAY
- High: 51
- Low: 33

THURSDAY
- High: 55
- Low: 41

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andy Tamulynas
COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Glen Straub/ Nikolas P. Markantonatos

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Watch "Lingo" on Game Show Network. It's not your average word game.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Being organized is the easiest way to stay on top of your homework.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Worms are gross and squirmy. Don't be a worm.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Be forever young even as you get old.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You're rocking that new haircut of yours.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Drink more. You've been neglecting the bottle lately.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will soon be forced to choose between money and happiness.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
The time is right to take that leap and take a risk!

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Jump on top of your desk and get crazy. You're much too stressed.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't waste your time playing video games. You have to worry about grades.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
It's amazing how small the world really is.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Work hard for the next few years. You don't have time to slack off.

Quote for the Day

"And I'm gone, I know right where I'm goin
Sorry momma I'm grown, I must travel alone
Ain't gonna follow the footsteps I'm making my own
Only way that I know how to escape from this 8 Mile Road"

-Eminem

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

N. Amherst, 1 Bedrm, 1 1/2 mi. UMass Deck, $625, Pets OK. Hdwd floors Avlb. 4/1 maybe sooner. 549-2062

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Nissan Sentra 87,000 miles manual. Very good condition $900.00 549-3752

EMPLOYMENT

University Bartending Classes start soon!!! Call for information 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com

Summer Fun at Life-Tech Ventures live-in counselors and instructors at Presidential Summer Camp in Charlton, MA Available to anyone who honestly likes being with children Call 800-433-8375 naturesclassroom.org

Local Business is hiring marketers Part Time $10-15/hr Call Alison @413-627-9043

EMPLOYMENT

Get hands-on legal experience with a legal assistant internship this fall. Work directly with attorneys and clients and earn 9 to 15 credits. No experience required. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office for an application, due 4/2. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Two job opportunities on Nantucker Island beginning in May. Office assistants with decent typing, computer and telephone skills. Some errand running. Salary + housing. Tele. 508-228-3942 or send resume to PO Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 or fax resume to 508-228-8778

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

FOR SALE

Like New: 4 Edge, crome rims 18" 5 Lug nuts, 4 Ventus HR11, Low-Pro tires- Asking $1100 Tom 413-527-2886

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst. PhilosophyDialogues.net

SUMMER SUBLET

1 bedroom Brandywine apartment starting June 1. $755/month negotiable – includes heat, water, cooking gas. Spacious, quiet with balcony and parking. 549-9489

TRAVEL

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED; Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.roberttuchobes4.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 23, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Busa hurls no-no at Blue & Gold

First UM no-hitter since '03

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

Jenna Busa's first career no-hitter came at the appropriate time during the Blue and Gold Coca Cola Classic in Miami, Fla.

The sophomore hurler's no-hitter against Virginia Tech on March 13 advanced the Massachusetts softball team to the tournament championship on March 14. Busa combined with junior Kelli Arnold to beat host-team Florida International in a 4-3 come-from-behind win to capture the Blue and Gold title for the second time in three years.

After already losing to Virginia Tech the day before, Busa managed to strike out four, and her only blemish on the day was a walk. Busa's no-hitter was the 59th in UMass history and first since current UMass assistant Kaila Holtz's threw a perfect game against George Washington on May 4, 2003.

The milestone was not the only notable achievement by Busa on the weekend. The Lexington native tallied three wins including one in relief for the title and a 143-pitch victory against Miami-Ohio on March 12. Her performance was strong enough to earn her the Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week award.

"If they take just each trip at time, they start get better with experience," UMass head coach Elaine Sortino said. "[The pitching staff] just need some time to figure things out and get some game experience. [Arnold, Busa and junior Barbara LaFogg] are all starting to get it and that's simply from experience. Hopefully, our pitching staff will be great come April."

The Minutewomen were down by one in the top of the seventh during the championship when junior Pam Sulick had the biggest hit of her collegiate career, in just her third career start.

Senior catcher Jamie Cahalan ripped the first pitch to left, then advanced to second on a wild pitch.

See SOFTBALL on page 8

Sweet hoops, Alabama

Alabama's Evan Brock, left, exults after Alabama's 70-67 upset win over Stanford in the second round of the NCAA tournament in Seattle on Saturday. At right, with tears in his eyes, Alabama-Birmingham's Mo Finley is hugged by teammate Tony Johnson after UAB defeated Kentucky 76-75 in Columbus, Ohio, Sunday.

Tide, UAB upsets giving football state new passion

By Jay Reeves
Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Ah, it's March in Alabama: Time for spring football practice, right? Well, the tide is turning in this state, with two of its college basketball teams — Alabama and Alabama-Birmingham — providing the biggest upsets of the NCAA tournament, knocking off No. 1-seeded Stanford and Kentucky.

Nevada and Xavier among others, also have given the NCAAs a jolt by beating favored teams. But it's in the self-proclaimed "Football Capital of the South" where the success of two schools on the hardwood has fans glancing away from the gridiron.

"It's so enjoyable to pick up The Birmingham News and see basketball on the front page," said Joe Dean Jr., athletic director at Birmingham-Southern College and son of the former Louisiana State basketball great.

Alabama and Auburn drew a total of about 65,000 fans to their spring football games Saturday, when hoops fans around the rest of the country were tuning in to second-round NCAA action.

Eighth-seeded Alabama stunned Stanford 70-67 in Seattle that day, and ninth-seeded UAB shocked Kentucky 76-75 in Columbus, Ohio, on Sunday. Suddenly, basketball was big in 'Bama.

So much so, that some even dared to dream of a UAB-Alabama matchup for the national championship on April 5th in San Antonio.

"If we won against Alabama, that would really put them to shame," Blazers fan Renita Strickland said Monday while shopping for UAB T-shirts and sweat shirts for friends in New York.

First things first, though. Alabama plays defending national champion Syracuse in Phoenix on Thursday, and UAB meets Kansas in St. Louis on Friday.

"I may be dreaming," UAB coach Mike Anderson said, "but I'm going to keep dreaming."

The Crimson Tide will be trying to get to the NCAA tournament's round of eight for the first time; UAB reached that stage once.

Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim said the victories by Alabama and UAB — about 90 miles apart in adjoining counties — weren't flukes.

"This tournament is wide open," Boeheim said. Alabama and UAB aren't the only surprises so far. Tenth-seeded Nevada beat No. 7 Michigan State and No. 2 Gonzaga, while No. 7 Xavier eliminated No. 2 Mississippi State to reach the third round. Also, two

See ALABAMA on page 7

Struggling foes meet

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The Sacred Heart men's lacrosse team hasn't won a game in 2004. The Pioneers have taken two teams into overtime, including a 13-12 double-overtime loss to Butler on March 13, but that's as close as they've come to their victory in their first five games.

While Massachusetts (2-4) isn't in quite the same boat, the Minutemen might share some of the same frustration as the team they'll host today (Garber Field, 3 p.m.). UMass is winless since March 6, when their last victory came against Stony Brook. Since then, the Minutemen have lost a close game (11-10 to Albany last Tuesday), and a drubbing (10-5 to Brown on Saturday), as well as an 11-7 loss to Harvard on March 13.

The Brown defeat, played at Harvard's Jordan Field due to snow accumulation at Brown Stadium and the Bears' alternate facility, Stevenson Field, was particularly disappointing, but served to reinforce the mantra that UMass coach Greg Cannella has repeated all season long: anyone on the Minutemen's schedule can beat them.

Brown's Charles Towers provided almost all the offense the Bears needed, scoring as many goals in the game as the entire Minutemen team combined. Ryan Connolly was the only Minuteman to score multiple goals (two), and junior Bill Schell made 11 saves. The Minutemen started off on a 2-0 lead, but the Bears scored five unanswered goals, and finished off with three more unanswered tallies to hand the Minutemen their third straight defeat.

Today, they'll play a team that hasn't won a game since April 26, 2003, and while the Minutemen have struggled of late, especially on offense, Cannella said the team still gets the message.

"The guys are working hard, the guys are preparing themselves the right way, we just haven't been able to put it together yet, unfortunately," he said. "Especially in the last three games. Hopefully tomorrow's a step in the right direction."

As for what the Minutemen are lacking, there are a few key components. One is personnel. UMass has been without the services of 2003's top scorer, senior Jeff Zywicki, since the first game of the season. In addition, sophomore midfielder Sean Morris was out of action for the first four games, before coming in

See LACROSSE on page 8

Senior Kevin Glenz fires a pass during the Minutemen's 13-7 win over Hartford on March 2.

Law's greed isn't worth superstar's greatness

Ty Law is an outstanding football player. Ty Law is arguably the best cornerback in the NFL. Ty Law has played an integral role in both of the Patriots Super Bowl wins.

Ty Law needs to keep his mouth shut.

Law is probably the best player on the Patriots. Sure, Tom Brady is the most important, but Law is a far better defensive back than Brady is a quarterback. Law has been a Patriot for nine years and has served the team that drafted him well in that time. Law has been one of the flashier Patriots in his time, with his orchestrated touchdown and interception celebrations, but he has never been one to cause problems within the team. That has all changed now.

Dan Duggan

Law has been doing interviews with any and every reporter willing to listen to him in the past week. He has made it his personal mission in these interviews to convey his feeling that Bill Bellichick is a liar. Law accuses Belichick of lying about just about anything one can imagine; including his own contract, the contracts of others, and even says Belichick was hoping he didn't perform as well as he did last year so he could be released after the season.

In the interviews, Law cited the number of other players Bellchick signed to long-term deals only to restructure their contracts or release them when their cap numbers got too high. These are valid points, but Law's biggest problem is that he is letting his mouth run too much, and the only sound bites anyone will remember is that he flat out called Belichick a liar.

Regardless of the validity of his arguments, most Patriots fans will consider Law greedy and side with Belichick, the mastermind of the Pats two championships. Law is not going to win many supporters in New England for taking on the man that is the most respected coach/talent evaluator in Boston since Red Auerbach.

Law knows that his contract will take up too much of the salary cap in the next two seasons ($7.15 million this year and $9.75 million next) and wanted to work out a restructured extension. Belichick also wanted to restructure and extend Law's deal. The problem lies in one area: money. Not the first dispute in professional sports based on the green stuff, and certainly not the last. Now Law is saying that he can never see himself playing for the Pats again.

Law's main handicap is that he does not have much leverage. He understands that his value has never been higher after finishing the best season of his career. His only chance is to make the fans buy his contention that Belichick is a liar and that he is being treated unfairly. The pressure from the fans would most likely force Belichick to do one of two things: he could either meet Law's contract demands or release the All-Pro now and have him sign somewhere else.

The problem for Law is that Pats fans saw what happened last year with the Lawyer Milloy situation. Belichick released a veteran leader who many considered to be irreplaceable because he refused to take a pay cut. The result: the Pats went on to have one of the greatest seasons in NFL history and Milloy spent January counting his money at home. Fans have seen Belichick and Scott Pioli, vice president of player personnel, make so many shrewd roster moves that it seems they are never wrong.

So if they decide not to meet Law's demands, the majority of Patriots Nation will support their decision. Law has come off looking like the typical money-driven professional athlete. During the season he said all the right things about his looming contract issues. He said all that mattered was winning and he wasn't concerned with the contract. Now that it's the off-season, Law's focus has clearly shifted. Now it's all about making more money than he could ever spend in a lifetime.

Although Law's case against the organization has some major flaws, he has made public some issues that could become a problem down the road. The organization has made a habit of cutting high salary players (Milloy, Drew Bledsoe) and restructuring the contracts of veterans (Ted Johnson) and so far things have worked out, but it should be noted that everyone is happy when they are winning. The real problems come when you hit a bump in the road. If you haven't been loyal to your employees, you can't expect them to be faithful to you when things go south.

But this individual case appears to be one that Law cannot win. He has stressed that it's "not about the money" and he doesn't want to be perceived as greedy, but it's a hard sell. If it isn't about the money, then what exactly is his problem? The Patriots are already considered favorites to repeat as champs next year as they have almost their entire roster returning, a stacked draft, and Roosevelt Colvin back in the fold, and this guy wants no part of it? Sorry Ty, but it seems that this is only about the money.

There is no easy solution to this mess, and Law may have said too much for a peaceful resolution to be reached. But if somehow cooler heads prevail the final decision should be for both sides to honor the contract they signed. Law is signed for two more years, and he should play his best for the organization. The Patriots should bite the bullet and pay him the huge amount he is owed, because they signed him to the deal and his performance has not merited a pay cut. This dispute comes down to a very simple principle: if you sign a contract, you should honor it.

Dan Duggan is a Collegian columnist.

Horror films dominate weekend box office
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 6

Minutemen Mauldin, Pöck and Kuiper all join NHL teams
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 104

New ballots for voters

SGA presidential election set for today

AMELIA F. LINE/COLLEGIAN

Doug Amy, expert on porportional representation, speaks on the use of Instant Run-off Voting. Amy is a professor of politics at Mount Holyoke College.

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Staff

Today at the polls, University of Massachusetts students will use a new ballot to cast their vote for next year's Student Government Association president and student trustee.

Steven Hoeschele, chancellor of elections, is initiating the first use of Instant Run-off Voting (IRV) at UMass.

"It's a big picture kind of thing," Hoeschele said.

The new ballot is simple for voters. It asks for the electorate to rank their candidates first, second, and so on.

"It's as simple as that — one, two, three," said Peter Vickery to a small audience at UMass last night. Vickery, a native of Wales now residing in Amherst, is the president of Fair Vote Mass, an organization dedicated to using IRV in Massachusetts.

Because of the controversy surrounding the use of the IRV in the Student Government, Hoeschele asked Vickery and Doug Amy, a professor of politics at Mount Holyoke College, to explain the importance of voting reform.

"IRV is designed to cure the wasted vote," Vickery said. He explained that because voters may rank their candidate choice in their vote, more voters have a higher probability of having a candidate represent them.

An IRV ballot works in this way — a voter ranks the candidates by preference. When the ballot is counted, all the first choice votes are counted first. If no one candidate achieves a majority, then the candidate with the lowest amount of first choice votes is taken away. Those eliminated ballots' second choices are then counted as first choice votes and the totals are recalculated. This process continues until a candidate gets the majority.

"People tend to vote out of fear than hope," Vickery said. "This will encourage people to vote their consciences."

Vickery used the 2000 National Presidential elections as an example. He explained that many democrats complained that Green Party candidate Ralph Nader took away votes from the Democrats, allowing the Republicans to win. If IRV was used, voters could have still voted for Nader, but their second-choice candidate might have been Gore, allowing the Democrats to win.

Vickery also explained that in the United States, IRV is used in Utah, Louisiana, the city of San Francisco, and for town meetings in Vermont.

Many UMass Student Government officials are concerned that the use of IRV is unconstitutional, violating the clause that says if no candidate achieves a majority, then a plurality will allow the candidate to win. The IRV prevents a plurality from occurring by allowing voters to make more than one choice with one vote.

The SGA Judiciary, which issued a stoppage, against the use of IRV, has called back the injunction, but is planning a hearing on March 30 to determine if IRV works within the SGA Constitution.

If the Judiciary determines that IRV is unconstitutional, then the elections will be thrown out. The Speaker of the Senate would become interim president on April 1, when the current term ends, until a new election could be held.

However, both Hoeschele and Vickery are confidant that IRV is constitutional. Vickery explained that the plurality section of the law only comes into affect if a majority does not occur. IRV allows for a majority winner, never getting to the plurality clause.

"The only difficult part is the tabulation," Vickery said. "But, the voters don't have to worry about it."

Hoeschele does not expect to have the election results until early Friday

See SGA on page 2

Wilson may become new UMass President

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

Dr. Jack M. Wilson, interim University of Massachusetts president, may be recommended as William M. Bulger's replacement during today's search committee meeting, reported by the Associated Press, although sources are conflicting.

A source close to the search committee, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, told the AP that the search committee, which will meet at the Omni Parker House hotel in Boston, will recommend Wilson as the new president to the board of trustees. The board is expected to vote on the recommendation later today.

Only yesterday it was reported that the 24-member committee may have settled on two final candidates, Wilson and Alan D. Solomont, a Democratic fundraiser and former University trustee.

Brian O'Connor, a UMass-Amherst professor and a member of the search committee, told The Massachusetts Daily Collegian yesterday that Wilson and Solomont were not the only final candidates.

"I can verify that those are two names, I'm not prepared to say that they are the only two candidates, because they are not," he said. "We are meeting later this week, whether we are in a position to forward those names to the trustees, I'm not sure," O'Connor said that the recent article in the Boston Globe, reporting Wilson and Solomont as the final candidates, made it seem as though the decision was a done conclusion.

"My feeling is yes, we are going to meet, and we could possibly meet some more," he said. " I'm not prepared to make a decision at this point, that doesn't mean that I won't be after the next meeting."

Trustees were scheduled to meet next week, but decided instead to meet today, as reported by the AP. According to the AP's source, Wilson edged out Solomont with his exceptional academic background and proven ability to work with state politicians.

"An acting president could've just sat there and made sure the place didn't burn down," O'Connor told the AP. "But he's made excellent contacts with the governor and legislators. And he can sit down and talk to a faculty member as well as a CEO. He's pretty close to being a perfect president."

Wilson, previously the vice president for academic affairs of UMass, has served as interim president for the past semester. Dr. Wilson is the founding chief executive officer of UMassOnline; the University's web-based learning initiative.

Wilson came to UMass after 11 years at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute (RPI), where he was the J. Erik Jonsson '22 distinguished professor of physics, engineering science, information technology, and management. He also served as a dean and interim provost at RPI. In addition, he was the founding director of the Anderson Center for Innovation in Undergraduate Education and co-director of the Severino Center for Technological Entrepreneurship at RPI. Trustee Diane Bissonnette Moes, co-chair of the committee, recommended Wilson to the board back in September. Robert Connolly, a University spokesman for the search committee, told The Collegian in January that the plan is to name a president by the first quarter of the year, and to have the new president in office by July 1.

Connolly was unavailable for comment at press time.

University of Massachusetts interim president Jack Wilson is seen during an interview in at the UMass offices in Boston.

Israelies threaten Hamas

Arafat could be militant group's next assasination target

LEFTERIS PITARAKIS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israeli Arabs carry an empty coffin during a mock funeral procession demonstrating against the killing of Hamas group leader Sheikh Ahmed Yassin, Monday.

By Ibrahim Barzak
Associated Press

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — Israel threatened to kill the entire leadership of the Islamic militant group Hamas after assassinating its founder and hinted yesterday that Yasser Arafat could wind up on the hit list in the future.

The accelerated strikes at Hamas are part of an attempt to score a decisive victory ahead of an Israeli withdrawal from the Gaza Strip. Israel does not want to be seen as being driven out of the strip by militants, who already are claiming victory.

The tough talk came on the same day Hamas hard-liner Abdel Aziz Rantisi was elected as the new leader of the Islamic militant group in Gaza. The 54-year-old pediatrician replaces Sheik Ahmed Yassin, who was killed in an Israeli airstrike early Monday.

Israeli gunboats fired machine guns toward Gaza's coast late Tuesday, witnesses said. There were no reports of damage or casualties, and the Israeli military had no immediate comment. Palestinians said the gunboats were firing at Palestinian fishing boats and piers.

Rantisi, who has pushed for accelerating attacks on Israel and rules out all compromise, told tens of thousands of cheering Hamas supporters at a soccer stadium that he was chosen in secret elections. One by one, senior Hamas officials got up and swore loyalty to him.

In his acceptance speech, Rantisi made his priorities clear. "My people, we must unify under the umbrella of resistance," he

See ISRAEL on page 2

Fair showcases regional schools' science talents

By Matt Elder
Collegian Staff

The Student Union Ballroom was filled with activity yesterday as both middle and high school students showcased their science projects at the Regional Science Fair.

Hundreds of people came in and out throughout the day to enjoy the projects made by the students, who were competing to go on to the state science fair at the end of April.

"It's been going on here for over 20 years," said Gordon Wyse, the assistant dean at the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics.

The science fair is held for students in western Massachusetts, and the top 40 finishers in each group will be eligible to move on to the state science fair at Massachusetts Institute of Technology on April 30.

Students who do well at MIT can then go on to the International Science Fair in Portland, Ore. on June 5.

There were more than 50 judges including graduate students and professors from UMass, as well as other colleges and groups from across western Massachusetts. The judges went from exhibit to exhibit, grading the students on five different categories.

"They are scored on the theory of their project among other things," Wyse said. The group had 133 entrants.

The exhibit that got the most attention was Lanay Tierney, a senior at Springfield High School of Science and Technology. Her project was a bipedal design that walked when a lever was pressed. She said that she called it the duck.

"I tried to create a machine that walks with unconventional materials," Tierney said.

Those unconventional materials included an eggbeater, electrical screwdrivers and PCV pipe, which was a pop-

See SCIENCE on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
CAMPUS/TOWN EDITOR Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
CLARK'S EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Sulnaker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADMITTING Marty Pappas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Mark Lagatic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADMITTING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kiggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FINANCED AND RELATING TO ADVERTISING AVAILABLE THEREIN. SINCE THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALGIE LEE AND THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1967, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1968 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1970. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1987. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN RECOGNIZED SINCE JANUARY 1984 FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, ALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
MDC DESIGN

Weekly Calendar of events

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

March 29 - February 3 2004

Today

Amherst College — At 3 p.m., Artist and Musician Chief Muraina Oyelami will drum at the Mead Art Museum, accompanied by local percussionists Joseph Platz and Andrew Kaknes. The performance is part of the "Cloth Only Wears to Shreds: Textiles and Photographs from the Beier Collection," an exhibition at the Mead Art Museum through May 16. He will also perform at 4:30 p.m. on Friday, and 3 p.m. on Saturday.

UMass — Mike Pincombe, from the University of Newcastle, will speak on "Satire and the Sacred" in "A Mirror for Magistrates: New Light on a Tudor Classic" at 4 p.m. in The Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies located at 650 East Pleasant Street in Amherst.

UMass — There will be a celebration of the release of the book "Pinned Down by Pronouns," edited by Toni Amato, at 7:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union. There will performances by local contributors and students.

Tomorrow

UMass — Eugene Hill, of Mount Holyoke College, will give a lecture entitled, " Some Miltonic Turns: A Lecture on Paradise Lost" at 4:30 p.m. at The Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies. The center is located at 650 East Pleasant Street in Amherst.

Smith College — Ellen Jacobs of Milliken University will speak on "The Lot of Gifted Ladies is Hard: Harriet Taylor Mill and the History of Philosophy" at 5:30 p.m. in the Dewey Common Room.

Mount Holyoke — At 6 p.m., Reverend Bert Marshall will share The Gospel according to Mark from beginning to end by memory at Abbey Chapel. There will be a light dinner in the Narthex and the program in the Interfaith Sanctuary.

UMass — The Newman Catholic Center will have a discussion on Mel Gibson's film, "The Passion of Christ" at 8 p.m. People of all faiths are welcome to come and share their ideas. The Newman Center is located at 472 N. Pleasant Street.

Smith College — The Cloud Dance Troupe from Taiwan will perform a program of Chinese folk dance in the Sweeney Concert Hall of Sage at 8 p.m. Admission is free.

Friday 26

Smith College — Vermont Congressman Bernie Sanders will deliver the keynote address of the Smith Democrat's conference at 4 p.m. in the Carroll Room of Campus Center. A tea reception will follow the speech.

Amherst College — Dr. Phuntsog Wangmo will teach an "Introduction to Tibetan Medicine" workshop from 6:00 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. in Webster 127. This workshop will also meet on March 27 and 28 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and from 2:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. The fee for the workshop is $15 per session for students; $30 in general or $75 for the full weekend for students; $150 general. Sign-up in advance by calling 369-4928.

Smith College — The Miro Quartet with cellist Matt Haimovitz will perform at 8 p.m. in Sweeney Concert Hall in Sage. The concert will include the piece Schubert's "Two Cello Quintet in C Major". Call the Music in Deerfield at 413-625-9511 for information regarding ticket prices and reservations.

Saturday 27

UMass — The Annual Perspectives in Children's Literature Conference will be held in the Isenberg School of Management from 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The conference will feature writers, illustrators and editors of children's literature featuring Jerry Pinkney and Jacqueline Woodson as keynote speakers. Registration is $60 for students, $65 general and registration forms are available at www.umass.edu/childlit.

UMass — Ron W. Iue, Ph.D will run the workshop "Cultivating the Wisdom of Our Intuitive Minds", based on his work with the Dalai Lama and experience as a mentor, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at Hadley Farm house at 11 North Maple Street. He will discuss ways we teach, learn and live our lives to include not just the cognitive, but the intuitive, emotional and spiritual aspects of intelligence. Registration is $220 and some student scholarships maybe available. For information call Phyllis Robinson at 413-659-3081.

Sunday 28

Hampshire College — From 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., the Lemelson Assistive Technology Development Center sponsors a one-day Blacksmithing Meet, "Artistry in Iron: Annual Blacksmithing Conference", in the Lemelson Center for Design. The keynote speaker will be Susan Madacsi, an accomplished blacksmith whose work ranges from sculpture to architectural decoration.

Monday 29

Amherst College — Poet Laureate Louise Gluck, author of "Wild Iris and The Seven Ages", will read from her own poetry as part of "A little Madness in the Spring: Celebrating History and Poetry at the Emily Dickinson Museum" at 4p.m. in Johnson Chapel.

Hampshire College — The planning meeting for the annual conference, "From Abortion Rights to Social Justice: Building the Movement for Reproductive Freedom" will be held from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. in Franklin Patterson Hall. The conference will be held from April 2 to 4. Dinner will be served with vegan-friendly options.

Tuesday 30

Amherst College — Anthony D. Romber, American Civil Liberties Union director will speak at 8 p.m. in the Cole Assembly Room of Converse Hall. Romero is the first Latino and openly gay man to lead the ACLU organization.

Hampshire College —Francis Bok, author of "Escape from Slavery," will present a lecture on Modern-day slavery in Sudan as part of the symposium, "Liberated Voices: Looking Beyond the Chains of Oppression" in Franklin Patterson Hall From 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. A book signing will follow the lecture and discussion.

Mount Holyoke College — Gilberto Flores, a community development activist from Honduras, will speak on "Globalization and the Honduran Struggle" at 6 p.m. in Hooker Auditorium of the Clapp Laboratory.

UMass — The Newman Catholic Center will host a "Lenten Prayer Service and Confession", a prayer service telling the story of the last days of Jesus, with the opportunity for the Sacrament of Reconciliation afterwards at 7 p.m.

News Meetings Mondays at 6 p.m.

Chancellor hopes to create IRV friendly voters morning. Students may call the Student Government Association office at 545-0341 for the results.

SGA from page 1

Hoeschele first heard about IRV in a class he took. He got involved with Fair Vote Mass and hopes most to get the message out about IRV's possibilities.

"If it happens at UMass, then that means a whole cohort of students will graduate without being scared of change to the voting process," Vickery said.

On a statewide level, Vickery said that there are currently two motions in the House of Representatives in Boston, which ask for IRV to be used for the six statewide positions, such as Governor, and in the primaries.

"It works for the executive," Vickery said. "It is fairer because it takes us back to a majority vote."

However, Vickery does not recommend the system for voting for the legislative branch.

Doug Amy, professor of politics at Mount Holyoke College, advocates for the use of proportional representation (PR). He has a plan that would completely overhaul the current system in Massachusetts.

Currently, Massachusetts has 160 Representatives in the State House. To use PR, he proposes that the districts be redistricted into 80 "local" districts. The other 80 representatives would be voted in through four larger "multi-member" districts. To do this, the political parties could list, for example, 20 candidates they would send to the House. If that party wins 50 percent of the vote, they could send 10 candidates to the House.

"The purpose behind this is to have the fewest wasted votes," Amy said.

This system is used internationally, including New Zealand. Amy said that PR would solve many of the problems of the current "winner-take-all" voting system. It would allow more minorities into the legislature, eliminates "spoiler" candidates (like Nadar in the 2000 election example), third party candidates could win seats, and it would increase voter turn out.

Both systems are far from being used on the national scene.

"There's a lot going on everywhere but here," Amy said. "The need for reform in American Politics is great ...75 percent of people don't feel represented by public officials."

Voting for the SGA elections is today and tomorrow in the Dining Commons and the Campus Center, from 10-2 and 4-7. Trained Elections Commissioners will be present to help any voter who might be confused by the new system.

Clouds Dance Theatre
二零零四美國紐英格蘭名校巡演
舞者
Free Admission
Wednesday, March 24th 7:30-9:00 p.m.
UMass Amherst Fine Arts Center Concert Hall (413) 454-2511
Thursday, March 25th 8:00-9:30 p.m.
Smith College Sage Sweeny Concert Hall (413) 585-3150
http://students.brown.edu/bts/cdt/opening.htm
Clouds Dance Theatre is a wonderful and professional folk dance troupe from Taiwan, and they have performed extensively outside of Taiwan, including international dance tours in Holland, Germany, and Isreal. They have been extremely well received by international audiences. The aims of the dance troupe founders are to inherit and to carry on the art of Taiwanese folk dance, to help foster professional artists within Taiwan, and to offer audiences a chance to understand and appreciate Taiwanese folk dance through performances.
This is Smith College and University of Massachusetts Amherst event, proudly present by Chinese Interregional Students Cultural Organization and Taiwanese Student Association with sponsorships and fundraising from: Ford Motors, Northampton Arts council, Smith College Fine Arts Council, Smith College Music Department, Smith College Office of the President, Smith College Office Of Student Activities, Smith College Office Of Institutional Diversity, Smith College Sophian, Smith College Theater Department, UMass Arts Council, UMass Campus Activities Office, UMass Fine Arts Center, UMASS Marketing Fund, UMass Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund, UMass United Asian Learning Resource Center, UMass Yun Kadhyana Cultural Center Cultural Enrichment Grant, Special help from: Association of College & Art Resources Development, Boston Intercollegiate Taiwanese Students Association, Council for Cultural Affairs, Cultural Affairs Bureau of Taipei County Government, Intercollegiate Taiwanese American Students Association, Overseas Chinese Affairs Commission, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, R.O.C., Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in Boston, Taipei Economic and Cultural Office in New York City, Silver Dance Corps, Yihu Dance Studio, Mrs. Yun-Jan Kao, Mr. Ming S. Tuan, Mr. Chi Wang, Mrs. Rose Wang, Mr. Kevin Wang, Mr. French Hsiung (Flower Studies, Inc.), and more could be found online.

RED BULL GIVES YOU WIIINGS. OH, AND A GREAT OPPORTUNITY.
Red Bull is on the lookout for a Student Brand Manager (SBM). An SBM is a reliable and motivated student whose responsibilities include brand development on campus, market analysis and having a great time.
Our expectations from you are the following:
• You're going into your second year or higher at this school.
• You have a good knowledge of when/where things are happening.
• You're interested in marketing and have good communication skills.
• You have an entrepreneurial spirit and are outgoing.
Does this sound like you? If so, go to: www.redbullu.com

Fabulous Gift!
CLINIQUE Bonus is here!
With your Clinique purchase of $19.50 get this 7-piece gift, Free. Quantities are limited. Now thru Sun., April 4th
Spring Gift
7-piece Gift
• Deluxe-size Rinse-Off Foaming Cleanser
• Dramatically Different Moisturizing Lotion
• New Repairwear Day SPF 15 Intensive Cream
• Lash Curling Mascara - Black
• Soft-Pressed Powder Blusher Duo w/Brush - Pink Blush/Chestnut Blush
• Long Last Soft Shine Lipstick – All Heart
• Cosmetics Bag
Cedar Chest
ARTFUL FURNISHINGS QUALITY LINENS IMAGINATIVE GIFTS
Thornes Marketplace • 150 Main St., Northampton, MA • 413-584-3060

NEW THIS WEEK!
BEYOND BORDERS
DIRTY PRETTY THINGS
GOTHIKA
MAGDALENE SISTERS
THE RUNDOWN
SHATTERED GLASS
SINGING DETECTIVE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Clergy rallies against gay marriage

By Mark Niesse
Associated Press

ATLANTA (AP) — More than two dozen black pastors added their voice to the critics of same-sex marriage, attempting to distance the civil rights struggle from the gay rights movement and defending marriage as a union between a man and a woman.

"When the homosexual compares himself to the black community, he doesn't know what suffering is," said the Rev. Clarence James, an African-American studies professor at Temple University.

James and 29 pastors rallied late Monday with their supporters at an Atlanta-area church where they signed a declaration outlining their beliefs on marriage and religion.

The declaration is meant to pressure state representatives to approve a constitutional ban on gay marriages, which will be considered again by the Georgia House as soon as this week.

The declaration, to be presented to state leaders Wednesday or Thursday, says same-sex marriage is not a civil right, and marriage between a man and a woman is important because it's necessary for the upbringing of children.

"To equate a lifestyle choice to racism demeans the work of the entire civil rights movement," the statement said. "People are free in our nation to pursue relationships as they choose. To redefine marriage, however, to suit the preference of those choosing alternative lifestyles is wrong."

Same-sex marriage is already illegal in Georgia, but supporters of the ban say the constitution needs to be changed to make sure a judge does not direct Georgia to recognize gay marriages performed in other states.

"It is a threat to who we are and what we stand for," said Bishop William Shields of Hopewell Baptist Church. "If nothing else gets us out of the pews, this ought to."

But the Rev. Paul Turner, a gay pastor from Atlanta who helped organize a pro-gay marriage rally last month outside the Georgia Capitol, disagreed: "How do they figure that it's not a civil rights issue?"

"This is just a way for those conservative leadership in the black community to say, 'Look, this isn't a matter of civil rights because we're black and we didn't have a choice in being black.' And they think gays do, and that's not true," Turner said.

Elsewhere Monday:

In Oregon, the county that was poised to become the state's second to allow gay marriage backed off until courts intervene. Commissioners In Benton County, home to Oregon State University and the liberal city of Corvallis, decided to stop issuing all marriage licenses until there is a court ruling on whether gay marriage is legal in Oregon. Commissioner Linda Modrell said Tuesday that panel members were assured that the issue would be decided as quickly as possible and feared the high cost of litigation and the possibility that county employees could be arrested.

In St. Paul, Minn., supporters of a constitutional amendment to ban gay marriage gathered by the thousands in one of the largest Capitol rallies in memory, waving hundreds of signs on the Capitol steps and spilling over onto the lawn and parking lot. The House is expected to pass the bill Wednesday, with a Senate committee planning to take up the measure later in the week.

In New York, two Unitarian Universalist ministers facing criminal counts for officiating at same-sex weddings pleaded innocent. Kay Greenleaf and Dawn Sangrey were charged after marrying 13 gay couples during a public ceremony in New Paltz, but the district attorney has said he does not expect to seek jail time

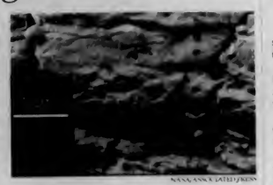
JUDD ARMS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bishop Donn Thomas reads a declaration as fellow pastors behind him, William Sheals left, and Woody Walker, listen on Monday.

Rover finds signs of water

By Andrew Bridges
Associated Press

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Mars had a shallow pool of briny water on its surface long ago, NASA said yesterday in announcing what could be the strongest evidence yet that the now-dry Red Planet was once hospitable to life.



The space agency's scientists announced earlier this month that the Opportunity rover found evidence of water in Mars' distant past. But it was unclear whether the water was in the soil or on the surface. The new findings suggest there was a pool of saltwater at least two inches deep.

A rocky outcropping examined by the rover had ripple patterns and concentrations of salt — considered telltale signs that the rock formed in standing water.

"We think Opportunity is now parked on what was once the shoreline of a salty sea on Mars," said Cornell University astronomer Steve Squyres, the mission's main scientist.

The findings add to the growing body of evidence that the Red Planet was once was a wetter and possibly warmer place that may have been conducive to life.

"This is a profound discovery, it has profound implications for astrobiology, and I'd like to say if you have an interest in searching for fossils on Mars, this is the first place you'd want to go," said Ed Weiler.

NASA/JPL/CALTECH/KISH

The image of the rock,"Last Chance," taken by the Mars Opportunity Rover, Monday.

Rantisi takes Yassin's post

ISRAEL from page 1

said, and exhorted the Hamas military wing to "teach this Zionist occupation a lesson."

Rantisi has rejected even a temporary truce with Israel and any compromise with Arafat's Palestinian Authority. His aggressive style is particularly popular with younger Hamas activists.

With his new post, Rantisi will likely become an even more tempting target for Israel's military, which wounded him in a missile attack on his car last year.

On Monday, Israeli Defense Minister Shaul Mofaz and various security agency chiefs decided to go after all the Hamas leaders, a security official said Tuesday, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The Israeli army chief, Lt. Gen. Moshe Yaalon, hinted that Arafat might eventually be targeted as well. The killing of Yassin should be seen as a signal "to all those who choose to harm us that this will be their end," Yaalon said.

"It is our view that decapitation of the terrorist infrastructure is one means among the strategies in the war against terror," the general said. "The strike on Yassin is a significant blow to the Hamas terror organization."

After Yassin's killing, Hamas threatened revenge attacks of unprecedented scope, and Israel beefed up security throughout the country and at missions abroad. Shopping malls, markets and buses were relatively empty as jittery Israelis hunkered down.

Opinion polls published in newspapers Tuesday suggested a majority of Israelis support Yassin's killing.

Despite the Israeli threats, the Hamas leaders apparently in Israel's crosshairs — Rantisi, Mahmoud Zahar and Ismail Hanieh — made rare public appearances, though surrounded by a shield of civilians.

Since Monday night, the three have spent long hours at Gaza City's Yarmouk Stadium, where Hamas set up an official mourning tent. On Tuesday, tens of thousands of people crammed into the stadium. Armed men from various militias stood as honor guards near the entrance.

Zahar brushed off Israel's threats. "They tried to assassinate me twice and Dr. Rantisi once," he said. "We are still working and will continue ... and they (Israelis) will fail and they will leave this land."

Palestinian Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia briefly paid his condolences. The Palestinian Authority declared three days of mourning for Yassin, and stores closed throughout the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Hamas is the biggest rival to the authority, but Palestinian leaders treat the movement with care because of its popularity.

Hamas, founded by Yassin in 1987, wants to destroy Israel and replace it with an Islamic state. Israel says Hamas killed 377 Israelis in hundreds of attacks, including 52 suicide bombings, over the years.

The Hamas Web site on Tuesday published a message it said Yassin had sent to the upcoming Arab summit in Tunisia. Yassin reiterated that violence was the only way to drive out the Israelis, and demanded Arab countries cut all ties with Israel. was seen as a veiled threat against Washington. However, at Tuesday's reception for mourners at the Gaza soccer stadium, speakers did not make any threats against the United States, only against Israel.

Students vie for state finals

SCIENCE from page 1

ular material used in other projects. Tierney said that the six-month project taught her how to do a project from scratch.

Some entrants decided not to do the most scientific projects, but ones that they thought would be fun.

Steve Gibbons and Chris Hess, both seniors at Westfield High School, did a project on corking baseball bats.

"I wanted to do a project I can have fun with," Gibbons said. The two students have been friends for years and both love playing baseball.

Other groups did projects based on their favorite hobbies.

Jenna Kuklinski and Barbara Dew's project tested the effect that different types of music have on heart rate.

"Music amplifies your emotions," said Kuklinski.

The freshman from Mohawk Regional High School said that they were surprised to see that people's heart rates rose to both loud music, such as alternative rock, and more mellow music.

"It's an interesting topic to learn about," she said.

Ananda Lennox, the assistant to the dean at the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics, was enthusiastic about how the day went.

Lennox said that the fair had a high volunteer turn out, and all the judges showed up. She said that different organizations donated various prizes, including books, SAT preparation courses and money for the top finishers in each group. Usually the top two-thirds from each group go on to the Massachusetts final.

Ten schools in the Berkshire, Franklin, Hampden and Hampshire counties were represented in the science fair..

Club Castaway Will Proudly present College Nights on Thursdays from 9pm-1am $2.00 cover with valid college ID &Drivers Licensed. Must be 21 years or older through March.
CLUB CASTAWAY
Hey ladies over 18 years old. Earn big money for your Spring Break vacation. Come and see us and we will show you how to make the money that you need in the entertainment business.
Rt. 5&10, Whatley 665-8155

Now is the time for YOGA
Classes in Boyden 10
Mid-Semester Packages*!
1 class per week/7 weeks Only $ 35 ! SAVE
2 classes per week/7 weeks $ 65 ! $$$$$
*Special pricing offered through March 31, 2004
Class Schedule
(March 22 - May 6, 2004)
Monday/Wednesday
12:30 – 1:45 pm Flow Yoga (Level 1-2)
2:00 – 3:15 pm Gentle Flow (Level 1)
Tuesday/Thursday
1:00 – 2:15 pm Yoga Basics (Level 1-2)
2:30 – 3:45 pm Intermediate (Level 2-3)
To Register: UMass Yoga/Campus Recreation
Boyden 215 • 413-545-0022 • www.umass.edu/umim

Wiffle Rock
2-5 player teams
Medium pitch
speed
MAY 1&2 @ TOTMAN FIELD UMASS
WIFFLEBALL TOURNAMENT
$1000 cash
FOR WINNING TEAM
Entry info--
www.wifflerock.com
Hotline 508-429-7093
Rock 102 WAQY Springfield's Classic Rock

MOST NURSES WILL ENTER THE U.S. HEALTHCARE SYSTEM. YOU'RE NOT MOST NURSES.
U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE
Most nurses spend their entire careers in the same hospital. In the United States Air Force, it's unlikely you'll even spend it in the same state or country. You'll have the opportunity to practice nursing in as many as 20 different fields in a variety of nursing environments. And you'll feel a greater sense of shared responsibility when you have the opportunity to actually lead your team. Sound like the kind of career you'd like to have? Then call 1-800-423-USAF.
AIRFORCE.COM • 1-800-423-USAF

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Panel reveals lack of foreign policy focus

With the memory of Sept. 11 still fresh in their minds, members of a federal panel in Washington D.C. yesterday continued their probing of U.S. policies with terrorism before 9/11.

The dialogue the panel has produced so far is interesting, but scary, and casts both the Bush and Clinton administrations in a critical light for not acting more proactively when it came to the threat Osama bin Laden posed to American security.

Testimony and rhetoric from officials in both administrations are alarming in how much statements made contradict both one another and actions the United States has taken both pre and post-9/11.

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, for example, told the federal commission yesterday that even if the United States had killed bin Laden in a military strike before 9/11, it is entirely likely the attacks on the World Trade Center would have taken place anyway because the men who carried the act out were already living in the United States.

"The sleeper cells that flew the aircraft into the World Trade towers and the Pentagon were already in the United States a few months before the attack," Rumsfeld said.

William Cohen, Rumsfeld's predecessor, also admitted that the Clinton administration had at least three opportunities to strike and kill Osama bin Laden during the 1990s, but held off due to uncertainties with the intelligence they received and with what the number of civilian casualties could have been.

"There were three occasions," Cohen said. "Each time, the munitions and people were spun up. They were called off because the word came back, 'We're not sure.'"

With comments like that coming from the present and former presidential administrations, it is difficult to not criticize both camps, but that will get the United States nowhere if the criticism is not used constructively to prepare a comprehensive and flexible plan to defend our country better now.

The War on Terror remains forever in the background of everything our country does, and when nations like Spain gets punished by terrorists for aiding any aggressive move the United States makes, it only becomes more difficult to thwart terrorism because it leaves us on our own in that effort.

One of the main things that should be focused on in the report the commission has released is that the United States attempted to utilize diplomacy to combat terrorism during the 1990s, and the effort failed repeatedly.

That leaves little options now other than to minimize finger pointing and work together at home to combat terrorism both here and abroad. The Massachusetts Daily Collegian hopes the findings of the federal commission will help our government gain a better understanding of where things went wrong in the past so that they can be prevented in the future. The United States government needs a clearer focus of what they are facing, and better organization and clarity with how to face it. It's a challenge that will require constant reevaluation. If there's one thing that 9/11 taught us, it's to never let our guards down with terrorism again.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Ignorance: The new disease

Rachel Smith

More insidious than e. bola, SARS and bird flu is a rapidly spreading calamity infecting all Americans from homeless shelters to the White House. This illness is a wave of ignorance that's spreading faster than any sickness previously identified.

Increasingly, nobody knows what the hell is going on.

For example, who watched former White House staff terrorism advisor Richard Clarke on CBS' "60 Minutes" this week? Here's what you missed. Nobody in the White House knows what the hell is going on in the world. Either that or nobody on Capital Hill cares; I prefer to give George W. Bush's administration the marginal benefit of the doubt than go with the latter.

Clarke, who was appointed to the White House by president Ronald Reagan and continuously served under presidents George Bush Sr. and Bill Clinton, alleges that he forwarded a memo to the Oval Office about suspicious "chatter" among known terrorists in Jan. 2001, according to his interview with "60 Minutes" co-editor Lesley Stahl. The White House ignored his memo.

Ignorance hasn't just infected our leaders; we Americans are doing our best to spread the stupidity as well.

My first reaction to the memo debacle was of disbelief across many platforms. The so-called terrorism czar suspects a massive terrorist strike on U.S. soil, so he wrote a memo about it? So much for Harrison Ford-type superheroes who barge into the Oval Office just in time to save the country. Look out for Tom Clancy's next novel, "Clear and Present Memo."

Clarke didn't stop with the memos, though. He claims he also requested meetings with top members of the Cabinet; his first meeting he had with the officials he requested was Sept. 24, Clarke told Stahl on "60 Minutes."

I'm also disgusted because the President and Cabinet don't know what the hell is going on, if Clarke's allegations are true. Clarke told Stahl on "60 Minutes" that he doesn't think Bush's advisors tell him anything but what the President wants to hear. "I don't think [President Bush] sees memos that he doesn't — wouldn't like the answer," Clarke said on "60 Minutes."

Besides, if President Bush and his advisors knew that Clarke's warnings foretold the tragedies of Sept. 11, they wouldn't have ignored his memos or his requests for meetings with top-level Cabinet officials.

Some members of the extreme left and paranoid G. Gordon Liddy-ites have accused President Bush of knowing about al-Qaeda's plans to attack the World Trade Center and Pentagon, but purposely did nothing in order to further geopolitical goals. The truth is more frightening. If the White House had known about Sept. 11, I could at least have some assurance that this nation's leaders understand the terrorist threat and future attacks could be prevented. Instead, Clarke has exposed an abyss of ignorance and incompetence culminating in a very real, terrifying certainty: the people who we entrust with our safety have no idea how to protect us.

Ignorance hasn't just infected our leaders; we Americans are doing our best to spread the stupidity as well.

According to the latest Zogby poll, Bush's positive approval rating has dropped a mere five points from 51 percent to 46 percent since the Clarke story broke. Meanwhile, the percentage of those polled who have a negative opinion of the President has increased by the same margin.

This means 95 out of every 100 people polled think our fatally incompetent administration is doing a fantastic job. Do we really love the administration which Clarke described on "60 Minutes" as "preserved in amber" and still working on Cold War problems while completely ignoring new, lethal terrorist threats? Remember, Clarke isn't some proxy the Democrats put out there; he's a seasoned warrior in the fight against terrorism and a former Reagan appointee. Clarke is also testifying before the federal Sept. 11 panel this week, which will remain closed until after the 2004 election.

Unfortunately, the rare escape from ignorance that Clarke is offering us will fade quickly because he put his story in a book instead of a music video. Maybe if he pulled his pants down during a NCAA Final Four half-time show with copies of the controversial memos stapled to his backside we would listen to him.

Come on, folks. Richard M. Nixon hired people to break into a hotel and the resulting scandal brought his resignation. The Bush administration shuffled memos when they could have saved thousands of lives and all the average American cares about is the next American Idol. Thirty years ago, a story like this would kill an administration. Now, it's just filler between Janet Jackson's breasts and Martha Stewart's stock broker.

Ignorance is spreading and it's just as lethal as mad cow disease or any other sickness. The only known inoculation is truth, but you can only be cured if you're willing to accept the stinging prick of reality.

Rachel Smith is a Collegian columnist.

Tweedle-dee and Tweedle-dum

Dan Lamothe

Alrighty. It's time to tell you all a story.

Once upon a time at the great, big University of Massachusetts (say, last year), there was a boy. His name was Cornelius Nugent, but we'll call him Corny for short.

Corny was an odd boy. With his wild flame-colored hair and his goofy cackle, he had a hard time fitting in sometimes. He needed attention. He craved attention. Then, at last, he had it. Corny knew what he needed to do: Corny would run for Student Government Association president. He'd stick it to those squares once and for all!

There were a few problems though. Corny didn't quite know or understand many of the issues, for starters. You see, he didn't want to look like the rest of all the boys and girls running for student government. So he took a chance, doing his best to make a complete spectacle of the SGA elections. He started by putting up posters with slogans like "Pull My Finger" on them, but it did not get him as much attention as he was hoping.

So at the SGA debates, Corny did the only thing he knew how to do: he told the campus on live UVC-19 television that the reason they should vote for him was because of his ability to fellate himself. He also made fun of the disabled Stephen Hawking and refused to answer nearly any question directly, frequently using vulgarity to respond instead.

"Elvis is my hero," he told members of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and others in attendance at the debate.

Poor Corny just didn't get it — regardless of however screwed up the University or the student government was, the people at the debate and many others around campus actually cared about what was going on at their school. Corny lost the presidential election 946-48 to incumbent president David Carr, not that he probably cared. The lack of attention he thought he got in the campaign bothered him a lot more. Poor guy.

This year, Corny decided he should run for SGA office again. Any student with enough signatures can run, right? So why not?

So at the SGA debates, Corny did the only thing he knew how to do: he told the campus on live UVC-19 television that the reason they should vote for him was because of his ability to fellate himself.

He and a new sidekick, freshman Eoin Moore, teamed up, securing enough signatures to get on the ballot.

Then tragedy struck. UVC wouldn't let Corny into the debate! After all of the hullabaloo the year before, they said they had had enough. How in the world was Corny going to get all that attention that he craved?

There was only one hope, Moore, as someone new to the election process, couldn't justifiably be tossed out of the debates for his association Corny alone, so it would be up to him to further the tradition of having a supreme idiot at the debates. With no other option, Tweedle-Dum stood in for Tweedle-Dee.

And he almost pulled it off. From my spot on the debate's journalist panel, I watched the gangly, scraggly freshman shared his views on "man-animal civilization" and a whole host of other idiotic visions for an over an hour. It distracted other candidates, cameramen and the debate's moderator from time to time, but at the very least, at times it was amusing, and he did keep it clean.

Then he showed his true colors. Near the end of the presidential debate, Moore grew visibly insulted that Corny, the Dumb to his Dumber, was not mentioned in any shape or form at the debate. When it came time to wrap up, he interrupted the moderator repeatedly, trying to get the word out that Corny had not been allowed in and was actually out in the hall watching. The temper tantrum was reminiscent of something you would expect to see in oh, say, the second grade.

Don't worry folks, Eoin Moore pouted, but he stayed strong. Well — at least he didn't cry.

To get back to my tale, the moral is simple: if you act like a jackass, you're probably going to be treated like one. After Cornelius Nugent's bawdy, obnoxious and obscene appearance at the 2003 debates, what did UVC really owe him? Another chance? Nugent earned the right to have his name on the ballot this year with the signatures he collected, and that is it. There's no sense of remorse to the campaign Nugent ran in 2003, just an arrogant sense of entitlement. They're not getting enough attention to make them happy? Too bad.

Such is the sad, sad life of Tweedle-Dee and Tweedle-Dum on the SGA campaign trail.

Dan Lamothe is a Collegian columnist.

A new level of vanity

Adrienne Bossi

MTV has surprised us all again with the release of their new show "I Want a Famous Face." Asking its viewers, "How far would you go for a famous face?," the program documents its subjects going through various levels of plastic surgery.

MTV does not pay for the money needed for surgery. The people in the show have decided on their own to get surgery in the first place.

People featured on "I Want a Famous Face" seem to have two things in common: they are desperately insecure and they are superficial.

If the point of going through a multi-thousand dollar surgery is to enhance your abilities to get girls, maybe you ought to save your money and just get some counseling. Why would a person's aim to be to attract people who only care about outward things like looks? And why are you so focused on looks that it's all you can see in yourself?

Some may say that only a person who has never been ugly can argue against this, but I have a hard time believing that. I am supported by an un-official poll conducted on the MTV website that found 71 percent of web surfers that clicked on the poll would never get plastic surgery to look like a celebrity, while 11 percent said "Hell yeah," and 18 percent said maybe.

The premiere episode documented a pair of twins' journey through plastic surgery hoping to look like Brad Pitt. Not only did neither of the boys look anything like Brad Pitt in the end, they also didn't really look much different than they began with. Their acne scars cleared up and their hair got cooler. That's about it. Other than that, they might as well have lit their money on fire. You don't need plastic surgery to get rid of acne and get a good hair cut.

The worst part of the show was when one of the boys was hoping his drastic surgery would attract a girl he has been crushing on. Thankfully, she admitted his looks improved but maintained her position as just interested in him as a friend. She'll change her mind eventually, warned the twin.

In their post-surgery interview, the boys also excitingly noted the changes in their lives since they went under the knife. "Before when I was ugly, I didn't have any fun." Thankfully, now that they are attractive, they also have fun.

The people on MTV don't want to improve their unique natural appearances, they want to adopt those of others. They want to ride on the success of others in the simpliest of ways—stealing their looks.

Is that not the sickest thing you've ever heard? The basis of life enjoyment is derived from how attractive you believe you are: That's really deep. I'm glad to know these boys have their life priorities straight.

Where were these boys' parents? Why didn't they teach them that self-worth isn't derived from what a mirror reflects? I predict these boys will become just as unhappy again in their lives once the novelty of their surgery wears off. Their problem has nothing to do with their looks. They are just pegging it on the obvious culprit instead of the likely culprit.

It makes me sad how much our society focuses on looks. I don't blame these two boys for feeling the root of all their social and personal problems results from their appearance. The only people having fun on television and making money and getting dates are attractive. And high school-aged kids are very judgmental about this.

Ironically, I believe what makes them more of an outcast than an ugly appearance, is not being unattractive twins, but being the average looking twins that dropped thousands of dollars in a vain attempt to enhance their lives through nose jobs and chin implants. That will make anyone more of a social outcast than being naturally unattractive.

Although many subjects on the future shows are undergoing plastic surgery to advance modeling careers, it seems like cheating to me to enhance their appearance in unnatural ways. I always believed true models are people who are naturally beautiful. And the really successful ones are those who are beautiful on the inside as well. Yet, the people on MTV don't want to improve their unique natural appearances, they want to adopt those of others. They want to ride on the success of others in the simplest of ways—stealing their looks. It is so vain. The lesson learned from this program, not only does it not matter who you are or what attributes you are born with anymore because big enough wallets can get you any outward appearance you want you are also going to be happier once you go under the knife.

Adrienne Bossi is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Amherst, MA 01003

Students: Make your vote count

It's that time of year again, the faces of future politicians can be found in bathroom stalls serving as not only reading material but also as a source for who's running for student office.

Millions of trees have been sacrificed in an effort to plaster every square inch of the University of Massachusetts campus with these colorful flyers. Candidates have been working tirelessly to get there name out there pledging their allegiance to UMass students, and fighting for causes on their behalf. They come to our doors looking for signatures and as not to be rude we put our names down figuring that we are doing a good deed.

Elizabeth Jennings

However, when Election Day arrives, how many students will actually make it to the dining halls to vote? Will all this campaigning pay off for the student government hopefuls? The truth of the matter is while most students can probably acknowledge that the election is occurring, it is not on the top of their agenda for the week. They are busy with the stresses of schoolwork, jobs, and a social life. It is the rare student who has actually paid attention to who is who and what they stand for. The importance of voting has been lost and viewed as irrelevant or unimportant.

While candidates are taking this seriously, putting time and effort into their cause, their efforts are often times wasted on a careless group of individuals who write the election off as trivial. Voting is extremely important, however. It is a right that many people around the world are not afforded. Practicing our right to vote on a small scale in a college election can have an effect on whether or not we vote as adults. If the political issues of our University do not interest us then the same could hold true in our future on a much larger scale.

What we learn now will aid us in getting involved in what is going on in our country and how particular legislation is affecting our lives. It is no secret that politics can be corrupt and will not govern the people with their best interest in mind. It is the public's responsibility to represent themselves and make sure their voice is heard. If this privilege is voluntarily given up then some day the public opinion will hold no weight at all. By not voting we are allowing individuals to make decisions that do not reflect the will of the people. If everyone voted and gave their input then students would have more control over the issues that are affecting their school.

It is easy enough to complain about how UMass is functioning, but when given the chance to do something about it we for fit any power we had. We have the freedom to voice how we feel and we should not only cherish that right but make sure we put in our own two cents. So when you're on your way to dinner or pass by the dining hall on your way back from class take a second to vote and make your opinion matter!

Elizabeth Jennings is a UMass student.

Bush in 2004?

Thomas Naughton

I have been hiding from this presidential election in my writing and general conversation for a couple of weeks, partly because most of the articles I read concerning the race include phrases like "stupid Bush," "Bush lied," or even include played out "Bush-isms." While I am aligned with the idea that George W. Bush is the most repugnant character to rest his buns in the oval office, all this politic-talk is really boring. I know you, the readers, have had quite enough of all of this crap. November could not come soon enough for many of us and we just want to know who the man on top is going to be. Unfortunately, I know who this man is, not because I hang out with Miss Cleo Jones, the famous psychic, but because its pretty clear who our president is going to be. Why do I say "Unfortunately?" Do you want to know who our president is going to be? Keep reading.

After going on the CBS Early Show in February, I was able to meet and come in contact with many celebrities whom I interviewed on the subject of the election. I asked them who they would vote for and why. Their answers were enthralling, engaging, and inspiring. Many interviews I was able to do over Spring Break. After interviewing the rich and famous, I wanted to get the view of the common man and found an equally inspiring crop of answers which I am happy to share with you, the voting (hopefully) population of our great University.

Diane Sawyer
TN: Hi, Diane Sawyer.
DS: Hello.
TN: Di, can I call you Di?
DS: No.
TN: Great, Di, you are at the center of the political arena being a news anchor, whom do you see yourself supporting in November?
DS: George W. Bush, of course. I'm not stupid. I make a lot of money. I want to keep it.

Courtney Love
TN: Hey, Courtney.
CL: What's up man?!
TN: Wow, its 9:30 a.m. You're drunk already, huh?
CL: Yeah, whatever, man.
TN: Your breath is gross. So who will you vote for?
CL: Kurt Cobain, man, my dead husband, man! Hey, man, do you know where I can find a dealer?

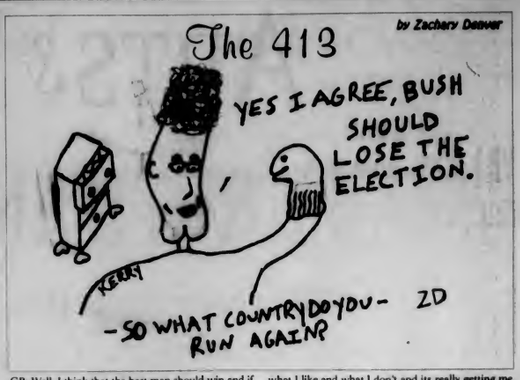
George W. Bush
TN: Hi. How are you doing?
GB: Well you know, with Sept. 11 and everything, my faith has really been tested.
TN: Well, Sept. 11 was a horrible event in our history, but it was also three years ago. I think we can safely say that the guys with box-cutters aren't going to take over our country.
GB: I am the President of these United States.
TN: I know.
GB: Well when you vote in November, you should vote for the president that led us through the dark of night on that day of infamy, you should not vote for an adulterer who lied to the nation and took advantage of a young intern.
TN: George, Bill Clinton is not running for president.
GB: 9/11!
TN: Great. Who will you vote for?
GB: Well, I think that the best man should win and if there are enough votes for the man who won, he will be the winner of the election and in doing so will be the symbol of winning with regard to this year's election, which he won.

Beyonce Knowles
TN: Oh my GOD! You're BEYONCE.
BK: Yes, I am. How are you?
TN: OH MY GOD.
BK: Didn't you want to ask me about the election?
TN: I…can't…talk.

Ann Coulter
TN: Hey, Ann. You're a pretty crazy beast, but I figured I should be fair and balanced so I decided to interview you. Who are you going to vote for?
AC: Adolf Hitler.
TN: Anne, he's dead and a Nazi.
AC: Just like a liberal to say such preposterous things.

Paris Hilton
TN: Hey, Paris.
PH: Can we make this quick? I was going to spend some money on coke and then go shoot a quick home movie.
TN: Sure, who are you voting for?
PH: The guy who had botox, definitely, it's important to look your best.

Jesus Christ
TN: Hey, I have been meaning to see your movie and everything, but with midterms and Spring Break and just not wanting to see it, I haven't managed to fit it in.
JC: Hey, what are you gonna do?
TN: Right? So, Jesus, who would you vote for if you weren't busy being in movies and being dead?
JC: And…
TN: Ok, ok and being the savior of the human race.
JC: Well, I would probably vote for the man whom I believed was the most exemplary of a peaceful and righteous leader.
TN: Ok, so not George W. Bush.
JC: No.
TN: See, he thinks you guys are buddies.
JC: I know, I hate that. All these people talk about what I like and what I don't and its really getting me angry.
TN: Amen.



Jared Nokes, SGA speaker
TN: Jared, you're in some hot water lately with the SGA, huh?
JN: I have no idea what you're talking about.
TN: OK. Who are you voting for?
JN: The white guy.
TN: They're both white, Jared.
JN: Did I say the 'white guy'? I meant the blonde-haired, blue-eyed, Christian, heterosexual male.
TN: I have to go.

My mom:
TN: Hey, Patty, who are you voting for?
Mom: That's a stupid question.
TN: I know, I know, but I'm doing this column and so I need your answer.
Mom: You know I would rather suck a chainsaw than vote for George W. Bush. Anyone but Bush. I would vote for dead Eudora Welty before Bush.
TN: Is she dead?
Mom: I don't remember, but I would vote for her. I love her. Now clean out your car or we're going to war and I'll win.

Obviously I took many liberties with these interviews, so try not to get upset about who your favorite celebrity is voting for. Although many polls suggest John Kerry will win the election in November, it has become unfortunately clear to me that George W. Bush is going to be spending another four years in the white house. He will no doubt play the Sept. 11 card until we are lulled into submission and vote in his favor. Or perhaps he will plant some WMD's in the Middle East or in France and be the hero of the day once again.

What will we enjoy during another four years of George W. Bush? Unemployment, tax cuts for the ultra rich, wasted money on defense, and many more questions that will never be answered, which will be glossed over with images of Sept. 11 and all of the "good things" that our ill-seated president has brought down upon us.

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

Bruce Springsteen was 'Born in the U.S.A.,' and so was I

Ben Duffy

We all know Bruce Springsteen's "Born in the U.S.A." Released in 1984, the song virtually became the soundtrack for the year and catapulted Springsteen to international superstardom.

Recently, in Professor Sut Jhally's Media and Culture class, we explored the lyrics of the song. Professor Jhally estimated that probably 90 percent of the class had never actually listened to the lyrics and knew only the chorus, the incessant "I was born in the U.S.A." And Professor Jhally was probably right too; but I belong to the 10 percent of the class who had listened to the lyrics. In fact, I own the album, and have gone through the lyrics sheet on more than one occasion to see just what Springsteen was saying.

The gist of Professor Jhally's lecture was this: Springsteen's intended meaning of the song was lost on most of its listeners, because they confused it for an ultra-patriotic song about how great it is to be "born in the USA." Actually, Springsteen intended it to be a song about a shameful chapter of American history not so long buried in the past — the betrayal and neglect of Vietnam vets, our native sons who took up arms and fought for their country, for better or for worse. Springsteen even said that Vietnam vets were "screwed" by America.

As I sat there listening to Professor Jhally's lecture, I couldn't help but think that not much has changed. Vets are still getting screwed in this country. I should know, because I am one. I'm not a Vietnam vet, but I did fight in the unpopular war of my generation — Iraq.

I really don't care what anyone has to say about it either. I'm proud of what I did. I'm no war hero, but I did my time. In fact, I did more than my time. — I was involuntarily kept in the Army for an extra four months and two days because of the war.

Just this December, I finished my contract with Uncle Sam. After four years, I thought that I was going to enter college a few steps ahead of the game, in the financial sense. After all, I had my GI Bill money, UMass was going to wave my tuition as a veteran, and I was going to be able to file for financial aid independently of my parents.

I was naive.

Yes, I do have a significant scholarship coming from the government, but it's being used against me while filing for my FAFSA. I can't say exactly how much money is being withheld from me, but I do know that the government just doesn't understand why I would need financial aid when I already have a scholarship.

The tuition waiver ended up being an even bigger lie. Yes, my yearly tuition of $1,714 was struck from my original bill. Several weeks later, I received a bill in the mail…for $1,714. Turns out that by receiving a tuition waiver worth of $1,714, I disqualified myself from $,1714 of a certain parking fines scholarship. So the tuition waiver was just a figment of my imagination. I guess that the only advantage I have over my fellow students is that I can file my FAFSA independently of my parents because my veteran status makes me independent of them. But there's a good reason why my parents' income isn't on my FAFSA — because they aren't giving me anything. I'm funding my own education, thank you very much.

I talked to financial aid, and the lady informed me that it was out of her hands. UMass isn't to blame at all — they're just following federal guidelines. That's just the way the system works, son.

It's a well-intentioned system too. There was a time in America when only the wealthiest Americans could afford higher education, thus insuring that people who could afford it would remain on top. The problem is that the system punishes anyone who earns anything. The "disadvantaged" will be handed something for nothing. Those who come to school with their hard-earned money will just have it ripped away from. That's "social justice."

I feel pretty helpless about the whole situation. The system is bigger than I am. I guess maybe I'll write a letter to my congressman, but something tells me that John Olver won't care.

My government betrayed me. Hello America, I'm your native son! I wore your uniform and I drove your Humvee through the streets of Baghdad. Four years, four months, and two days later I find myself barely a smidgen ahead of where I would have been if I had gone to college straight out of high school. Thanks.

Springsteen's song has new meaning to me. Not much has changed since 1984, I can attest to that. I was "born in the USA.," just like the betrayed vets in the song, and I guess I feel the same way they do. Next time I'll try not to be so naive as to believe that my country will thank me.

Ben Duffy is a UMass student.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

IN DEFENSE OF THE ACLU

in his column titled, "ACLU not all it claims to be," Ben Duffy accuses the American Civil Liberties Union of being a "dangerous organization." Mr. Duffy, the only thing "dangerous" for Americans is people like you who are allowed to print such garbage in a widely-read newspaper.

Catholic Charities is not funded by the Sunday collections, as Mr. Duffy foolishly claims. According to its website, about two-thirds of its funding comes from local, state, and federal grants and contracts. Only 14 percent of its funding comes from private donors. Most taxpayers, including myself, do not want our money going to an organization that forces its religious beliefs on employees. Considering this, and the fact that most employees and service recipients are not Catholic, the California Supreme Court was correct in naming Catholic Charities a "nonreligious institution."

Mr. Duffy asks, "since when are contraceptives a 'right?'" Well, since their existence. Women are ultimately the ones who have to face the consequences of an unexpected pregnancy, and therefore, deserve the right to have easy and affordable access to contraceptives. Birth control methods are not cheap, so it is difficult for many women to pay out of their pockets, especially those employed by a non-profit organization. Until men are required to share the responsibility when an unwanted pregnancy happens, contraceptives will always be a right for women.

Employers have a responsibility to provide health care coverage to their employees, and contraceptives are a key component to women's health. Furthermore, its much cheaper for employers to pay for birth control than it is to pay for pre-natal care. This concept is known as preventive healthcare, and the American healthcare system is based on it.

Next time Mr. Duffy wants to accuse the ACLU of fooling the American public, consider how he continuously tries to fool UMass students in his weekly column.

Meaghan Cunningham
UMass student

MORE BALANCED REPORTING NEEDED

I would like to see more balanced reporting in The Daily Collegian concerning the "controversy" surrounding the $65 IPO (International Programs Office) fee. The article was a step in the right direction to correct the blatant inaccuracies "reported" in the Feb. 20 issue of The Collegian.

The Feb. 20 article states (inaccurately) that the $65 IPO fee funds the Student Exchange Visitor Information System. Later the author states (inaccurately) that SEVIS is "a part of the USA PATRIOT Act." The rest of the article provides a soapbox for those who argue against the fee, but provides no balanced reporting of facts regarding the IPO fee.

Such facts could have been uncovered by interviewing Frank Hugus, Director of the IPO, or Chancellor Lombardi, or by simply typing "SEVIS + international + student" into Google.

Fortunately, a forum is given to Mr. Frank Hugus in the March 2, issue. Mr. Hugus gives a much more accurate description of the fee. It is used "to pay for services rendered by the IPO [International Programs Office] to international students." Mr. Hugus states that most (90 percent) of the fee will be applied to the IPO, and that only 10 percent will go towards the SEVIS requirements. Mr. Hugus also states that the information gathered by SEVIS has been required for quite some time now, and the only change is that it is going on-line. What's more, the article makes it clear that budget cuts across the university caused the IPO to levy the fee; this was not a fiat from Mr. Lombardi's office.

However, it is much more catchy to say, "We shouldn't have to pay to surveil ourselves." It is not quite so catchy to say, "International students should not have to pay for the programs they enjoy."

There are reasoned arguments for and against the IPO fee, such as possible conflicts with the GEO contract or by making comparisons to out-of-state student fees. Instead, the "complex controversy" cited has been largely one-sided, fueled in large part by The Daily Collegian itself.

Kelan Lowney
UMass graduate student

In today's society, not many things are free. Some would argue that not even freedom is free. I recently read the article about international students paying a $65 dollar fee for basically government use. I am reluctant to say, that I am quite disappointed in the people that protest the fee. I am a United States citizen. I pay taxes like every other American. I even pay for college tuition. It is to my understanding that some of the people protesting have to do research assistance or teach classes, and in exchange their courses are paid for. Please! Tell me where I can sign up for such a deal. I will gladly teach a couple of courses and in exchange have my course load paid for. I also will gladly pay $65 dollars so that I can enjoy the safety and privileges that our freedom allows.

I won't have to fight on a battlefield and or lose my life, but I will have to pay $65. It seems like a small price to pay if you ask me.

Some may say I have a narrow perspective about this, but I say what about people who are from out of state that go here? They pay a lot more than people in state, but you don't see them protesting to acquire in-state tuition. What about the kid whose mom or dad has two jobs just to put food on the table, never mind providing college tuition for his or her kid? I could go on and on about the different scenarios people have to endure but I won't, because in the end we all do the same. We work hard so that we can take advantage of the freedoms that we work for.

I have also failed to mention what happened less then three years ago. Maybe it's just me, or maybe the international students weren't affected or just don't care about the events of Sept. 11, but I certainly do. The fact is that we basically trained terrorists who we didn't know were terrorists, to fly an aircraft, in no way, shape or form am I saying that every international student is a terrorist, that is absolutely not what I am saying, but what I am saying is, some people do not like our way of life, and try to harm us. So if the safest and easiest way to prevent another Sept. 11 from happening is to store some general information in a computer about you, so be it. You may think it is unfair, but the truth is, all Americans have files with general information in it that the government uses. Do not think that you are being singled out.

I'd like to conclude by saying, "Thank you" to all that serve and are still serving this great country. Freedom is not free; some fight, some die, and others sacrifice one way or another. Anyway you look at it, there is always a price to pay when it comes to freedom.

Jarod LaVarnway
UMass student

A NEED TO RIGHT JUDICIAL ABUSES

Regarding family law and the court, most judges and some lawyers must be reined in before they further damage our families. It is clear they are using our children by way of gender politics and power so they can transfer wealth to themselves, the institution of family law, and to persons of the right gender.

Their conduct under the "color of law," and with the protections given to them in their official capacities is harmful and abusive to our children. The only true way to prevent this abuse is by limiting the discretion of judges by law while concurrently making them accountable to the people.

This may be achieved peacefully with the enactment of new and reformed law into our general laws and state constitution, which will promote the presumption of shared parenting and call for the periodic certification of judges.

Many judicial abuses are subtle, and as such, insidiously creep into our lives. In one local judge's recent decision, she ruled in a way that is likely to empower the esteem and behavior of a minor child on the basis of the child's "desire" not to see her father. Yet, we must ask ourselves if this type of state imposed empowerment is appropriate for our children.

Furthermore, will our children truly feel empowered by these statist-elitist impositions and those who take advantage of the systemic failure of our governmental processes and laws, or will our children with maturity and acquired wisdom realize that these people have used them simply to benefit themselves?

Let us right the wrongs now; enact shared parenting and constitutionally require the certification of judges by the people. Call your legislators today.

Mike Franco
State Chairman
The Fatherhood Coalition

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

VH1 wins with non-musical lineup

The Magic Picture Box is a column about that invention we all have and some us actually watch – the television.

Magic Picture Box

Ryan Aubert

Who knew that VH1 stands for Video Hits 1, considering hardly any music videos are aired on the channel anymore? Just as MTV has decidedly found its niche airing shows about sex, plastic surgery (have ya seen that show yet? –crazy stuff), and "The Real World," VH1 has become the place to reminisce about your childhood with shows like "I Love the 80's." It is the current nostalgia channel for the X, Y, and Z generation.

VH1 gained viewers and popularity in the late 90's with shows like "Pop Up Video" (who else misses this show?) and the juicy "Behind the Music" (which is still alive, although not what it used to be in it's glory days.)

Shifting its focus, VH1 soon started airing "I Love the 80's." This show has become a modern day pop culture phenomenon about curiously enough — 80's pop culture. Each episode is devoted to one year in the decade of big hair, "The Cosby Show," and Michael Jackson — before he became white. A panelist of B, C, and D list celebrities discuss, praise, and dis the fads, movies, music, shows, commercials, and everything else pop. It is a memory jogger for sure, and nothing beats remembering that cartoon or movie you had long since forgotten.

These shows are often played together in a marathon, which sucks viewers in through a straw because "once you pop, you can't stop!" Many procrastinating hours have been given over to these shows.

Since most college students today were born in the early to mid 80's, it is a thrill to watch the episode of the year you were born. However, it is much better to watch the latter half of the decade's episodes since you are more apt to remember the subjects.

The success of "I Love the 80's" has given way to a deluge of spin-offs. First, there is "I Love the 70's", which is exactly the same as its sister but for the disco decade. Then there is "I Love the 80's Strikes Back". For those who just can't get enough of the 80's, this is a second pop culture tour, mentioning bits and pieces previously missed. Finally, "I Love the 90's" is in the works, slated to debut later this year.

The madness does not stop there. Looking for instant nostalgia? According to VH1.com, "if 'I Love the 80's had a baby, 'Best Week Ever' would be the child." This show is VH1's latest creation, and like its parent, features little known celebrities poking fun at the week's pop culture developments and major news items. Take pride in that every subsequent week is the "Best Week Ever," so really, who can complain if every week is the best? It makes the news fun for our feeble American minds.

New episodes of the "Best Week Ever" premiere Friday nights at 11 p.m., and subsequently rerun constantly. "I Love the 80's" and all the other various incarnations repeat all the time too, so check VH1.com for actual times.

Ryan Aubert is a Collegian Columnist.

RETURN OF TERROR

Depp and 'the Dead' revive vintage horror

DAWN OF THE DEAD PHOTO BY JUSTIN LUBIN © UNIVERSAL/ SECRET WINDOW PICTURE COURTESY COLUMBIA

Quality horror films, "Dawn of the Dead" and "Secret Window" opened to frightened theaters this weekend.

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

It's no secret that mainstream horror movies have long ago lost their ability to chill. They've been watered down to cater for the teen matinee market so much that when you see a balking mad slasher like Michael Myers, he's rendered as scary as a third-grader in a Halloween mask (and a cheap one at that.) Even Freddy Krueger, the demonic nighttime boogeyman, was turned into a sociopathic comedian; "Freddy vs. Jason" — in which Krueger squared off against Jason Voorhees, the ultimate stone-faced madman — was less a scary film than a hooting, hollering theme park ride.

'Secret Window'
Directed by David Koepp
Starring Johnny Depp John Turturro
Columbia
Rated PG-13
97 mins.
Grade B

"Secret Window," in which Johnny Depp battles a menace in the wilderness, and "Dawn of the Dead," a remake of the 1978 zombie classic, have both attempted to prove that even a Hollywood studio can make a horror film right. These films couldn't be more different — one is a PG-13 friendly backwoods psycho-thriller and the other is a blood-spattered, big-budget gut-muncher — but they both have their moments of shuddery terror.

"Secret Window" is based on a novella by Stephen King and it's one of those pulp suspense melodramas — like "Misery" and "The Dark Half" — that revisits the author's pet theme of writers in trouble. The writer here is Mort Rainey (played by Depp in tousled, dirty-blonde, Cobainesque hair) a successful novelist wallowing away in self-pity after catching his wife (Maria Bello) in bed with another man (Timothy Hutton.) Rainey spends his days sleeping in a ratty bathrobe on the ratty couch in his wooded, lakeside vacation cabin, subsisting on a diet of Mountain Dew and Doritos. His favorite activity is in having an interior dialogue with himself.

Rainey is shaken out of his reverie by the arrival of John Shooter (John Turturro) a South ern-fried hick in an Amish cap with an accent as ripe as a yellow banana. Shooter stands on Rainey's doorstep accusing the author of plagiarism. "You stole my stooreeee" Turturro drawls to convey menace (it works) and hands Rainey a manuscript all-too-similar to one of Rainey's short fictions. Did Rainey steal Shooter's story? Or is Shooter a nutcase stalker? The questions pile up — they're pretty easy to answer — but it's obvious that this won't be the last we see of Shooter.

"Secret Window" has its share of dead bodies and last minute twists, but it's safe to say that it's not a film that breaks new thriller ground (I wouldn't read the story before the movie.) The writer-director, David Koepp, has written a couple of decent thrillers in the past ("The Trigger Effect" and the great supernatural mystery "Stir of Echoes") and he knows how to give a movie the extra charge. Here, he does that by giving Johnny Depp free range. The movie may have its moments, but it's also not a very scary one; there's no real sense of building dread here.

It is a consistently watchable lightweight horror yarn, stylishly made (dig that shuddery Phillip Glass score) and it's given a jolt whenever Depp is on screen. As in "Pirates of the Caribbean: The Curse of the Black Pearl" and "Once Upon A Time In Mexico," Depp's performance — a bravura, symphonic series of tics and twitches and deadpan comedy — elevates the material. Turturro, as the redneck stalker, plays off Depp's opera beautifully (Bello and Hutton aren't given nearly enough to do.) "Secret Window" may not be one of the better King films to come along in awhile, but it's a film really owned by Depp and his offbeat charisma.

'Dawn of the Dead'
Directed by Zack Snyder
Starring Sarah Polley Ving Rhames
Universal
Rated R
100 mins.
Grade A

Zombies, with their rotting limbs and single-minded insistence, always used to be shambling, shabby ghouls – undead monsters with the knotty, blundering grace of a severe arthritic. It's one of the singular appealing things about zombies that their pursuit of human prey was done with an awkward, stop-and-go shuffle. Today, in the pumped-up environs of blockbuster Hollywood, such a clumsy creature of hell would never fly. Modern zombies run, jump, chase and even swim with the rabid, hyper velocity of a steroidal athlete. In

See HORROR on page 7

EMILIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

'Hey, hey what's going on here?'

Dennis Haskins, a.k.a Mr. Belding from the television show 'Saved By the Bell' spoke last night at the Campus Center Auditorium. The event was put on by the Student Activitities Leadership Center.

McKay can not keep listeners away

New singer's first album scores with an eclectic sound

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"Get Away From Me" is the most assured, confident album from a veteran whose varied inspirations and eclectic musical interests have coalesced into a fascinating, entertaining and often wondrous whole. After a long and fruitful career, here's an album in which the artist's musical maturity and quirky inventiveness have come together to realize every ambition that has been strived for. It's quite possibly the most striking effort put out by said artist to date.

Nellie McKay
'Get Away From Me'
Columbia

At least, that's what it sounds like.

"Get Away From Me" is actually the ambitious, eccentric and jaw-dropping debut of Nellie McKay, a 19-year-old musical whiz whose startling scope and bravura belie the girl's adolescence. This teenager whose sheer verve, charm, wit and adventurousness should shame every plastic teen-pop wannabe who's wandered onto MTV in the past five years has put out an album.

Inevitable comparisons will try to match McKay with Norah Jones, the smoky voiced chanteuse whose lounge-bar jazz has unexpectedly found suit with Top 40 listeners. It's a comparison that's both apt and devastatingly myopic in its flat, dubious, shorthand assertions. On the surface, McKay can come off like a Jones redux: all sultry, midnight-at-the-jazz-bar crooning and tinkling, easy-does-it piano. But there's none of the dull, claustrophobic tastefulness of Jones for McKay. Instead, this free-wheeling gal has fun spinning off on broad, bracing musical tangents that plumbs the depth of numerous disparate genres: pop, rock, hip-hop, cabaret, showtunes, you name it. There isn't a musical tchotchkie that McKay doesn't want to lay her hands on.

And wonder of all wonders, it all works. McKay lays waste to Jones' boringly classy music with a vibrant, satirical glee, but that doesn't mean she sinks to juvenile, parodic pandering; just because you're "maturing" pop doesn't mean you have to stifle your sense of humor. "Get Away From Me" (the title is a delightfully sardonic dig at Jones' debut) has a spirit of playful creativity coursing through its veins, even when it's at its most "traditional."

McKay has a knack for witty, innovative satire and off-the-cuff humor that one wishes more of the overly earnest modern pop pack would be able to coax out of itself. But since most popsters and rock stars seem more at ease with simplistic, heavy-handed "sincerity," McKay's delightfully droll humor stands out even more.

But just because McKay is wacky does not mean that she's surrendered to irony or post-modernism. No matter what style the girl finds herself reveling in, she displays a genuine respect and affection for it. She stumbles through genres with child-like abandon, picking up bits and pieces that she admires along the way, but she mish-mashes her influences together in a way that sounds natural rather than schizophrenic.

McKay hops from bouncy showtune-pop that wouldn't sound out of place on the Broadway stage to lush cool-jazz even on to a fairly convincing rap on the clever, wordy "Sari." Not for nothing have other sources compared her to Eminem, whose way with a barb has lead him to become the most popular and influential of current hip-hop artists. McKay may just be the point where Marshall Mathers, Norah Jones and Randy Newman meet.

McKay uses her tongue-firmly-in-cheek humor to address a raft of social issues over the course of her double-disc set (don't worry folks, there's only eighteen tracks spread over both discs, with a cumulative running time of about an hour.) A typical refrain goes something like this: "Mister Bushie says/ I'm your president/i have lots to say/hey hey hey/and click goes the remote/ there you have my vote."

"Sari," the albums best track, addresses the issue of self-image and how it's perceived, both as a woman and as someone following for a personal muse. Phen-phen, and the Oxygen Network are among McKay's targets in a tongue-twister of a song that

COURTESY NELLIEMCKAY.COM

McKay blends genres ranging from rap to pop.

New horror films filled with real scares

HORROR from page 6

movies like Danny Boyle's vivid, grainy, apocalypse-in-London thriller "28 Days Later" or the forceful new update of "Dawn of the Dead," the zombies don't stumble after you — they come at you with brutalizing force.

The new director of this "Dawn," Zack Snyder, is one of those young gun filmmakers who worship at the altars of Craven, Carpenter and Romero. They know all too well the grammar of modern horror cliché, the formula pieces that no longer really goose the audience. There's the false scare, followed by the real one; the shooting gallery of eclectic victims-to-be; the jittery, slashing Bernard Hermann-esque score. Snyder, however, can shuffle and rejigger these pieces with uncanny precision. This "Dawn of the Dead" is a genuinely jaw-dropping, nerve-frying mercenary thriller.

The movie comes thrashing at you even before the opening credits role. The pretty, wide-eyed young nurse Anna (Sarah Polley) goes home to her husband and wakes to a suburban Armageddon. After she flees her raging husband (he was bit by the little zombie girl next door,) we see the streets of Milwaukee through Anna's eyes: the blistering fires, careening cars and flesh-eating horrors. It's a jolting opening gambit and the movie, to its credit, never lets up on the jolts. "Dawn of the Dead" is a movie that is almost top-heavy with suspense. Snyder wrenches the audience through one tense sequence, and before we've even had a chance to catch our breath he plops us right into the middle of another one. Here's a filmmaker who knows how to set his audience on edge.

Anna meets up with a group of survivors, who proceed to take refuge in a glittering, luxurious shopping mall. Snyder isn't as pre-occupied with satirizing consumerism as George Romero was in the original, but that hardly matters. The movie is stocked with actors like Polley who brings a winning angelic sympathy to Anna, and Ving Rhames, who knows how to use his slow-burn glare to optimum effect. The fantastic Jake Weber, as family man turned hero, gives his character an edge of romantic stoicism, while Mekhi Pfeifer gets at the conflicting torments of a troubled young man attempting to do right by his unborn daughter. Even smaller roles – the jerky millionaire Steve (Ty Burrell, with unctuous, dripping sarcasm) and tough security guard C.J. (Michael Kelly, who gives his character a believable arc) – are ideally cast.

The movie, at times plays like a videogame – a sort of kin to soulless junkers like "Resident Evil" and "House of the Dead" – but it's a videogame-movie made with skill and care. There's a streak of delightfully morbid dark humor here – the survivors pick off celebrity look-alike zombies in the street to stave off boredom – and Snyder displays a knack for the kind of hip, offhand musical taste usually seen by your Andersons and Tarantinos (the plaintive drawl of Johnny Cash is heard over the opening credits and who could resist the cheeky, lounge-bar cover of Disturbed's barrel-chested metal anthem "Down with the Sickness"?) He also knows a thing or two about crafting a shot; there's a spectacular overhead view of a bland, faceless suburbia and another of a sea of undead converging on an escaping van. There's even a fun, witty homage to another classic horror flick over the end credits – it may be the first time its worth staying all the way to the bitter end.

Snyder and his inventive screenwriter, James Gunn ("Scooby-Doo" – who would have thought he had this in him?), were smart enough to keep exposition to a minimum; it works to keep the audience in a perpetual state of shock. Like "The Fly" or "The Thing," this "Dawn" is the rare genre remake to actually honor it's original. It's also the rare horror movie that can weave a shivery spell on the audience.

COURTESY UNIVERSAL

The token crew of survivors in 'Dawn of the Dead' take refuge in a shopping mall, while hordes of undead wait outside for a taste of living human flesh.

McKay raises the bar by mixing up pop music

MCKAY from page 6

would probably leave Em gasping for breathing.

From attacking the hypocrisy of image, McKay launches into a song like the jubilant "Ding Dong," which wouldn't sound out of place in a Debbie Boone album. And on and on it goes, with McKay appropriating a funky blax-ploitation groove on "Baby Watch Your Back," skewering preening male insincerity on "It's A Pose," or tossing off a couplet like "yeah, I'll have my coffee black/ oh look, we're bombing Iraq" on "Toto Dies."

A thriving techno beat underscores "Waiter," while a staccato march kicks off "Change the World" before the song lapses into a poppy Caribbean beat and then into a piano driven chorus and back into a march. All the while McKay sings about self-discovery.

Players, marriage, the Iraq war, even cloning all come out of McKay's tumultuous inner world, rendering her lyrical and thematic ambitions as large and all-encompassing as her musical ones. Remarkably, McKay has the talent to keep "Get Away From Me" from falling apart in the ash-heap of failed pretensions. That's because McKay uses her quirky, bold, wide-ranging, gorgeous voice as glue to hold it all together.

In an age in which plastic, airbrushed pop stars rule the radio, when more talk is spent on Janet Jackson's breast or Britney Spears' image than on the music they make, it's more than refreshing to find a young singer with has much skill and a willing to experiment such as McKay. By visiting a long-forgotten past and bringing it into the 21 century, Nellie McKay has returned pop music to its long-lost glory. That's more than exciting. That's a miracle.

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.

✓ Taught by Working Bartenders
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job

Credit Cards Accepted

SPECIAL OFFER Only $199 Before April 2nd

Learn to bartend in a weekend!

Call now! Space is limited!

1-800-U-CAN-MIX

www.universitybartending.com

Write for arts! Email us at arts@daily-collegian.com

BUCCI HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256.0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586-0155

UMass Boston

Building Success
SUMMER 2004 AT UMASS BOSTON

If you're thinking of taking college courses this summer, UMass Boston should be at the top of your list. We offer outstanding instructors, small classes, a large selection of courses and scheduling options, and a pleasant harborside location featuring our new Campus Center (pictured above). If you want to take your learning experience beyond the classroom, check out our international programs, field study opportunities, and courses on Nantucket.

- Over 500 undergraduate and graduate course sections in over 70 subjects
- International programs in China, Ireland, Mexico, Belize, and Cuba
- Art and science courses on Nantucket
- Courses scheduled mornings, afternoons, evenings, and online
- Summer sessions start in early June and mid-July
- Campus is easily accessible by car or T

UMASS BOSTON
Registration starts April 5
To learn more, visit www.umb.edu or call 617.287.6000

NEED A SUMMER JOB IN AMHERST?

University Conference Services is currently accepting applications for FULL and PART TIME SUMMER EMPLOYMENT for Summer Conference Housing

Pick up an application package at Conference Services Office, 918 Campus Center, or online

www.aux.umass.edu/conferenceservices

Completed applications are due by 5pm, April 9, 2004

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Brett Garber, grandson of former UMass coach Dick Garber, scored his second goal of the season with 30 seconds remaining in the first half.

UMass crushes Sacred Heart to snap three-game losing skid

MEN'S LAX from page 10

It was Garber's first goal on the field named for his grandfather, legendary UMass coach Dick Garber. The freshman from Avon, Conn. scored his first collegiate goal against North Carolina in Baltimore on Feb. 28.

Other than the four-goal spurt from the Pioneers, the game was a strong contrast to the other six games the Minutemen have played this season. There was very little time when UMass didn't have full control of the game, and the attack in particular was much more composed. The Minutemen entered the game averaging nearly 42 shots, but took 38 against the Pioneers. Most of those shots were on or near the net.

"We asked our guys to concentrate on getting the balls on goal, and they went in," Cannella said. When balls go in, you're not taking four or five shots on every possession. Fortunately for us, we finished fairly well in the first half.

"I don't care how many shots we take, if we can score 10 or more goals, we're going to be in pretty good shape."

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON

Make Nantucket Your Campus

Fall 2004

This fall, if you're ready for an adventure that goes beyond the classroom, surround yourself with the history, literature, and biogeography of Nantucket's unique island environment in UMass Boston's "Semester on Nantucket" program

Offering twelve undergraduate credits, the Semester on Nantucket will be an unforgettable one, combining academic excellence with enriching personal experiences, as you explore one of New England's most distinctive places

- Multidisciplinary curriculum team-taught by UMass Boston faculty
- Field station serves as an island laboratory, with dunes, ponds, beach, salt marsh, and well-equipped classrooms and labs
- Stay in furnished two-bedroom apartments near the center of historic Nantucket town
- Program runs on Nantucket mid-September to mid-November, then concludes with two weeks online

UMASS. BOSTON

For information, contact Kathy FitzPatrick:
617.287.7913
kathleen.fitzpatrick@umb.edu
www.ccde.umb.edu

Change your mind this summer:

- Get the Gen Ed courses you need
- Enjoy smaller class sizes
- Keep on track for graduation
- Choose from over 200 courses and degree programs
- AND take 6 credits or more and we'll waive the registration fee!

Watch for our money-saving coupon in your mailbox.

umass.edu/contined
413-545-2414

stay.

UMassAmherst
Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.

UM posts 3-5 record in Florida

BASEBALL from page 10

timized by clutch late-game hitting by the opposition on Saturday as well, as the University of Northern Iowa broke a five-all tie in the top of the last inning of an abbreviated seven-inning game when John Winter's single to center drove in Sean LaCoste and Armando Lara to give the Panthers a 7-5 victory in Bradenton.

Junior closer Scott Ratliff took the loss after coughing up five hits and two runs in an inning of work, while junior right-hander Mike Crane started and was also roughed up for nine hits and five runs over three and 2/3.

Senior tri-captain Mike Athas paced UMass offensively with three hits and a run batted in.

On Friday, UMass relied on its own offensive arsenal to put the game away early, as sophomore catcher Frank Curreri's first inning grand slam helped pace the Minutemen to an 11-5 win over Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

Junior leftfielder Curt Szado added two hits of his own as well, while sophomore righty Matt Torra threw seven strong innings, scattering nine hits and striking out six for his second win of the season.

Thursday saw the Maroon and White bats present early and often, as Reynolds clouted a pair of homers and had three RBI in a 15-3 pasting of Wright State.

Junior rightfielder Jason Twomley and senior third baseman Adam Stojanowski both chipped in with three hits, with the latter also collecting an RBI, to lead an offensive arsenal that included six players collecting multiple hits.

Sophomore right-hander Jeremy Demers started and earned the win, tossing seven innings of seven-hit, three-run ball while striking out six and retiring 27 of the 30 batters he faced.

In perhaps their most impressive victory of the trip, the Minutemen rode a 10-inning, complete game performance from senior right-hander Eric Chown to outlast the University of Iowa 4-2 on Wednesday.

In earning his second win of the season, Chown scattered eight Hawkeye hits and surrendered just one earned run while striking out three. The Atlanta Braves draftee was named Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week for his efforts.

Curreri posted two hits, including the eventual game-winning RBI double with two outs in the 10th.

Things did not begin well down south for UMass, however, as South Florida swept a three-game series by scores of 8-5, 11-4 and 7-5 in Tampa.

Minutewomen to face intra-state rival BU player to watch for USA Softball Player of the Year.

SOFTBALL from page 10

Thus far, she has fallen into a bit of a slump. Her .218 average in '04 is more than 130 points below her career average of .347, and has just three stolen bases and one RBI on the season. Things could be looking up for the senior, as she ranks fourth on the team in hits (12).

Joining Molinari and Franke on the offensive will be junior Hilary Puglia (.274, 17 hits, five doubles, five RBI), sophomore Katie Jo Kelley (.264, five home runs, 16 RBI, .604 slugging pct.) senior Jamie Cahalan (.240, 12 hits, eight RBI), and freshman Amanda Morin (.208, three stolen bases).

They will be up against a tough Terrier pitching squad. They will be led by freshman ace Ashlee Freeman. Earlier in the week, she was named the America East Conference's first Rookie of the Week for the 2004 season. Over 14 complete games and 96.2 innings pitched, she has compiled a 2.61 ERA to go with her 6-9 record and one save.

In 2003, the Minutewomen edged by the Terriers 3-2. Brandi Cross hit a sacrifice fly to bring home the winning run in the bottom of the seventh for the Minutewomen, their 51st consecutive home victory at the time.

Nelson, Okafor headline All-America teams

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

There's no debate when it comes to Emeka Okafor and Jameer Nelson. They're unanimous All-Americans.

The stars at Connecticut and Saint Joseph's led The Associated Press men's college basketball All-America team yesterday, the first time since 1985 more than one player was chosen by every voter.

"It is hard to express just what it means to be recognized as one of the best players in the country," Okafor said. "Individual recognition like this is really a reflection of the great teammates and coaches that I am fortunate to work with every day."

Okafor, a 6-foot-10 junior center, and Nelson, a 5-11 senior guard, earned a perfect 360 points by being picked on all 72 first-team ballots by the same media panel that votes on the weekly poll.

Each member selected three All-America teams, with players receiving points on a 5-3-1 basis.

Lawrence Roberts of Mississippi State was third with 308 points, while Josh Childress of Stanford had 233, and Ryan Gomes of Providence completed the first team with 208.

In 1985, four players were unanimous choices: Patrick Ewing of Georgetown, Chris Mullin of St. John's, Wayman Tisdale of Oklahoma, and Keith Lee of Memphis State. But only 10 people voted then.

"This is obviously a testament to both players to be unanimous selections," Saint Joseph's coach Phil Martelli said. "That is a lot of respect to be shown, and in neither case was it about hype. These two deserved it."

Nelson, the Atlantic 10 player of the year, led the Hawks to a 27-0 record and No. 1 ranking before they lost to Xavier in the quarterfinals of the conference tournament. It was the longest such run since UNLV entered the 1991 NCAA tournament undefeated.

"It's as much about my teammates and the coaches as it is about me," Nelson said. "I share the award with them and appreciate everyone who watched Saint Joe's all year."

Nelson is the first All-American for Saint Joseph's, and he leaves as the school's career scoring leader with more than 2,000 points. He averaged 20.6 points, 5.0 assists and 4.6 rebounds, while shooting 49 percent from the field, 39 percent on 3-pointers, and 80 percent on free throws.

He and Delonte West were considered the best backcourt in the nation; their defense was praised as much as their offense.

Nelson is "the greatest player to ever wear a Saint Joe's uniform," Martelli said.

Okafor collected a hat trick of awards in the Big East. He was the player of the year, defensive player of the year, and the league's scholar-athlete for the second year in a row.

He averaged 18.1 points, 11.7 rebounds and a nation-leading 4.3 blocked shots while shooting 60 percent from the field. Okafor, who will graduate in May, missed three games, including two in the Big East tournament, with back spasms related to a small stress fracture.

"He's does so many things that don't appear on a stat sheet," Huskies coach Jim Calhoun said. "With his defensive presence, he changes the game more than any player in college basketball.

"Both Jameer's and Emeka's teams are in the 'Sweet 16,' and they have won 59 games between them already. Obviously, Jameer's the best guard in America, and Emeka's the best big guy in America. They are the two best players in America, and this is a terrific honor for both kids."

From 1986-03, there was a total of only seven unanimous selections: Walter Berry of St. John's (1986), David Robinson of Navy (1987), Christian Laettner of Duke (1992), Glenn Robinson of Purdue (1994), Tim Duncan of Wake Forest (1997), Elton Brand of Duke (1999), and Jason Williams of Duke (2002).

Okafor, Connecticut's first All-American since Richard Hamilton in 1999, and Nelson are the only players on the first team still in the NCAA tournament. Mississippi State and Stanford lost in the second round; Providence was upset in the first round.

Roberts, a 6-9 junior who received 49 first-team votes, was the Southeastern Conference's player and newcomer of the year. He transferred this fall from Baylor after that program's problems, which included the murder of a teammate.

"From Day 1, he was never concerned about Lawrence Roberts," Bulldogs coach Rick Stansbury said recently. "He didn't ask me about playing time. The most important thing to him was winning a championship. That told me a lot about him and about this team. That's what we're all about. He fit in perfectly."

Mississippi State won its first SEC regular-season title since 1991, and Roberts averaged 17.1 points and 10.2 rebounds. He is Mississippi State's first All-American since Bailey Howell in 1959.

Childress, the Pac-10 player of the year and Stanford's first All-American since Casey Jacobsen in 2001, missed the first nine games of the season while recovering from a stress fracture in his left foot. The 6-8 junior swingman averaged 15.8 points and 7.5 rebounds, helping the Cardinal get to 26-0 before losing their last game before the conference tournament. He had 34 first-team votes.

Gomes, a 6-7 junior forward, joined Okafor as a unanimous all-Big East selection after averaging 18.6 points and 9.3 rebounds. He is the Friars' first All-American since Marvin Barnes in 1974. He had 24 first-team votes.

This is the fifth straight year at least two players from the same conference were selected to the first team.

Devin Harris, the Big Ten player of the year from Wisconsin, received 180 points and was joined on the second team by Julius Hodge of North Carolina State, Luke Jackson of Oregon, Andre Emmett of Texas Tech, and Blake Stepp of Gonzaga.

The third team was Chris Duhon of Duke, John Lucas of Oklahoma State, Hakim Warrick of Syracuse, Rashad McCants of North Carolina, and Wayne Simien of Kansas.

Okafor and Nelson were on the preseason AP All-America team, along with Ike Diogu of Arizona State (an honorable mention pick Tuesday), Rickey Paulding of Missouri, and Raymond Felton of North Carolina.

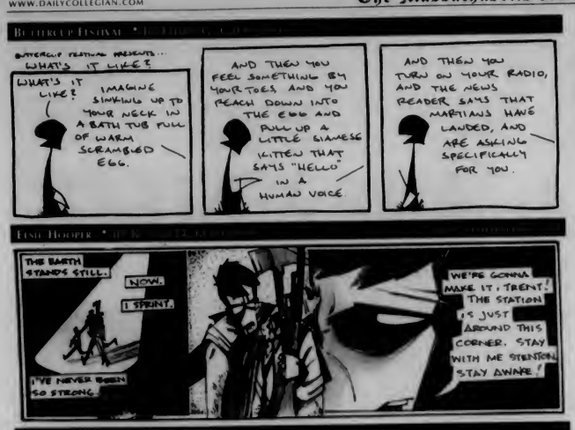
Summer Employment
Glacier National Park
Montana
Apply Today!
The Resort at Glacier, St. Mary Lodge
For information call
1-800-368-3689
Apply Online @ www.glacierparkjobs.com

You have options!

Everyone asking what your plans are after graduation?

Massachusetts School of Law graduates ACHIEVE!

Get the same edge that MSL graduates enjoy in almost every professional realm.



Law
Business
Government
Education
Healthcare
Law Enforcement

A Juris Doctor degree puts you ahead of the competition.

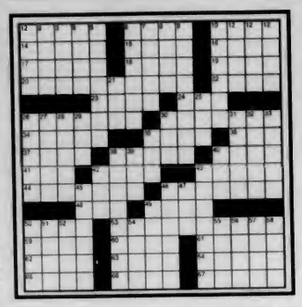
A Juris Doctor from MSL affords you the freedom of that competative advantage without the worries others suffer behind a mountain of debt.

Interested? Come check us out

MSL
Massachusetts School of Law
Woodland Park
500 Federal Street
Andover, MA 01810
(978)-681-0800
www.mslaw.edu

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



ACROSS
1 New World
5 Thicket
10 Bow and scrape
14 Lotsa welcome
15 Mine output
16 Bogus butter
17 Do a landscape
18 "Swan Lake" costume
19 Become a McEntire
20 Range feature
22 Net
23 Freeway stop
24 Coffee alternative
28 Rainy-day savings (2 wds.)
30 Helping
31 Lyric
35 Biology areas
36 — West (like vest)
37 Intuition
38 Bellyaches
40 La Mutta of boxing
41 Had dinner
42 Accrue interest
43 Lemon juice
44 Peter Jouvt
46 Twain's real name
48 Map abbr.
49 Hairdo
50 Furniture buy
53 Support (3 wds.)
56 Bullfighter's bard
60 Stun — gun
61 Deeds a life
62 Made a hole in one
63 Memorial Day event
64 Frightened fellows
65 Mitch Ilanero (Pooh)
66 Produces an egg
67 Excite moisture

DOWN
1 Dogpatch cartoonist
2 Jail
3 Speed up
4 City of Normacy (2 wds.)
5 Snitched
6 Playing a role
7 Over-Perque
8 Pledge
9 Chowhounds
10 Style
11 Bird of the wind
12 Spider traps
13 Actor — Beery
21 Fall behind
25 Pause fillers
26 Of ships
27 Paean sabrique
28 Like a refuge
29 Shirt accessory
31 Spellbound
32 Bucket of song
33 Lasha
35 Whitewater
36 Mine yielder
38 Mine yield
40 Tight spot
42 CPA giver
43 Makes a pit stop
45 Spock's mother
46 Placate
47 Pod top
48 Tool container
50 Smack
51 Killer whale
52 Wine and dine
54 Louise or Turner
55 Figurehead's place
58 Vip opposite
57 Wash. state: abbr.
58 Lie down

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!

WED. · Reggae Night
THU. · Special Brew
FRI. · Open Irish Seisiun
SAT. · Equalites

March Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Meat Lasagna
- Chicken Nuggets
- Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegan)
- Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegetarian)

DINNER
- Roast Turkey
- Fish & Chips
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 52
- Low: 35

THURSDAY
- High: 53
- Low: 39

FRIDAY
- High: 64
- Low: 43

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Glen Straub
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln
COPY EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Jen DiMeglio/ Molly Eggleston

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You don't need big words to express yourself. Four letter words will do the trick. .

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Stop trying, you'll never succeed so don't waste everyone's time.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Say happy birthday, especially to people named Kelly.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Travel far and wide. Who would travel short and narrow anyway?

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Lower your head and charge!

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Spring will only come by your wishing winter would stay.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
The Force is strong with you today.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Knock yourself out.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Ready made cookie dough isn't just for baking. It makes a great snack raw too.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Remember the sun block, you don't want to roast outside.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Go home. Now.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Good things are in your near future.

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"That's funny. I don't remember losing my memory."

-Mr. Belding

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Spank Me Spring Break Style Win $100 and make history if your spring break story is chosen as one of the 50 wildest for the book "Spank Me Spring Break Style" Tell your story . . . www.spankmespringbreakstyle.com

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact Campus Fundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Nissan Sentra 87,000 miles manual. Very good condition $900.00 549-3752

2000 Toyota Corolla Great Condition 4Door AC Automatic Stereo Cassette 83K $6,900 549-1150

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending Trainees Needed $250 a day potential. Local positions 1-800-293-3985 Ext516

Life Guards and Swim Instructors The Town of Amherst seeks qualified lifeguards and swim instructors. Lifeguards must hold current certifications including: Life Guard Training First Aid, and CPR. $8.16-9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week. Applications available from Amherst Leisure Services, Bangs Community Center, 70 Belwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

SUMMER JOBS! Help new students get off to a good start. Peer advisors needed for Summer Orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/week. Mid-May to mid-July. Applications in Pre-Major Advising 615 Goodell. Deadline April 16

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors- Town of Amherst Day Camps. The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, exp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. Old. $ range for both positions: $8.19 – 9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs. per week, June 21 to Aug. 20. Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept., Boltwood Walk, Amherst. (413) 256-4065 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer

EMPLOYMENT

Get hands-on legal experience with a legal assistant internship this fall. Work directly with attorneys and clients and earn 9 to 15 credits. No experience required. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office for an application, due 4/2. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Two job opportunities on Nantucket Island beginning in May. Office assistants with decent typing, computer and telephone skills. Some errand running. Salary + housing. Tele. 508-228-3942 or send resume to PO Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 or fax resume to 508-228-8778

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Local Business is hiring marketers Part Time $10-15/hr Call Alison @413-627-9043

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

FOR SALE

Like New: 4 Edge, crome rims 18" 5 Lug nuts, 4 Ventus HR11, Low-Pro tires- Asking $1100 Tom 413-527-2886

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes start soon!!! Call for information 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst, PhilosophyDialogue.net

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00 413-584-8857.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SUMMER SUBLET

1 bedroom Brandywine apartment starting June 1. $755/month negotiable - includes heat, water, cooking gas. Spacious, quiet with balcony and parking. 549-9489

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENTOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

WANTED

Math/Physics tutor available; $30/hour; $20/hour (travel); Call Dr. Kline (413-552-3805)

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Three headed for NHL

Mauldin, Pöck and Kuiper are bound for pros; Pöck scores first goal in first game as N.Y. Ranger

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Three members of the Massachusetts hockey are officially NHL-bound. Seniors Thomas Pöck (New York Rangers) and Nick Kuiper (Chicago Blackhawks) each signed contracts with their respective teams yesterday, and junior Greg Mauldin is expected to sign with the Columbus Blue Jackets today.

It didn't take long for Pöck to make his first mark, either. Wearing No. 22, Pöck scored his first NHL goal at 13:23 of the third period on a feed from Jamie Lundmark, in a 5-2 Ranger loss to the Pittsburgh Penguins at Madison Square Garden. Pöck was on the ice for 14:25, and took three shots, finishing the night at plus-one.

Mauldin, who was drafted by the Blue Jackets in 2002, has been told by the team that he will join the club Friday night for its game against the Anaheim Mighty Ducks at the Nationwide Arena in Columbus, Ohio.

"I've been anticipating this, and Greg and I have been talking," UMass head coach Don Cahoon said. "I told him that this could be the case when season's over. Columbus had indicated to me that they'd try to entice him to move in that direction.

COURTESY NEW YORK RANGERS

Thomas Pöck scored his first NHL goal in his pro debut.

"Obviously I'm tremendously pleased for Nick and Greg and Tommy. This really speaks volumes about the development of the kids in this program."

Pöck, a Hobey Baker Award finalist, joins a Ranger team that is six spots out of the last playoff spot in the Eastern Conference. They are 25-37-7-8 after last night's loss to Pittsburgh, and will not make the playoffs this year.

While it's unusual for a college player to be signed before the end of his senior year, it's not unprecedented. Last year's Hobey Baker winner, Colorado College's Peter Sejna, signed with the St. Louis Blues at the end of the college season, and played one game for St. Louis before the end of the NHL season.

Mauldin will have the next few days to prepare for his first game as an NHL player, but Pöck was thrown into the fire just four days after the Minutemen's stunning triple-overtime loss to Maine in the Hockey East title game on Saturday.

"That's a tall order," Cahoon said. "But it's one way of assessing his mettle, seeing how he can adjust to that stress, the hectic, crazy place where you could be going from club to club, minor to pro team in a day. It's about making the mental adjustment in addition to being physically prepared.

"I think Greg's got a more reasonable proposition in that he's got until Friday night to prepare. Tommy has a become a professional, b. traveled, and then be in a game, all in one day."

Mauldin is traveling to Ohio today to finalize the "player tryout" contract he will sign with the Blue Jackets. He was promised to play at least two games for Columbus, and no more than five.

However, the Blue Jackets have use for him beyond the NHL team, which also won't make the playoffs. Mauldin expects to be sent to Columbus's American Hockey League team, the Syracuse Crunch, sometime in the next week. The Crunch is preparing for a playoff run.

Mauldin will also rejoin Rick Nash, the former London Knight (Ontario Hockey League) who he joined on a line during Blue Jackets rookie camp after the 2002 NHL Draft.

"I played two years with Rick Nash," Mauldin said. "I know how good a player he is, and I know how hard he works, so I know what it takes to do well at that level."

Mauldin said he will finish classes at UMass over the summer, but wanted to get started on his dream right away. The NHL's Collective Bargaining Agreement with its players association runs out in September, and the expectation is that a lockout will be the likely response.

"I think the CBA is kind of forcing his hand," Cahoon said, "because during the process [of renegotiating the new CBA] the NHLPA decides to protect the established player, and take from the rookie in terms of what the [salary] cap is. I think that plays factor in [Mauldin's] thinking.

The junior from Holliston said that while he has some experience playing with professionals, the nerves will still be there when he takes the ice Friday night.

"Nervous? Yeah, I guess something might be wrong with me if I wasn't a little nervous. Still, it's just playing hockey. I've played with professional players in the summer, and I've been in Columbus's rookie camp. I have confidence that I'll do well."

UMass loses one of its brightest stars in Mauldin, who officially finishes his career at UMass with 48 goals and 46 assists for 94 points in 98 games.

"Clearly we're losing our best goal scorer," Cahoon said. "He might not have led this year, but had injuries and circumstance that were a factor, but he's a pure goal scorer. That's going to be a void next year, one which we won't instantly replace. It also speaks to fact that we've taken this young guy and he's turned himself into an NHL caliber player."

Kuiper is not expected to join the Blackhawks right away.

"I think their state of affairs is a little different, given the nature of their minor league team and the NHL club," Cahoon said. "I think they'd like to have him stay put, get involved in their rookie camps, and then look forward in the fall.

It's likely he would spend some time between the American League level, and hopefully the National Hockey League club."

For Kuiper, who was courted by at least two other NHL teams, it came down to a gut decision.

"They're changing things around, they told me that they're getting a lot of young guys, character players, so I thought I'd really fit in," Kuiper said of his new club. "I went with my gut feeling. I just go with what I feel is best. That's what I did with UMass, and that turned out pretty well."

Kuiper was the Minutemen's top defensive defenseman in his senior year with UMass, finishing with five goals and five assists, as well as a plus-one rating in all 37 games this year.

He said he will finish his degree at UMass this spring, before heading to Blackhawks rookie camp in July, and possibly trying out for the Hawks NHL team in their regular camp in September.

"It's been a dream come true," Kuiper said. "Since I was real young playing hockey, this is what I've dreamed of doing.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Nick Kuiper tri-captained the Minutemen in 2003-04.

I was skeptical until I realized it was final. It's still hard to believe, I'm so fortunate to have the opportunity to play beyond UMass.

I want to point out that the team going that far is what gave me the opportunity to get this far personally. I really thank the other guys that pushed as hard as I did. I was so proud of what UMass did, I'm really thankful to them for getting the opportunity."

The three players join current Washington Capital, and former Minuteman Brad Norton as UMass' representatives in the NHL. Norton played for UMass from 1994-1998, scoring three goals and three assists in 53 games in the maroon and white.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Greg Mauldin hopes to suit up for Columbus this weekend.

Minutewomen head to Boston University

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Currently riding a two-game win streak, the Massachusetts softball team (9-11) will head to Boston this afternoon in hopes of extending that stretch against the Terriers of Boston University (10-17).

The Minutewomen are returning home from a successful outing in Miami, Fla., where they captured the Blue and Gold Classic Championship on March 14 in an exciting, come-from-behind downing of Florida International.

Down one run going into their final at bat, Pam Sulick drove home two runs after a single to center was mishandled by the centerfielder and Jenna Busa retired the side to clinch the 4-3 win.

Busa was also named Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week earlier this week. In the past two weeks, the sophomore has gone 4-1 with an amazing 2.05 ERA in five appearances on the mound, including her first career no-hitter in a victory over Virginia Tech on March 13. She almost tallied a perfect game in that outing, allowing only a walk to the Hokies. She has gone 6-5 in 2004, and will be going for her seventh win against several strong Terrier batters.

For the Terriers, all eyes will be on junior shortstop Jamie Haas. The team's only hitter batting above .300 this season (.303), she leads the Terriers in runs (17), hits (23), doubles (three), stolen bases (five) and on-base percentage (.376). She also ranks second on the squad in walks (seven) and at bats (76).

The Terriers will look to first baseman Liz Alley (.276, 13 RBI, .534 slugging Pct.), outfielder Chiya Louie (2.50, five HR, 20 RBI), and pitcher/outfielder DeKenya Williams (.221, 12 RBI).

For UMass the hitting of freshman Candice Molinari is just one of the many ingredients in the Maroon and White's success. Presently batting .370, the former A-10 Rookie of the Week is the only Minuteman currently above .300. She also leads the Minutewomen in hits (20) and runs (nine). Molinari has also retained a perfect 1.000 fielding percentage though 2004.

Before the start of the season, senior Aisha Franke was named a

See SOFTBALL on page 10

Off the schnide

UMass halts losing streak at three games

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

There's nothing like a 12-goal game to snap out of a losing streak.

That's exactly what the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team got yesterday, using three goals from freshman Matt Tundo to beat Sacred Heart, 12-4, at Garber Field.

It was the Minutemen's first win in four games. Their last victory came on March 6 at Stony Brook, and they improve to 3-4 on the season. Sacred Heart drops to 0-6.

UMass	12
Sacred Heart	4

The win came at just the right time for the Minutemen, who were reeling after a trio of losses, including a 10-5 defeat at the hands of Brown Saturday. It was also the first time the Minutemen scored more than 11 goals since their 13-7 win over Hartford on March 2.

"It's a big win, right now any win is big for us confidence-wise," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "We talked a lot the last few days about playing together as a team, doing this as a team, having the same want and the same heart. The guys did a good job today."

Matt Tundo's three goals led the Minutemen, who were also helped by four assists from junior Gene Tundo. The Tundo brothers combined for seven points on the day, and connected for UMass' fourth goal, with 1:39 to go in the first quarter. Gene Tundo worked behind the net, with Matt trying to get free in front. He finally did, and Gene found him for a quick-stick shot that beat SHU goaltender Thomas Hind for the fourth of five unanswered goals the Minutemen scored to start the game.

"If we're going to be successful, our attack has to be successful," Cannella said. "Gene and Matt have been playing together all their lives, and it's great to see those guys connect in the game. Gene has been solid for us, and Matt as a freshman has scored a lot of goals for us, he's been very consistent."

UMass took off on a six-goal tear to begin the contest, and didn't allow a Pioneer goal until just past the six-minute mark in the second quarter. Ben Glamichael's sixth goal of the season started a 4-0 run by the Pioneers, but it was quickly snuffed out by the Minutemen.

Included in UMass' initial run was the game-winner, a hard shot from Neil Lundberg that was set up by a strong possession from Gene Tundo, who took the Sacred Heart defense for a ride behind the net before feeding Lundberg in front.

Freshman Brett Garber scored his second goal of the season with just 30 seconds left to swing momentum back toward UMass.

"I said that at halftime, that was a big goal for us," Cannella said. "That was huge, and that's something that helped us carry momentum into the third quarter."

See MEN'S LAX on page 8

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Matt Tundo paced the Maroon and White attack with three goals, while older brother Gene chipped in with four assists to help the Minutemen earn their first win in four games.

Baseball wins three over spring break

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Having swept a season-opening doubleheader from Rider in frigid Lawrenceville, N.J. on March 7 – victories No. 500 and 501 of head coach Mike Storrs's career – the Massachusetts baseball team headed south to Florida during the university's spring break period last week to compete in eight non-conference games prior to its home opener at Earl Lorden Field on Thursday.

Playing three games in three days in Tampa, Fla. before heading further south for the remaining five contests in Bradenton, Fla., the Minutemen were able to post a 3-5 record on the trip against stiff national competition, and even its overall record at 5-5 on the young season.

At IMG Baseball Academy in Bradenton on Sunday, the University of Miami-Ohio strung together six runs over the final three innings to erase a 5-2 deficit and hand UMass an 8-6 loss.

Junior first baseman Mike Ferris provided the biggest hit of the game for the Red Hawks, blasting a three-run homerun off of sophomore right-hander Jason Hickey in the seventh that game Miami a 6-5 lead, one they would not relinquish.

Senior second basemen Cullan Maumus and first baseman Matt Reynolds, along with sophomore centerfielder Doug Durepo all collected a pair of hits for the Minutemen, while sophomore right-hander Devin Barnett surrendered four runs on nine hits while striking out five in six-1/3 innings pitched.

The Maroon and White were also vic-

See BASEBALL on page 8

Jazz from another universe lands in Amherst
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Minutemen to face Hartford in home opener
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 105

Jack Wilson named UMass president

Board of Trustees votes 11-0 in favor

By Theo Emery
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — University of Massachusetts trustees appointed Jack M. Wilson as university president today, seven months after he took the job on an interim basis.

The board voted 11-0, with three abstentions, to appoint Wilson to the post vacated when William Bulger resigned amid controversy surrounding a congressional investigation into the FBI's ties to his fugitive mobster brother.

"It feels wonderful to have this job," Wilson said. "This job is so important to Massachusetts. I'm kind of honored, a little bit overwhelmed, by having the opportunity to do it."

The appointment was not seamless. Trustee Robert McCarthy, who lodged one of the abstaining votes, objected strongly to the board not being allowed to interview Wilson and the other finalist, Newton businessman Alan D. Solomont. Just before the board met, a search committee forwarded both names to the trustees for consideration.

McCarthy asked, shortly before the final vote on Wilson, to be able to interview both men. That motion was rejected 8-5, and the board went on to approve Wilson. Another trustee, James Mahoney, said he would have liked the search process to be extended a year, but the board did not vote on that proposal.

McCarthy said he was "astounded" that he was not allowed to talk to the two men before the vote.

"I'm very disappointed in the process. I was assured that (interviews) would be part of the process," he said.

Board Chairwoman Grace K. Fey, who praised Wilson in the earlier search committee meeting and during the trustees' meeting, said the search followed standard procedures, and that trustees who wanted information about the candidates could easily have gotten it.

"If they wanted to know additional information toward the end about these candidates, it was available," she said.

UMass did not release Wilson's salary. Spokesman John Hoey that it would be negotiated at a later date. Since succeeding Bulger as head of the five-campus UMass system, Wilson has been widely praised as an academic with a knack for politicking.

"Jack Wilson has shown he is a terrific president," said committee member Jess Kane. "Every month

See WILSON on page 3

Jack Wilson, newly named president of the University of Massachusetts, right, is greeted by UMass trustees Diane Moes, left, and Ned Dubilo in Boston, yesterday.

SGA applauds President Wilson; leadership expresses excitement

By Melissa Blankstein
Collegian Staff

The Student Government leadership exalted the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustee's naming of Interim President Jack Wilson as the new president of the UMass system at last night's Senate meeting.

"I'm pretty happy with Jack Wilson," SGA President Dave Carr said. "He's more down to earth than Billy Bulger was. I'm lucky he did not stick Whitey on me."

Bulger, the former president of UMass, was forced to resign in the fall due to political pressure concerning his brother, Whitey, who is a suspected mob criminal.

Jared Nokes, speaker of the Senate, explained that Wilson was also applying for a similar position at Worcester Polytechnic Institute. The trustees wanted to offer Wilson the job before WPI did. He said he thinks the Senate will endorse the new president.

"I like him a lot, he was extremely intelligent, and his resume is outstanding. There's no question that the past seven months have been a series of successes straight out of the president's office."

Nokes noted that Commonwealth College has a bigger budget, as well as the University as a whole.

"He came out to Boston only to come to our SGA meeting, and before the meeting he sat down with President Carr, [Associate Speaker] Chris Eckel, and myself for forty-five minutes just to talk. Then he came here and gave us an hour."

Student Trustee Hannah Fatemi is also excited about Wilson. She came into the Senate meeting straight from Boston at 9:30 p.m. to share the news with the Senate.

"You could feel the excitement in the room," she said of the trustee's meeting. "They are excited because President Wilson brings a lot to the table....All of his experiences, all of his connections...he's built a great rapport with the Governor and with the state and we need that."

"We have high expectations and he's been successful in the past," Fatemi said. "Now that he's officially in this position, we think he's just going to soar."

The first half of last night's senate meeting was very light. Nokes explained that this was due to everyone's commitment to the elections.

"We have a lot of tired individuals who are running campaigns. We have a lot of people who are extremely tired," Nokes said.

In fact, Nokes had to quiet the room with his gavel over 17 times during the first two hours of the meeting.

As the elections continue, there was some discussion of the Judiciary branch's actions before spring break. Nokes would comment no more than to say that "then I'm president," if the elections prove to be invalid.

Two weeks ago, the Judiciary offered and then retracted an injunction against the use of Instant Run-off voting (IRV). They will be holding a hearing to determine of the use of IRV is constitutional on March 30.

Attorney General Mark Morrison discussed the current SGA elections, as well. He filed an objection to the elections and is debating whether or not to withdraw it.

"Let's weigh the scales. A person who was elected or [Nokes]," Morrison said gesturing to show that student voice may be more important. "Rules are only rules sometimes, and running elections is one of the hardest things SGA does."

Elections for student body president and student trustee continue today. The voting stations are open from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and again from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m.

See SGA on page 3

EMILIE HOGGAN/COLLEGIAN

Senator Brian Roberts was one of the writers of the OAA charter proposed at last night's SGA meeting.

UMass orgaizations prepare for reproductive rights march

By Casey Novak
Collegian Staff

"Women's rights are human rights," comedian and actress Janeane Garofalo said last Tuesday, during a conference briefing on the March for Women's Lives, taking place on April 25 in Washington D.C.

More than 1,000 organizations including some of the most influential civil rights and women's rights groups will participate in the March for Women's Lives to protest what they believe is the government's intrusion on women's reproductive health and rights.

College and university students across the country as well as students from the University of Massachusetts will attend the march and speak out on current issues effecting women around the world.

"A key part of the march will be college participation," said Eleanor Smeal, president of the Feminist Majority Foundation, at the briefing. "We want to make this a historic march that makes it very clear that the overwhelming majority of this country supports women's health and reproductive rights."

The Everywoman's Center has been collecting information about the march and making that information available to the public, said Carol Wallace, director of the Everywoman's Center.

"We have been encouraging as many students and community people as possible to get involved," Wallace said. "It is an opportunity of a lifetime to be part of this really important and significant event."

Julia Segal, a senior at UMass, said she would be attending the march as a member of Civil Liberties and Public Policy program at Hampshire College. Segal is also involved with VOX: Students for Choice.

"I think it's very important to show that young people do care about women's issues," Segal said. "We can't just let women's lives be violated by taking away their reproductive rights."

Participants will march to ensure that women worldwide of all incomes, races and ethnicities can exercise their reproductive rights through access to safe abortions, birth control (including emergency contraception), reproductive and pre-natal health care, safe delivery and accurate sex education.

"This is about enlightened, progressive, intelligent forward motion as a people as a twenty-first century

See MARCH on page 2

Amherst elections open town representative seats to students

By Gabriel Dye
Collegian Correspondent

The town of Amherst's representative town meeting has 22 seats available to students living in the Southwest residential area of the University of Massachusetts, which comprises its own town precinct.

Any registered voter in Amherst is eligible to run for a position in one of his respective precinct's 24 seats in the 240-seat legislative body. Elections for membership, which ranges from one to three years in the Town Meeting will take place on Tuesday, March 30.

While the majority of the seats are currently full, Precinct 10, or Southwest, has 22 vacant seats: eight three-year term seats, eight two-year term seats and four one-year term seats. The term length does not affect the status or the duties of the member occupying the seat. The positions are uncompensated.

Anna Naciaszek, Amherst town clerk, admits that holding such a position for students "is a very large commitment." She said that if students can commit she encourages them to do so.

The town meeting will meet 10 to 13 times over the course of the spring, beginning April 28. The meeting recesses for the summer, and then reconvenes in the fall for another five to eight meetings. The meetings, held Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, start at 7:30 p.m. and typically last three hours, possibly running later if business matters have not been settled.

During mandatory meetings, members of the Representative Town Meeting vote on the town's legislative issues, including town by-laws, funding of the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority, police regulations, town conservation, civil rights, public safety and budget issues. Candidates must be willing to research and remain up-to-date on the town's administrative issues in order to properly vote.

Once elected, candidates have two chances to petition for either laws or changes in laws. Members may also propose amendments to initial petitions. All aspects of the petitions will be discussed by both the elected members of the meeting as well as by the public, as the meetings are open to the community. However, only members may vote.

If a member of the Town Meeting leaves Amherst, his seat will be revoked. If a member moves from the precinct, he may retain his position until the next annual election.

There is still time for students interested in running for a seat. The acceptance date for nomination papers, which place a candidate's name on the ballot, has elapsed. Therefore, those planning to run must do so as write-in candidates. So far, the ballot for Precinct 10 does not contain a single candidate for the town meeting, which means that anyone who chooses to run will be virtually unopposed. In fact, it is possible to secure a coveted seat with as little as a single write-in vote.

With only five days left before election day, speedy campaigning is recommended. While it may take place anywhere, it is advised that campaigning be limited to the Southwest area, as the write-ins of Amherst residents living outside of Precinct 10 will not count towards Precinct 10 votes.

On Election Days it is prohibited by Massachusetts' state law to display political paraphernalia within 150 feet of a polling location entrance. This includes lapel buttons, stickers and signs. Political solicitation is also forbidden.

Voting for residents of the Southwest area will take place in the Hampden Convenience Store lobby on Tuesday, March 30, between noon and 8 p.m. Students living in one of the other four sections of UMass may also campaign as write-in candidates in their respective precincts. Precinct three has one vacant seat; precinct nine has two seats; precinct two has two seats; precinct four has one seat.

Students concerned or curious about the condition and future of Amherst are encouraged to run for the Representative Town Meeting of Amherst.

For further information, visit http://www.town.amherst.ma.us/.

Every vote counts

Students line up to cast their ballots for the SGA president, trustee, and area government elections yesterday afternoon in the Campus Center.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantanatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
News Editor Ferron Salzitker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagatic
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallach
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Riggins
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Lisa Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editing Paige Crum
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilia Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is independently owned operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Alpha Life, became the College News in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been recognized since January 1994 for advertising, news and journalism excellence between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Ryerson speaks at Smith today

William Ryerson, president of Population Media Center, will present the lecture "Empowerment of Women Through Soap Operas" tonight at 8 p.m. at Smith College.

The lecture will take place in the Browsing Room in Nielson Library and is free and open to the public.

Ryerson has been producing soap operas to promote family planning and prevention of HIV in developing nations, with the soap operas used as a way to educate people on the positive effects of family planning in a non-confrontational way.

"The method of encouraging people on the use of family planning and HIV prevention has proven to be enormously successful and has helped to promote equal status for women," said Anita King, the population chair for the Sierra Club, an environmental organization with 750,000 members connected with the Smith College project Women and Social Change.

King said the population of the world is growing at a rate of 1.5 million people per week and 80 million per year, with a world population today of 6.2 billion.

"Population growth and consumption are directly correlated, meaning that more people equals more cars and more pollution, which is detrimental to our health even more so to our future children's health," she said.

— Rachel Gordon

Clarke testifies before federal panel

By Hope Yen
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush White House scaled back the struggle against al-Qaida after taking office in 2001 and spurned suggestions that it retaliate for the bombing of a U.S. warship because "it happened on the Clinton administration's watch," a former top terrorism adviser testified yesterday.

The Clinton administration had "no higher priority" than combatting terrorists while the Bush administration made it "an important issue but not an urgent issue" in the months before Sept. 11, 2001, said Richard Clarke, who advised both presidents. He testified before the commission investigating the worst terrorist attacks in U.S. history.

Clarke's turn in the witness chair transformed what has been a painstaking, bipartisan probe of pre-Sept. 11 intelligence failures and bureaucratic missteps into a nationally televised criticism of President Bush on the terrorism issue at the core of his campaign for re-election.

The White House redoubled efforts to undermine Clarke, the author of a recent book critical of the president.

Officials also took the unusual step of identifying him as the senior official who had praised the president's anti-terrorism efforts in an anonymous briefing for reporters the year following the attacks.

"He needs to get his story straight," said Condoleezza Rice, Bush's national security adviser and Clarke's boss while he served in the administration.

Former Illinois Gov. Jim Thompson, a Republican, took up the president's cause inside the commission hearing. "We have your book and we have your press briefing of August 2002. Which is true?" he challenged the witness.

Despite the flare-up, commission members worked later to distance themselves from the sort of partisanship that could undermine the credibility of the final report they are expected to release this summer.

J. Scott Applewhite/Associated Press

Richard Clarke, shaking hands with a Sept. 11 victim's wife, concluded testifying to the federal panel reviewing the attacks, yesterday, in Washington.

"Nobody has clean hands in this one," said former New Jersey Gov. Thomas Kean, a Republican and the commission chairman, referring to the Bush and Clinton administrations. "It was a failure of individuals. The question now is whether or not we learned from our mistakes."

Clarke began his appearance with an apology to "the loved ones of the victims of 9-11. ... Your government failed you. Those entrusted with protecting you failed you and I failed you," he added, as some relatives of those killed in the attacks dabbed at their eyes with handkerchieves.

Amherst College students visit Mexico city plagued by murder

By Ikaika C. Arnaido
Collegian Staff

Earlier this month, Juárez Activism, an Amherst College student group, went on a fact-finding delegation to Ciudad Juárez, Mexico, a city where over 380 women have been murdered in the past 10 years.

The delegation focused on the Mexican authorities' neglect of the murders of the 380 young women, and the way globalization has an impact on these murders.

"There ... has been no one convicted [of the murders]," Emily Silverstein, co-chair of Juárez Activism, said. "There has been over 370 murders and over 400 more women have gone missing."

The Activism group, while on the trip, spoke with victims' mothers, visited sites where the women's bodies were dumped, and attended a tribunal that included testimonies on the murdered and missing women.

Juárez Activism is working with Amnesty International and is planning on informing colleges around America about the "femicides" going on in Ciudad Juárez.

"What we're trying to do is set out on a national campaign so that more people will be able to ask questions of other colleges and see how other colleges have been organizing were also hoping to put together kits with different materials as to how to organize," Epiphany Marquez, co-chair of Juárez Activism, said.

"We're also working with amnesty on a conference that they're holding for the Western Massachusetts chapters, and were hoping to get more students involved in this issue. Where also going to present, at the Five College Women's Center, what we did on the delegation."

The murders in Ciudad Juárez have gone unsolved, but there are theories that drug cartels, sex slavery, young rich men seeking adventure, and/or corrupt police may be involved. According to Juárez Activism the Mexican police did not do an adequate job in preventing and solving these murders.

"The real big problem is the corruption and apathy of the [Mexican] police right now," Silberstein said. "The general prosecutor, kind of like the state general attorney, resigned while we where down there and he was the one that was considered to be the most corrupt, they found out he was involved with one of the drug cartels."

According to the group, murders are expanding to other parts of Mexico.

"The problem has actually spread," Marques said. "Juárez is the boarder town to El Paso, a city of Texas, now the murders have spread to Chihuahua City, the capital of the state [Chihuahua]."

See Ciudad Juarez on page 3

March set for next month

March from page 1

culture, as opposed to the great leap backwards which brings with it [U.S. Attorney General] John Ashcroft's subpoenaing of medical records, and gag rules, and antiquated, illegal back-alley abortion that disproportionately poor women and women of color are forced to seek out because they don't have the choice and privacy to make decisions about their own bodies," Garofalo said.

John Ashcroft has recently been demanding confidential medical records of hundreds of women from major cities around the country after lawsuits challenged the "Partial Birth Abortion Act" that President George W. Bush signed in 2003.

"It is between a woman and a doctor to decide what goes on with her body," Garofalo said. "And for John Ashcroft to start subpoenaing private medical records to further criminalize abortion is really something for all of us – men and women from all walks of life to be very concerned about."

The government is also currently reviewing a proposal that would allow emergency contraceptives to be sold without a doctor's opinion.

"If [emergency contraception] was available over the counter, I think over half the abortions in this country wouldn't be necessary," Smeal said. "Young people should be demanding that it be available."

Voting will also be stressed at the march, Smeal said, in order to get more young people registered to vote so their opinions can be heard.

"The fight is constant, it doesn't end with a million-man march," Garofalo said. "It's everyday and in every way that you are fighting the political machine and the white male patriarchy."

There has not been a march of this kind since 1992, when over 750,000 pro-choice activists assembled to protect abortion rights at what was the largest march and rally ever held in the nation's capital.

For more information about the march and to learn how to get involved, go to www.marchforchoice.org. Bus tickets to Washington D.C. for the march can be bought for $75 at www.ChoiceUSA.org/tix.

LAUNCH YOUR CAREER

Apply now for a
Legal Assistant Internship
at the Student Legal Services Office

*Serve the campus community while enhancing your resume
*Earn up to 15 credits working 36 hours a week
or 6 to 9 credits working 26 hours a week

Student Legal Services Office
922 Campus Center
(413) 545-1995

THE GUTHRIE THEATER

OTHELLO
◄April 2 & 3
America's flagship regional theater illuminates the dynamic, sensual text and themes of Shakespeare's masterpiece Othello. Join Minnesota's Guthrie Theater for this revetting story of passion, manipulation and betrayal and the company's first national tour in 20 years.

Wednesday, April 7
Rockapella

Tuesday, April 20
Miami City Ballet
Balanchine Centennial

Concert Hall at 8p.m.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER
For tickets: 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
www.fineartscenter.com

Fabulous Gift!
CLINIQUE Bonus is here!
With your Clinique purchase of $19.50 get this 7-piece gift, Free. Quantities are limited. Now thru Sun., April 4th.
Spring Gift
7-piece Gift
• Deliver-size Rinse-Off Foaming Cleanser
• Dramatically Different Moisturizing Lotion
• New Repairwear Day SPF 15 Intensive Cream
• Lash Curling Mascara - Black
• Soft-Pressed Powder Blusher Duo w/Brush - Pink Blush/Chestnut Blush
• Long Last Soft Shine Lipstick - All Heart
• Cosmetics Bag

Cedar Chest
ARTFUL FURNISHINGS · QUALITY LINENS · IMAGINATIVE GIFTS
Thornes Marketplace · 150 Main St., Northampton, MA · 413-584-3060

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING®
✓ Taught by Working Bartenders
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
Credit Cards Accepted
Learn to bartend in a weekend!
SPECIAL OFFER Only $199 Before April 2nd
Call now! Space is limited!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

Wilson elected to permanent position that goes by, his stature increases because he continues to do such a good job. He has what it takes to interact with politicians, academics and donors."

Wilson from page 1

Wilson was also named as one of three finalists for the presidency of Worcester Polytechnic Institute. Wilson refused to discuss whether he was a candidate for that position. But he said he had indicated to the trustees, without asking them to speed up the process, that he was "looking at some other opportunities, and it was very important to me so I could get on my life."

At the university's flagship campus in Amherst, students and faculty members were excited, but not surprised, that Wilson was picked.

"Just about everyone feels very positive about Jack Wilson," said Ernest May, secretary of the Faculty Senate. He has learned to walk the hallways of the Statehouse, but he also seems like one of us. He's very collegial with the faculty, and that is a very welcome trait."

Wilson has a doctorate in physics and a background as an educator, administrator and former president of a corporate training software company.

He was hired by Bulger in 2001 to create UMassOnline, which has reaped the university more than $21 million by allowing students about 11,000 students to take courses on the Internet.

Bulger resigned after months of criticism and a continuing congressional investigation into the FBI's ties to his brother.

Gov. Mitt Romney and Attorney General Tom Reilly were among his harshest critics. They said he didn't cooperate enough with the investigation of his brother and called him unfit to lead UMass.

"Whitey" Bulger was a prized informant for the FBI. He's been on the run since 1995 and currently is on the FBI's Ten Most Wanted List for his alleged role in racketeering, extortion, drug trafficking and 21 murders.

Solomont released a statement after the vote, congratulating Wilson.

"I wish President Jack Wilson success and I will continue to support UMass in every way I can," he said.

Three members of the 22-member board were nonvoting, and five were not present.

Gov. Mitt Romney praised the trustee's decision, saying that he has great respect for "the quality of his character, his intellectual capacity and his dedication to the University."

"I look forward to working closely with Jack and with the chancellors of the five campuses to take the University of Massachusetts to the next level," Romney said.

Amherst students investigate Ciudad Juarez murders

Ciudad Juarez from page 2

According to the Activism group, American businesses are in part responsible for the murders. The group feels that the "maquiladoras," corporations foreign to Mexico, force rural inhabitants to move into urban neighborhoods where the "maquiladora" workers live. According to Cristina Morales, Ciudad Juárez has seen a high population increase due to free trade.

"One of the speakers that we heard from was talking about how free trade has had an impact," Morales said. "So many of the people who used to live in the country are moving into the city, and that's part of the reason that Ciudad Juárez has gotten so overpopulated, and overpopulation is one of their big problems."

According to Silberstein there was a connection between the murders and the "maquiladora" workers.

"A lot of the women did work in the maquilas but not all of them," Silberstein said.

According to Silberstein, American businesses in Ciudad Juárez avoided the city's request to provide security to their workers.

"They recently sued the city government under NAFTA [North American Free Trade Agreement] provision 11, which states that the city can't do anything that would harm their trade, because the city asked them to put up street lights," Silberstein said. "The maquila owners sued the city because they didn't want to have to pay for street lights. So it's a really touchy area, but they are not at all invested into the city or into the lives of the workers."

American citizens familiar with the murders are trying to pressure congress to enact a bill to aid in cross boarder communication between Mexican and American authorities.

"The biggest thing that people in America are trying to push through is house resolution 466," Silberstein said. "[It aids in] getting communication across the border about missing persons and things like that. It's a very simple resolution, but purpose of it is to pressure the Mexican authorities and put some international heat on to the Mexican government."

The residents of El Paso are concerned about the murders. Marquez, a native of El Paso, says that there is a lot of anxiousness in the border city.

"A lot of people in El Paso actually have family in Mexico and mostly in Juárez," Marquez said. "Basically El Paso and Juárez are really dependent on each other socio-economically and so it does have an affect on El Paso. ... Family members over there and they worry about them."

The trip was an eye-opening experience that gave the group insight into the conditions of "maquiladora" workers. For Morales, the trip was much more than a fact-finding delegation, it was about mourning for a family ripped apart.

"To me that was the most moving part of the trip, because again it was just one family, one daughter," Morales said. "It was not about the statistics, it's not about anything like that, it was about the about the one family, the one mother, really, that lost her daughter that was 20 years old at the time."

OAA proposal causes debate

SGA from page 1

Students may vote at the dining commons and the Campus Center for the six presidential candidates and the three trustee candidates along with area government. The new term for the president and trustee starts April 1.

The Senate passed two motions that were variation of motions that Carr vetoed. The Senate did not pass any other motions.

The mood changed dramatically at the start of the debate on the new charter of the Office of ALANA Affairs (OAA).

Two amendments to the charter were brought up in the meeting. The first was to ask for the ALANA Caucus to appoint the faculty advisors to the advisory board instead of the vice chancellor of student affairs.

"The caucus has to recommend people," Senator Brian Roberts said against the amendment. He was one of the authors of the charter.

"What I foresee, what will happen is that if there are three spots on the board, they'll recommend five people to the vice chancellor. Do you think that the vice chancellor would say he didn't like those people and appoint his own? The Senate would be outraged...I see no downside at all."

"Every student I've talked to is uncomfortable having the vice chancellor appoint members to this board," said Senator Eduardo Bustamante as he argued for the amendment.

Director Nelson Acosta was at the meeting. He also spoke for the amendment.

"I've been at UMass for too long, for 25 years. I would like to tell you that in the history of the OAA there hasn't been any serious funding by the administration," he said.

He advocated that students did have a right to appoint faculty, unlike what some senators and Carr was saying.

This amendment passed. However, the debate over the second amendment quieted the Senators in disbelief and then anger.

It changed the charter to keep the student body president from appointing a student representative to the board from SGA.

During Senator Ayotunde Onikoro's debate, he discredited the Administrative Affairs Committee, the sponsor of the charter.

"I think the AA committee is pretty inefficient as it stands," he said. He cited that there are only five students on the committee — none of which are in ALANA — who rushed through the motion before all the members could be there.

Senator David Bettencourt shouted at Onikoro and his accusations that Administrative Affairs does not work hard.

"That's ridiculous, absolutely ridiculous. I have never allowed anything on my committee to be rushed. Absolutely not. I take that as a personal insult. Every issue, every bill that comes before my committee gets a fair shake," he said.

Nokes called for recess to cool down the room.

"If we don't consider it this week, we'll consider it next it. It may be good to take a week off considering the needless accusations," Nokes said during the recess.

The Senate lost quorum at 10:51 p.m. when the session resumed.

The Ways and Means Committee will begin creating the budget for next year on Friday.

On Monday, the SGA will hold the next Diversity Roundtable at 1 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center.

Emily Doogan/Collegian

SGA President David Carr speaks about President Wilson's appointment at last night's meeting.

Now is the time for
YOGA
Classes in Boyden 10

Mid-Semester Packages*!
1 class per week/7 weeks Only $35! SAVE $65!
2 classes per week/7 weeks $55!
*Special pricing offered through March 31, 2004

Class Schedule
(March 22 - May 6, 2004)
Monday/Wednesday
12:30 – 1:45 pm Flow Yoga (Level 1-2)
2:00 – 3:15 pm Gentle Flow (Level 1)
Tuesday/Thursday
1:00 – 2:15 pm Yoga Basics (Level 1-2)
2:30 – 3:45 pm Intermediate (Level 2-3)

To Register: UMass Yoga/Campus Recreation
Boyden 215 • 413-545-0122 • www.umass.edu/umrm

Pubs in London. Clubs in Spain.
Sleep it off on the train.
This ain't your parents travel agency. It's yours.

London.....$316
Paris.....$377
Guatemala.....$429
Air, accommodations & transfers
LONDON
5 nights, Beaver Hotel
From: $714
JAMAICA
Point Village in Negril, twin occup.
From: $782
One stop. No hassles.
We've got everything you need for your next trip.
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
Room 224 Campus Center Way
1 Campus Center Way
University of Massachusetts
(413) 256.1261
STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND

jostens®
Ring Day
Monday, March 29th 10AM to 4PM
Tuesday, March 30th 10AM to 4PM
UniversityStore CampusCenter

THE Choice for your class ring
If you can't make the Ring Day Sale
Call Jostens at: 800-854-7464
www.jostens.com

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS
Discount Discount
18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441
Featuring "Bud & Bud Light" $19.49
Busch & Busch Light $14.99 Wpk
Sierra Nevada Pale Ale $11.99 12pk bottles
Heineken $10.99 12/pk cans or bots
Harpoon (your choice) $5.99 6/pk
Jacob's Creek $5.99 750 ml.
Glenlwit Malt $28.99 750 ml.
Jameson Irish $18.99 750 ml.
Bushmills $18.99 750 ml.
Hennessy VS $14.99 750 ml.
Vodka 80 $5.99 Liter
Vodka 80 every day price $9.99 1.75 ml.
Hennessy V.S. $23.99 750 ml.

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 → Savings on eyeglasses from the on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 → A great place to get contact lenses
3 → Convenient hours and location
4 → FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 → Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, UHS Eye Care Services
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

Wiffle Rock
2-5 player teams
Medium pitch speed
MAY 1 & 2 @ TOTMAN FIELD UMASS
WIFFLEBALL TOURNAMENT
$1000 cash
FOR WINNING TEAM
Entry info--
www.wifflerock.com
Hotline 508-429-7093
Rock102 WAGY Springfield's Classic Rock

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Criticisms exemplify our most sacred right

One of the primary freedoms Americans enjoy is the freedom of speech. It is a freedom that is intrinsic to the American culture, and one of the most important aspects that sets America apart as a unique democratic republic. Free speech is one of the founding tenets of America, and its roots in American history run as deep as any other current institution.

The irony of free speech in America is that, while it is arguably the most important law of the land, it is also the most heavily debated. Free speech opens up avenues for news media, artists, and citizens all over the country to express their opinions, report facts, and add to our culture through that expression. At times, however, free speech also allows for extremist views to enter the mainstream, to disrupt our daily lives, and to spark sometimes unnecessary debate. It is when the latter occurs that free speech no longer becomes an American right worthy of general pride, but instead a battle line to be fought over in a never-ending debate of just how "free" speech should be.

There is also an intermediate example of the wonders of free speech, one that takes the benefits of news reporting, and the controversy of individuals who go against the grain, and combines them into the revealing look at what Americans often don't see — the inner workings of the U.S. government.

That is the case with former Bush counter-terrorism chief Richard Clarke, the latest in a series of former Bush Administration officials who have come forward and testified about the goings on behind closed doors at the White House. Clarke's new book, "Against All Enemies: Inside America's War on Terror," outlines the maneuvering done by the administration in the pre- and post-9/11 world of terrorism. The book's claims were exacerbated by Clarke's appearance on 60 Minutes, in which he vilified the Bush Administration for ignoring his warnings, and specifically President Bush's intense focus on angling the blame on former Iraqi president Saddam Hussein.

Clarke testified before the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States yesterday, not only continued to outline the deficiencies Clarke saw in the administration's handling of terrorist threats, but also brought the ire of the administration, which has attacked Clarke for using his position and his knowledge of the situation simply to promote his book.

The attacks from the White House aside, Clarke's testimony, interview, and book are a representation of all that is good and vital about the First Amendment. The book especially highlights the health of free speech in America, and it serves as a bold reminder of just what free speech is. The First Amendment isn't simply a tool for large news media organizations to wave as a banner of safety. It isn't solely for controversial artists to wrap themselves in as a security blanket from the moral judgment of others.

Finally, it isn't temporary, it isn't selective, and it isn't prejudiced. The First Amendment stretches to cover everyone, including those who dare to dissent from the wool-pulling politics of the current inhabitants of 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. Richard Clarke's book, and his willingness to speak out against the administration in the wake of the worst tragedy to strike America in over a half-century, is worthy of applause and support, and is also definitive proof that the First Amendment still holds significant value in the country that founded itself upon it.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board

Some pre and post-election advice

Jared Nokes

As the election for a new Student Government Association President enters its final stage, I feel compelled to offer some advice and criticism based on my experiences outside of my position.

Since I became the Speaker of the Senate last May, I have more clearly understood the role of the SGA in the University and the importance of having strong students in its leadership.

In an effort to inform the student body, the various media outlets on campus have primarily concentrated on two issues. These have been the alcohol task force recommendations and all things related to the ALANA controversies over the past year. Many of you may have noticed the similar responses by the candidates, which provide most voters without any knowledge of their differences. More importantly, they are not the primary focus of the job they are all competing for.

The SGA is responsible for annually distributing $1.7 million and overseeing the use of the money in its ten agencies and registered student organizations. This includes the office of ALANA affairs, student legal services, and commuter services which, among others, all employ professional staff. The President needs to be involved in these agencies. The President also needs to be the chief advocate of the entire student body to all levels of the administration including housing, parking, and academics. What is most important is that the President is available, effective, experienced, and proven to handle acting as the CEO of the student body.

I know Senator Bustamante, Chair Higgins, Secretary Long, and Attorney General Morrison all personally and professionally. With my knowledge of the individuals that are running, I have refused to support any candidate. From the inexperienced to the unorganized, from the arrogant to the anal-retentive, I am not convinced any of these candidates will be available to its staff and campus administration as well as be effective in its advocacy.

I suggest to the student body, that upon hearing the news of your new President, you write him with your concerns and complaints. Inform him of why you could possibly feel any hesitation in declaring our University the best choice you ever made, and encourage them on a path to make change.

Currently, all four of our advocacy agencies are missing professional staff, prices for housing and dining are increasing, programs are being considered and will likely be implemented against the wishes of students and the SGA is not keeping up. We need a quality President to turn this around right now, but I do not see any of them on the ballot. For all of you who think you can do the job, I encourage you to run for a Senate seat next year and help increase the authority of the SGA as a group whose approval shall be required for all fee increases, program changes, and major initiatives that affect undergraduate students.

When you do vote, should you decide to, I encourage you to look for a candidate with broad knowledge of the University, an extreme and almost sick allegiance to the SGA, a history of being effective, and a person who will stand by their beliefs. Barring anyone meeting that description … I guess you should probably vote for whoever is the closest. I wish you all the best of luck for this year and the next.

Jared Nokes is a UMass student.

When idolatry goes too far

Ben Feder

Music Television, please hand me a heaping plate of vanity. MTV has released a new show called "I Want a Famous Face." The gist is that people who want to emulate their idols go as far as getting plastic surgery to actually personify these pop icons.

Now I'm usually an optimist. I feel that our generation will fix the problems set in motion by the past, such as boy bands or japanimation, for instance. But when people are getting breast implants to have the same bust line as Britney Spears, I get nauseous. Literally, they showed the surgery. I thought I was going to throw up. When MTV said she paid $10,000 for the surgery so she could be "famous" as a professional Britney Spears impersonator, I got angry.

People can have idols — people they wish and aspire to become. They may even take their idolatry far beyond plastering their walls with their hero's pictures, to actually modeling their entire life around this one person. These are all fine and healthy ways to grow and mature into the real you. Taking medical measures to physically become your idol is not. It erases your identity and replaces it with a false, illogical, and completely delusional depiction and denies you a sense of reality.

They should have titled this show "Denial" because that's exactly what these people are going through. Except it's denial of a severe nature, causing these people to go under the knife. Don't believe it? Let's analyze.

The woman involved definitely resembled Britney Spears. However, so do countless other 20-year-old blondes and brunettes. But unlike the rest of these wannabes, she felt that her connection was special, seeing as her and Spears shared the same favorite color, blue, and that they both enjoyed going to Starbucks. Astounding!

What's the next step to take? First you'll need breast implants to fix those hideous things you call a chest and gain a bosom more becoming of a pop diva. Now $10,000 is a lot of money just for some phase you're going through while trying to figure out your real identity. So what prompted our hero to lob off her dirty pillows? Well her agent told her it would help further her career as a professional celebrity impersonator.

That's right, she hired an agent. Further more they booked her at a club where she and a Madonna impersonator would reenact their famous kiss scene at the MTV Video Music Awards. First of all, there is no such career as a professional celebrity impersonator, at least nothing that deserves this kind of airtime. Secondly, she got breast implants just so she could lip sync for 5 minutes and then make out with another woman much to the delight of a throng of young men who obviously didn't care who she wanted to be.

This scene made me seriously doubt her aspirations of emulating Spears. Her agent was definitely not taking this young woman's commitment seriously, and I suspect that the cameras they used were void of film. The agent even proposed the use of fake paparazzi outside to make people believe someone famous was performing at the club that night.

What caused my anger to spark was when she admitted that the larger and perkier breasts made her feel better and more confident that now she has truly risen to Britney Spearsdom. Also that this was the only way for her to truly succeed in life and would certainly boost her career. "People will now take me seriously as Britney Spears," she said. Well get ready guys, because she works birthday parties, bar mitzvahs, and bachelor parties.

This woman's idea of a celebrity impersonator is very different from mine. To me, a woman who gets breast implants to dance on stage and kiss another girl in a smoky club in front of sweaty, T-shirt clad men is a different variety of fame. She's a stripper.

At the end of the show, they showed her and the agent getting into a limo where she drove off to discover her newfound glory and fame in the land of silicon opportunity. Most likely to the agent's porn studio where she will spend her days singing, "Hit me baby one more time."

Ben Feder is a Collegian columnist.

Embracing a love of Israel

Gilad Skolnick

"The United States of America is a racist, cruel, evil dictatorship, which is oppressive and illegal and has murdered millions."

I don't really believe this, and if someone ever said that about this country, I'd have to stand up for it. If I was in Europe or Canada and there were people calling the U.S. a cruel evil dictatorship, I'd have no choice but to correct them. Now I don't believe the U.S. is perfect; the country has a long way to go to be perfect. In fact, I have many problems with domestic and international aspects of U.S. policy, but that does not make the nation an evil, oppressive, illegal nation.

Thus, I have such a big problem when someone decides to start calling Israel a cruel, racist, evil dictatorship. Israel is far from perfect and there are many issues that I disagree with. But last time I checked, we have yet to have a country on this planet that has reached perfection — not even Liechtenstein or Luxemburg can claim this. When Israel is criticized more harshly than any other country due to hatred rather than logic, something has gone amiss. When people who have never even set foot in Israel claim that it's an awful country and expect it to be a utopia, then something has gone wrong.

Ishmael Kalidi, who can be contacted through ishmaelkhaldi.com, is a Muslim and an Arab; his home is in Israel and he loves it. He loves it to such an extent that he joined the Israeli army so he could defend his country. He's definitely not alone. Tens of thousands of Bedouin — once nomadic Arabs but now living in permanent homes — love Israel and volunteer to join its army. They're not alone.

The Druze, another Arab minority in Israel numbering at over 70,000, love Israel too. They actively work in Israeli companies, universities, and about 90 percent of eligible Druze volunteer for the Israeli army according to www.idf.il, to defend the country that they love, risking their lives for it.

In fact, gay Palestinians love Israel, secretly escaping the Palestinian territories to Israel, where they are free to be themselves without fear of death. The New Republic, in its August 19, 2002 issue, exposed hideous human rights violations by the Palestinian Authority, which hires police squads to capture men who have sex with each other and execute them. The lucky ones have to Israel is far from perfect and I have many issues that I disagree with, but last time I checked we have yet to have a country on this planet that has reached perfection.

stand in sewage water up to their necks or lie in dark cells infested with insects; many others are starved to death. On the other hand, in Israel there are members of parliament who are openly gay, and huge gay pride parades take place in the nation's capital of Jerusalem and neighboring Tel Aviv annually.

Thousands of Lebanese Christian Arabs who were granted asylum in Israel after fear from the U.S.-designated terrorist organization Hezbolla, love Israel as well. Israel has given them homes and is now in the process of making them citizens as shown in www.haaretz-daily.com.

Over 30,000 Ethiopians, who were rescued by Israel from a devastating drought, love Israel, and nearly eight hundred thousand Jewish Arabs who found refuge in Israel after being expelled from their native countries love Israel as well.

Organizations headed by the International Christian Embassy in Jerusalem, issued a statement saying in part, "We cannot ignore the terrible atrocities committed by the PLO against the Lebanese Christians during their reign of terror in Lebanon, as well as general Moslem oppression of Christian minorities in the Middle East."

The statement called on Christians to visit Jewish villages near Bethlehem, such as Efrat. Other groups that signed the statement include Bridges of Peace, the World Lebanese Organization, the American Coptic Association, and many other groups as well.

Unfortunately, there is job discrimination for Arabs in Israel. This is a problem that Israel has to work on, but at the same time, this isn't the only country where discrimination is occurring. In just about every country with a minority population, there is discrimination — even in this very country — and it's a challenge that each nation has to cope with.

On the other hand, many television shows in Israel have Arabic subtitles; each and every road and city sign has the name also written in Arabic, in addition to Hebrew. In no country are Arabs better democratically represented in the Middle East than in Israel. In fact, Arab members of parliament have been allowed to remain in parliament, even though they've preached the destruction of Israel in neighboring enemy countries, according to www.zoa.org. What would happen if Senator X went to North Korea and preached for terrorism against the USA?

That's why thousands of UMass students signed a petition last year in support of Israel. That's why every year, the Republicans and Democrats in Washington, D.C. don't seem to agree on a single issue, but when it comes to Israel, they are in overwhelmingly supportive. They understand why so many love Israel.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Adding fuel to the fire

As a freshman student at the University of Massachusetts, I would like to personally congratulate Eduardo Bustamante for making me feel completely alienated from the rest of the University community. Perhaps some readers will remember from a while back, Bustamante's column entitled "Exposing the multicultural façade," in which he pointed out the major problems with the policy of the university relating to minority students. I, however, have a problem with what "Eddie" had to say.

In his column, he made a generalization about white, 18-year-old males, which I just happen to be. Previous to your column, Mr. Bustamante, I found myself advocating your causes, but after accusing myself and the rest of the 18-year-old males of being threatened by the idea of an office of ALANA affairs, I am sorry to say you have lost a supporter.

You claim that these eighteen-year-old white males have no place on this committee regarding an office of ALANA affairs because they do not advocate for the office. I ask you, with all due respect, isn't that the idea of the government? Perhaps some of the people on campus are against the proposal for an office of ALANA affairs. Don't these people deserve as much representation as those who will benefit from the office of ALANA affairs?

You say that a more in depth look needs to be given into the matter of the ALANA caucus seats, but I ask you, why would you need these seats? It is clear from the last election that ALANA students are perfectly capable of gaining quite a bit of representation. So, if they then gain more representation, wouldn't that be unfair to the rest of the students? The idea of a voting election is that those who vote will be represented, and it seems that is exactly what happened.

Finally, you speak again of the office of ALANA affairs and the necessity for an interim full-time staff member in the office, and state that it must close if there is not one, and that all of the ALANA events will be canceled if there is not a full time staff person. Realistically, these statements seem a little harsh. Why can't the members of the organization all chip in to keep the office open most of the time? Can the members assist in running the functions? I assume they could.

I wish you the best of luck in your bid for election, Mr. Bustamante, but this is one 18-year-old white male vote that you will not be receiving. Perhaps it is not in the best interest of ALANA for you to write columns criticizing those around you. I just wonder if you realize that you are only adding fuel to the fire.

Ryan White
UMass student

Defense of the Greek community

I am writing on behalf of members of the Greek Community here at UMass. I would like to address one comment that Candidate Brian Long stated: "As for Greek life, 'Greek life is looked at very poorly. Nobody wants to go and nobody wants to pledge. We need a better Greek community."

I just want to have something said on our own behalf. Most of this campus knows very little about the Greeks, some even nothing at all. We are looked upon by the conditions of our chapter facilities rather than the character of the great brothers and sisters apart of these chapters. Maybe the Greek Community of five years ago was poor, but not the Greek community of today. We have been making countless strides to improve and grow together. The four councils that govern the chapters now work together in philanthropies, community service projects, and academics.

Being a part of the Panhellenic Council myself, and having served as an Executive Board member last year, I can tell you that the eight sororities here on campus had an overall GPA higher than the average female on campus last semester. We are continuing with this effort by taking the challenge to improve as a whole by another tenth of a point this semester.

As for philanthropies and community service, we as a whole have raised money for countless organizations. Right now the chapters are raising money and getting ready for the Big Brother Big Sister Bowl-A-Thon as well as the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life.

As for the fact that nobody wants to join — they do. How else would our chapters continue to grow? Say that to one of the many new members of this semester, who just had a welcome reception last night with Dennis Haskins, a.k.a. Mr. Belding, who made an appearance to give us support. Speaking of support the administration of this school has seen us put forth our efforts and they are on our side. Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs, even said that one of his goals is to see us at 15 percent of this school eventually. One major step this semester is that one fraternity is about to gain their charter and be a recognized chapter by their nationals.

So, before such comments are made about something that was obviously not looked into, maybe talk to a member of the Greek community and ask them what their chapter does and what they have done in their time here at UMass.

Lauren Smyth
Iota Gamma Upsilon

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Guitarist Little Steven trying to elevate college bands above ground

University of Massachusetts-bred rock 'n' roll bands are being given the chance achieve their musical dreams by contending in a battle of the bands competition presented by Bruce Springsteen and the E-Street Band guitarist Little Stevie Van Zandt.

The charismatic rocker and songwriter, who is also known for playing Silvio Dante on the HBO smash hit "The Sopranos," is searching for America's best college-band acts and ensembles from UMass and neighboring schools are being called out.

The deadline is nearing and the last chance to submit demo tapes is Wednesday, March 31.

Bands interested the competition can log on to www.rockingarage.com to download an official form to enter the "Underground Garage Battle of the Bands" contest. Submission of a demo is required and a panel of music experts at Renegade Nation — Van Zandt's production company — will review the field of competitors.

The contest has three levels, all leading up to a chance to play along side Van Zandt and other top rock acts this summer at "Little Steven's Underground Garage Rock Festival" presented by Dunkin' Donuts.

Those lucky enough to be asked to compete by Renegade Nation will begin to battle against each other in mid-April in one of nine American cities (Boston, Washington, Providence, Philadelphia, Miami, Chicago, Cleveland, Farmingdale, N.Y. or Asbury Park, N.J.). The finalists will then travel to New York City to decide the best of the contestants for one last contest on July 22.

The winning bands from each market will receive a suite of new, high-end music equipment from Gibson, speakers from Klipsch as well as the chance to compete in New York.

— Glen Straub

SUN RA's cosmusical jazzphonic set for landing on planet UMass

By John Ciampa
Collegian Staff

For the better part of the 20th Century, Sun Ra was on a mission to extend the scope of musical expression beyond the bounds of earthly comprehension.

Early in his adulthood, he professed to be on a mission from afar — Saturn, to be exact — and had been sent to Earth to spread peace and tranquility. What he accomplished over his remarkable career is a feat that is still as amazing as it is impossible to recur — the bridging of the vaudevillian style of pre-war jazz with the musical avant-garde of postmodernism.

His eclecticism was extreme even for the free-jazz genre that he was often cast into, a categorization that he despised since he felt his compositions were purposefully sculpted. Ra's experiments with instrumentation and musical texture outdid even the most formidable of his contemporaries, including Ornette Coleman. Furthermore, his aural montages were often impossible to classify in terms of standard musical nomenclature. Consequently, he would remain outside of the mainstream.

Ra underwent a period of incredible creativity in the 1950s, transforming his usage of swing and bebop by infusing elements of experimentalism into jazz in the manner of how composers such as John Cage and Karlheinz Stockhausen stretched the classical idiom. It was here, too, that Ra formed the Arkestra, a continually evolving group of musicians that accentuated his ideas in a workshop-like fashion akin to Charles Mingus' band at the time.

With the Arkestra in tow, Sun Ra continued to push the musical envelope for the remainder

See SUN RA on page 6

'Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind'
Directed by Michel Gondry
Starring Jim Carrey Kate Winslet
Focus Features
Rated R
108 mins.
Grade A

DAVID LEE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kate Winslet, left, and Jim Carrey, right, star in Michel Gondry's "Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind."

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

If you had the chance to go back and erase the memories of a painful relationship from your mind, would you? That's the question posed by "Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind," the tender, funny, exquisite new romance from Charlie Kaufman, the idiosyncratic screwball writer of "Being John Malkovich" and "Adaptation." Kaufman may be the first screenwriter who can be accused of being too clever — his films, notably the wobbly house-of-cards that was "Malkovich," seem just a tad too smug and self-congratulatory — but here he finds a newfound maturity and assuredness that meshes well with his quirky oddball style.

Joel Barish (Jim Carrey, in a performance more soulful than anything he's ever done) is a shy, forlorn, regimented office drone who finds himself making an uncharacteristically impulsive decision to call in sick from work and hop on the train to Montauk, Long Island. Something has drawn him there. As he wanders the beach underneath the chilly, gray winter skies on a Valentine's Day, he finds himself drawn to neurotic, pushy, cerulean-haired Clementine (Kate Winslet) who proceeds to jabber, flirt and worm her way into Joel's life.

To say more would spoil the surprise, so stop reading until after you've seen the movie. Let's just say that the movie shifts to the bitter end of the couple's relationship. Joel, a closed-off emotional sadsack who can't even bring himself to make eye contact with women he doesn't know, is shocked to learn that Clementine has used the services of Lacuna, Inc. to erase all memories of him from her mind. Angry and spiteful, Joel visits the offices of the kindly Dr. Mierzwyack (Tom Wilkinson) to have the procedure done on himself.

As he sleeps in his apartment, Lacuna's two slacker technicians Stan (Mark Ruffalo) and Patrick (Elijah Wood) — who is using Clementine's forgotten memories of Joel to woo her —

See SPOTLESS on page 6

Queens singer uses side-project to explore vintage rock 'n' roll

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Josh Homme, the founding member and singer/guitarist for Queens Of The Stone Age, continues to prove himself to be one of the hardest working men in rock today with the release of his new side project, Eagles Of Death Metal.

Rather than fronting the act, Homme — under the pseudonym of Carlo Von Sexron (who goes under the sub-pseudonym of Baby Duck) — bangs away on the drums in this group. His childhood friend Jesse 'the devil' Hughes sings and plays guitar. Tim VanHamel of the band Millionaire is the official third member even though he barely appears on the studio record.

Eagles of Death Metal
'Peace, Love, Death Metal'
AntiAcid/Audio/Rekords Rekords

While QOTSA fans will probably enjoy Eagles, the band is more than just a side project; it is a whole different kind of band for Homme. Rather than the hard-hitting stoner-rock of QOTSA, Eagles gives the listener early rock 'n' roll-styled songs. Hughes sings in a falsetto that doesn't sound completely unlike Homme's own voice, but also revels in an amalgamation of Little Richard, Prince, and even Elvis. The music and lyrical content doesn't stray too far from traditional rock 'n' roll influences and therein lies the concept of the band's debut album, "Peace, Love, Death Metal."

Hughes and Homme use the band as part time-machine and part experiment to see what would happen if 1950s rock was still alive in 2004. Hughes longs for a time when love could be conveyed as simply as singing "I got this feeling and it's deep in my body/ It gives me wiggles and it makes my rump shake" as he does on "Speaking In

See EAGLES on page 6

JON KITNA/SEATTLE POST-INTELLIGENCE/AP/AMY REKOSH REKOSH

Singer/guitarist of Queens of The Stone Age Josh Homme, center, collaberates with his two friends Tim VanHamel, left, and Jesse 'the devil' Hughes, right, on "Peace, Love, Death Metal."

'Eve' questions fate and her newfound life of singlehood

Advice from Eve:

Q: My boyfriend and I have been together for four years now. Recently, I've had this incredible desire to travel for a year. However, he cannot join me. He said we would have to break up if I go for longer than six months. I feel as though I haven't fully experienced life yet, and I am confused of what to do. Should I go and risk this relationship? - H.S.

A: Go. If he breaks up with you, I'm sure you will both rekindle once you return. If you don't pursue your passions and do what's best for you now, you will look back and regret not doing this. And if you do marry this guy I am sure you will always slightly resent him for holding you back. You are too young to sacrifice so much of yourself. If you are confused, that means you are not ready to know if you want to be with this guy in the future. Gain new experiences, and once you return it will all work out.

Q: I met this guy on a study abroad program in London and I have recently returned home. He still lives there and we are both trying to keep a long distance relationship. I don't even know when I will be able to see him again. I care about him so much, but I don't think it can possibly last if we are so far away. What do I do? -J.M.

A: Usually I would say long distance doesn't work. And for the most part, it doesn't. However, long distance friendship works if you can write e-mails and dial a phone number. It is not really fair to either of you to expect such a dedicated commitment to one another so far away. Maybe if you were engaged, or had been together for years, it would be acceptable. But why stop him or yourself from meeting other potentials closer to home? Also, if you may think he's the one, then have a little faith and I'm sure you will find a way to keep him.

Original Sin

Eve

Fate. A word I use to love; now I've learned to question. I find it easy to justify occurrences as an act of fate. Maybe instances happen just because. Or maybe somewhere, we secretly hold onto the word, the belief, the excuse, for hope that life will one day beautifully unravel. Whatever the true answer may be, I have just seen fate at its worst of times. And so I question:

Was my old flame meant to call and insist on meeting to prevent a potentially harmful situation? One miniscule day at one very late hour, he phones after three months. This is while I'm on the other line making plans with last week's winner. Both are offering their company, and both are anxiously waiting for an answer. Some would say my decision to meet my old beau swayed me from contributing to a small disaster. Only later did I hear this winner has a girlfriend all throughout our flirtatious conversations.

Is there a reason why I end up seeing the same attractive guy the day before our every exam for the past year? I never see him in class. At review sessions. In my phonebook. But yet, the Wednesday before the exam I have learned not to be surprised when I do see him. Nor is he surprised to see me. I choose a different place each time on or even off campus, and somehow there he is. And somehow, we find this normal. Or maybe he just doesn't believe in fate.

Is it wrong that I still talk to the Italian after what his friend did? My girlfriend thinks so. Is there a legitimate reason for our contact? I think so. I am fully willing to give him the benefit of the doubt. Just as long as he keeps his clothes on. Maybe that night shocked me into a new friendship. Maybe the Italian has yet to teach me something I don't already know. Or more likely, he and his friends may learn what respectable girls really want.

Should I really enjoy this newfound life of singlehood and all the jerks that come along with it? I have spent nearly half of my life in excellent relationships that I took for granted. And one bad choice in one bad guy had turned my fate in coupledom for the worse. Only now can I see that. A friend had recently told me this is a period of time in which we all must wash the bad out of our systems. But I have yet to really understand why we must.

Eve is pen name for a love guru attending UMass who knows the ins and outs of every relationship. You can ask Eve for advice by e-mailing her at eve_originalsin@yahoo.com "Original Sin with Eve" runs every Thursday in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Free Tutoring is Available!

OASIS

Opportunities for Academic Success with Individualized Support

Pre-Major Advising Services introduces a unique support service for students who have not yet declared a major. Our tutors are experienced graduate students who will provide weekly one-on-one support in the following areas:

* Course Content
* Note-taking Strategies
* Test-taking Strategies
* Study Skills
* Time Management
* Writing

OASIS
607 Goodell
545-6617
oasis@acad.umass.edu

Call or stop by for an appointment.

ACT NOW AND GET THE EDGE YOU NEED TO SUCCEED!

'Death Metal' lacks longevity

EAGLES from page 5

Tongues" — which comes complete with a what-if-the-Ramones-were-around-in-the-'50s intraverse cry of "I said ho!"

In "Peace, Love, Death Metal" Hughes and Homme succeed in resurrecting the soul of the long-dead pure rock 'n' roll. "Flames Go Higher" features both country and blues influences in what plays as a sort of Rolling Stones tribute and is one of the album's standout tracks. "Bad Dream Mama" is another one of the album's best — a danceable sexy rock track in the vein that would make Little Richard proud. "Kiss The Devil," a slightly country-tinged track (as are a handful others on the album) pays tribute to — who else? — the devil who has, after a very strong honeymoon period with rockers, not been given as much love as of late from the rock 'n' roll community. In fact the old-school tribute to the devil that runs much like a thread through "Peace, Love ..." is yet another component of the album that makes the record feel like some sort of stoned trip in the Wayback machine.

There are a few modern twists on the album that are somewhat welcoming but they do take a bit away from the mood. "Already Died," which features now-ex-Queen Nick Oliveri, would feel more at home amongst the tracks from OOTSA's 1998 self-titled debut album (which, ironically, Oliveri did not play on). The album's sole cover is the Stealer Wheels' classic "Stuck in the Middle with You." Although the band's label has it as "Stuck in the Metal," it is a well-done cover of a great song but still is one of the biggest faults on the album. Not by the Eagles' fault, nor by the Wheels' fault but by Quentin Tarintino's fault. It's hard to listen to the song without associating it with the infamous ear-chopping scene in "Reservoir Dogs".

"Peace, Love, Death Metal" is a very well executed album with a very cool concept. Even though the band is very faithful to its idea of bringing back old-time rock 'n' roll none of the songs feel trapped in the design. They all just fit very well in the genre. Eagles Of Death Metal fill few others on the album) pays tribute to — who else? — the devil who has, after a very strong honeymoon period with rockers, not been given as much love as of late from the rock 'n' roll community. In fact the old-school tribute to the devil that runs much like a thread through "Peace, Love ..." is yet another component of the album that makes the record feel like some sort of stoned trip in the Wayback machine.

There are a few modern twists on the album that are somewhat welcoming but they do take a bit away from the mood. "Already Died," which features now-ex-Queen Nick Oliveri, would feel more at home amongst the tracks from OOTSA's 1998 self-titled debut album (which, ironically, Oliveri did not play on). The album's sole cover is the Stealer Wheels' classic "Stuck in the Middle with You." Although the band's label has it as "Stuck in the Metal," it is a well-done cover of a great song but still is one of the biggest faults on the album. Not by the Eagles' fault, nor by the Wheels' fault but by Quentin Tarintino's fault. It's hard to listen to the song without associating it with the infamous ear-chopping scene in "Reservoir Dogs".

"Peace, Love, Death Metal" is a very well executed album with a very cool concept. Even though the band is very faithful to its idea of bringing back old-time rock 'n' roll none of the songs feel trapped in the design. They all just fit very well in the genre. Eagles Of Death Metal fill a very specific void in modern rock music and although they have made a very good album it is not a disc that is beneficial for every CD collection, unlike most albums from the band's influences. Nor does it even approach the importance of a band like Queens Of The Stone Age. Granted, Eagles is not meant to be much more than a fun listen, but at the same time it is hard to be as excited about this work as Hughes and Homme are.

"Peace, Love, Death Metal" is a well-written and well-performed album that certainly is worth checking out. But probably it won't generate an itch for multiple listens within the listener the way that it has for the band members themselves.

'Sunshine' is one of the year's best

SPOTLESS from page 5

begin the methodical practice of erasing Joel's memories of Clementine from the most recent going backwards. But as Joel discovers that it's not just the pain that is wiped from his memory; it's the pleasure. As his memories begin to slowly deteriorate around him, Joel fights to salvage a few fond thoughts of Clementine, rushing her into the deepest abscesses of his mind to hide.

"Eternal Sunshine" has the jumbled, mad beauty of an M.C. Escher painting, but the movie — to Kaufman's credit — has the courage of its own logic going for it. Kaufman and the director, artful French music video director Michel Gondry (he did that cartoon-Lego video for The White Stripes), keep the movie from falling into inconsistency and confusion. "Eternal Sunshine" flips around in time, between the real world and Joel's fantasy world, but there isn't any of the headache-y, hipster arrogance that we have come to except from young filmmakers. "Eternal Sunshine" bends the mind without giving it a migraine.

Working with the lovely, lived-in cinematography of Ellen Kuras, the filmmakers give the movie an aura of stylized reality. The memories are nifty imaginative detours — faces eerily lack features; cars evaporate in a puff of digital bleeps — and they let Kaufman indulge in his patented blend of antic, post-modern gimmickry in the frame of a romantic-dramady. But the movie is more than the sum of Kaufman's anarchic mind's eye. It may be the first time that a heart beats along with the writer's whiz-bang imagery.

Kaufman and Gondry have a lot of questions they want to ask, and they do so without drowning the movie in heavy-handed symbolism. The enduring tug of love, the way our past makes up identity, th' fragility of our memories, the necessity of letting go of the past to move into the future — these are the big themes that Kaufman and Gondry deftly address without falling into the swamp of pretentious philosophizing.

Carrey has done serious work before, but none that have had the singular impact of his Joel Barrish incarnation. Carrey burrows deep into the character's center, beyond the forlorn, nervous, shell of the exterior to find Joel's pain and inner conflict. He strikes sparks with Winslet, who's equally adept at going beyond Clementine's exterior free-spiritedness to find the scared, vulnerable, searching little girl underneath; Winslet, whose hair never stays one color in the movie, makes the audience understand why Clementine indulges in such aggressively childish, irrational behavior.

Beside Carrey and Winslet, the movie is stocked with a wealth of able supporting talent. Wilkinson imbues his doctor with a deep melancholy and Kirsten Dunst, as the doctor's dimpled blonde receptionist, gives her character a believable girlishness tempered by the right notes of betrayal. Ruffalo is once again terrific, while Wood, miles away from Frodo, gives creepiness an underlying note of pathos.

"Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind" finds Kaufman moving onto an entirely new level — he's no longer just the witty, self-satisfied jester of Hollywood iconoclasm. "Eternal Sunshine" is a movie as liable as to make you laugh as break your heart. Quietly beautiful, it's the first genuinely moving film of the year.

Marshall Allen to lead Arkestra

SUN RA from page 5

of his life. By the 1970s, Ra had developed a spectacular stage show, sporting outrageous costumes and taking existing live performance to its spiritual limit.

Just before his death in 1993, Ra was embraced by the alternative scene and jammed with the likes of Sonic Youth. Since then he has been cited as a major influence on the rock underground.

Since 1995, the Sun Ra Arkestra has been under the able stewardship of longtime member and multi-instrumentalist extraordinaire Marshall Allen. In addition to performing Ra's dizzying output with new, organic arrangements, Marshall has continued to compose original material that seeks to thrust the Arkestra toward new worlds.

Tonight's concert is part of the 15th anniversary celebrations for the Magic Triangle Jazz Series.

Please join us for the 6th annual

Freedom Seder

Celebrating Unity & Liberation through rituals, stories, music, and delicious foods from the African American and Jewish traditions

Sunday, March 28th at 6:00pm
Campus Center 1009
UMass Amherst

Sponsored by Black Student Union, Delta Xi Phi Sorority, Office of Jewish Affairs, Student Affairs andCampus Life

The University of Massachusetts Amherst

CLUB CASTAWAY

Club Castaway Will Proudly present College Nights on Thursdays from 9p.m. - 1p.m. $4.00 Beers with valid college ID. Drivers Licensed. Must be 21 years or older through March.

Hey ladies over 18 years old! Earn big money for your Spring Break vacation. Come and see us and we will show you how to make the money that you need in the entertainment business.

Rt. 5&10, Whately 665-8735

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club

90 Gatehouse Road
Off Rt. 9 Two miles East of Amherst Center • On the Bus Route

Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you
www.hampfit.com

- Full size Indoor Pool
- Aerobics
- Aqua Aerobics
- Cybex Nautilus Circuit
- Indoor Tennis
- Jacuzzi/Saunas
- Yoga/Pilates
- Cybex Free Weight
- Full Court Basketball
- Volleyball
- Step Aerobics /Bosu
- Cardio-Vascular Equipment

SPRING SPECIAL
6 WEEKS $109
STUDENT MEMBERS FREE H.F.C. T-SHIRT

Open
6am to 10pm Mon-Fri
8am to 9pm Sat-Sun

Tel 256-6446

UMass will battle Hartford at Lorden

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore Frank Curreri begins his first full season behind the plate for the Minutemen after also playing the outfield in 2003.

BASEBALL from page 10

celled its last three games due to a death on the team during a tournament in Maryland.

Kyle Valentine, a senior pitcher, died of an apparent brain aneurism Thursday morning after the 13-0 loss to Delaware. Hartford cancelled the remaining three games scheduled and returned to Hartford that evening.

The Hawks have mustered five runs only twice this season and have had their share of troubles putting runs on the board. Pacing the offense has been Ron Acabbo and Ryan Crowley. Acabbo and Crowley are two of the three Hartford players who are currently hitting above .300 for the season.

Although Hartford has been struggling on paper, Stone knows his team can't look past this team to the weekend. He believes that this game is going to be another test for his team early in the season.

"I try not to focus on the team so much, in baseball you can never sit back and let the scores dictate how the game is going to go prior to the game," Stone said. "In baseball anybody can beat anybody any given day and that's been proven in the past, so we're just focused on playing well."

Prior headed for DL, Yanks ink Rivera

MESA, Ariz. — Mark Prior will start the season on the 15-day disabled list because of inflammation in his right Achilles' tendon.

The Chicago Cubs star has been throwing off the mound in spring training, but has not pitched in a Cactus League game because of the injury. He was originally scheduled to start the team's third game of the season on April 8 at Cincinnati.

If Prior doesn't pitch in any major league exhibition games, he would be eligible to come off the disabled list on April 10. The Cubs hope to have him for their first homestand April 12-19.

TAMPA, Fla. — Mariano Rivera and the New York Yankees agreed to a $21 million, two-year contract extension through 2006.

Rivera's extension includes a $10.5 million team option for 2007 that could become guaranteed based on games finished the previous two seasons.

He will make $8.89 million in 2004, the final season of a four-year contract.

Neither side wanted to negotiate during the season, and Rivera didn't want to become a free agent.

He was 5-2 with a career-low 1.66 ERA last year and had 40 saves in 46 chances, increasing his career total to 283.

NEW YORK — Umpire Gary Darling was promoted to a crew chief after 18 years as a major league umpire.

Darling, 46, worked last year's World Series, the 1993 and 2003 All-Star games, the 1992 league championship series and five division series. He replaces Mark Hirschbeck, who has been sidelined by injuries.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

HOUSTON — Tom Penders was hired to coach at Houston, the once-powerful program that hasn't won an NCAA tournament game in 20 years.

Penders and the university agreed to a five-year contract, but terms weren't finalized, officials said. Penders, a coach at Texas for 10 years, replaces Ray McCallum, who was reassigned March 8 after going 44-72 in four seasons.

Penders, 58, is best known for resuscitating Texas after his arrival in 1988 after successful stints at Tufts, Columbia, Fordham and Rhode Island. He led Texas to a 208-110 record and eight NCAA tournaments, including a regional final in 1990.

ATLANTA — St. Joseph's Jameer Nelson and Connecticut's Diana Taurasi were selected as the 2004 Naismith college basketball players of the year.

Nelson, a 5-foot-11 senior guard, was the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year. Nelson led St. Joseph's to an undefeated record in the regular season and a No. 1 seed in the NCAA tournament.

Taurasi, a 6-foot senior guard, already has led Connecticut to two NCAA championships – 2002 and 2003 – and a Final Four appearance in 2001.

FOOTBALL

NEW YORK — The New York Jets are close to a deal for a $1.4 billion stadium on Manhattan's West Side.

A source close to the negotiations, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the deal, which faces opposition from many neighborhood residents, could be announced within a week.

The proposal also would expand the nearby Jacob K. Javits Convention Center.

The Jets would spend $800 million on the stadium. The city and state would spend $600 million on a deck over the existing rail yards and a roof that would allow the stadium to be used as convention space.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Former Alabama coach Mike Price is suing the university's president over actions that led to his dismissal following a visit to a strip club.

The suit, filed in state circuit court in Tuscaloosa, accuses president Robert Witt of fraud and misrepresentation and asks for a jury to decide on a monetary award, said Price's attorney, Stephen Heninger.

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Miami's top football recruit turned himself in to police on a felony charge of illegally setting off fire extinguishers and was released on $5,000 bond, his lawyer said.

Willie Williams, a high school All-American linebacker, was in custody for several hours before bonding out.

Associated Press

Minutewomen to host UNH

WOMEN'S LAX from page 10

off Saturday's 12-11 loss to ninth-ranked Syracuse, a game that was decided in the final five seconds by an unassisted goal from Leigh-Ann Zimmer of SU.

After falling behind 4-0 to start the game, UMass managed to pull within three at the break, (7-4). The Maroon and White charged out of the gate to start the second half, scoring six unanswered goals. With the score standing at 10-7 with 9:45 left, Zimmer went on a tear, scoring three goals to pull within seven points of the All-time Syracuse scoring record. UMass surrendered five of the game's last six goals, but outscored Syracuse 7-4 in the second half.

Three second-half goals by tri-captain Tracy Drown helped UMass come to within two goals of beating the SU for the first time in program history. Senior attacker Hope Zelinger and junior captain Maura McGarrity helped the cause for Massachusetts, combining for all goals in the first half.

After being sidelined with a high-ankle sprain during a meeting with Hofstra on March 9, McGarrity hadn't practiced until before suiting up against Syracuse.

For the Minutewomen, the game was a tale of two halves. SU managed to outshoot UMass 19-9 and retain possession on 10 of 12 draws during the first frame, before UMass turned things around to win 10-of-13 draw controls after the break. Unfortunately for UMass, a defensive lapse in the final 36 seconds allowed Syracuse to score two goals on consecutive faceoffs.

In her second start of the season, goalie Joey Rubin tallied 11 saves for the Maroon and White.

"If we go out and play against UNH the way we played against Syracuse in the second half, we should be fine," Holduc said. "So far we've been successful in different aspects of the game, but we're yet to bring it all together at the same time."

Kaplan rebate offer:

Enroll today and get $100 back!

Receive $100 back through Kaplan's Rebate* when you enroll in an LSAT, MCAT, GMAT, GRE, DAT or TOEFL course between March 1st–March 31st.

Call or visit us online for more information or to enroll.

Limited time offer!

KAPLAN 1-800-KAP-TEST kaptest.com/rebate

Test Prep and Admissions

*Test names are registered trademarks of their respective owners. † This offer applies only to classroom courses and LSAT, GMAT, GRE, DAT, TOEFL and MCAT courses and may not be combined with any other offer. To be eligible, you must enroll between March 1 and March 31, 2004. Certain conditions apply. See redemption forms for complete details. Redemption forms are available at Kaplan centers, by calling 1-800-KAP-TEST and at kaptest.com/rebate.

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors

Beer:	Wine:	Liquor:
Coors & Coors Light 30 pk cans...$18.49*	Casa Lapostolle Cuvee Alexandre Chardonnay 750ml...$12.99	Bailey's Irish Cream 1 lt...$22.99
Rolling Rock 2/12pk btl...$15.99*	Beaulieu Vineyard Napa Valley Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 750 ml...$11.99	Crown Royal 750 ml...$18.99
Keystone 30 pk cans...$13.49*	Sterling Vineyards Sauvignon Blanc 750 ml...$9.99	Romana Sambuca 750 ml...$18.99
Bud & Bud Light 20 pk cans...$12.99*	Beaulieu Vineyards Coastal Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 750 ml...$8.99	Jose Cuervo Tequila 750 ml...$16.99
Millwaukee's Best 30 pk cans...$10.99*	Barton & Guestier Reserve Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 750 ml...$7.99	Capt. Morgan Spiced Rum 750 ml...$11.99
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl...$10.99*	Buckeley's Cabernet/Shiraz 750 ml... $7.99	Malibu Coconut Rum 750 ml...$11.99
Red Stripe 12 pk btl...$10.99*	Goats do Roam Red and White 750ml...$6.99	99 Schnapps 750 ml...$11.99
Corona 12 pk btl...$10.99*		Smirnoff Vodka all flavors 750 ml...$9.99
Dogfish Head select varieties 6 pk cans...$6.99*

*all beer prices plus deposit

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm

SALE 3/25 THROUGH 3/31

Now Open Sundays Noon to 11pm

MULINO'S TRATTORIA Brasserie 40-A

ACCEPTING GRADUATION RESERVATIONS NOW!

FEED YOUR HEAD.

BRING YOUR I.D. & DINE FROM OUR SPECIAL STUDENT MENU EVERY TUESDAY & WEDNESDAY

MUSIC 7 NIGHTS A WEEK IN THE LOUNGE

41 STRONG AVENUE, NORTHAMPTON
BRASSERIE 40-A RESERVATIONS 413.585.9200
MULINO'S TRATTORIA RESERVATIONS 413.586.8900
FOR MENUS & INFORMATION VISIT WWW.MULINOS.COM

Chicago Pizzaria

FREE DELIVERY!

We accept all major credit cards and OCMP!

Take Part in an Exciting Opportunity This Summer!

Come to a Welcome Session to find out about an internship or co-op that is right for you

Monday, March 29
3 pm - 104 Career Services

Tuesday, March 30
10:30 am - 104 Career Services

Thursday, April 1
3 pm - 104 Career Services

Reminder for Education Majors:
If you are planning on attending MERC don't forget to go to the ORIENTATION TODAY at 4pm in Room 104 Career Services.

CareerServices

For more information, go to www.umass.edu/careers or call us at 545-2224

Bench will be key for Red Sox

RED SOX from page 10

already sewn up his gig as Tim Wakefield's personal backstop again in 2004, and also that Epstein and Francona will carry eleven pitchers despite a shoulder injury to starter Byung-Hyun Kim and the current lack of a left-handed specialist, that leaves a mere four spots to be filled, with the possibility of Nixon landing on the disabled list potentially increasing that number to five.

Outfielder Gabe Kapler is all but assured a return to Beantown after an impressive showing following his mid-summer acquisition, and will likely see the bulk of the time in right field in place of Nixon. He is a relentless worker with good speed, a strong arm and good pop in his bat, and now has supposedly proven he can also play some third base.

Former Sox draft pick Ellis Burks will likely also be guaranteed a spot after Epstein signed him away from Cleveland after an injury plagued 2003. Burks is a tremendous power hitter when healthy, and says his oft-troublesome knees are better than ever. He should serve as Francona's number one pinch-hitting option, and could return to the Fenway outfield to help fill in for Nixon.

From there, it gets trickier in attempting to fill the remaining two (or three) spots. Second baseman Mark Bellhorn is the lone switch hitter who once clouted 27 homeruns in a season, while each of the trio of Brian Daubach, Terry Shumpert and David McCarty can play both infield and outfield, with the latter also possessing the ability to pitch.

Daubach, a Fenway fan favorite, could get the nod because he hits from the left side, and has also proven he can handle the East Coast pressure cooker over multiple seasons. Bellhorn also appears to have an edge as new second baseman Pokey Reese's insurance policy, along with his alleged tendency to crush the inside fastball from the left side.

Shumpert, meanwhile, should be a prime candidate to offer reinforcement from Pawtucket, while McCarty still has a chance to make the club if Nixon indeed lands on the DL.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_Collegian@yahoo.com.

Fenway facelift

New seating is seen being built in the upper-decks of right field at Boston's historic Fenway Park, as the Red Sox are adding new seats on the right-field roof complete with table service, a full menu and some food/beverage offerings built into the price of a ticket.

Braves' Nitkowski has new outlook on pitching, life after son's near-fatal accident

By Keith Parsons
Associated Press

KISSIMMEE, Fla. — C.J. Nitkowski was sitting in his living room watching TV two years ago when he heard a noise outside the sliding door. His son was in the middle of the pool, and slowly sinking.

"At 2 years old, it doesn't take you very long to drown," said Nitkowski, a reliever trying to make the Atlanta Braves' roster.

The pitcher got to his son in time and pulled him out. After a few frantic moments, the boy was OK.

"We were very lucky," Nitkowski said.

Matthew has no lasting effects from the ordeal. Not so the father. His life has thoroughly changed.

Hours before his son wandered into the pool, Nitkowski was released by the Houston Astros.

He had been frustrated and angry, although not entirely surprised about being cut during spring training.

At first, he thought the sound he heard was his son playing in the kitchen sink. A few seconds later, when he heard it again, Nitkowski noticed the open door to the pool.

He knew instantly he was hearing the water filter from the pool. He then found Mathew.

The timing was eerie. If he hadn't been released that day, he wouldn't have been home, since the Astros were playing a game.

Also, although he was one of three adults in the house, Nitkowski was the only one who heard the noise, the only one there to save Matthew.

"To me, it's not just a coincidence," Nitkowski said. "I refuse to believe it was a coincidence."

Now he looks at his life and his goals differently, and has a new outlook. Returning to the major leagues is extremely important but it is not his sole focus.

"Up to that point, it seemed like his life really had lost purpose," said the Rev. Patrick Kelley, the pastor at Nitkowski's church in Sugar Land, Texas, and a close friend the past couple of years.

"His family life wasn't what he hoped it would be, and there seemed to be a lot of emptiness in his life. He was restless." Not anymore.

"There's just a peace about him," said Arizona Diamondbacks pitcher Steve Sparks, another close friend. "He has his priorities right. I can feel it from him."

There were other changes, too. Fans used to visit his Web site for baseball talk and stories from the road.

In 2000, he upset the Detroit Tigers when he complained online about going to salary arbitration with the team.

He wrote that the Tigers have "treated me like one of those clumps you find in a cat litter box."

Now, the Web site is a source of information about his faith. The baseball news has been replaced by scriptures and other religious teachings.

"At the time, since I wasn't in the big leagues, I didn't have anything new to add," Nitkowski said.

"I expected to lose some of my readers, but I've really found that a lot people have questions and a thirst for information, just like me."

He still tries to respond to e-mail and keep up with his fans. Soon he might have the chance to add more stories from the majors.

He signed a minor league deal with the Braves in November, and in five appearances this spring, Nitkowski has a 1.93 ERA and 12 strikeouts in 9 1-3 innings.

"Our reports on him all were still positive," Atlanta general manager John Schuerholz said. "He's certainly got the talent. The key for him is consistency."

In parts of nine seasons with Detroit, Houston, the New York Mets and Texas, Nitkowski is 16-31 with a 5.33 ERA.

Last week he came in during the middle of an inning, taking over after the pitch count got too high for starter John Thomson. Nitkowski struck out Shane Spencer with a runner on third.

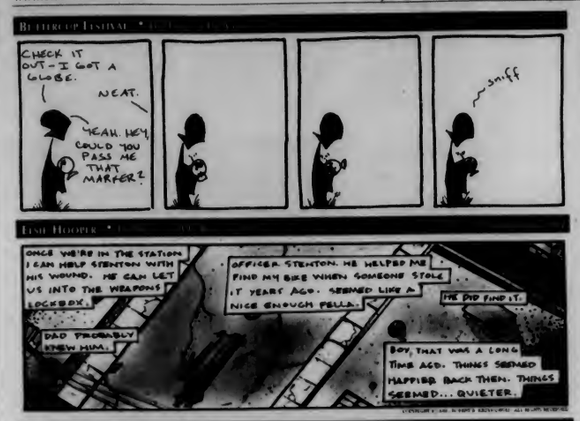
"I was happy about that," he said. "That's where I feel like I can help out the team, coming in to get that one hitter with runners on base. I'd been hoping for a chance like that."

Atlanta most likely will keep 12 pitchers. And with relievers Kevin Gryboski and Armando Almanza fighting injuries, the bullpen might include Nitkowski.

"He's got tremendous movement on the ball," Braves manager Bobby Cox said. "With that kind of movement and experience, he should settle in with somebody."

Either way, Nitkowski is happy about where his life is headed.

"I feel like I can handle anything now," he said. "Hopefully, everything will work out on the field."



comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
Former MTV VJ; star of FOX-TV's "Fastlane" and co-star in the movies "Any Given Sunday" and "The Brothers" BILL BELLAMY
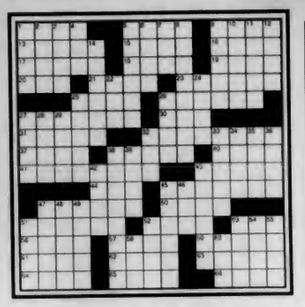
THIS FRIDAY!
APRIL 3RD APRIL 10TH APRIL 18TH APRIL 24TH
Tickets On Sale for All Shows!
JOHN WITHERSPOON GREG PROOPS DAVE ATTELL RICKEY SMILEY

the kalog life:
Kelsey does it daily.
Greg does it twice a day.
Scott: Even more often!
Have no idea what we're talking about? Stop by and see.
Join fellow bloggers for a weblogger meetup at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, March 25, at the Woodstar Cafe in Northampton. Don't miss this chance to discuss the blog life with local bloggers and learn more about this online phenomenon, while indulging in some caffeinated beverages.
Check out local web blogs at: masslive.com/weblogs
Thanks to the Woodstar Cafe, 60 Masonic Street for hosting this event.
AUTOS SPORTS NEWS WEBLOGS REAL ESTATE FORUMS
mass live.com
To advertise on MassLive.com contact us at 413-733-2000 or advertise@masslive.com. Affiliated with The Republican.

Amherst Laser & Skin Care Center
"Because you are worth it"
Laser Hair Removal
Both Men and Women
Any Area of the Body
Bikini * Face * Chin * Lip * Underarm * Leg * Back
Facials, Massages, & Microdermabrasion
Laser treatment available for acne and facial veins
Call Now for a free initial physician consultation
Student Discounts available with a valid Student I.D.
Amherst Laser and Skin Care Center
Bob Weitzman MD- Medical Director
196 NORTH PLEASANT STREET - SUITE 11
AMHERST, MA 01002 - 413-253-2214 - FAX 413-253-2216
www.amherstlaser.com

University of Hartford
Summerterm 2004
Earn 3 credits in 3 weeks
Open to students attending any college or university
Get ahead and graduate earlier
• Two convenient sessions
• Small, focused classes
• Choose from 400+ courses
Sessions begin...
Wednesday, May 19
Monday, July 5
(these start and end dates vary)
Register Online
www.hartford.edu/summerterm
call today
800-234-4412

NEW THIS WEEK!
BEYOND BORDERS
DIRTY PRETTY THINGS
GOTHIKA
MAGDALENE SISTERS
THE RUNDOWN
SHATTERED GLASS
SINGING DETECTIVE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst



TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Furniture cover
5 Reading aid
9 Marshal Dillon
13 Sheet grabber (2 wds.)
15 At any time
16 Perplexed
17 Reeves of "Speed"
18 Perished
19 Odin's kin
20 Made yarn
23 Pooch
25 Pickling ingredient
26 Apple drinks
27 Dream up
30 Elephant's home
31 Mild protest (hyph.)
32 Tiny road
37 Familiar truth
38 Knowing looks
40 Rare's husband
41 Large (hyph.)
43 Open, as a bottle
44 Above to poets
45 Minor partners
47 Flowering tree
50 Bundt cake
51 Chagall's homeland
52 Protestors
53 Swimmer's unit
56 Keen
57 Lend — or firstborn
58 Expound at length
60 Blue-green color
61 Pluck
63 Pucks
64 Whirlpool
65 In the buff
66 Laze in the sun

DOWN
1 "Rain —"
2 Vigoda and Lincoln
3 Paper quantity
4 Kitchen utensil
5 Protein source
6 Bard's river
7 Ms. Lupino
8 Invaluable
9 Coon cat origin
10 In a torment
11 High-schoolers
12 Mitt
14 Sheet material
22 Gruesome, maybe
24 Fusses
28 Printing process
29 Movie mogul
31 Winter — Division
33 Short skirt
35 Eggplant sun fruit
36 Fee grade
39 A whack
42 Bank loan
46 Down slightly
48 Puppy cries
49 Goes to bed (2 wds.)
50 Bowler or Conrad
52 In a while
53 Accord
55 Astrologer — Dixon
56 Subject for Keats
57 Budged
58 Honorary opus
59 Orderly way
61 Counter spread
62 Goose or loon
63 Dr. Zhivago's love
64 Off-road vehicles
65 Gimpel
66 Sickroft or Gering
67 CIA defender

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
UPSTAIRS at the ABC
NO COVER CHARGE
Frank Manzi
Mentos & the New Horizon
Jon Weeks

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Shepherds Pie
- Captain's Catch Sandwich
- Lentil Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Flank Steak
- General Tso's Chicken
- Penne with Spinach & Tomato (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 51
- Low: 37

FRIDAY
- High: 62
- Low: 43

SATURDAY
- High: 60
- Low: 37

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan
COPY EDITOR
Erika Lovely
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Cory Rosenberg/ Meghan Healy

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Change the water in your fishbowl; it's looking brown. And the fish is floating.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Resist the urge to stay up all night watching Star Trek reruns.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
If it's your birthday, celebrate by going to Applebee's. Eat dessert at Chili's.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Make the best of what's around. Like chasing those geese by the pond.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
All that anime is distorting your perception of reality. Cartoon men are hot!

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Buy your roommate a pizza for dinner. A really gross greasy one.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Go to 7-11 and get a Mountain Dew slurpee. Brain freezes are invigorating.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Be sure to wear thick socks all summer long, so your feet don't get cold.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Be adventurous; try ham and pineapple on your pizza. Think Hawaii.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Shave off that big red beard, you're starting to look like a Viking.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Stop poisoning your brain by reading all those trashy romance novels.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Make it your intention to play video games for several hours. Make sure you win.

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Education is not filling a bucket, but lighting a fire."

-W. B. Yeats

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

2000 Toyota Corolla Great Condition 4Door AC Automatic Stereo Cassette 83K $6,900 549-1150

EMPLOYMENT

ATTENTION LAX PLAYERS Play & Coach – Have fun – Make $$$ Top Boys Sports Camp in Maine looking for staff to instruct & coach LAX. Awesome Summer! Work with kids! Top salaries, FREE rm/bd/trvl allow. Apply online ASAP: www.campcobbossee.com

Bartending Trainees Needed $250 a day potential. Local positions 1-800-293-3985 Ext516

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors- Town of Amherst Day Camps. The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, exp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. Old. $ range for both positions: $8.19 – 9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week, June 21 to Aug. 20. Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept., Boltwood Walk, Amherst. (413) 256-4065 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer

Local Business is hiring marketers Part Time $10-15/hr Call Alison @413-627-9043

EMPLOYMENT

Get hands-on legal experience with a legal assistant internship this fall. Work directly with attorneys and clients and earn 9 to 15 credits. No experience required. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office for an application, due 4/2. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Two job opportunities on Nantucket Island beginning in May. Office assistants with decent typing, computer and telephone skills. Some errand running. Salary + housing. Tele. 508-228-3942 or send resume to PO Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 or fax resume to 508-228-8778

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6666 www.hausproinc.com

Play sports! Have fun! Save Money! Sports Camp in Maine. Coaches needed: Tennis, Basketball, Baseball, Water-sports, Ropes Course, Golf, Archery, and more. Work Outdoors and Have a Great Summer! Call Free: (888) 844-8080 or Apply: www.campcedar.com

Life Guards and Swim Instructors The Town of Amherst seeks qualified lifeguards and swim instructors. Lifeguards must hold current certifications including: Life Guard Training First Aid, and CPR. $8.16-9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week. Applications available from Amherst Leisure Services, Bangs Community Center, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

FOR SALE

Like New: 4 Edge, crome rims-16" 5 Lug nuts, 4 Ventus HR11, Low-Pro tires- Asking $1100 Tom 413-527-2866

FOR RENT

Moving off campus? Meet area rental agents at apartment complex fair. Thurs April 1 10-3 on the CC Concourse. Sponsored by Commuter Services www.ehrg.org

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes start soon!!! Call for information 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.org

LOST

Lost- Diamond Tennis bracelet on campus Mon 3/21 Reward (240)426-0308

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst. PhilosophicalDialogue.net

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00 413-584-8857.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SUMMER SUBLET

1 bedroom Brandywine apartment starting June 1 $755/month negotiable includes heat, water, cooking gas. Spacious, quiet with balcony and parking 549-9489

TRAVEL

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipmania.com 877-4-cancun.

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED: Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.reproductivechoices.com

YOUR AD COULD GO HERE! Call 545-3500.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 2004

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Home, sweet home

Stone, Minutemen set for opener against Hartford

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

After a respectable spring break trip to Florida that saw the Massachusetts baseball team face off against some of the finest talent in the country, the Minutemen have their first home game of the season today against the University of Hartford.

UMass will look to snap a two-game losing streak today in the friendly confines of Earl Lorden Field. This is the first time the Maroon and White will play in Amherst since it fell to St. Joseph's 14-8 last May.

UMass coach Mike Stone said his team is anxious to play on their own field.

"They're definitely excited and I'm sure they're ready to go," Stone said. "We need to play too, we haven't played since Saturday so we need to get a game in before this weekend."

The Minutemen have had no trouble scoring this season and have only been held under four runs once, in an 8-4 loss to Conference USA powerhouse South Florida. UMass has outscored its opponents 76-58 this season with run support coming up and down the lineup.

"I think we do have a veteran hitting team, all of our infielders are veteran hitters, we've got a catcher that can swing the bat," Stone said. "I think its a matter of experience and they've been pretty good hitters so far."

One of the finest performances has come from the bat of senior transfer Matt Reynolds, who has three home runs and 14 RBIs on the season while batting .326.

"The effort he gives all the time is probably why he's successful. He's a tremendous player, he's got great attitude, he works his butt off in practice," Stone said. "He is always ready to play, he's the kind of guy you want to come up in situations and make something happen. I'd love to have about 15 guys just like him"

Reynolds, who is affectionately known as "Ballgame," for to his desire to play, transferred to UMass after playing for the University of Maine where he hit only two home runs in his entire career.

Eric Chown will get the starting nod against the Hawks today, but Stone will be using his whole staff throughout the game to warm up for this weekends matchup with conference rival George Washington. Chown was recently named A-10 and ECAC pitcher of the week for his 10-inning 4-2 victory over Iowa on March 17.

"He did a great job and conserved his pitches and ended up putting in a good 10 innings against Iowa, Stone said. "He'll start, but we need to focus mainly on getting our pitchers ready for the weekend because that's our bread and butter, but he hasn't pitched since Wednesday so we have to get him in there."

Hartford has had its share of trouble this season and are currently on a five-game losing streak. Two of the five were lopsided defeats at the hands of Central Connecticut (22-1) and Delaware — a 13-0 no-hitter.

The Red and White also can-

See BASEBALL on page 7

Senior shortstop and tri-captain Mike Athas will lead UMass into action against the Hawks at Earl Lorden Field.

Minutewomen will open home slate against UVM

By Todd Foster
Collegian Staff

After 11 days in sunny Florida, the Massachusetts softball team will return to the friendly surroundings of Amherst, as the Minutewomen (9-11) host Vermont in their home opener today, an afternoon doubleheader slated to begin at 2 p.m. UMass' first 2004 home game will challenge the nation's longest home winning streak of 58 straight games won at the UMass Softball Complex.

The last time UMass lost at home was a 3-1 loss to Dayton on April 30, 2000. The Maroon and White only managed three hits in the loss to the Flyers. Former UMass pitcher Jen Hadley avenged the loss, as she blanked the Flyers, 2-0. Hadley's win came on the same day in a doubleheader as the loss, marking the start of the streak. Since the Complex opened in 2000, UMass has amassed a 70-3 record with all three losses in the opening year.

In her 30th season with the Minutewomen, head coach Elaine Sortino is only one win shy of her 900th with a record of 899-393-4 (.695). A win against the Catamounts seems to be a safe bet, as the Maroon and White have never lost to UVM. UMass has a commanding lead in the all-time series, 41-0 with 35 under Sortino.

The Catamounts have struggled early this season, compiling a 3-12 record and are coming off four losses at the Rebel Spring Games in Orlando, Fla. Vermont's offensive output is a major concern, as the Catamounts have given up 78 runs and scored only 27, without a home run on the season.

The one statistic both teams have in common is each has a freshman leading the team in batting average. Vermont freshman Kate DeForge has had no trouble with the bat, boasted by her .332 batting average, but has still not scored in 15 games. The only other Catamount batting over .300 is also a freshman, Kate Ramsey at .310.

UMass freshman Candice Molinari and her .370 batting average has been a major boost this season after the Minutewomen lost three .300 hitters to graduation in 2003. Molinari is the only player batting over .300, but the Minutewomen have made up for slow start to the offense in other areas.

The UMass infield has turned 10 double plays this season, which is three more than it did in 49 games a year ago. They have also stolen 30 bases out of 38 attempts after setting the school record with 103 last year.

Sophomore K.J. Kelley is working her way up the all-time UMass homerun very quickly. After smashing eight homers last season, Kelley has picked up where she left off with five homeruns, including two game-winners and a grand slam. She also leads the club with 16 RBIs.

The impending weather could cancel the Thursday doubleheader, as field conditions have already changed the schedule this week for UMass. Yesterday's game at Boston University, their first contest scheduled within the Northeastern region, was postponed until due to poor field conditions. The BU game is rescheduled for April 12 at 3 p.m.

Women's lax to host UNH

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (1-4) will host New Hampshire (3-4) Saturday at 1 p.m., with hopes of ending a four game losing streak.

It has been an uphill battle for a Massachusetts team that hasn't won a game since opening day at Holy Cross (9-6), February 28. Plagued by close losses, one coming in overtime against Harvard (9-8) and one coming at the hands of Hofstra (10-8), UMass will look to stop the bleeding against a UNH team that struggled to a 5-11 record in 2003. Last season, UNH finished second in the America East (4-1), but managed only one victory outside the conference.

"We are entering Saturday's game having lost four straight, but we had a good chance of winning the Albany game that was canceled," coach Carrie Bolduc said.

The Albany game that was slated for March 17 in New York was postponed until April due to heavy snow.

The Minutewomen are coming

See WOMEN'S LAX on page 7

Crew begins season in quest for ninth consecutive Atlantic 10 championship

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

As the last layer of ice recedes to the banks of the Connecticut River, the Massachusetts crew team is ready to leave behind the winter monotony of rowing machines for a spring on the water.

Entering the season as the eight-time defending Atlantic 10 Conference champion, the UMass squad is eager to defend its title.

The 2004 season begins Saturday, when the Minutewomen travel to Kingston, R.I. where they will be favored to win the Yankee Cup Regatta. The Yankee Cup will feature all the state universities from New England, including Connecticut and Rhode Island.

In the 2004 national rankings released last week, UMass was listed as a bubble team, placed just outside the top 20.

"I think that this years team will be the best we've had," coach Jim Dietz said. "We have an incredible amount of returning talent and the experience to do some impressive things."

Last year's squad captured victories at the A-10 and ECAC championships, and finished the season ranked 23rd in the final NCAA coaches poll. The Massachusetts varsity eight capped off a successful season with a gold medal performance at the summer's Henley Women's Regatta in England.

As one of the largest sports at UMass, the crew team will return 60 rowers, including seven new recruits. Stephanie Hoph, the 2003 Maroon and White Rookie of the Year, will be called upon to power the first varsity- eight boat this spring.

Joining Hoph will be senior Katie O'Brien at stroke, junior Lea Jakobsen in the sixth seat, senior Lizzy Boyle in the seventh seat, and sophomore Catherine Gariepy in the bow.

Recently appointed captains Kate Bonner and Carrie Champigny rowed in the second varsity boat last spring, and will be looked upon to lead a group of experienced rowers to the NCAA tournament. Champigny, the boat's coxswain, guided her squad to a semifinal birth at the Henley Regatta. After a summer of training on the Connecticut, Bonner will return as the team's veteran stroke.

"We lost eight seniors from last year's team, but we're senior heavy this year so we will unfortunately be graduating twelve after this season," coach Jim Dietz said. "With the talent we have, we should be as strong or stronger than we were last year."

UMass placed 19 out of at least 60 squads in the Open Division at the Head of the Charles earlier in the fall, its best finish ever. The Head of the Charles is one of the world's largest rowing competitions, which featured rowers on collegiate, Olympic, and national teams. Of the ten collegiate squads to finish ahead of UMass, USC, Duke, Texas and Iowa finished within seconds of Maroon and White— all teams that qualified for the NCAA's in 2003.

EMILY DOGGANCOLLEGIAN

Date set for tribute to late Jack Leaman

The University of Massachusetts has announced that "A Celebration of Jack Leaman" will be held on Sunday, April 18, 2004, at Curry Hicks Cage on the UMass campus. The memorial service will begin at 1:00 p.m., and will be followed by a reception to be held outside of Curry Hicks Cage.

Bench should play key role for Francona, Red Sox in 2004

Mike Marzelli

Sunday's trade of non-roster infielder Tony Womack to the Cardinals for non-roster right-hander Matt Duff flew largely under Red Sox Nation's proverbial radar, but it is clearly an important sign of the times for the Olde Towne Team camp winds down at City of Palms Park in Fort Myers, Fla.

Despite the loss of right fielder Trot Nixon for at least the season's first month, and with star shortstop Nomar Garciaparra hobbling around in an inflatable cast while recovering from Achilles tendonitis, there is no sense of panic around new manager Terry Francona's first camp as Sox skipper, and for two good reasons: depth and flexibility.

Womack is a former starter and World Series hero who has played both infield and outfield for Pittsburgh and Arizona, and is currently rehabbing a shoulder injury that kept him out of much of 2003. A left-handed hitter, a hole in his swing kept Womack from ever becoming a consistent leadoff hitter, but his blazing speed certainly put him over the top as a valuable contributor when healthy.

He is also the type of player that both former general manager Dan Duquette and current second-year GM Theo Epstein have been willing to take risks on during their respective tenure's on Yawkey Way. Players like Bret Saberhagen, David Cone and Robert Person, who were signed as injured, known commodities, rehabbed and went on to achieve varying levels of success.

So without an everyday player penciled in for the daunting task of patrolling Fenway Park's cavernous right field, and with the thought of again losing Garciaparra for an extended period of time frightening the hell out of those within the Nation that even chose to think about it, how can Epstein pass on the value a versatile player like Womack could potentially add to Francona's bench?

Again, depth and flexibility.

Among the seven serious candidates hoping to break camp with New England's favorite sons as reserves, five bat right-handed, one swings lefty and another switch hits.

Defensively, there is only one true infielder and one true outfielder in the group, while four out of the remaining five can claim to play either-or, with the lone exception being backup catcher Doug Mirabelli.

In other words, it is quite obviously a diverse group, and one that will allow Francona the ability to mix and match and double-switch to his heart's content. Therefore, the question is quite simple: who sticks?

Assuming that Mirabelli has

See RED SOX on page 8

John Mayer shows Providence some 'Heavier Things'
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Former UMass star Greg Mauldin has NHL debut tonight
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, MARCH 26, 2004 · NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY · EST. 1890 · VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 106

Democrats hail Kerry to oust incumbent

By Nedra Pickler
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats embraced John Kerry as their new chief with a show of solidarity from Presidents Clinton and Carter, and former foes who are mending fences in an effort to oust President Bush.

"We now have a standard bearer of the Democratic Party," Democratic National Committee Chairman Terry McAuliffe said Thursday, which the party titled "Unity Day" following a fractious primary race.

John Kerry

Carter, Clinton, 2000 Democratic nominee Al Gore and all of Kerry's primary rivals except Dennis Kucinich and Carol Moseley Braun were attending a celebratory dinner that was to raise more than $11 million for the DNC.

Kerry told black-newspaper publishers that his campaign will reach out in an "unprecedented fashion" and asked them to join him. "We need to build the greatest grass-roots movement in the history of this

See KERRY on page 3

Palestinians: violence won't work

By Mohammed Daraghmeh
Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank (AP) — Sixty prominent Palestinians urged their people Thursday not to retaliate for Israel's killing of the Hamas founder, but instead to transform the 3 1/2-year-old violent uprising into a peaceful protest for statehood.

A call for restraint came from a second direction Thursday — relatives of a Palestinian youth caught with a suicide bomber's vest at an Israeli roadblock demanded that militants stop recruiting children.

Despite the appeals, the Hamas military wing on Thursday issued a rare videotaped statement, threatening retaliation against Israelis in graphic terms, after marking Israeli Prime Minster Ariel Sharon as a target.

The statement pledged "a strong, earth-shaking response to make the sons of monkeys and pigs taste a painful death."

In the videotape, given to the Dubai-based Al-Arabiya TV channel, a masked man declared, "We say to the pig Sharon that we will pound your fortresses and make you curse yourself 1,000 times for

See PALESTINIANS on page 2

Economy may be improving

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's economic recovery ended 2003 on a good note, growing at a solid 4.1 percent annual rate, and is expected to do even better in the opening quarter of this year.

The latest reading on gross domestic product for the October-to-December quarter was the same as a previous estimate made a month ago, the Commerce Department reported yesterday. That was consistent with economists' forecasts.

GDP measures that value of all goods and services produced within the United States and is considered the most important barometer of the economy's health.

Economic growth in the current January-to-March quarter is expected to clock in at a rate of 4.5 percent, according to some analysts' forecasts. Growth in the April-to-June quarter also should be around that pace, they said.

Tax refunds and other tax incentives should motivate consumers and businesses to spend and invest more — energizing the economy in the first half of this year, economists said.

"I think we should have another couple of good quarters," said Mark Zandi, chief economist at Economy.com, an analysis firm. "The only thing we can be hoping for now is some job growth."

On Wall Street, the GDP report helped propel stocks upward. The Dow Jones industrials gained 170.59 points to close at 10,218.82.

It's the second half of the year, though, that some economists are a bit concerned about.

If the lackluster job climate persists, some worry that consumers might turn cautious, thus raising the risk of an economic slowdown in the final two quarters of this year.

The economy added just 21,000 jobs in February — all of them in government — a Labor Department survey of payrolls showed. Job growth has been painfully slow despite better economic activity.

Since President Bush took office in January 2001, the economy has lost 2.2 million jobs.

Presumptive Democratic presidential nominee John Kerry has pointed to this as evidence that Bush's economic policies aren't working. Bush, who has defended his policies, wants Congress to make his tax cuts permanent, contending it would make the economy stronger and spur job growth.

In other economic news, new claims for unemployment benefits rose last week by a seasonally adjusted 1,000 to 339,000, the Labor Department said.

And, the National Association of Realtors reported that sales of previous-

See ECONOMY on page 3

Abortion battle reexamined

By Casey Novak
Collegian Staff

"[Women] shouldn't be hesitant or apologetic for demanding the right for an abortion," said Sue Fitzgerald, a member of the International Socialist Organization to a small group of men and women who assembled at the Campus Center yesterday to defend abortion rights.

Abortion rights are currently being eroded away, Fitzgerald said. Since the Roe vs. Wade verdict gave women the right to a safe and legal abortion, Fitzgerald said that anti-abortion fanatics have mobilized to take that right away.

In January of 1973 a pregnant, single woman, Norma McCorvey, known as "Jane Roe" brought a class action lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of the Texas criminal abortion laws, which only allowed abortions for the purpose of saving the mother's life. The plaintiff's assertion was that prohibiting abortion at any time before birth violated a women's constitutional right to privacy. The Supreme Court later agreed with McCorvey, justifying the legality of abortion under the Fourteenth Amendment.

"A bill in South Dakota that would have outlawed all abortions in the state, even in cases of rape or incest, was only defeated by a one vote margin," Fitzgerald said. "This whole bill was designed to challenge the case of Roe vs. Wade."

"We need to understand that 31 years after abortions have been legalized, they are still under attack," Fitzgerald said.

Kate Farrell, a University of Massachusetts senior, and Wayne Standley, both members of the ISO, took the opportunity of the discussion to encourage students to attend the March for Women's Lives, which will take place on April 25 in Washington, D.C.

"It's important that everyone who can get [to the district] get there," Standley said. "We need to overpower [the conservatives] with numbers."

The March for Women's Lives will be a public demonstration organized by several leading national women's rights groups. Pro-choice activists will assemble in the nation's capital to support reproductive freedom and justice for all women.

"Since [President George W.] Bush has been in office he has installed ultra right-winged, fanatic anti-choice judges," Fitzgerald said.

Fitzgerald also said that last year the Bush administration withdrew U.S. support for the United Nation's convention on the elimination all forms of discrimination against women, as well as blocking $34 million of U.S. funding, which Congress had already approved, for the United Nation Population Fund.

"This is an agency that doesn't even offer abortion," Fitzgerald said, "but provides health and maternity care to poor women all around the world."

"Abortion isn't a moral issue, it is a political issue about whether or not women have reproductive rights," Fitzgerald said. "Women shouldn't be forced to bear unwanted children."

Fitzgerald also commented on the blockading of abortion clinics, and the harassment and abuse women going in to get health care sometimes receive.

"Anti-abortion crusaders want us to think that abortion is something for people to be ashamed of," Fitzgerald said. "We have to be prepared to defend abortion clinics if the conservatives are trying to shut them down."

Fitzgerald said that until recently abortions were, for the most part, supported around the country. Now she said that they are seen as a horrible thing to do, instead of looked at as health care.

"A woman's right to control her own body is absolutely a prerequisite of women's liberation — you can't have women's liberation without abortion rights, it's as simple as that," Fitzgerald said. "Unless women have control over their bodies, they will never be equal to men."

KATY TAM/COLLEGIAN

Members of the International Socialist Organization discuss the difficulties abortion-seeking women may face yesterday.

March will strive to fight poverty

The March to Abolish Poverty will be passing through downtown Amherst this Sunday in a campaign that vows to unify the world and defeat the forces of militarism, racism and economic exploitation.

The March will travel through 25 of the lowest-income and hardest-hit cities and towns in all parts of Massachusetts.

The gathering is part of a 16-day statewide poverty march that began March 20 in Hyannis and will finish April 4 in Boston at the Beacon Hill's State House.

April 4 also marks the 36th anniversary of the assassination of Reverend Martin Luther King Jr.

The march will continue in the footsteps of Martin Luther King Jr., and assist in bringing attention to economic injustice in a campaign documenting ongoing Economic Human Rights violations.

On April 4, King's organization was in the midst of building a "Poor People's March." This march and campaign was attempting to organize low-income people of all races and their supporters to come to their nation's capital and make just demands on their government to do something to overcome the terrible problems and injustice of those who lived in poverty.

In the 1800's, those who wanted to abolish slavery were called abolitionists. The marchers in this event, now calling themselves the "New Abolitionists," hope that with the start of this march being in Massachusetts, the campaign will spread across the country and throughout the world.

They urge like-minded activists throughout the United States to join the campaign to abolish the slavery of poverty.

According to the March's official Web site, the New Abolitionists hope to "create a world we all can live in together, as sisters and brothers, and live in peace with economic and social justice."

The gathering will start at the First Congregational Church on Main Street at 1:30 p.m. in downtown Amherst. The March will finish at 4:25 p.m. at the Amherst Common or Grace Church, depending on the weather.

All families, individuals and organizations are welcome and encouraged to participate in the march.

The founding sponsors for the event are the Economic Human Rights Project, the Sisters Together Ending Poverty and the Green-Rainbow Party, as well as other various statewide sponsors.

To learn more about Amherst's plans for the March to Abolish Poverty, visit the March's Web site at http://abolishpoverty.org/local/amherst.

— Michelle Rivera

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Beautiful day in the neighborhood

Karen Olsted, a sophomore School of Management student from West Newbury, plays "45s" with Joe Riedel, a senior operations management major from Methuen. The two were taking advantage of Wednesday's sunny weather outside the Campus Center.

Senate moves to protect unborn in criminal acts

By Jim Abrams
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted Thursday to make it a separate crime to harm a fetus during commission of a violent federal crime, a victory for those seeking to expand the legal rights of the unborn.

The 61-38 vote on the Unborn Victims of Violence Act sends the legislation, after a five-year battle in Congress, to President Bush for his signature. The White House said in a statement that it "strongly supports protection for unborn children." The House passed the bill last month.

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., said the bill was "powerful because this act is about simple humanity, about simple reality."

But abortion rights lawmakers contended that giving a fetus, from the point of conception, the same legal rights as its mother sets a precedent that could be used in future legal challenges to abortion rights.

It was the second big win for social conservatives pushing protections for the unborn following enactment of the so-called partial birth abortion ban last year. That ban is now tied up in the courts.

The Senate cleared the way for passage with a 50-49 vote to defeat an amendment, backed by opponents of the bill, that would have increased penalties but maintained that an attack on a pregnant woman was a single-victim crime.

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., President Bush's opponent this fall, interrupted his campaign schedule to vote yes on the one-victim amendment. He voted no on final passage.

The bill states that an assailant who attacks a pregnant woman while committing a violent federal crime can be prosecuted for separate offenses against both the woman and her unborn child. The legislation defines an "unborn child" as a child in utero, which it says "means a member of the species homo sapiens, at any stage of development, who is carried in the womb."

"This bill recognizes that there are two victims," said Sen. Mike DeWine, R-Ohio, a chief sponsor. Americans, he said, "intuitively know that there is a victim besides the mother."

The key obstacle was an amendment by Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., that would have imposed the same tougher penalties outlined in the DeWine bill but classified any attack on a pregnant woman as a single-victim crime, avoiding the issue of fetal rights and the question of when a person attains personhood.

Expert on space shuttle will speak

A member of the Columbia Accident Investigation Board will be at the University of Massachusetts this afternoon to discuss last year's space shuttle crash and the investigation team's research into the cause.

Stanford professor Douglas Osheroff's lecture, "Understanding the Columbia Space Accident," will be held at Mahar Auditorium at 3:45 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

The Columbia space shuttle came apart during reentry last February, killing all seven of the crew members on board. Later that day, NASA set up an investigation board to determine the cause of the accident. The board was able to come to a conclusion as to the cause of the accident and issued their report last August. According to the report, the accident was caused by a piece of insulating foam that struck the edge of the left wing during the launch. Osheroff will discuss this cause and the organizational problems that the team also believed contributed to the accident.

Osheroff was a recipient of the 1996 Nobel Prize in Physics for his discovery of the superfluidity of helium-3. The profes-

See SHUTTLE on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundos
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COPY EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salzsieder
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagnese
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stanton
HUMAN RESOURCES Renee Brand
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kiggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Liza Lynch
GRAPHIC ADVISER Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Crum
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lorley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Morrelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC YEAR, EXCEPT DURING VACATIONS AND EXAMINATION PERIODS. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS "ALMA MATER" AND BECAME THE COLLEGIAN IN 1907. THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IS 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED SPECIAL AND DISTINCTION. ALL STUDENTS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

Campus Perspectives

By Scott Eldridge II and Andy Tamulynas

What do you think the SGA should focus on next year?

senior
STPEC major

"Bringing funds back into the school and making sure it's distributed properly."
Adam Meringolo

freshman
Journalism major

"There is not enough attention paid to the student. They should do everything to maximize the opportunity for students."
Clifford Schochat

junior
Music major

"I think the biggest focus should be why are we paying more and getting less."
Dave Brown

sophomore
Psychology/Woman's Studies major

"They should reform the policies of the RAs so that students have more rights."
Elissa Dunn

junior
Communication major

"More diversity in the leadership ... it would be nice to see more women and more minorities."
Myles Sullivan

junior
Sociology/Education major

"In relation to class size ... budget cuts are one of the most important issues."
Rachel Rabinovich

Shuttle talk to take place

SHUTTLE from page 1

sor has won the Simon Memorial Prize as a member of the National Academy of Sciences, the Oliver Buckley Prize, and the Walter J. Gores Award for Excellence in Teaching. He was also named a MacArthur Fellow.

Osheroff's presentation at this school is part of the Distinguished Speakers program put on by the Commonwealth College. This program brings notable speakers to the school to interact with honors students and to give speeches on topics of interest. In addition to his public lecture, Osheroff will also meet with honors students and physics department faculty.

— Megan Daley

Palestinians push for no violence

PALESTINIANS from page 1

merely thinking of assassinating our leaders and symbols."

However, some Palestinians are questioning whether violent resistance has done them more harm then good. Their economy has been decimated. Israeli checkpoints, closures and other restrictions, which Israel says are necessary to stop attackers, have made their lives miserable.

Since violence erupted in September 2000, 2,762 people have been killed on the Palestinian side and 942 on the Israeli side — but Palestinians are hard pressed to show any accomplishments.

On Thursday, a group of respected Palestinians put a half-page advertisement in the PLO's Al-Ayyam newspaper calling on Palestinians to lay down their arms and turn to peaceful means of protest toward ending Israel's occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Similar calls in the past have had little impact on public opinion, and Thursday's ad was greeted with little enthusiasm by many Palestinians.

The intellectuals who signed the ad — including peace advocate Sari Nusseibeh, lawmaker Hanan Ashrawi and Abbas Zaki, a leading member of Yasser Arafat's Fatah movement — said revenge attacks over Yassin's assassination would lead to strong Israeli retaliation and further hurt the Palestinian cause.

The group called on the public to "rise again in a peaceful, wise Intefadeh [uprising]."

Some Palestinians doubted the ad would be greeted with a similar call for restraint by Israelis, noting Israel has announced plans to kill all Hamas leaders.

"We had many previous experiences with the Israelis," said Ahmed Radi, 32. "There was a truce with Israel, but Israel has not stopped its aggression."

For its part, Israel has said it plans to kill the entire Hamas leadership.

Israeli troops have engaged Palestinian militants in isolated gunfights since Yassin's killing, but there has been no major escalation in violence. Still, Israelis are jittery, and security has been beefed up throughout the country.

Stepped up security measures paid off for the Israelis on Wednesday when soldiers stopped 16-year-old Hussam Abdo, who had a suicide bomb vest strapped to his body, at a West Bank checkpoint, setting off a tense encounter with soldiers.

The teenager's family said he was gullible and easily manipulated, and demanded that militants stop using children for attacks.

"It is forbidden to send him to fight. He is young, he is small, he should be in school. Someone pressured him, maybe because they killed Ahmed Yassin," Abdo's mother, Tamam, said.

The aftermath of Yassin's assassination has been felt in Israel. The president of Romania called off a trip set for Monday, tour operators report that many tourists have canceled their trips, and a leading European basketball team refused to fly to Israel for a league game on Thursday.

The Yassin killing was part of Sharon's effort to crush Hamas ahead of a possible Israeli withdrawal from Gaza.

Sharon has suggested the Gaza pullout as part of a plan to unilaterally separate from the Palestinians in the absence of a peace agreement. The plan is expected to include a limited pullback from the West Bank, where Israel would impose a boundary.

An Israeli delegation — including Sharon's top aide Dov Weisglass and national security adviser Giora Eiland — is in Washington this week to discuss the plan. U.S. envoys are expected in Israel next week for another round of talks.

TOM HANKS
The greatest criminal minds of all time have finally met their match.

THE LADYKILLERS
R RESTRICTED
Soundtrack Includes The New Single "Trouble Of This World (Coming Home)" Performed By NAPPY ROOTS
In Theatres March 26

jostens
Ring Day
Monday, March 29th 10AM to 4PM
Tuesday, March 30th 10AM to 4PM
UniversityStore CampusCenter

THE Choice for your class ring
If you can't make the Ring Day Sale
Call Jostens at: 800-854-7464
www.jostens.com

Fabulous Gift!
CLINIQUE Bonus is here!
With your Clinique purchase of $19.50 get this 7-piece gift, Free. Quantities are limited. Now thru Sun., April 4th
Spring Gift
7-piece Gift
• Deluxe-size Rinse-Off Foaming Cleanser
• Dramatically Different Moisturizing Lotion
• New Repairwear Day SPF 15 Intensive Cream
• Lash Curling Mascara - Black
• Soft-Pressed Powder Blusher Duo w/Brush - Pink Blush/Chestnut Blush
• Long Last Soft Shine Lipstick – All Heart
• Cosmetics Bag

Cedar Chest
ARTFUL FURNISHINGS · QUALITY LINENS · IMAGINATIVE GIFTS
Thornes Marketplace · 150 Main St., Northampton, MA · 413-584-3060

NEW THIS WEEK!
BEYOND BORDERS
DIRTY PRETTY THINGS
GOTHIKA
MAGDALENE SISTERS
THE RUNDOWN
SHATTERED GLASS
SINGING DETECTIVE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

CHARLES DHARAPAK/ASSOCIATED PRESS

President Bush, right, shakes hands Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney at a Bush-Cheney 2004 campaign fundraising event in Boston yesterday.

Boston visit a Bush fundraiser

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — President Bush's campaign fund-raising tour targeted Boston on Thursday, with about 1,000 people attending a $2,000-per-person event at the Park Plaza Hotel.

"Some people might think we would not have a lot of support here. They're wrong," he said. "Nobody should take any state for granted in 2004."

One name not on the guest list was Democratic rival John Kerry, who lives less than a mile from the hotel.

Despite Kerry's obvious political advantages in his home state, Bush, who has already raised about $170 million for his re-election bid, has a strong base of support from a small but dedicated band of among Massachusetts Republicans.

Bush's jabs at Kerry got some of the biggest applause. He also made a veiled reference to the gay marriage debate in Massachusetts, decrying activist judges who "try to remake the values of America by court order."

David "Mugsy" McGinnis, 48, of Westwood, the owner of a ticket agency, describes himself as a conservative Republican, and a big fan of President Bush.

"I'm raising my kids as very conservative Republicans. I agree with everything (Bush) does. He can't make a mistake in my eyes."

Last June, Vice President Dick Cheney brought in $1.2 million during a fund raising stop in Hopkinton that was hosted by businessman and former U.S. ambassador to Ireland Richard Egan.

Organizers of the event said the Boston event, which followed another Bush fund-raising stop in Nashua, N.H., raised about $1.3 million for the candidate.

Kerry was also on the money hunt Thursday. The Massachusetts senator and presumptive Democratic presidential nominee was planning to attend a fund-raising event for the Democratic National Committee in Washington, D.C. with former presidents Bill Clinton and Jimmy Carter.

The $1,000-a-plate dinner will raise $11 million — about $1 million from Massachusetts — according to state Democratic Party Chairman Phil Johnston.

"He [Bush] may receive money from his wealthy, limousine-riding GOP friends, but he won't get many votes from real Massachusetts voters in November," Johnston said.

Protesters and supporters lined the sidewalks Thursday afternoon as Bush arrived at the Boston Park Plaza Hotel for the event.

About 500 Bush opponents gathered near the intersection of Arlington and Boylston Streets, some holding signs that read "Get the terrorists out of the White House." The bells of the nearby Arlington Street Church tolled the strains of "We Shall Overcome" and "Give Peace a Chance." Protesters included union members, environmentalists, anti-war protesters and AIDS activists. The crowd began dissipating at about 7 p.m.

AP reporter Jennifer Peter contributed to this report.

Kerry wins new support

KERRY from page 1

country," he said.

Kerry was endorsed by his harshest primary rival, former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean, who put aside objections to the Massachusetts senator's position on tax cuts and the war in Iraq in the common cause of beating Bush.

"We had a tough campaign here," Dean said in endorsing Kerry at a George Washington University rally, noting that they once focused "on things that divide us. Now we are going to talk about the things that we have in common."

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, which had backed Dean, also endorsed Kerry after a unanimous vote of the union's executive council. With 1.3 million members, AFSCME is the second-largest union in the AFL-CIO and boasts one of organized labor's largest and most savvy political operations. The United Auto Workers' executive board followed suit, one day before Kerry campaigns in Michigan.

Kucinich is the only candidate still campaigning, even though Kerry has enough delegates for the nomination. The Ohio congressman pledged in a statement to support the eventual nominee, but said he will continue to campaign for peace, universal health care and fair trade. Braun sent Kerry a letter with her regrets, citing a prior commitment.

Other candidates who challenged Kerry in the primary, including Dean, former Gen. Wesley Clark and North Carolina Sen. John Edwards, have sent e-mail solicitations asking for donations to Kerry's campaign.

McAuliffe said the party, with $25 million and no debt, was better prepared than ever to challenge the GOP.

"The tools are in place," McAuliffe told the National Newspaper Publishers Association. "Now we need to make sure to use these tools to make sure that John Kerry is elected president."

Still, Kerry and his party are at a disadvantage. The Republican National Committee reported $45 million on hand at the beginning of the month and has raised more since then. Kerry reported $2.4 million and has raised roughly $20 million over the Internet since then. But Bush dwarfed him with $110 million and took in millions more at fund-raisers in recent weeks, including one Thursday in Kerry's hometown of Boston.

Democratic-leaning groups are spending millions in support of Kerry, which could help even the gap.

Recent report suggests recent economic improvement

ECONOMY from page 1

ly owned homes grew by 2 percent in February to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 6.12 million.

Low interest rates beckoned buyers and pushed home sales to record levels in 2003. Sales are expected to be brisk this year, too.

"With a strong underlying demand for housing from a growing population in a recovering economy, we could be flirting with another record this year," said David Lereah, the association's chief economist.

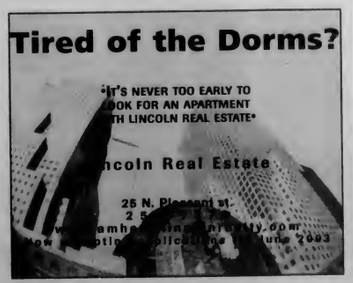
Although the fourth quarter's GDP growth rate was slower than the red-hot 8.2 percent pace of the third quarter, the economy's performance in the second half of 2003 marked the fastest back-to-back quarterly increases since the first two quarters of 1984.

Until the second half of last year, the economy was struggling mightily to get back on firm footing after being knocked asunder by the 2001 recession, terror attacks and fallout from a wave of corporate accounting scandals.

A noteworthy factor in the pickup in the second half of last year was brisk spending by businesses. Businesses finally cast off some of the caution that had previously restrained capital investment.

It was big cutbacks in capital spending that helped to thrust the economy into recession. Economists said a sustained turnaround in capital spending is a crucial ingredient for the recovery to be lasting.

Businesses boosted spending on equipment and software at a 14.9 percent rate in the fourth quarter. That was a tad slower than the 15.1 percent pace estimated a month ago and came after a 17.6 percent growth rate in the third quarter.



Still, businesses cut spending on new plants and buildings in both the third and fourth quarters. That's been an area that has remained weak.

A measure of after-tax corporate profits, adjusted for changes in inventories and capital depreciation, rose by 7.6 percent in the fourth quarter, following a 10.1 percent increase in the prior quarter. Economists hope that continued good profit growth will be an incentive for businesses to step up hiring.

Consumers, whose spending accounts for roughly two-thirds of all economic activity, also helped the economy. Consumer spending rose at a respectable 3.2 percent pace in the fourth quarter. That was better than the last estimate of a 2.7 percent pace and followed a 6.9 percent growth rate in the third quarter.

CHARMED

THE ONE YOU WANT.
THE WAY YOU WANT IT.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Tired of the Dorms?
"IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO LOOK FOR AN APARTMENT WITH LINCOLN REAL ESTATE"
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St.

Wiffle Rock
2-5 player teams
Medium pitch speed
MAY 1 & 2 @ TOTMAN FIELD UMASS
WIFFLEBALL TOURNAMENT
$1000 cash
FOR WINNING TEAM
Entry info--
www.wifflerock.com
Hotline 508-429-7093
ROCK 102 WAQY Springfield's Classic Rock

Change your mind this summer:

stay.
• Get the Gen Ed courses you need
• Enjoy smaller class sizes
• Keep on track for graduation
• Choose from over 200 courses and degree programs
• AND take 6 credits or more and we'll waive the registration fee!
Watch for our money-saving coupon in your mailbox.
umass.edu/contined
413-545-2414
UMassAmherst
Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, MARCH 26, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Wilson appointment a step in right direction

Seven months after taking over as interim president, Jack Wilson has officially been named as William Bulger's replacement as the next president of the University of Massachusetts.

Wilson has received praise from all sides. For one, he has proven himself to have a strong rapport with the student body. Several officials in the Student Government Association have already voiced their approval of Wilson, citing both his exemplary credentials as well as his skillful ability to communicate with students on a personal level. In a time when students feel alienated and cut off from university officials, and students across the state argue that they have no say in campus-wide decisions, having a president who will take time to interact with the student body is essential. Wilson seems to fit this description.

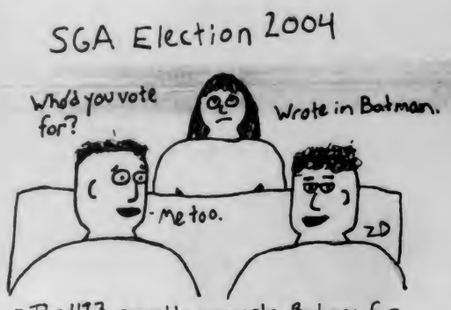
Gov. Mitt Romney, the man who spearheaded the effort leading to Bulger's eventual resignation last September, has also expressed his endorsement. Romney pointed to the character, intellectual capacity and commitment of Wilson as reasons why he approves of the decision.

Character issues, stemming from Bulger's inability to cooperate in the federal investigation of his brother, Whitey, were the key reasons Romney opposed Bulger as president. It will be a welcomed change of pace to have a president that can work side-by-side with the governor's office.

Finally, Wilson has received approval from the Bulger camp. Bulger himself praised Wilson earlier this month for his fine job as interim president. Wilson has also received the backing of several trustees who supported Bulger during the last few months of his tenure, including Board of Trustees chairman Grace Fey.

Clearly, Wilson has been able to draw support from a wide variety of sources, something that will prove invaluable to him as he attempts to take UMass, in the words of Gov. Romney, "to the next level."

The trustees' decision to name Wilson as the universities twenty-fifth president did not come without controversy, however. Board member Robert B. McCarthy, for example, criticized the process, saying it was done prematurely. McCarthy said he did not have a chance to meet the other candidate in the race for the presidency, Democratic fund-raiser Alan D. Solomont.



The haste was due, in part, to an offer Wilson received from Worcester Polytechnic Institute, to be the university's new president.

While some might argue that the "rushed" nature of the appointment led to an uneducated, even incorrect choice, it does indicate just how sought after a candidate Wilson was. The board, possibly fearing Wilson would accept the position at WPI, took the necessary steps to ensure that their top choice would be selected. Such a high level of commitment in a newly elected president speaks volumes to the confidence university officials have in Wilson.

If UMass is truly ready to be taken to "the next level," they will need a president who can speak to both the student body and the state officials. He must be committed to shaping UMass into an able flagship university, equipped to handle the challenges it will surely to face in the months and years to come. The Massachusetts Daily Collegian agrees with the Board of Trustees that Jack Wilson is the proper candidate for such a job.

Information from the Boston Globe was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

GRAD STUDENT SAYS RACISM SHOULD BE TAKEN MORE SERIOUSLY

On March 25 Zach Oelschlegel wrote about two of my favorite subjects: free speech and racism. For starters I'd like to clarify for Oelschlegel that the first amendment isn't just about protecting the speech that takes place in his living room amongst his friends or the writings in his web log. And it's sure as hell not restricted to protecting the rights of his favorite comedians on Comedy Central when they say the "f" word.

Furthermore, it's not entirely about protecting Janet Jackson's exposed breast. The first amendment is about protecting undesirable speech. It wasn't written to protect conservative pundits like Bill O'Reilly when they give George W. Bush a pat on the back for bringing democracy to Iraq and Afghanistan. The first amendment is about protecting the rights of those who criticize the war and point out how this administration is in the Middle East working in the interest of the Halliburtons and Exxon-Mobiles.

The very concept of free speech was also meant to protect those who questioned the disparities of wealth within the richest country on earth.

Notice the contradiction, however, when Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. spoke out against war and poverty versus when Bill Maher referred to the U.S. military operations as being "cowardly." King paid the price with constant harassment by the FBI and eventually, his life. Maher on the other hand, got his favorite toy taken away from him.

Apparently you're correct Oelschlegel. "To go too far on either side of the issue is where people's rights are infringed, or where you disrupt someone else's right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

You did, however, leave out someone's right to make a profit. Perhaps Dr. King should've remained in his living room talking about war and economic injustices with his buddies.

I always find myself speechless when white folks say things like "I'm not a racist but ... " or more specifically in Oelschlegel's case, "I am not a racist. But at least I have the right to be one." Do you have any understanding of what you're saying? When you legitimize the right to be a racist, you're trivializing 512 years of race relations. As long as white people think that having black friends or not saying the "n" word protects them from being a racist, you're never going to understand white supremacy and therefore will never establish peace with people of color.

White supremacy isn't limited to conversations concerning the Ku Klux Klan. It's the very mentality under which this country's wealth and democracy was founded via the enslavement of blacks, the genocide of native people and the territorial conquest of Mexicans. White supremacy is now deeply embedded in our laws disguised as anti-immigrant legislation, the Patriot Act and, of course, UMass Sevis fees. These laws target People of Color. If you fail to recognize this, you're living on that big white moon in the sky. Giving your government a friendly wink and a nudge for guaranteeing your right to be a racist takes us back five centuries!

Oelschlegel, I have a proposition for you. For the past three years I've lived in Detroit, a city where African Americans constitute 82 percent of the population. I'm going back there this summer.

I'll be living in the predominantly Latino community within the city. I invite you to come along with me. I have ties to the community as well as media connections that'll let you reprint that same column you wrote for the

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian. The only condition being that you have to allow for the Detroit readers to see the same mug shot of you that's printed in the Collegian. As a courtesy to you, I'll even reprint the article in Spanish for the Latino community to enjoy. Much like the issue of racism Oelschlegel, this isn't a joke.

Your audience won't be the same tofu-eating, Birkenstock-wearing white hippie liberals of Amherst.

Hector "Ric" Urrutia
UMass graduate student

Deterring democracy in Haiti

Ethan Burke

Media coverage of Haiti in recent weeks might lead one to believe the Haitian people have been saved from a corrupt dictator after the overthrow of President Jean Bertrand Aristide. Reality is quite different.

In 1990 Haiti held its first free election following a long history of U.S.-supported dictatorship. Former World Bank official Marc Bazin was expected to win the election having the support of the United States and the elite owned Haitian media. Bazin lost in a wave of popular support for the priest of the slums — Jean Bertrand Aristide. Aristide won the elections with two thirds of the vote.

The first Bush Administration met this massive display of participatory democracy with disdain. Seven months after the election, Aristide was overthrown by a CIA-backed military coup. The CIA continued funding the paramilitary death squad as it beat, tortured, raped, mutilated and massacred the Haitian population during its three-year reign of terror, where an estimated 3,000 to 5,000 Haitian civilians were killed. Today former death squad leader, Emmanuel Constant, lives in Queens being given asylum by the United States despite Haitian extradition requests.

With growing political pressure, President Clinton acted to invade Haiti in September of 1994 to restore Aristide to the presidency. However, his power was greatly reduced and he was made to adopt neo-liberal "structural adjustment programs" which essentially handed Haiti's economy over to multinational corporations. Aristide was forced to undermine his initial platform to help the poor masses and instead adopt policies to attract foreign investment and help business.

Though Aristide clearly won the 2000 presidential election, the media has called his election a fraud. The electoral dispute actually concerned parliamentary elections where Aristide's Lavalas party took the great majority of seats. The opposition protested the election of nine senators of Lavalas who won with a plurality rather than a majority. Later, upon the request of Aristide who sought to dispel all accusations of illegitimacy, eight out of nine senators resigned. Afterward the Organization of American States criticized the calculation methods as being flawed and international aid was cut off. The International Coalition of Independent Observers concluded that the elections were "free and fair." The United States incidentally denied requests from the Haitian government for international observers to validate the elections.

It is painfully ironic listening to pundits try to justify the removal of Aristide on the grounds that he was not democratically elected given the Florida 2000 debacle which brought George W. Bush to the White House.

Jeffrey Sachs wrote in the Financial Times, "Mr. Aristide won the presidential election, but most of the US media reported the election was 'boycotted by the opposition' and hence, not legitimate. This is a cruel joke to those who know Haiti, where Mr. Aristide was swept in with an overwhelming mandate and the opposition, such as it was, ducked the elections."

Upon his election Aristide acted on his campaign pledge to help the poor by doubling minimum wage and refusing to privatize state industry. This is opposite of U.S. neo-liberal plans for Haiti which call for a government friendly to investors, not the Haitian population. Doubling labor costs and denying corporate takeover of Haiti's industries goes against U.S. aims of hegemony in the region by challenging the neo-liberal agenda and also setting the dangerous example of "taking matters into one's own hands" as President Kennedy advisor Arthur Schlesinger aptly pointed out decades ago.

It is apparent from statements made by the Bush Administration that they are pleased with regime change in Haiti. Absent from the media is the fact that the same CIA trained and funded terrorist group (FRAPH) from the 1991 coup and an attempted coup in 2001 is responsible for the ousting of Aristide and the recent violence. Many of the leaders are the same (Louis Jodel Chamblain, Guy Philippe, Jean Tatoune, Andre Apaid).

Haitian government attorney Ira Kurzban said, "These people came through the Dominican border after the United States had provided 20,000 M-16's to the Dominican army. I believe that the United States clearly knew about it before, and that given the fact of the history of these people, [Washington is] probably very, very deeply involved, and I think Congress needs to seriously look at what the involvement of the Defense Intelligence Agency and the Central Intelligence Agency has been in this operation. Because it is a military operation. It's not a rag-tag group of liberators, as has often been put in the press in the last week or two."

President Aristide has charged the United States with kidnapping him, his wife, and many others close to him early in the morning Feb. 29. The Bush Administration denies these claims calling them "absurd."

U.S. Congresswomen Maxine Waters told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on May 10, "The President told me he was forced to leave Haiti on Feb. 29, 2004, after U.S. officials told him that he and many other Haitians would be killed if he refused [to leave.]"

The Bush Administration reveals its sincerity in "bringing democracy" and "fighting terrorism" as it supports terrorists while they overthrow a democratically elected government just off our coast.

U.S. media attacks on Aristide are based on unsubstantiated rumors spewed by wealthy opponents of Aristide who control the Haitian media. The Bush Administration brands Aristide a "failed leader." He is a "failed leader" in the sense that he failed to be the obedient puppet that ignores his population and takes orders from Washington.

If history tells us anything, there will be a bloodbath in Haiti as the new government brutally suppresses the impoverished Haitian population that has been tormented by two centuries of terrorism and economic warfare through imperial intervention, embargoes and neo-liberal reform. Haitians will fall deeper into poverty as Aristide's programs are abandoned in favor of paying off debt and attracting foreign investment. As the Bush Administration touts its plan for "bringing democracy" to the Middle East Americans must address the hypocrisy of deterring democracy in Haiti.

Ethan Burke is a UMass student.

I want, I want, I want

Kate Walsh

Think for a moment about what it is that you really want. Then think about what it is that you want, just because you can't have it. Do you know the difference?

It's not easy. What we think we want, and then what we actually do want, are two separate entities, sometimes indistinguishable from one another. That's because inherent to human nature is the desire to want something just because we can't get to it.

We all have needs, wants, desires and fantasies. Yet those desires and fantasies — the things that we think we want — have to remain unrealistic. Philosopher Jacques Lacan said that desire must have its objects absent to continue, because if we do ever achieve what it is that we want, the desire for it will vanish.

This isn't to say that when we obtain something that we desire or fantasize about we later reject. We tend to accept it, perhaps even embrace it, but once we have "it," we don't necessarily want "it" anymore. When fantasy becomes reality, desire can't support it any longer.

The way I see it, our minds constantly rotate among three realms, which I'll call Reality, Fantasy, and Extreme Fantasy. In the realm of Reality, almost all things are tangible possibilities, and therefore, desire and fantasy don't exist. You either already have what you want, or you know you can have it, so you don't truly desire it.

In the realm of Extreme Fantasy, desire exists in the form of pleasant thoughts that enter freely in and out of the mind. Desire is present in Extreme Fantasy, but the possibility of "it" becoming reality is so remote that you're not going to lose sleep over waiting for it to happen.

For example, when I was 12 years old I was convinced I would someday marry Jonathan Taylor Thomas. I taped episodes of "Home Improvement"; I plastered my walls with his pictures cut neatly from the pages of Teen Beat Magazine. I even spent four hours in line at a car show that he was attending so I could have his signature forever etched onto one of his pictures that had previously been part of my innovative new wallpaper. But I knew deep down that even though we shared the same zodiac sign, had the same favorite ice cream flavor, and owned the same type of dog, it was just not in the cards that I would aspire to be Ms. Katherine Thomas one day. This type of fantasy is too far from reality for the desire to consume you.

The Fantasy realm is where the trouble lies. This is a realm that is one step beyond Reality, containing the almost-but-not-quite fantasy. It is the thing that you know you can't have. However, the object of desire, the fantasy, is right in front of you. It's there, and you can't have it.

The Fantasy realm is where the trouble lies. This is the realm that is one step beyond Reality, containing the almost-but-not-quite fantasy.

It's that guy that you think is out of your league. It's that shirt which is far beyond your price range. It's that competitive internship that you have the perfect qualifications for, if only you weren't one out of a hundred applicants.

You drive yourself crazy wanting and wanting and wanting this thing that you can't have. You torture yourself, exhaust yourself thinking of what you can do to get it, and still to no avail.

Surprisingly enough, sometimes, you actually do get the object of your desire. And then, in an instant, fantasy becomes reality, desire is lost, and whatever it is that you wanted you don't want anymore, because you've gotten it, and it doesn't live up to your expectations. Why? Because these real life fantasies just don't exist.

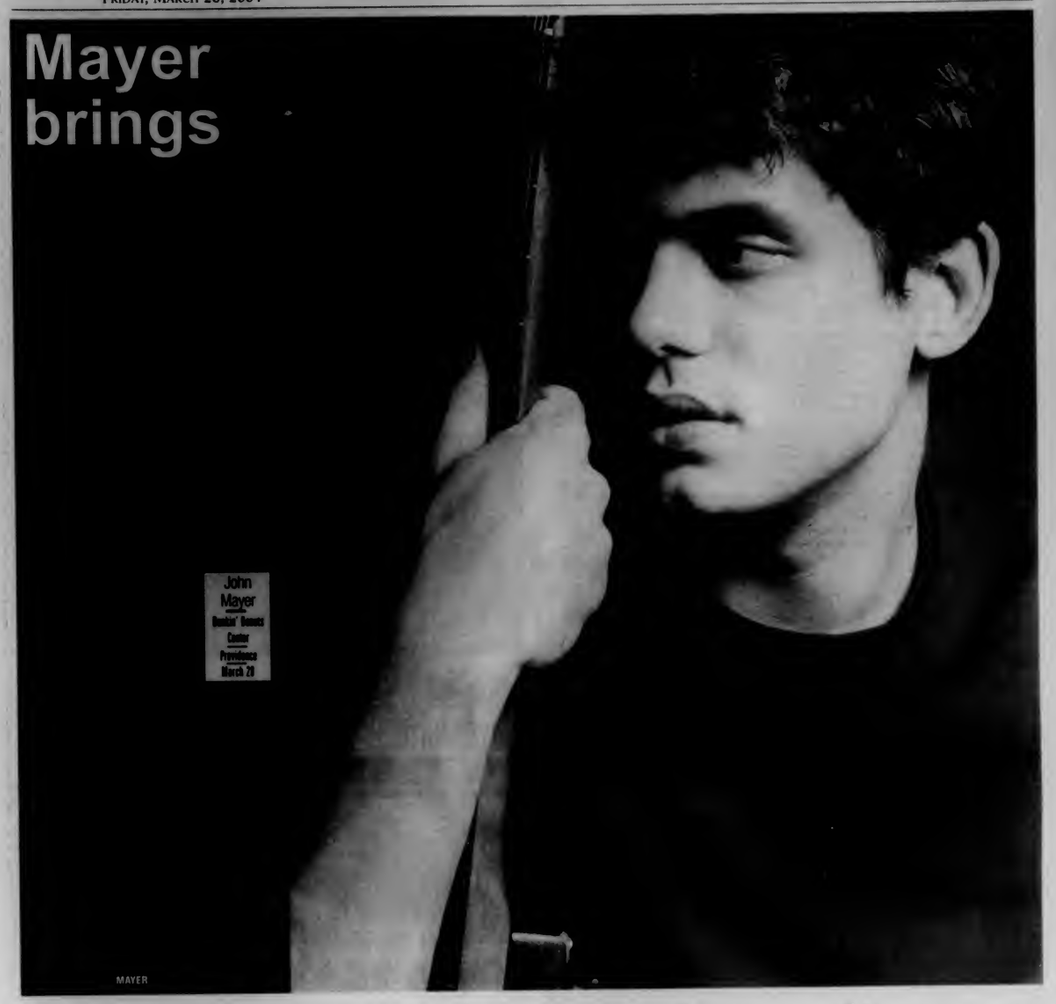
You're the one chosen for that the internship out of the hundreds of other candidates. And despite your 3.8 grade point average, extracurricular activities, and myriad of accomplishments, you are seen, not as an employee, but an intern, in the most dreaded sense of the word. As far as anybody is concerned, you are barely capable of making copies, answering phones and running to Starbucks, let alone competent enough to handle actual work.

That guy who you thought you could never have; he finally asks you out. And guess what? He's boring, unbelievably full of himself, and his definition of "getting to know" you on dates includes hardly anything beyond "getting to know" how many more dates he has to take you on before you'll have sex with him.

So how, then, do we know what we actually do want? Despite my belief that we all want things we can't have, I'm convinced that there are some things we want in life that are achievable. Those things are real; they are the things that we will continue to want long after we get them. They are lifelong goals and intrinsic human needs, like security, happiness and love. I think it's safe to say that those are things that most, if not all, of us want in life. And they are all real and possible.

That being said, maybe fantasies are best left alone. What we truly want in life we'll get as long as we work for it, and what we desire, we can continue to fantasize about. After all, we know that fantasy turned reality never works out the way we want, and for that reason, maybe it's better to keep the fantasy in our heads than to put it into our hands.

Kate Walsh is a Collegian columnist.



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, MARCH 26, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mayer brings

A piece of Brazil comes to UMass

By Jovan Smith
Collegian Staff

"Carnaval: Out of Season"
Tomorrow
Campus Center Auditorium
$4, $5

The University of Massachusetts Amherst's first Brazilian organization, the Student Association For the Multicultural Brazilian Alliance, will be celebrating their second annual Carnaval "Out of Season" party tomorrow in the Campus Center Auditorium from 7 p.m. to 1 a.m.

Usually held during the summer in all parts of Brazil, but most popular in Rio De Janeiro, "Carnaval" is known as the biggest celebration in the world, held for five days straight. The Carnaval "Out of Season" party will attempt to carry on the Brazilian tradition at UMass.

"It's a carnival, but we also want to add an educational aspect to the event," said Talia Yagudin a junior at UMass and a fellow member of SAMBA. In order to understand the carnival it is important to understand the Brazilian culture."

The festivities will begin with a traditional Brazilian dish called Feijoada, a bean stew that consists of vegetables and meat — usually pork. Dinner will be served between the hours of 7 p.m. and 8 p.m. After dinner, Alan P. Marcus, a University of Massachusetts professor in the department of Geosciences and Geography, will give a lecture titled "Brazilians in Massachusetts: The Complexities of a non-Spanish-speaking Latin Ameri-can population."

A wave of traditional Brazilian performances will follow the lecture. A professional dance instructor, Thais, originally from Brazil, teaches Brazilian dance in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and will perform the exhibition dances of Forro and Samba.

Talia Yagudin and other UMass junior students Juliana Leal and Helenice Valentim, "Garota Do Samba" or in English The Girls of Samba will dance to a mixture of music including Brazilian Funk which derives from Rio De Janeiro, and Pagode, a type of Samba which is most common in northeastern Brazil.

The dance will be followed by a live Brazilian band called Terra Treme who will play a type of music called Axe (pronounced Ash-ey). Accompanying the band will be three Brazilian dancers who will wear traditional costumes derived from both Bahia and Rio de Janeiro.

After the performances DJ Boquinha from Boston will play a mixture of Brazilian beats, hip-hop, reggae and techno music.

Tickets for "Carnaval" are $4 for UMass students and $5 for the general public. The first 40 people to attend the party will receive complementary masks in light of the Brazilian Carnaval spirit.

For more information: http://www.umass.edu/rso/samba.

Dickinson's legacy lives on

Poet to be honored with reading in famed Amherst homestead

By Trudy Tynan
Associated Press

AMHERST — "March is the month of expectation," poet Emily Dickinson wrote.

And to celebrate the season and usher in April and National Poetry Month, this college town is paying tribute to its most famous daughter next week with a marathon reading of all 1,789 of Dickinson's poems at the graceful home where she shut herself off from the world.

Hundreds of people — from a class of fourth-graders to retirees and delegations from all of the surrounding colleges — have already signed up to read. "And we have left time for walk-ins," said Cindy Dickinson, the museum director, who is no relation to the poet.

The readings will stretch across four days, from Wednesday through Saturday, during museum hours.

"We wanted to offer the public a new experience," said Cindy Dickinson. This is also the first season that the museum is offering joint tours of the Dickinson Homestead and the adjacent home, called the Evergreens, built for the poet's brother, Austin Dickinson, and his wife, Susan, when they married in 1856.

Both homes are now owned by Amherst College. For years, the college had used the Homestead as faculty housing until finally it bowed to the would-be literary pilgrims that kept leaning on the doorbell and tramping over the lawn, and opened it for tours and classes.

Legend has it that after she was in her 30s the poet rarely left the Homestead, except to go next door.

The brick house with white columns, which sits inconspicuously off Main Street, was built by Dickinson's grandfather, a founder of Amherst College, in 1813. This summer, the college plans to repaint it mustard yellow like it was in the poet's day.

Poet Emily Dickinson lived in this Amherst home for most of her life. The homestead will play host to a marathon reading of more than 1,700 of her works Wednesday through Saturday.

Here visitors can climb a curving staircase to the small, plain bedroom in the west corner where the woman in the white dress wrote the poems she called "my letter to a world that never wrote to me."

It was not until after Dickinson died at age 55, on May 15, 1886, that her sister, Lavinia, found the handwritten poems, loosely tied together with thread and tucked into a bureau drawer.

The bedroom window, draped with white gauze curtains, looks over the rooftops of Amherst to the mountains beyond. In summer, local historians and Dickinson fans tend to the perennial garden she loved.

Next door, the Evergreens, which remained in the Dickinson family until the 1980s, is a time warp of 19th-century family treasures and furniture.

"It's a totally different experience. Everything is just as the Dickinsons left it," the curator said. "The pictures are hung where they placed them. The wallpaper is the same."

"Together the two houses give a better understanding of her world," Dickinson said. "They open it up. There was a lot of going back and forth between the two homes. Emily sent poems to her sister-in-law. And she loved the children."

The poet was particularly close to her youngest nephew, Gilbert, who died at age 8, the curator said. Among the new areas opened to visitors this spring, she said, is the children's nursery, left virtually unchanged by the family since Gilbert's death more than a century ago.

And in May, on the Saturday closest to the anniversary of her death, the community will pay a more informal tribute to its reclusive poet.

For years Dickinson scholars and fans have gathered at the home, each with a flower, to walk to some of her favorite places in Amherst, pausing here and there to read her poetry.

At her grave in the West Cemetery on Triangle Street they toast her life and art with elderberry wine and recite their favorite poems.

Stiller and Wilson expertly take on '70s with 'Starsky & Hutch'

By Jennifer Marcoullier
Collegian Correspondent

The new movie version of vintage TV show "Starsky & Hutch" tells the tale of how these two mismatched cops became partners. In the process, this movie hilariously turns most buddy movie clichés inside out. The 1970s setting also provides material for the kind of Ben Stiller/Owen Wilson antics last seen in "Zoolander."

'Starsky & Hutch'
Directed by Todd Phillips
Starring Ben Stiller, Owen Wilson, Snoop Dogg
Warner Bros.
Rated PG-13
101 mins.
Grade: B

David Starsky and Ken "Hutch" Hutchinson are the classic odd couple of police officers. The movie unfortunately takes too long to set this up, so the first half hour drags on.

Ben Stiller as David Starsky is the good cop. He loves being a cop, following in the footsteps of his legendary mother — a nice twist on the typical father-son cop legacy. He follows the rules so strictly he doesn't even stop for a coffee and doughnut while on duty. Ben Stiller's characteristic neurotics are also thrown in for good measure. Starksy is going through partners faster than you can say "fondue party" since no one meets his exacting standards.

Owen Wilson, as officer Ken Hutchinson, is of course Starsky's polar opposite: the bad cop. He's sloppy, he's tardy, he pilfers from crime scenes and he's been openly robbing bookies for several months under the guise — that no one believes — of working undercover. But we're led to believe that underneath all that, he has the potential to be a good cop. Following the inevitable buddy-movie logic, their captain pairs these two officers in the hope that together they'll each rub out the other's worst characteristics.

Soon the pair find themselves investigating a murder that tips them off to a cocaine ring headed by Reese Feldman (a mustache-clad Vince Vaughn) who's peddling "new coke" — cocaine that is undetectable to drug-sniffing dogs and the usual lab tests. This is the thin thread of a plot line but it's not really important and stays in the background for most of the film as the actors use each scene to poke fun at the '70s and at buddy movies.

After the slow setup, "Starsky & Hutch" hits its stride from the first scene with Big Earl (Will Ferrell), a convict with bizarre sexual fetishes who'll snitch only if Starsky and Hutch show off belly buttons or "pose like dragons." The homoerotic currents between partners Starsky and Hutch continue as a running gag through the movie. The filmmakers also seemed to delight in finding as many obnoxious '70s suits as possible to show off through the movie, so the clothes — and the man perms — become a joke in themselves. Car chases and impossible gun feats — staples of the cop movie genre — have unexpected and quite funny outcomes here.

The only material the movie fails to use to good effect is the female stereotyping of the '70s. Although having Starsky follow in his mother's (rather than his father's) footsteps is a nice touch, it's the only one where a woman is allowed to break out of a secondary role. The rest of the women in the movie are either ditzy cheerleaders or trophy wives and mistresses. If Snoop Dogg (playing Huggy Bear, the friendly neighborhood drug lord who's more than happy to help the cops) can have henchman with entertainingly encyclopedic knowledge of lizards and terrariums, the writers could surely have thought of something funnier for the female characters than bland sexual stereotypes.

That aside, this movie is very entertaining if you're a fan of this type of film. Movies like "Starsky & Hutch" are not about the plot or the characters. Like the "Austin Powers" series, these movies are almost a genre unto themselves — an extended comedy skits in the vein of "Saturday Night Live" and "Mad TV" where many of these actors happened to get their start.

The punch lines are about other, similar movies and about the era in which the movie is set. That's it — if you don't buy into that brand of humor, you'll hate the movie. If you do buy into it, you'll enjoy the movie. "Starsky & Hutch" is just a vehicle for Stiller, Wilson, Vaughn and Snoop Dogg to engage in a series of comedic scenes about cop movie clichés, the '70s and drug lords trying to balance work and family life. "Starsky & Hutch" does very well with the straightforward comedy it sets out to do.

'Banks' isn't better with age

Muniz reprises his role in this second-rate sequel

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

There are two kinds of child actors. There are those, like the terrific Evan Rachel Wood, who act with a flair and fury that make them seem like junior versions of our revered serious actors (she's our youthquake Jodie Foster). Then there are the young stars, like Frankie Muniz and Hilary Duff, who seemed to have learned everything there is about acting from MTV's "Cribs." They're not bad actors, per se, it's just that all they see to acting is the stardom; they're the next generations of walking consumer billboards. I would have a lot more respect for them if they bothered to star in a movie as forceful as, say, the galvanizing teen nightmare "Thirteen," but all they ever make are Happy Meal movies.

'Agent Cody Banks 2: Destination London'
Directed by Kevin Allen
Starring Frankie Muniz, Anthony Anderson
Rated PG
93 mins.
Grade: D

It's an amazing feat, but "Agent Cody Banks 2: Destination London" is an even thinner bit of plastic than the first one was. It's a joylessly pandering sop to the family audience that manages to eliminate what little vestiges of wit and humor the original had (and that wasn't much to begin with). You could call them both junior variations on James Bond films, but that would be a disservice to both 007 and the fanciful whimsy of the first "Spy Kids" movie, which did the whole kiddie-Bond plot with more imagination and panache than both "Banks" films combined.

Besides, isn't the 18-year-old Muniz getting a little too old for these dress-up games anyway? The actor no longer looks like an awkward pubescent kid anymore; he's growing into the confidence of adulthood. That may explain why Muniz looks bored running around playing secret agent man here. "ACB 2" is as cheap-looking and as perfunctory as any quickie sequel is expected to be and Muniz looks like he wishes he were elsewhere — like getting punk'd again by Ashton Kutcher.

The nominal plot has Muniz's Cody Banks going undercover as a brilliant clarinetist at a prestigious music school in London. He's there to stop his growling, gruff former CIA instructor Diaz (Keith Allen), who has gone rogue and stolen a mind-control device, and is now working with the sophisticate husband of the school's headmistress.

In London, Cody is given a new handler (Anthony Anderson, replacing Angie Harmon), a screw-up banished to nothing missions in England until Cody came along. How funny is Anderson here? Well, let's just say he creates about as many laughs here as he did in "Kangaroo Jack." Anyone who's seen that movie will know how rough going these waters are.

Cody's also given a female "love interest" to play off (she's played by Hannah Spearritt, from the Brit pop septet S Club 7, who looks like her age of 23) but there's no chemistry there; it's another tossed off element in a tossed together movie. "ACB 2" is as humorless and unadventurous as knock-offs come; its entertainment value is akin to being forced to go the dentist.

Frankie Muniz seems to have outgrown his role as tot-sized James Bond, Cody Banks. "Destination London" lacks wit and plot, and Muniz cannot muster the excitement to make a film interesting.

Mayer turns Providence in to a 'Wonderland'

MAYER from page 5

John Mayer, pictured in 2003, rocked the Dunkin' Donuts Center in Providence, R.I. on Saturday. Mayer played an assortment of old and new favorites.

John has been hitting American stages with a deeper set list and larger crowds. The new material and a few years in the business seems lent an air of maturity to Mayer, adding another dimension to the musician's live performance. An impressive addition to the on tour line-up has been a brass section, which accents the horn-filled tunes of "Heavier Things."

Saturday's show in Providence brought the talent of Mayer and company into the Dunkin' Donuts Center full force. He wasted no time introducing the packed house to his new sounds, opening off with a bouncy version of his latest radio single, "Clarity."

Though the set included other tracks off "Heavier Things," such as "Something's Missing" — which had been creeping into set lists as far back as two years ago — the show wasn't merely a ploy to hock copies of the new LP; John also satiated the thirst of diehard fans with "Room For Squares" classics such as "My Stupid Mouth," "No Such Thing" and "Why Georgia."

Those diehards expected more than a varied set list: humor has also become a staple of the John Mayer experience. Mayer seems to have upped the laughs for the current tour, letting fans into his sometimes twisted, but always comical, head.

With a relaxed nature that likely comes from already achieving much success, Mayer gives the impression that he is more lax than ever on stage. On Saturday he joked with his fans about everything from his sex life to the art of entering digits in a calculator to resemble dirty words. For those with any doubts, a cover of Prince's "The Most Beautiful Girl in the World," made it clear that Mayer has learned it isn't just his music that is catching the world's attention.

While Mayer's American tour dates are due to end on March 28, there is no sign of slowing down for the 26-year-old musician. He is set to tour next in New Zealand and Australia following this American tour. He has also scheduled to appear on the "Late Show with David Letterman" on March 29 and "Late Night with Conan O'Brien" on April 29. He is even going to perform with country music star Brad Paisley for an episode of "CMT Crossroads."

But, as the first single of "Heavier Things" suggests, and Saturday night's performance proves, it appears Mayer is truly bigger than his body gives him credit for.

Please join us for the 6th annual
Freedom Seder

Celebrating Unity & Liberation through rituals, stories, music, and delicious foods from the African American and Jewish traditions

Sunday, March 28th at 6:00pm
Campus Center 1009
UMass Amherst

Sponsored by Black Student Union, Delta Xi Phi Sorority, Office of Jewish Affairs, Student Affairs andCampus Life

The University of Massachusetts Amherst

Club Castaway Will Proudly present College Nights on Thursdays from 9p.m. till 2:00 Open with valid college ID & Drivers Licensed must be 21 years or older through March.
CLUB CASTAWAY
Hey ladies over 18 years old. Earn big money for your Spring Break vacation. Come and see us and we will show you how to make the money that you need in the entertainment business.
Rt. 5&10, Whately 665-8733

Chicago Pizzaria
What is a pirate's favorite kind of pizza?
Hot Chicago PizzARRRia with ARRRtichokes!
Large Cheese Pizza $5 Thurs/Fri/Sat/Sun
FREE DELIVERY!
We accept all major credit cards and OCMP!

Panda East
熊貓
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
We bring Chinatown to you!
"Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!"
*Sushi bar!
*OCMP accepted
*Delivery available!
Location: 103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, M.A. 01002
Open Hours:
Fri. & Sat.: 11:30 a.m.-11:00 p.m.
Sun. - Thurs.: 11:30 a.m. - 10:00 p.m.
Delivery: (413)549-0077
Telephone: (413)256-8923
(413)256-8924
Fax: (413)253-1173

Schilling and the Red Sox ready to battle with the Yanks

SCHILLING from page 10

before a pitch is thrown.

Already, the home opener on April 9 and the 10 Fenway games against the Yankees are sellouts, according to the Red Sox's Web site.

At Yankee Stadium, New York has sold 2.8 million tickets — 400,000 ahead of last year's pace, at an average price of $41.25, according to chief operating officer Lonn Trost.

New York's acquisition of A-Rod added even more sparks to the feud. Boston nearly obtained the AL MVP from Texas in December for Manny Ramirez, but that deal fell through. The Yankees then got him just before spring training, persuading Rodriguez to switch to third.

That led to Boston owner John Henry calling for a salary cap. Steinbrenner shot back that the Red Sox had "sour grapes" and that Henry resembled the Scarecrow in "The Wizard of Oz."

When the teams meet for the first time on April 16 at Fenway Park — the first regular-season night game on national network TV in six years — Rodriguez will hear an offseason of rage, perhaps a few decades worth.

"The Boston fans, they boo you great. I share that same passion with them," Rodriguez said. "The East Coast fan is the best in baseball. The passion is second to none."

Lucchino, who labeled the Yankees the "Evil Empire" after the 2002 season, doesn't regret that the Red Sox failed to offer more money to seal a deal for A-Rod in December. Even without him, Boston is favored by some to win the AL East after finishing second to the Yankees for six straight seasons. And the Red Sox figure to set an attendance record in Fenway, whose capacity of about 34,000 is the smallest in the major leagues

"We didn't start this rivalry, we inherited it," he said. "But we don't mind stoking the flames from time to time to because it is a part of the marketing."

He knows the pressure Steinbrenner has put on general manager Brian Cashman to beat Boston once again.

"Brian Cashman, I hope this doesn't hurt his career, we bumped into each other and had a civil conversation," Lucchino said during the first spring training meeting. "I joked that if someone snapped a picture of us, a civil conversation could be a bad career move."

Only if the Yankees fail to get off to a good start.

In the Bronx, it's always "win now."

In Boston, it's always "beat the Yankees" and "end the curse."

Jeter, Rodriguez's partner on the left side of the Yankees' Infield, is looking forward to another battle. For him, beating the Red Sox is just part of the equation. With the Yankees, anything less than World Series title No. 27 would be a failure.

"Hopefully," Jeter said, "we'll have another Game 7."

Charles Krupa/Associated Press

Wearing a green jersey in celebration of St. Patrick's Day, Boston Red Sox pitcher Curt Schilling delivers a throw during the second inning against the Cleveland Indians in Fort Myers, Fla., March 17.

Scott gains respect with stellar showing at Players Championship

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

PONTE VEDRA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — At this rate, it might not be long before people start saying Tiger Woods swings like Adam Scott.

Two guys with similar techniques turned in vastly different performances Thursday in The Players Championship, which ended with Scott in the lead and Woods in jeopardy of missing the cut.

The 23-year-old Aussie was all smiles.

The world's No. 1 player wore a scowl.

Scott hit his tee shot safely on the island-green 17th and reached for his putter.

Woods disgustedly put his hands on his hips and went to the drop area.

The biggest difference was on the scorecard. Scott signed for a 7-under 65 that gave him a one-shot lead, a superb round in which he routinely knocked down flags and was rarely in trouble.

Woods had a 75, his fourth consecutive round over par, leaving him in 108th place in the 147-man field.

"I just need to get myself going," Woods said.

Scott made six birdies from inside 6 feet, closing out his 65 with a 9-iron into 3 feet on the 18th hole for a one-shot lead over Kevin Sutherland and Duffy Waldorf.

Waldorf survived a wild finish to his round of 66 by making a 15-foot eagle on the 16th, dunking one in the water on the island-green 17th for double bogey, and closing out with a birdie from 10 feet.

Sutherland also had a 66 with a long putter he planned to ditch. He only brought it to keep his clubs stable during his flight from Sacramento, Calif., gave it one last chance after his practice round Wednesday and made just about everything he looked at inside 12 feet.

There were plenty of crazy tales on a course that brings out the best and worst in everyone's game, from Phil Mickelson chipping in for birdie on No. 17 with his left foot nearly hanging over the edge, to David Peoples making a triple bogey on No. 10 despite taking only two putts and not hitting in any hazard.

"If you play well, you can shoot well under par. And if you don't, it eats you up," said Mickelson, who was somewhere in between with a 70.

Retief Goosen, a steady performer and former U.S. Open champion, had three double bogeys in a 77.

John Daly never made worse than par in a round of 69.

"Bogey-free, that's not happened too many times to me out here," said Daly, who has had five rounds in the 80s on the TPC at Sawgrass. "I didn't shoot myself in the foot, anyway."

Thomas Bjorn was among those at 67, while Ernie Els returned to good form after missing the cut at Bay Hill last week and led a large group at 68.

Scott is one of the rising young stars in golf at No. 18 in the world. He won his first PGA Tour event last year at the Deutsche Bank Championship south of Boston, the tournament that benefits the Tiger Woods Foundation.

"You want to become a major champion and No. 1 in the world," Scott said. "I think Tiger has got that No. 1 spot locked down right now. I'm climbing up there."

Woods is making the target seem more attainable.

Coming off his worst finish in five years at the Bay Hill Invitational — a tie for 46th — Woods had his highest score since he shot 75 in the third round of the U.S. Open.

That figures to raise more questions about his game, especially with the Masters only two weeks away — and especially with Scott in the lead.

They are good friends, and often practice together.

Free Tutoring is Available!
OASIS
Opportunities for Academic Success with Individualized Support
Pre-Major Advising Services introduces a unique support service for students who have not yet declared a major. Our tutors are experienced graduate students who will provide weekly one-on-one support in the following areas:
* Course Content
* Note-taking Strategies
* Test-taking Strategies
* Study Skills
* Time Management
* Writing
OASIS
607 Goodell
545-6617
oasis@acad.umass.edu
Call or stop by for an appointment.
ACT NOW AND GET THE EDGE YOU NEED TO SUCCEED!

environmental justice disability rights prison issues racial justice access to healthcare prison issues sex ed youth liberation immigrant and refugee rights economic justice sex ed youth liberation environmental justice from abortion rights to social justice
Building the Movement for Reproductive Freedom 18th Annual Conference for student and community activists
April 2 - 4, 2004
Hampshire College
Amherst, MA
free and open to the public
(advance registration is preferred)
This event is wheelchair accessible. Housing and childcare available with advanced registration.
For Information and Registration Contact:
The Civil Liberties and Public Policy Program
413.559.5416 or clpp@hampshire.edu
http://clpp.hampshire.edu

UMass aiming for the Pride

LACROSSE from page 10

Garcia. Morris missed the first four games of the season with mononucleosis, and Garcia missed three games with a sprained ankle he suffered against North Carolina in the Minuemen's season-opening 12-7 loss. Morris scored two goals against Sacred Heart, and Garcia was a strong presence on defense, picking up two ground balls.

"It helps a lot, those are two very good players. Matt's a returning All-American player, and Sean is that caliber of player. It just gives you another person that has a lot of experience, that other guys have confidence in. It changes you on offense and it changes you on defense because you're deeper. And you're more dangerous because you're deeper."

The Pride has lost three straight, its most recent defeat a 19-11 drubbing at the hands of Notre Dame on Wednesday. Hofstra is led by junior midfielder Ryan Vilar, who has nine goals and six assists in three games this season, as well as sophomore Tim Treubig, who has 10 goals.

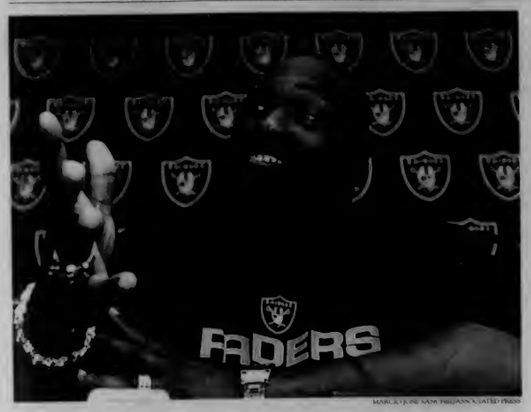
Mauldin suits up for Jackets

MAULDIN from page 10

type of goal, someone would shoot it, and it'd go off the back of my leg and in. Hopefully if I get my chance, can bury it," he said.

The adjustment period hasn't been too difficult for Mauldin.

"It's not so much advanced, some of the stuff is the same, it's just learning it in a short period of time. They told me not to worry so much about that, just go out and play.



"Practices are only a half hour, but they're really high tempo. You step on the ice, and you're right off."

Mauldin said that his work in the Hockey East tournament was a catalyst for the move.

"[The coaching staff was] happy to have me, I guess a lot of them watched the Maine game while they had down time in Vancouver. They were pretty pumped, they know that I can score. They gave me crap about my celebration, but they understood the emotion."

Mauldin said he has a definite spot in the lineup tonight and tomorrow at Nashville, wearing No. 14. He hopes to stick around long enough to play in the Blue Jackets' game at Buffalo Monday night, when he'd have the chance to meet up with another Holliston native, Buffalo's Mike Grier.

NEED A SUMMER JOB IN AMHERST?
University Conference Services is currently accepting applications for FULL and PART TIME SUMMER EMPLOYMENT for Summer Conference Housing
Pick up an application package at Conference Services Office, 918 Campus Center, or online
www.aux.umass.edu/conferenceservices
Completed applications are due by 5pm, April 9, 2004

MARCIO JOSE SANCHEZ/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Former Tampa Bay Buccaneers defensive lineman Warren Sapp addresses the media at the Oakland Raiders' headquarters in Alameda, Calif., on March 22. Sapp signed a seven-year, $36.6 million contract.

Some of NFL's top free agents will make immediate impact

Todd Foster

In order for a team to land a high profile free agent, the highest bidder usually wins. This is not the case for the current NFL offseason, as a variety of players opted for reunions with old coaches.

After Tampa Bay head coach Jon Gruden deactivated his No. 1 receiver, Keyshawn Johnson, for the last six games of the season, everyone had a feeling Johnson would reunite with Bill Paracells in Dallas. The only reason it took so long was former Cowboys receiver Joey Galloway needed to figure out the particulars of his contract.

Another receiver who had one destination in mind was David Boston, who went immediately traded to Miami. Boston's personality as a silent workhorse clashed with other personalities within the Chargers organization. Once he was given the chance to be traded, Boston wasted no time coming back to his old receiving coach in Arizona, Jerry Sullivan. Sullivan is regarded as a mastermind with receivers having worked with Herman Moore, Boston, and recently had developed Anquan Boldin into a big-time NFL receiver.

But let's get real, sometimes money is all that matters. Then again, some veteran players like former Buccaneer defensive stars, John Lych and Warren Sapp, decided to go to a team they felt would be a contender. No matter the reason why they went here or there, let's breakdown the best and worst moves this offseason.

Best Defensive Move: Raiders Defensive Tackles Ted Washington and Warren Sapp

Jervon Kearse will have a huge impact on Philly, but you can't deny this pairing of beasts as possibly best defensive tackle duo ever.

AFC teams will have a lot of trouble getting yards up middle in Oakland against this 675-pound tandem. Washington is a modest 375 pounds who knows his job is to plug the inside lanes and Sapp is still the most intimidating player to face down in the trenches. The question is, who do you double team?

Washington is too powerful for one man to hold up. Sapp has some of best moves and is too fierce to assign anyone to play an entire game. Each of the talented linemen has a Superbowl ring and know how to lead a team. Add Dwayne Rudd at linebacker into the equation and this defense looks terrifying.

Best Offensive Move: Redskins running back Clinton Portis

Terrell Owens will put points on the board for the Eagles. Johnson and Boston are missing links in their respected team's offense. But no one is more needed within the team system as Clinton Portis is to Joe Gibbs' old school running game.

Portis' running ability gives Gibbs everything he could dream about in a young back. The Miami product is a game-breaker with the speed to outrun defensive backs, the agility to freeze the backers and the power to bounce off bigger linemen in his path. This rare blend of skills and talent has got the 22-year-old running back a pair of 1,500-yard seasons and 29 total touchdowns in his first two years.

If John Riggins could dominate Gibbs' mastered running during the 1980s, Portis will only expand upon it in this new era of football.

Most Underrated Offensive Move: Dolphins wideout David Boston

On March 17th, all the news revolved around Eagles coach Andy Reid finally working out a deal for Terrell Owens, the best receiver in the NFL not named Marvin Harrison. With the hype around Owens and his Sharpie coming to Philly, another talented receiver, Boston, was starting his career over somewhere he could make a bigger impact than Philadelphia's newest target.

The Eagles did need an improved passing game, though the Dolphins' 26th-ranked air attack was in shambles. Boston had disappointing season in San Diego with a mere 80 catches, 880 yards and seven touchdowns. Those are still solid numbers, but Boston is capable of so much more. He had 98 catches, 1,598 yards and eight scores in 2001. Also, he was playing for Arizona. Enough said.

Owens is still the only All-Pro caliber receiver in Green and White, unlike Miami who has two young stars running routes. The 25-year-old Boston will line up opposite another 25-year-old in Chris Chambers, who scored 11 touchdowns last season.

Now featuring two big, athletic targets, teams are forced to adjust and not focus solely on star back Rickey Williams. Deadly through the air and on the ground is the classic combination needed to dominate on offense.

Most Underrated Defensive Move: Carolina linebacker Brandon Short

This is a scenario that is too perfect not to turn out right. Short attended Penn State, better known as Linebacker University. The former Giants linebacker has been a solid three-year starter under Jim Fassel and still is one of the most underrated linebackers in the NFL.

Entering his fifth season, Short can learn a lot from a great defensive mind like Carolina head coach Jon Fox. The 6-foot-3 linebacker is a great run stopper with ability to blitz quickly. If he works on his pass coverage, Short could become an All-Pro under Fox.

Todd Foster is a Collegian columnist.

SOME OF THE PLACES WE FLY

Austin

Baltimore/Washington (BWI)
(29 miles to downtown Washington, D.C.)

Chicago (Midway)

Ft. Lauderdale
(22 miles to downtown Miami)

Harlingen/South Padre Island

Las Vegas

Los Angeles (LAX)

New Orleans

Oakland
(18 miles to downtown San Francisco)

Philadelphia
(Service starts May 9)

Phoenix

Providence
(A better way to Boston)

Reno/Tahoe

San Diego

Seattle/Tacoma

Tampa Bay

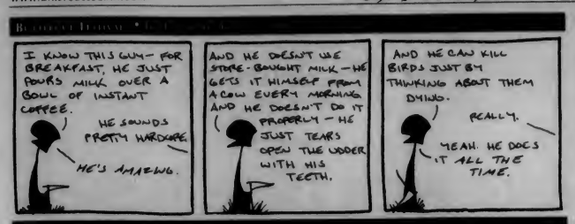
West Palm Beach

Service may not be available from all cities. Offer applies to published, scheduled service only.

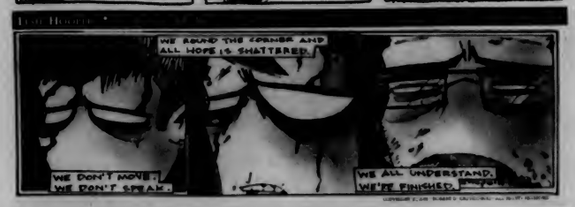
$39 to $99

One-way with 14-day advance purchase
Any day of the week

Fares do not include a federal excise tax of $3.10 per takeoff and landing.



Wanna get away? Now you can. Fly Southwest Airlines for just $39–$99 one-way. Be sure to purchase your ticket at least 14 days in advance, within one day of making reservations, and by April 8, 2004. Seats are limited and won't be available on some flights that operate during very busy travel times and holiday periods. To purchase call your travel agent or Southwest Airlines or visit us at southwest.com®.



SOUTHWEST
A SYMBOL OF FREEDOM

1-800-VAMONOS southwest.com 1-800-I-FLY-SWA

Fares do not include airport-assessed passenger facility charges (PFC) of up to $9 and a federal September 11th Security Fee of up to $5 one-way per person. Tickets are nonrefundable but (except for tickets purchased through our Group Tickets Program) may be applied toward future travel on Southwest Airlines. Fares are subject to change until ticketed. Any change in itinerary may result in an increase in fare. Fares are combinable with other Southwest Airlines fares. If combining with other fares, the most restrictive fare's rules apply. Service to and from Orange County airport not included. Holiday periods include Easter, Memorial Day, and July Fourth. Does not include travel to or from Florida markets from March 18 through April 11, 2004. ©2002, 2004 Southwest Airlines Co.

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
DC DESIGN

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"It is even harder for the average ape to believe that he has descended from man."

-H.L. Mencken

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

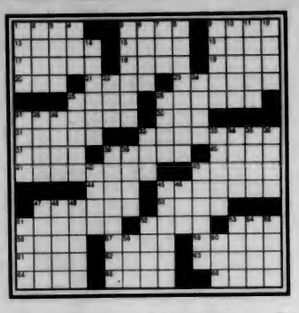
PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 Furniture cover
6 Reading aid
9 Marshal Dillon
13 Steel girder (2 wds.)
15 At any time
16 Perplexed
17 Nickname of "Speed"
18 Vanished
19 Obeys
20 Ballet
21 Made yarn
23 Pouch
25 Picking ingredient
26 Apple drinks
27 Dream up
30 Elephant's home
31 Mild protest (2 wds.)
32 High road
37 Familiar auth.
38 Answering tricks
40 Rani's husband
41 Large (myth.)
43 Open, as a bottle
44 Above, to poets
46 Minor partners
47 Flowering tree
50 Bullish's idea
52 Sandwich bondsend
60 Prohibits
63 Swimmer's unit
64 Keen
67 Lane — of Rimdom
68 Expound at length
69 Blue-green color
70 Shabby
71 Rhyme
72 Wrongdoer
73 Be the butt
74 Laze in the sun

DOWN
1 "Kon —"
2 Vignola and Lincoln
3 Paper quantity
4 Kilohertz (abbr.)
5 Protein source
6 Bard's river
7 All-stars
8 Cable choice
9 Crash cat origin
10 In a ferment
11 High schoolers
12 Mild
14 Sheet material
22 Greener maybe
24 Fusses
25 Winery process
28 Movie mogul
27 Writer
29 Ms. Monsoon
29 Short skirt
29 Egyptian sun god
32 Fair grade
33 A Mapplet
34 Texas town
35 Open slightly
36 Puppy cries
38 Goes to bed (2 wds.)
39 Pound or Connell
42 In a while
43 Ms. Gabor
45 Astrologer Dixon
46 Subject for beads
47 Budged
48 Homer opus
49 In a crazy way
51 Cracker spread
52 Goose or loon
53 Dr. Zhivago's love
54 Off-road vehicles
55 Dairyce
58 Goliath or Olivia
60 CSA defender

Now is the time for
YOGA
Classes in Boyden 10

Mid-Semester Packages*!



1 class per week/7 weeks	Only $35!	SAVE $65!
2 classes per week/7 weeks		$$$$$

*Special pricing offered through March 31, 2004

Class Schedule
(March 22 - May 6, 2004)

Monday/Wednesday	Tuesday/Thursday
12:30 - 1:45 pm Flow Yoga (Level 1-3)	1:00 - 2:15 pm Yoga Basics (Level 1-2)
2:00 - 3:15 pm Gentle Flow (Level 1)	2:30 - 3:45 pm Intermediate (Level 2-3)

To Register: UMass Yoga/Campus Recreation
Boyden 215 • 413-545-0222 • www.umass.edu/umrec

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Cacciatore
- Lemon Pepper Fish
- Vegan Cutlets (vegan)

DINNER
- Shrimp & Scallop Creole
- Beef Bourguignon
- Southern 6-Bean Stew (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 63
- Low: 46

SATURDAY
- High: 60
- Low: 31

SUNDAY
- High: 51
- Low: 28

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan
COPY EDITOR
Leah Wyner
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Irene Ros
PRODUCTION STAFF
Oliver Chong/ Emilie Duggan

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
It's time you go see "Dirty Dancing: Havana Nights" and get your salsa on.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
If you do a good deed today, it will be repaid to you 10 times over.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Don't ask anyone out today. You can't deal with rejection.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Take care of that injury of yours, even if it means strutting around with an ice pack.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Be a good listener today. It will mean a lot to one of your friends.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Watch out for rabid squirrels.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
The stars say nothing about you. Go back to bed.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Be sure to recycle your paper. You'll have good karma all day long.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Don't go spreading rumors. They'll only come back to bite you in the butt.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
The South Beach diet is really starting to pay off. Keep it up.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Those voices you hear in your head DO NOT EXIST.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Make sure you look both ways before you cross the road. Look twice, if necessary.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact Campus-Fundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

2000 Toyota Corolla Great Condition 4Door AC Automatic Stereo Cassette 83K $6,900 549-1150

EMPLOYMENT

Play sports! Have fun! Save Money! Sports Camp in Maine. Coaches needed: Tennis, Basketball, Baseball, Water-sports, Ropes Course, Golf, Archery, and more. Work Outdoors and Have a Great Summer! Call Free: (888) 844-8080 or Apply: www.campcedar.com

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors- Town of Amherst Day Camps. The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related coursework in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, exp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. Old. $ range for both positions: $8.19 – 9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week, June 21 to Aug. 20. Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept., Boltwood Walk, Amherst. (413) 256-4065 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer

EMPLOYMENT

Life Guards and Swim Instructors The Town of Amherst seeks qualified lifeguards and swim instructors. Lifeguards must hold current certifications including: Life Guard Training First Aid, and CPR. $8.16-9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week. Applications available from Amherst Leisure Services, Bangs Community Center, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

EMPLOYMENT

Get hands-on legal experience with a legal assistant internship this fall. Work directly with attorneys and clients and earn 9 to 15 credits. No experience required. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office for an application, due 4/2. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Two job opportunities on Nantucket Island beginning in May. Office assistants with decent typing, computer and telephone skills. Some errand running. Salary + housing. Tele. 508-228-3942 or send resume to PO Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 or fax resume to 508-228-8778

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Local Business is hiring marketers Part Time $10-15/hr Call Alison @413-627-9043

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Bartending Trainees Needed $250 a day potential. Local positions 1-800-293-3985 Ext516

FOR RENT

Moving off campus? Meet area rental agents at apartment complex fair. Thurs April 1 10-3 on the CC Concourse. Sponsored by Commuter Services www.cshrg.org

FOR SALE

Like New: 4 Edge, crome rims 18" 5 Lug nuts, 4 Ventus HR11, Low-Pro tires- Asking $1100 Tom 413-527-2886

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes start soon!!! Call for information 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com

LOST

Lost- Diamond Tennis bracelet on campus Mon 3/21 Reward (240)426-0308

SERVICES

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $19.00. 413-584-8857.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst, PhilosophyDialogue.net

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

887-4-CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR-selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

Collegian Marketplace: 413-545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 26, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mauldin ready to skate with Blue Jackets

UMass star is the third to make NHL

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Six days ago, Greg Mauldin was locked in battle with his Massachusetts teammates in the triple-overtime Hockey East final at the FleetCenter in Boston. Tonight, at 7 p.m., he will make his NHL debut, when the Columbus Blue Jackets host Anaheim at the Nationwide Arena in Columbus, Ohio.

It has been a whirlwind trip for the junior from Holliston, who flew to Columbus yesterday to sign a player tryout deal, giving him the chance to try and make the team before the end of the season. In fact, Mauldin almost made his debut last night against Minnesota.

"I got off a plane, and had just gotten to my hotel," Mauldin said. "[A Columbus official] called, and said 'get down here in two minutes.' I had my physical just in time for the warm-up skate."

Mauldin was to play in place of "dinged up" star forward Andrew Cassels, but because Mauldin hardly had time to eat a meal before the game, let alone fully prepare, the Blue Jackets opted to play Cassels, who notched an assist in the 2-0 Columbus victory.

"They thought it'd be better if I got a skate under my belt," Mauldin said. He got more than a skate under his belt yesterday, participating in a full practice in the morning. Mauldin will play left wing on a line with Alexander Svitov and Tyler Wright.

Right off the bat, he said he noticed the difference between the pro game and the one he's played for six months at UMass.

"Speed, there's just a consistently higher speed," he said. "The passes are crisper, and the goaltending all around is just that much better, scoring goals isn't as easy. That's for everyone, too. There weren't many goals scored in practice today."

Marc Denis has done most of the goaltending for Columbus this season, but Mauldin said it was backup Fred Brathwaite who became a fast friend.

"Brathwaite's been ripping on me like an older brother," Mauldin said.

In just two days with the team, Mauldin said he's already been welcomed to the team, including third-year forward Rick Nash, who Mauldin played with the last two summers in Columbus' rookie camps. The two played on a line together in two years ago, when they were both newly-drafted prospects.

"They've all been pretty friendly. [Third-year forward Rick] Nash, I've known him for the last few summers. He told me, 'just like we played hockey in summer, play as hard as I did there, be alright.'"

Mauldin's debut comes three nights after that of senior defenseman Thomas Pöck, who scored a goal in his first game with the New York Rangers. The two have exchanged phone calls, and Mauldin said he heard about Pöck's goal.

"I heard it was just a typical Tommy goal, take the puck up the ice," Mauldin said. The shot was a hard wrister from the blue line that seemed to catch Pittsburgh goaltender Jean Sebastien Aubin by surprise. Mauldin said he's thought about the idea of scoring in his first game, too.

"I had a couple dreams last night, I figured it'd be a phantom

See MAULDIN on page 7

COURTESY GERALD H. LIND

Greg Mauldin, who scored 15 goals and dished out 14 assists in 29 games for the Minutemen will make his NHL debut tonight at 7 p.m. for the Columbus Blue Jackets. Mauldin is one of three UMass players to make his professional debut this year.

Schilling stays focused

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

Curt Schilling is ready.

He feels the fervor, comprehends the curse, watched from afar last year and, like much of baseball, was transfixed.

The cities challenge him. The fans don't fluster him.

Yankees vs. Red Sox. There's nothing else like it in baseball these days.

"There's nothing like walking into a stadium where people call you things you've never heard before," he said. "As an opposing player at Yankee Stadium, it's very clear where you stand immediately. I would imagine it's even more so when you play for this team."

You got that right, Curt.

After playing a record 26 times last year, pushing each other to the 11th inning of Game 7 of the AL championship series, New York and Boston are ready to go at each other again 19 more times during the 2004 regular season.

They pushed their payrolls to record highs — about $184 million for the Yankees and $123 million for the Red Sox, easily the top two in baseball.

They tracked each other's trade talks, competed for Alex Rodriguez and called each other names.

When the Yankees met the Red Sox for the first time since last October's playoffs, a Red Sox fan walked around City of Palms Park holding a photograph of Rodriguez's wife, Cynthia, in a swimsuit with Derek Jeter's face superimposed on her body. On the sign were the words: " 'A-Rod has such soft hands' - Derek."

"I was hiding m head," she said, "but I thought it was hilarious."

When the Red Sox meet the Yankees these days, even in spring training, emotions are high.

Boston, of course, hasn't won the World Series title since 1918, since before the Red Sox dealt Babe Ruth to the Yankees.

New York has had 26 since then — 26 too many for fans in Fenway and 68 too few for Yankees' boosters in the Bronx. When the Yankees lost to Florida in the World Series last October, New York owner George Steinbrenner fumed, causing one-third of his roster to turn over.

Boston would just love the chance to get to the Series for the first time since 1986. On Thanksgiving weekend, they made a deal with Arizona to acquire Schilling, one of the pitchers who helped slay the Yankees in the 2001 World Series.

"Everybody is enamored with the curse and all of that stuff," Schilling said. "I'm not saying that that's a bad theory, but the fact of the matter is that it just hasn't gotten done in recent history here and they brought me in to help get it done."

Boston fans are excited about their team's chances after the additions of Schilling and closer Keith Foulke. Two weeks before the start of the season, the Red Sox had sold 2.3 million tickets at an average price of about $40, according to team president Larry Lucchino. That translates to $92 million in ticket money

See SCHILLING on page 7

UMass

Weekend Schedule

Friday, March 26

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Softball	vs. Vermont	1:30 p.m.
Men's Track	at Raleigh Relays	10:00 a.m.

Saturday, March 27

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Baseball	at George Wash.	12:00 p.m.
Softball	at La Salle	12:00 p.m.
Men's Track	at Raleigh Relays	10:00 a.m.
Women's Lacrosse	vs. UNH	1:00 p.m.

Sunday, March 28

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Baseball	at George Wash.	12:00 p.m.
Men's Lacrosse	vs. Hofstra	1:00 p.m.
Women's Rowing	at Yankee Cup	2:00 p.m.

Minutemen set for home match against conference rival Hofstra

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team officially begins the second half of its season Sunday when it hosts Hofstra (2-4) at 1 p.m. on Garber Field. While their season hasn't gotten off to the start that most expected, the Minutemen are coming off a convincing 12-4 win over Sacred Heart, giving them some momentum heading into Sunday's meeting of the rivals.

In Tuesday's game, the Minutemen were spurred by strong performances from a number of young players, especially on attack, where the Minutemen have been hampered by the absence of senior Jeff Zywicki.

Freshman Matt Tundo scored a hat trick, joined by classmates Brett Garber, Andrew Recchione, and Sam Moody, who each tallied one goal in the victory. Garber's goal, which came with just 30 seconds to go in the first half, staunched a four-goal run by Sacred Heart, and sent the Minutemen into the locker room with a 7-4 lead, from which they never looked back. UMass coach Greg Cannella said it's safe to assume that Zywicki won't be in the lineup again Sunday, putting more emphasis on the young blood.

"The boost that we need, is the freshman that scored the other day to contribute on a consistent basis," Cannella said. "The other guys, [sophomore midfielder] Sean [Morris], and [junior midfielder] Chris [Doyle], and [junior attack] Ryan [Connolly], and Gene [Tundo], and [senior attack Kevin] Glenz, and [senior midfielder] Neil [Lundberg], those guys are marked guys, everyone knows they've been around a while and can do a lot of damage. Everyone else's best people are going to be on those guys, so it's on Brett, [Recchione], Matt Tundo, Clay Stabert, Brian Jacovino, Jamie Yaman, Tony Ventiquattro, those guys have to contribute consistently, and they've contributed a lot so far. That's going to be a key to the offense."

The team's reliance on underclassmen is something of a new development. Last year, Kevin Leveille and Chris Fiore were the top scorers, and neither one missed a game, combining for 69 goals and 28 assists.

"We relied on those guys, but if you looked at the games where we were successful, it was other guys who stepped up along with them," Cannella said. "Chris Doyle as a sophomore, after not doing anything as a freshman, steps up and has a great year. We have depth, but our younger guys will always get an opportunity to play here at UMass."

After falling in three straight games, the win over Sacred Heart was a boost for the Minutemen, who are 3-4 on the season with the gut of their slate coming up.

"Anytime you're able to do that in a game, it's good for the confidence of the team. We were able to play at the end some guys who have contributed a lot to the team but haven't gotten much playing time."

UMass was also aided by the heightened exposure of sophomore midfielder Sean Morris and sophomore defenseman Matt

See LACROSSE on page 7

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Matt Tundo has nine goals this year for the Minutemen. UMass takes on Hofstra today at Garber Field for a 1 p.m. face-off.

Rachel Ray rises to the challenge of the Valley's Iron Chefs
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Minutemen double up Hofstra, finish first half at .500
SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, MARCH 29, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 107

Bustamante, Murphy win

Election goes on, amid new ballot controversy

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Staff

The votes are in and have been counted, and Eduardo Bustamante and Matthew Murphy have won the Student Government Elections for president and trustee.

"I'm thrilled. It's incredible," Murphy said.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE/COLLEGIAN

Eduardo Bustamante and Matthew Murphy

"I think that the elections show that the students can do really big things," Bustamante said.

Bustamante won with 295 votes, while Patrick Higgins came in second.

Murphy, on the other hand, won after a recount. During the initial round of Instant Run-off Voting, Murphy won, while Daly came in last and thus votes for him were tossed out. Those second choice votes were then counted. Current president Dave Carr won by 10 votes after those votes were counted. A recount was called, and the results showed Murphy winning by 17.

"I thought the day of the election it came down to a coin toss. I was very surprised when I got the initial call about being ahead in the first round," Murphy said.

All throughout the Campus Center, shouts could be heard by happy supporters.

"I was outside the Student Union when [two people] came out and said I won both [rounds]. I said, 'Are you serious?'" Murphy said. "One word: shocked."

Bustamante knew that he and Murphy were going to win.

"I feel like we brought something new, something fresh," he said.

Both president- and trustee-elect thanked the students who came out and supported their campaign.

"When people see something as just and righteous, they're willing to fight for it," Bustamante said. "It gave a lot of energy [to our campaign]."

The Judiciary branch has a hearing scheduled for Tuesday to discuss the constitutionality of the use of the new voting method. IRV was used for the first time at the University, and two complaints have been filed against its use by Jared Nokes, speaker of the senate, and Attorney General Mark Morrison, who was a presidential candidate. Morrison has recalled his complaint, but Nokes has kept his.

If the Judiciary branch finds it unconstitutional, the elections would be thrown out and Nokes would become the interim president.

Fifteen percent, or 2,756 students, of the student body voted. Five percent was needed.

In other results, the new governors are Bill Surran for Commuter, Sanam Hakim for Orchard Hill, Stacey Bernadeau for Central, Matthew Pearlson for Northeast, and Aimee Falardeau for Southwest. In the Sylvan area, no candidate ran, but there were a few write in votes.

The election results will be presented to the Senate on Wednesday to be ratified.

On Monday, the SGA will hold it second Diversity Roundtable of the spring semester. It will be at 1 p.m. in Room 163C of the Campus Center.

Marchers fight poverty

By Michelle Rivera
Collegian Staff

An estimated crowd of 200 people gathered in Amherst yesterday afternoon to participate in the March to Abolish Poverty, a state-wide campaign that vows to liberate the world of social injustice.

The March to Abolish Poverty is part of a 16-day march that started March 20 in Hyannis, and ends April 4 in Boston. Amherst is the ninth stop.

The gatherers marched through downtown Amherst, making frequent stops accompanied with song and speeches at the Clark House area, the Unitarian Society, Grace House and at Amherst Common.

The marchers were accompanied with self-made signs, banners and flyers. A few marchers brought megaphones and percussion instruments to beat with the rhythm of the songs.

At the first gathering, which took place at the First Congregational Church, the participants listened to various speeches, and took part in song and prayer.

John H. Bracey Jr., a University of Massachusetts-Amherst professor of Afro-American studies, was one of the march participants that presented a speech at the first gathering.

Bracey, an activist once marched with Martin Luther King Jr. in Cicero, Ill. and in Alabama.

See MARCH on page 3

Columbia accident expert speaks out

CAITLIN M. OTT/COLLEGIAN

Douglas Osheroff, a mamber of the Columbia Accident Investigation Board, speaks Friday about the cause of the Columbia disaster.

Cites problems with NASA's structure

By Megan Daley
Collegian Staff

A member of the Columbia Accident Investigation Board spoke Friday about the reason for the NASA tragedy that took place over a year ago.

About 300 people attended the lecture to hear Douglas Osheroff, a co-recipient of the 1996 Nobel Prize in Physics, speak about his experience serving on the board.

Osheroff started out by giving the crowd background information about the Columbia, its crew and the crash. He then reviewed what CAIB considered as the physical cause of the accident.

A piece of foam had fallen from the external fuel tank during the launch and struck the leading edge of the left wing as it fell, he said.

"NASA saw that this happened, but dismissed it," Osheroff said. "The engineers were gravely concerned over this, but the management dismissed the risk."

According to Osheroff, even after Columbia broke apart during reentry, NASA management refused to believe that a piece of foam had caused enough damage to cause the accident.

Osheroff had brought video footage of the tests that CAIB had used to prove that the foam could have caused damage to the wing. There were gasps from the audience as the tape of the test showed a piece of foam shooting through the RSB panels that lined Columbia's wing.

"NASA employees gasped too," said Osheroff.

Osheroff went on to explain what he and CAIB thought to be one of the biggest problems behind Columbia's crash: NASA's management and organization.

"NASA is not stupid," he said. "The people who work there are incredibly talented, but there are problems in its organizational structure."

Osheroff believes that NASA did not pay enough attention to the concerns expressed by engineers and the shuttle's constructors and that NASA was too concerned with not aborting the mission because it would be "too expensive."

Even now, though NASA is working hard to make sure that an accident such as this does not occur again, Osheroff believes that they should be focusing on the problems with the organization, to achieve prevention.

Osheroff ended his speech by quoting from President George W. Bush's reaction to the Columbia accident.

"'We find the best among us and send them forth into unmapped darkness and pray they will return.' I think we need to do more than pray."

After the speech several professors and students had questions about the shuttle's crash and NASA's organiza-

See SHUTTLE on page 3

University hosts skating competition

By Nina Lowey
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Figure Skating Team recently hosted the 2004 National Intercollegiate Figure Skating Team Championship — a nine-team competition featuring teams from as far away as California and as close as Boston.

Nine teams from Dartmouth College, University of Delaware, Boston University, Cornell University, University of California at Berkley, Stanford, Caltech, Michigan State, and Miami University at Ohio competed for the national championship for collegiate figure skating. Dartmouth won the event, with Miami finishing second, Delaware placing third, and BU coming in fourth. Although UMass did not compete this year, even though they placed highly — sixth out of 24 teams at this year's East Coast Conference — they played an essential role in hosting the event.

The UMass Figure Skating Team was restarted in 2002. It has grown from six skaters to 25 during its rebirth. The United States Figure Skating Association Collegiate Committee chose UMass to host the championship because of its latest date for ice availability, proximity to the campus hotel, and Bradley International Airport. The championship is the largest event the UMass Figure Skating Team has hosted so far.

The nine teams competed in a variety of events, including long program, short program, ice dancing, and team maneuvers. From the looks on the faces of the competitors, anticipation and excitement were in the air and on the ice.

"It's been a pretty good season, but with a different dynamic having seven new freshmen on the team, and moved out seven who graduated," BU captain Lauren Colizza said. "Obviously we'd like to win but we'd be happy with second place because the year before we won."

Dartmouth captain Ariel Stern-Markovitz was also optimistic.

"We're hoping to do very well," she said. "We won at the East Coast conference. I think we have a chance of winning. Other teams are the strongest I've seen in the past three years, and there are more skaters who are better now than I've seen before."

When asked what it was like to skate in front of competing universities, she said: "The adrenaline gets you through it. A lot of skaters are tired because they've skated up to three other events. This has been the smoothest running nationals ever."

"We're the driving force behind the competition," said Michael Kudravetz, the accountant of the event, who was responsible for calculating the judges' marks and votes. "We run the competition behind the scenes. When judges marks come in we go to the computer program tally the results."

This method is newer because previously the calculating was done by hand.

"UMass has been excellent. It's been a wonderful competition. I've been an accountant for 10 years and you know a good job when you see it," Kudravetz said.

The UMass Figure Skating Team received a $10,000 grant from the United States Figure Skating Association to host the championship. The money went directly to reimbursing the judges' travel, medals, trophies, UMass Auxiliary Services, gifts for judges, programs, and hotel accommodations.

Some team members who organized the event did so through an independent study about sporting event management, and are earning six credits for their participation.

Women in Sport Management found volunteers to help with the event as well.

The team's next project is organizing a learn-to-skate program, which will be held at the Mullins Center practice rink on Sundays. They will be teaching college students as well as other interested people from the area how to skate. Those interested in more information about joining the team or skating lessons can contact Katy Counihan at umfsc@stuaf.UMass.edu.

CAITLIN M. OTT/COLLEGIAN

Dartmouth University's Taylor Grant competed in the free skate section of the 2004 National Intercollegiate Figure Skating Team Championships, Saturday.

Rice refusal to offer testimony on Sept. 11 called 'political blunder'

By Scott Lindlaw
Associated Press

CRAWFORD, Texas (AP) — White House allies and Democrats investigating the Sept. 11 attacks pressed Sunday to hear open testimony from national security adviser Condoleezza Rice, with one commissioner calling her refusal a "political blunder of the first order."

Rice said in a TV interview that she wants to meet with the families of the Sept. 11 victims because she knows they are disappointed she cannot testify publicly.

"Nothing would be better, from my point of view, than to be able to testify," Rice told CBS's "60 Minutes." "I would really like to do that. But there is an important principle involved here: It is a long-standing principle that sitting national security advisers do not testify before the Congress."

President Bush, spending a long weekend on his Texas ranch, gave no ground, and several aides said he will not change his mind on letting Rice testify. But Bush sent her and other top administration officials out for television interviews to rebut fresh attacks on the way his administration has handled the threat of terrorism.

Sharpening his criticism, former counterterrorism chief Richard Clarke said President Clinton was more aggressive than Bush in trying to confront al-Qaida, Osama bin Laden's organization.

"He did something, and President Bush did nothing prior to September 11," Clarke told NBC's "Meet the Press."

"I think they deserve a failing grade for what they did before" Sept. 11, Clarke said of the Bush administration. "They never got around to doing anything."

But Rice said the Bush administration regarded terrorism as "an urgent problem."

Clarke said a sweeping declassification of documents would prove that the Bush administration neglected the threat of terrorism in the eight months leading up to the attacks.

He said he sought declassification of all six hours of his testimony before a congressional committee two years ago. Some Republicans have said that testimony about Sept. 11 contradicts Clarke's current criticism.

Clarke said he also wanted Rice's previous interview before the independent Sept. 11 commission declassified, along with e-mails between him and Rice, and other documents, including a memo he sent on Jan. 25, 2001 offering a road map to the new Bush administration on how to confront al-Qaida, and a directive that the National Security Council adopted on Sept. 4, 2001.

Associated Press Writer Hope Yen in Washington contributed to this report.

Marchers battle poverty

MARCH from page 1

"We won't get a victory tomorrow, but we will get victories day by day," Bracey said.

"It will be a long haul, but it's the journey we are committed to," he said.

Several UMass students were also present at the march to demonstrate their support.

"I know that we live in a bubble at UMass, being in a college and university setting. I recognize that I'm privileged in this world, and I think it's important for people in any way they can, to do something to better our country for everyone," said Kimberly K. McNamara, a UMass senior and English major.

Peter Vickery, Amherst resident and candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor's Councilor in the Sept. 14 primary, was also in attendance at the march.

"I'm here as a union member and as a Democrat to show solidarity to people who are not fortunate enough to have health care and who are not fortunate enough to be in work, and if they're in work, they're in low paying jobs. So that's why I'm here ... as a show of solidarity," Vickery said.

Amherst resident Lisa Gaughran led the marchers in song with her voice and her guitar.

"I'm here because it's time for a change," Gaughran said.

Founding sponsors of the March consisted of the Sisters Together Ending Poverty, the Economic Human Rights Project and the Green-Rainbow Party of Amherst.

"We just want to reach out to people who are not being represented in the legislature, and not being represented in any part of the government. We want to show solidarity to everyone," said Robert Crowner, an Amherst resident and member of the Green-Rainbow Party.

"We are here because we want to make sure that the most needy in our community have someone looking out for them," said Hwei-Ling Greeney, an Amherst Not Bread Alone representative attending the march.

The March ended around 4 p.m. at Amherst Common.

Kerry claims character assassination

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — John Kerry said the White House is committing character assassination with its treatment of former counterterror chief Richard Clarke to avoid responding to questions about national security that Clarke raised.

"I don't think people want questions about character; I think they want questions about our security to be answered," Kerry said Saturday. "That's what this is about."

Kerry also said Condoleezza Rice, President Bush's national security adviser, should testify in public before the commission investigating the Sept. 11, 2001 terror attacks.

— Nedra Pickler

www.dailycollegian.com

Iraq sees new wave of violence

KARAM HUSSEIN/KNIGHT RIDDER/TRIBUNE-ASSOCIATED PRESS

Schoolchildren stand in the courtyard of a primary school after it was hit by a rocket in Mosul yesterday. A Katyusha rocket, apparently aimed at the city hall, missed and hit the nearby school.

Rocket misses target, lands at nearby school in Mosul

By Christopher Torchia
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Gunmen opened fire Sunday on a convoy carrying Iraq's minister of public works, killing a driver and a bodyguard and injuring two others, the U.S.-led coalition said. The minister, Nisreen Berwari, was unharmed.

In another attack in the same city, Mosul, gunmen killed a Briton and a Canadian who were working as security guards for foreign electrical engineers at a power station. The ambush appeared to be part of a campaign to undermine U.S.-led reconstruction efforts in Iraq.

The attacks highlighted the tenuous security situation in Iraq's third-largest city, once a prime recruiting ground for the officer corps of Saddam Hussein's military.

Berwari was returning to Mosul from a meeting in the city of Dohuk when her convoy was attacked, said Kristi Clemens, a coalition spokeswoman in Baghdad.

Saro Qader, an official with the Kurdistan Democratic Party, described the attack as an "assassination attempt." Berwari is a member of the Kurdish party.

Iraqi police said the attack occurred around 11 a.m. in the al-Karama neighborhood of Mosul. They said the two men who were killed were both bodyguards, and that Berwari was in another car that was not hit by gunfire.

Berwari, who earned a degree at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government in 1999, is one of five Kurdish ministers in the coalition-appointed interim government. There are 20 other ministers.

Previously, Berwari was development minister in the Kurdistan regional government, and she also served with United Nations organizations in Iraq.

Another female political leader, Aqila al-Hashimi, was assassinated in September. She was a Shiite member of the U.S.-appointed Iraqi Governing Council.

The slain Briton and Canadian had been assigned to protect foreign engineers working for General Electric Co., a coalition spokesman said on condition of anonymity. GE is helping rebuild Iraq's decrepit electrical infrastructure, which has suffered from war, neglect and years of sanctions. Power blackouts are frequent.

U.S. soldiers and Iraqi police sealed off the area after the shooting. Witnesses saw two partly burned bodies, clad in flak jackets, lying beside a four-wheel drive vehicle that was on fire. One man had been shot in the head.

In London, the Foreign Office said one Briton was killed. In Ottawa, the Canadian Foreign Ministry said a Canadian died. Their names were not released.

An Iraqi official at the power station in East Mosul said the slain men were protecting experts working at the station. Private security firms provide guards to many foreign companies operating in Iraq.

This month, assailants have killed other Western civilians linked to reconstruction efforts: four American missionaries working on a water project in Mosul, two Finnish businessmen in Baghdad, a German and a Dutch national working on a water project south of Baghdad, and two American staffers with the coalition shot south of the capital.

U.S. military officials in Mosul say insurgents are shifting from attacks on American troops to targeting Iraqi security forces, and most recently civilians. The shift could be partly because there are fewer American soldiers in the area, and consequently fewer U.S. targets.

The U.S. military, however, says rebels are choosing civilians targets because they are frustrated at a lack of success in attacking soldiers.

Late last year, some 20,000 soldiers with the U.S. Army's 101st Airborne Division occupied Mosul and surrounding areas. Since the 101st pulled out in February, the region around Mosul has been occupied by 8,000 U.S. troops under Task Force Olympia, which lacks the 101st's fleet of helicopters.

The new forces in the north have cut back on the number of economic development and infrastructure projects undertaken by the 101st.

In other violence in Mosul on Sunday:

— Iraqi police said two U.S. soldiers were wounded after gunmen in a car opened fire on their military vehicle. The U.S. military said troops returned fire, killing all four "enemy forces" in the car.

— A U.S. military Stryker vehicle caught fire after being struck by a rocket-propelled grenade, but there were no injuries, the U.S. military said.

Gentle, effective, natural treatment for neck pain, back pain, headaches, sports injuries, auto injuries, work injuries.
"Results you can feel."
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Member:
• American Chiropractic Association
• Massachusetts Chiropractic Society
Participating provider with most insurance, including student insurance & GIC
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street, Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

Expert explains shuttle accident

SHUTTLE from page 1

tional problems in general.

Osheroff also spoke privately to a small group of physics students.

Christopher Serino, a physics major participated in Osheroff's small group discussion and attended the public speech.

"[The group discussion] was really interesting," he said. "I decided to come to this speech to see if he had anything else to say and because I have a general interest in the topic."

Alex Barbati, a mechanical engineering major, agreed that the talk was interesting and was "surprised to hear what little faith NASA puts in its engineers and discouraged that the astronauts aboard Columbia had not been allowed to go check the extent of the damage to their shuttle before reentry."

Osheroff was brought to UMass by a conjunction of the physics department and the Commonwealth College Distinguished Speakers program.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3698 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Fourakas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantanasos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
Features Editor S.J. Port
News Editor Ferron Salaiker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Morris
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lapsley
Finance Manager Greg Seaman
Human Resource Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Riggins
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Liza Lynch
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Crum
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Marcelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. It was the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Attention Collegian Staff:
Desk Editor applications are due Friday.

You have options!
Everyone asking what your plans are after graduation?
Massachusetts School of Law graduates ACHIEVE!
Get the same edge that MSL graduates enjoy in almost every professional realm.
Law
Business
Government
Education
Healthcare
Law Enforcement
A Juris Doctor degree puts you ahead of the competition.
A Juris Doctor from MSL affords you the freedom of that competative advantage without the worries others suffer behind a mountain of debt.
Interested? Come check us out
MSL
Massachusetts School of Law
Woodland Park
500 Federal Street
Andover, MA 01810
(978)-681-0800
www.mslaw.edu

NEW ON TUESDAY!
BROTHER BEAR
HOUSE OF SAND & FOG
SOMETHING'S GOTTA GIVE
TEXAS CHAINSAW MASSACRE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✓ Taught by Working Bartenders
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
Credit Cards Accepted
SPECIAL OFFER Only $199 Before April 2nd
Learn to bartend in a weekend!
Call now! Space is limited!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

Summer Session
2004
Registration begins
FEBRUARY 24
summersession.rutgers.edu
Summer Session I – June 1 - July 9
Summer Session II – June 28 - August 6
Summer Session III – July 12 - August 18
Saturday Morning Classes – June 5 - August 14
For a Summer Session catalog, including registration form, visit us at summersession.rutgers.edu or call 732-932-7565. Outside the 732 area code call 1-800-HI-RUTGERS
■ Undergraduate & Graduate Courses
■ Morning, afternoon and evening classes
■ Saturday morning classes
■ Outstanding faculty
■ Vibrant academic atmosphere
■ Off-Campus classes at:
-Brookdale Community College, Lincroft Freehold Colonial Campus on Rt.9
-Rutgers University Northwest Executive Training Facility, Mt. Arlington RUTGERS
New Brunswick Campus

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 29, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Disclosing 9/11 truth should be civic duty

The panel of investigators looking into the events leading up to the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks have urged national security adviser Condoleezza Rice to reconsider her refusal to publicly refute testimony by former White House aide Richard Clarke.

Clarke's now bestselling book, "Against All Enemies," claims that Bush did not do enough to protect the country from terrorist attacks and that in several instances he ignored warnings that a massive terrorist strike was imminent.

"We do feel unanimously that [Rice] should testify in public," said former New Jersey governor Thomas Kean, who was appointed by President Bush to lead the commission. "We feel it's important to get her case out there. We recognize there are arguments having to do with separation of powers. We think in a tragedy of this magnitude that those kind of legal arguments are probably overridden," added Kean.

Rice is just one of many officials in the Bush administration who is being urged to appear in public in front of the 9/11 panel. Rice has "refused" to do so, citing issues of separation of powers, although she has appeared in private in front of the panel.

According to panel members, Rice's private testimony has been "very helpful."

The refusal to publicly testify in public under the blanket of "separation of powers" does have precedent. However, as has been said before, the magnitude of 9/11 does create a need for truth that is greater than most cases.

According to a statement by the 9/11 panel, "[Rice] voluntarily coming forward to testify under oath during a public hearing without the use of a subpoena would simply set a rare, refreshing, and appropriate moral precedent for all of history to judge."

A key word in that statement is the word "judge." The Bush administration will be forever linked to the 9/11 disaster, and how the findings of this panel are handled will go a long way into determining the legacy of Bush's tenure. Bush will either be remembered as the president who helped America out of its greatest national tragedy, or the president who caused America's greatest national tragedy.

Since his book was published, Clarke has been deemed by some as a "disgruntled former employee of the White House with nothing more than a book to write." While this may or may not be the case, the fact still remains that 9/11 happened, and there is much to learn about the events leading up to it. It is imperative that America is made aware of what happened, regardless of whether or not it hurts the reelection campaign of President Bush.

We all, as Americans, have civic duties that we must carry out. For example, attending jury duty is one of the most basic and widespread "civic duties" of any citizen. Likewise, high-ranking governmental officials have duties they must perform. Often times a degree of "privacy" is given to these officials to allow them to best execute their duties, assuming that they are acting in good faith. In order for this faith to be questioned, an event large enough to cause severe nation-wide security concerns must occur. Undoubtedly, the events of 9/11 count as such an event, and every American who fulfils his or her civic duty has a right to know the truth.

Information from cnn.com was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Trippin' on the strip: A Gaza experience

World Perspectives

Leah Vitale

Last week, I went to a gorgeous place. There I felt my feet melt into the wading water of the breathtaking beach as the sand overcame me. I smelled the bloom of flowers growing wild all around. I sunk my teeth into a juicy mango picked from a tree miraculously growing out of the sand like a rose bursting out of concrete. I heard constant gunshots behind the enormous flowing dunes of sand juxtaposed by the laughter of little children playing in the street. There, I feasted my eyes on paradise.

My weekend at the Gaza Strip was certainly heavy-hearted. Being in Israel is quite a risk as it is, but Gaza, a place that makes headlines practically every other day, generates a different caliber of trepidation. Despite my mother's apprehension, I joined about 30 other Americans and Canadians to the infamous spot to see for myself exactly why there is so much hullabaloo over such a supposed "cesspool." Much to my surprise, a cesspool it was not, but full of fear and angst as well as immense pride and love, it most definitely was.

My friend and I were placed with a warm family for lunch to hear their stories, fears, hardships, aspirations, and ideals. Their tales nearly brought tears to my eyes as accounts such as theirs go criminally underrepresented. The father of the household told us of the first seeds he planted around his new home 20 years ago. As a result of the mandate of a return of the Sinai Peninsula to Egypt, he was transported from his previous house in 1979 as part of the Camp David Accords. Already having been a refugee, he refuses this subjection neither upon himself nor upon his growing family yet again; especially, not by his own government.

Their tales nearly brought tears to my eyes as accounts such as theirs go criminally underrepresented.

Unfortunately, due to Prime Minister Ariel Sharon's new plan, my friends might have no choice. The Israeli prime minister, without having yet consulted his own cabinet, is proposing a mass transfer of over 7,800 Jews from Gaza as part of the plans for the new security fence between Israel and the Palestinians. Their settlement, Neve Dekalim, was initially created mostly by refugees of the 1979 Accords who sought sanctuary in what they considered to be safe and clearly part of the Jewish state. Now, once again, they might be torn from the land they grew to love and nourish all this time.

Not only is the transfer of these people abhorrent, it is a display of a blatant double standard. Despite the fact that the status of the territories that the Israeli army has been accused of "occupying" is more along the lines of disputed, the Israel Defense Forces is most certainly is not kicking Palestinians out of their homes. Now, however, when such action might actually be taking place, against registered Israeli citizens for that matter, the world sits silently. Ironically, when the Israeli army finally rightly claimed the life of "spiritual leader" Sheikh Yassin last week, a.k.a. a well known terrorist and co-founder of the militant terrorist organization Hamas, sitting silently was the last thing on the world's agenda. It's quite interesting how evacuating innocent women and children from their well-established homes doesn't evoke even a fraction of such a reaction.

Israel promises compensation or aid in the transfer, but how many times must one be uprooted entirely in his/her lifetime? The land and the homes where these families dwell has been nurtured and built by their bare hands. It is not so simple to just get up and move.

How do these communities plan to fight? Not with guns or violence, but with love. Families such as the one I met plan on continuing their lives regularly, praying, planning, and going about their business. No uprising. No true defense. They plan to fight with their souls; just a claim to their home and an undying determination, resilience and belief in G-d.

Leah Vitale is a Collegian columnist on exchange in Israel.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

NEWLY ELECTED OFFICERS THANK STUDENTS FOR THEIR SUPPORT

Last week 2,400 students exercised their oft-neglected right to vote in the student elections. We have one thing to say: Thank you.

To the 1,200 students that wrote our names on the ballot: Thank you.

To the dozens of dedicated UMass students who last week stood out in the cold rain, yelled, hollered, pleaded, honked, knocked and embarrassed themselves time and time again in hopes of helping this university: Thank you.

We want to stress that our gratitude and appreciation extends beyond the incredible students that worked on our campaign to every student that worked on every campaign. You have shown your willingness to fight for this school. Together you put up 10,000 flyers and handed out 50,000 chop-chops. You all ran dignified campaigns. Be proud of one another.

The crux of our campaign is to create a fundamental shift in where the SGA derives its power. We do not seek power over students; rather, we seek power with students. We hope to make the SGA a progressive civic democracy, and by doing so, hope to educate and mobilize the student body through its existing structures (The Collegian, SCERA, MASSPIRG, GSS, RSO's, Fraternities, Sororities, RA's, and so on), toward achieving specific goals.

These goals have come from knocking on many doors and listening to the concerns of many students. Most of them boil down to restoring the Universities land grant mission, to making excellent public liberal arts higher education available to and affordable for the people of Massachusetts, and to putting education before profit.

Of the goals we created, one is more time-sensitive than the others: this year the University is due to renegotiate its contract with Follett, the private corporation that runs the textbook annex. Five years ago, Follett was awarded a contract with the university. If this contract is renewed, students will have five more years of paying a privatized bookstore more for their textbooks than is necessary at a public university.

On behalf of the 2,000-plus students, whose families pay the taxes, fees, and tuition UMass is built on, that voted in favor of an alternative textbook system, we request of the administration that any and all negotiations between Follett and UMass be halted, and that the student body be actively involved with the administration in the creation of an alternative textbook system in which the main priority is education, not profit.

Last week's election proved that students can do big things. We want to make sure that we continue to receive the input of the students. We will be holding our first "Back to the People Community Meeting" on Tuesday, April 6, at 6 p.m. in Worcester Dining Common. These meetings will be held every other week in rotating dining commons. Their purpose is to allow us to listen to you, make progress visible, and keep students informed on what is going on and what they can do to help.

Thank you, and please do not hesitate to contact us for any reason.

Eduardo Bustamante
SGA President-Elect
Eduardoebustamante@hotmail.com

Matthew Murphy
Student Trustee-Elect
Mvmurphy@student.umass.edu

ESL: Not a dead language

Kaitlin Barry

English as a Second Language (ESL) has been discredited by its critics, who suggest that it is, along with bilingual education, outdated. However, ESL is a systemic and comprehensive approach to teaching English to students for whom it is not a native language. ESL students are people who are born in a foreign country and are striving to master English as a second, third or even fourth language, making them bilingual or multilingual. Recognizing the importance of English, both in the U.S. and around the world, ESL students study the language with the intention of achieving a high of proficiency that is close to that of people who have spoken the language their whole lives.

Some claim ESL is not a university-level subject. However, these people may not realize that ESL instruction has been accepted by the world of academia for over sixty years. The discipline was developed in universities with the influx of foreign students in the 1960s. The international organization, TESOL (Teachers of English to Speakers of Other Languages), was created to support its establishment as an academic discipline. An extensive body of research to support second-language learning has been developed and continues to develop as the number of language learners is rapidly increasing. At UMass-Amherst, the English as a Second Language Program was created by faculty in 1975 and was endorsed by the Faculty Senate. Today, all the top 50 U.S. public research universities offer ESL instruction.

Some even make the claim that ESL students do not belong at UMass-Amherst because "they are not good enough" if they are studying English as a second language. The assumption that ESL is compensatory, or even remedial, instruction below the level of Freshman Writing is incorrect because ESL promotes overall language instruction, not just writing skills. Misinformed people suggest that ESL students are deficient compared to native-speakers and are not prepared for college, an example of the classic case of blaming the victim. However, ESL students compete for admission to the University with their native-speaker counterparts. Through strong academic achievements, high cumulative averages, participation in honors and advanced classes, these non-native speakers are accepted to the University, even edging out some native speakers of English for spots in the incoming freshmen classes.

Clearly, they were able to function in an academic setting in high school. Why do they not deserve to go to college? As one ESL student at UMass wrote in an essay, "Just because we are still learning English doesn't mean we are bad learners." Additionally, upon their arrival at the University, some ESL students become members of Commonwealth College, challenging themselves by taking advanced courses in their majors. They will become working professionals in Massachusetts in areas such as engineering, nursing, business, mathematics, economics, and biology after receiving UMass degrees.

The ESL Program at UMass-Amherst has experienced significant reductions within the past few years. Between the years 1990 and 2000, the Program's positions for Program Director and Program Secretary were eliminated. Two courses, ESL Pronunciation and ESL Vocabulary, have not been offered for several years due to budget cuts. In April 2003, the Program lost three Intermediate courses, ESL Intermediate Grammar, ESL Intermediate Writing, and ESL Intermediate Reading. Last semester, only two courses were offered: ESL Advanced Grammar and ESL Advanced Composition, the latter of which is the only course being offered this semester. The Program Coordinator, after not being offered a multi-year contract, took early retirement at the end of last semester, leaving one faculty member currently on board. The University appears to be in great danger of losing its ESL Program.

The ESL Program at UMass-Amherst has experienced significant reductions within the past few years.

If the University's administration was to deem ESL inappropriate in the higher learning setting, it would not only ignore research and statistics of the discipline, but also would belittle the accomplishments of the ESL students. They are great assets, not only in the contributions they make to ethnic diversity, but in their involvement in campus life and organizations. They have gained admission to the University fair and square. Not allowing immigrants and refugees who excelled in high school the opportunity to attend a public university would not support the President's "No Child Left Behind" agenda and could potentially perpetuate social inequality and deny professional advancement to immigrants and refugees. It would be discrimination.

ESL should not be treated as a dead language because the need for such instruction continues to exist in the United States today more than ever, according to demographics that demonstrate the rapid and continued increase in the linguistic minority population between the ages of 15 and 24. It should be supported on campus as a serious academic discipline for non-native University students. If not, the implications will be grave. Students who have immigrated to the United States after sixth grade may not be eligible for acceptance to the University. This means that only people who were born here or came to this country as children would have a fighting chance to gain admission to UMass-Amherst. The University would miss out on ethnically, not to mention linguistically, diverse groups of immigrants and refugees from countries around the world, who are bright, capable university students.

Kaitlin Barry is a UMass student.

Ego is Nader's copilot

Mark Ostroff

"I think this is a monstrous ego running unchecked." — Carl Pope, Executive Director, Sierra Club.

Once again, the primaries draw to a close and it's now time for Americans to snap out of their quadrennial daydreams of popular democracy and choose the candidate that walks the tightest rope between big money and public interest.

The race for the White House has officially begun.

And as if almost a fixture to contemporary presidential elections, at Ralph Nader is back in a bid for the White House — or at least for the shot at bidding in another four years. His rallying cry of "more voices and more choices" appeals to voters who are tired of a stagnant "duopoly" of American politics. And just like the 2000 elections, Nader is once again portraying himself as the faint echo of democratic integrity — an idealistic taboo that America is afraid to reach out to.

It goes without saying that Nader is noted for many landmark developments in Washington over the past few decades. His 1965 book, "Unsafe at Any Speed," sparked enough controversy to make General Motors hire prostitutes to ambush Nader in a grocery store. His resulting lawsuit in this blackmail attempt won him the money that founded Public Interest Research Groups (PIRGs) all across America. Overall, there is no doubt that this man has done a lot to keep this country clean, both politically and environmentally.

But that was all then and this is now.

Voters will now have to realize that the visions of "Saint Ralph" are over. We no longer have the "white horse" hero of the American people that many on the left look up to. We no longer see a man who is determined to expose the sick consumerist facade that tells us to trust anything with a catchy label. It's been over for quite some time now.

In his place, we see a man who was about as rebellious as Kurt Cobain – loud, yet controllable. Nader has become yet another teacher's pet, still trying to wrap himself in his 1960s creed of integrity-through-nonconformity, but to no avail. He's part of the system he claims to fight against and when it's all said and done, he's just another ego, hell-bent on the Oval Office.

Nader's aspirations have, in fact, become so flagrantly reckless, that even Bush donors have contributed to the Nader campaign, reports the Dallas Morning News. (Of course, many of these donors came up with the excuse of trying to "promote diverse views" in politics, but who are they kidding?) It's a sure sign that Nader no longer cares about the nearly fifty-year-old agenda that he's been promoting.

He's part of the system he claims to fight against and when it's all said and done, he's just another ego, hell-bent on the Oval Office.

The same article reports that over 10 percent of Nader's donors of $250 dollars or more are "reliable GOP donors." The list includes Terrence Jacobs (executive, Penneco Oil), Jeno Paulucci, (Jeno's Pizza Rolls), and even Ben Stein.

It's entirely understandable now why both Democrats and Republicans repute the former Green candidate with stonewalling and secrecy. Nader is actually a substantial investor in companies that he's known to publicly "expose." According to Salon, Nader's then-running mate Patty LaDuke, had "exposed" Al Gore for owning stocks in Occidental Oil Co. What she left out was that even Nader himself had shares of this stock through his estimated $100,000-$250,000 mutual fund with Fidelity Investment.

In fact, a 2000 article from Salon reads, "The Rainforest Action Network — whose members no doubt include myriad Nader Raiders — has slammed Fidelity for 'investing in genocide.'"

That same year, Nader told the Washington Post that the profits of these mutual funds, which sometimes trickle down to his PIRGs, are from "the most neutral-type companies," claiming, "No. 1, they're not monopolists and No. 2, they don't produce land mines, napalm, weapons." What he didn't tell the Post was that his mutual funds included shares of Raytheon, Boeing, and even Chevron, which actually has a tanker named after the "poorest" member of Bush's staff, Condoleezza Rice.

Nor should we assume that Nader's name is synonymous with the Green Party with which he ran in 2000. In fact, an editorial in the "Green Horizon Quarterly" accuses Nader of running "with his coterie rather than party organizers," adding, "he doesn't involve local Green leaders." Basically, it was a polite way of saying that Nader had simply hijacked Green Party politics in 2000.

And it looks like he's not so eager to bring the Greens under the political umbrella this year either. He'll be running independently of the Greens, under the shoddily spun catchphrase, "Declare your Independence," instead.

But what does all of this show? It shows that Nader could care less about the plurality of American democracy and more about his own ego. When he spoils this year's election, he'll no longer be able to shrug and say he did it for the sake of Green recognition in mainstream politics. His actions show that he couldn't care less.

Nader knew in 2000 that he became the "spoiler." He also knows that the GOP is encouraging him to spoil the election once again, and he's totally fine with it. It just goes to show that, like every other candidate running, we all know whose side Nader takes — his own.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 29, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cookin' competition

Food Network star dices it up with the Valley's culinary finest

By Brendan O'Meara
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — "Rachael! Rachael! Rachael!"

Those were the chants at the sold-out Calvin Theater in Northampton this past Saturday night when Rachael Ray, author of the "30 Minute Meals" cookbooks and star of the Food Network's "30 Minute Meals," tore onto the stage.

Rachael Ray
Calvin
Northampton
March 27

The Iron Cook competition featured Ray, the challenger, pitted against three local Iron Chefs; Rob Watson from the Black Sheep Café, Martin Carrera from La Veracruzana, and Margaret Fitzpatrick from the Tusk n' Rattle Café. Money raised from this event went to support Friends of Children, a non-profit organization that provides advocacy services to children and their families.

Jane Lyons, executive director of Friends of Children, expressed her excitement.

"We're really pumped. This was a very big community, volunteer effort. It took five months of preparation with a committee of 10-15 people and 40 more behind the scenes. We raised $20,000 last year and we hope to do better this time around. We did fill more seats this year," she said.

If the opening auction for the fourth and final judging post were any indication of how much money they would raise, then Lyons will be very happy. Lou and Leslie Ekus, director and stage manager respectively, kicked off the evening by starting the bidding for the fourth seat at $200 dollars. Ten minutes later the seat was sold for $1,050 to Lindsey O'Donnell, 19, of Easthampton. She joined fellow judges, Northampton mayor Clare Higgins, Michael T. Kusek, and State Representative Peter Kocot.

Participants had one hour to create meals of their choice focusing on originality, presentation, taste, and how the secret ingredient was showcased. The secret ingredient, of which individual Americans consume nearly 18 pounds per year, was the tear-jerking onions.

The gong was struck and they were off to the races for the one-hour competition. Ray and her team of three helpers were complacent and calm, using the time to be organized and thorough. The Iron Cook team of Watson, Carrera, and Fitzpatrick were the antithesis of team Ray, frantic and seemingly out of control.

Within minutes the audience was greeted with the fresh aromas of caramelized onions and sizzling nuts and seeds. Each team searched for what they felt would give them the edge. The Iron Cooks suggested a dessert that had onions as a part of it. To that Ray said, "What? Onion dessert? That's a challenge I won't take you up on."

Watson sliced up red onions with speed and finesse; Carrera worked on tortilla chips, and some scallops with a curry sauce that was whipped up by Fitzpatrick. With both teams sweating and pressing it was tough to decide who may end up on top when the gong sounded at the end.

"Absolutely Rachael," said Shannon Shumway, 42, nurse practitioner at Smith College. Robert Demerski, 39, business manager of a car dealership, begged to differ saying of Carrera, "He's fiery and competitive. We expect a good competition."

The pressure was getting to the cooks when it was discovered that one of the ovens was faulty and Watson's rack of lamb was a bit too rare. He sliced the individual ribs and put them back averting a potential miscue that may have cost them the competition.

Ray also had problems with her stuffed onions. The top portion of them burnt and time was winding down. Her team remained composed, scraped off the burnt crumbs, added the necessary ingredients and moved on. Ray said, "My mom would scrape it off and kiss it off to God."

Team Ray was pulling together the loose ends and wrapping up their meals while the Iron Cooks were still hustling, hoping to make the deadline. Commentator Christopher Prosperi strolled over to Ray's table and asked, "You have five minutes left. What do you think you're going to do?" With her palms flattened against the table, clearly exhausted, Ray answered, "I'm gonna drink."

The gong sounded again, the 60 minutes were up and the presentations to the judges were made. Ray presented stuffed onions, penne pasta with onion sauce, salad with onion tarts, and a frittata with, of course, onions.

The Iron Cooks countered with a rack of lamb, filet mignon, scallops resting on an onion nest, and a curious onion dessert that was composed of mango, chocolate, diced papayas and jalapenos.

The salivating judges dug in and their zeal for the food was apparent by their lack of words. They nodded and savored their bites as they made notes and jotted down the scores. City Councilor Bill Dwight took the tabulations and stood before the crowd. "It was an epic battle," he said. "And the winner is, by a score of 77-75, the Iron Cooks."

The Calvin Theater erupted and when it all settled down Watson said, "This was a good event. I was grateful to be a part of it." Also expressing her take on the night Ray said, "Food is about fun and sharing."

Though some may be disappointed that Ray was defeated she still left a great impression on her fans. Shumway added, "For women who cook and work she's a hero. She's so much like us with the same concerns. We want to meet her and say 'You would love us. Can we take you out for a drink?'"

BRENDAN O'MEARA/COLLEGIAN

New film a real crowd-'killer'

By Tammi Munn
Collegian Staff

"The Ladykillers," directed and written by Joel and Ethan Coen ("O Brother, Where Art Thou?" and "Intolerable Cruelty"), is a witty and satirical comedy that shows what can happen when an honest, old woman stands in the way of a group of dishonest men who are involved in a grand robbery scheme.

'The Ladykillers'
Directed by Coen Brothers
Starring Tom Hanks, Marlon Wayans
Touchstone
Rated R
104 mins.
Grade B

The group includes experts in explosives and tunneling, a muscle man and the critical "inside man," and they have gathered to pull off a great casino robbery via a tunnel dug from an unsuspecting gospel women's root cellar.

The group is made up of a wordy professor (Tom Hanks), a general (Tzi Ma), a not-so mechanically inclined props designer (J.K. Simmons), who says that every trying project is the "easiest thing in the world," a foul-mouth hoodlum (Marlon Wayans) and a dumb football player, (Ryan Hurst). They basically follow the negative stereotypical characteristics that come with their titles.

MELINDA SUE GORDON/PANAMOUNT/CASTLE ROCK/WARNER BROS. (LEFT)

Tom Hanks plays the role of Goldthwait Higginson Dorr, Ph.D.

The professor, Goldthwait Higginson Dorr III, Ph.D., devises the creative plan to construct a tunnel to the casino vault to acquire all the monetary treasure that it houses. He has a perfect olde English dialect and a gasping laugh akin to an obnoxious snorting, that he uses to charm the old ladies including the important Mrs. Munson (Irma P. Hall) whose house is the key to the entire robbery.

The plan is covered by the clever ruse that the men are renaissance musicians, church musicians at that, to satisfy Mrs. Munson, and they are in dire need of a space to practice in. Mrs. Munson's root cellar is tested with a series of odd vocal calls, done by the professor, to ensure that it has the best acoustics, but what he really wants to find out is if the walls are sufficient enough for the tunnel.

Mrs. Munson knits, attends church regularly, enjoys gospel music, bake-sales and talking to her dead husband's portrait. She nags the sheriff with minor complaints and asks that he conduct the mundane tasks of telling her neighbor to quit playing his "hippity hop" music so loud because it does not have the wholesome quality of church music and regularly getting her cat, Pickles, who steals every scene he is in, out of a tree.

The men underestimate the curiosity of this woman. She frequently intrudes on their "practicing" to indulge them with some of her cinnamon cookies. As she walks down the stairs, the men quickly cover their work on the tunnel and grab up their instruments as if they were children quickly hiding their wrongdoing to avoid getting in trouble.

They begin to run into a plethora of problems as it is slowly realized that the men lack the mental capacity to complete the tasks they were assigned and Mrs. Munson becomes suspicious of the activities in her root cellar. She ultimately finds out what they are up to after a series of explosions occur in her home and the professor can no longer convince her that nothing is going on. He tries to convince her that stealing the money was a good thing to do and that a portion of it is intended for donation to her favorite bible school, Bob Jones University. He makes it seem like a minuscule amount that they have taken and she eventually agrees that it was a good idea, that is until her husband's portrait reveals a disapproving glare and she quickly tells the professor to return the money and that group will have to attend church with her or else she will turn them in.

The professor, unwilling to give up, decides that the busybody woman has to be killed. They are wrong once again as Mrs. Munson seems to crimp their plans again.

At first the film seems to be scattered, as there are all these choppy introductions of each of the characters without any connections made between them until quite far into the film. By the time the group finally gathers for their first meeting, it is difficult to associate which character came from what situation. It is hard to stay interested at first, but the film quickly recovers with the stunning performance of Tom Hanks and the amazing dark humor of the Coen Brothers.

Irma P. Hall plays the part of sweet church lady Mrs. Munson.

Never 'out of season'

Brazilian fesitval brings out the Carnaval spirit

By Jovan Smith
Collegian Correspondent

With over four months of preparation the Carnaval "Out of Season" proved to be an attention-grabbing event/party that moved its audience. Saturday night, the Student Association for the Multicultural Brazilian Alliance and its sponsors followed through with their goal of preserving the Brazilian culture by effectively educating and entertaining its audience.

Out of Season
Campus Center Auditorium
Amherst
March 27

The event provided delicious food ranging from feijoada (a bean stew containing pork, sausage, and chicken), to white rice, and two types of salad (one with vegetables and mayonnaise, the other with lettuce, a variety of vegetables and salad dressing). The beverages consisted of a fruit juice called caju, the Brazilian word for "cashew fruit" and gurana, a Brazilian soda.

Geography professor Alan P. Marcus began the event with a lecture on issues facing Brazilians in Massachusetts. Following the lecture was a presentation by Thais, a professional dance instructor originally from Brazil who teaches Brazilian dance in Cambridge. Performing a dance called "Forro Thais" with her partner, the crowd cheered as they twirled and shook their hips to the music. Next were the Garota Do Samba (the girls of Samba), a group composed of University of Massachusetts students Talia Yagudin, Juliana Leal, and Helenice Valentim. They danced to the music of Brazilian funk and pagode, a type of Samba most common in northeastern Brazil.

KATHLEEN O'TOOLE/COLLEGIAN

Thais Carvalho, the president of SAMBA demonstrates a Brazilian dance with her partner.

Shortly following that, the band Terra Treme played a type of music called Axe (pronounced Ash-ey). As they played the bandleader selected random people from the audience to dance and slowly the majority of the crowd began to follow suit. Accompanying the band were two women wearing clothing typical of Bahia; short white tops, long white dresses and white headbands. The same women came out again later wearing clothing indicative of Rio De Janeiro — bikini-like sequenced articles in the colors of green, gold and red with matching feathered headpieces.

As the sounds of the music from the performers became louder and the dancers performed, the audience members began to sing along while others clapped their hands to the rhythmic beat. Some took to waving their hands in the air and stomping their feet to the powerful performances, which captured the essence of the Brazilian spirit.

Last but not least, the popular DJ Boquinha had the crowd dancing to a mixture of Brazilian beats hip-hop, reggae, and techno. UMass students as well as the general public seemed to enjoy what the event had to offer.

Whether you were Brazilian, familiar with its culture or of a different ethnicity all together, the Brazilian spirit seemed universal to everyone. The audience showed their appreciation by standing up and participating along with the performers, and also added to the Brazilian theme by wearing colorful masks during the festivities.

"I was really pleased with the turn-out of the Carnaval, I felt that there was a lot of energy from the crowd and overall it was a great atmosphere," said Yagudin, a junior at UMass and SAMBA member. "It started out more formal and slow towards the beginning but things picked up towards the end of the night. I felt that the Carnaval spirit consumed the crowd"

With a diverse crowd ranging from all ages and different backgrounds the Brazilian Carnaval "Out of Season" was more than just an event — it truly was a cultural and invigorating experience.

UMass loses Wild one

WOMEN'S LAX from page 8

responded by scoring a pair of goals each from junior Jill Albee and sophomore Katie Leland. A goal from each came off free position shots, which triggered an UMass timeout.

When play resumed, UMass found a spark in Hope Zelinger who scored her first of five goals at 14:21. After a subsequent goal from UNH, Zelinger started a 5-0 Massachusetts run that would send UMass into the locker room with a 7-5 lead at the half.

During the Massachusetts run, Bubeck recorded her second unassisted goal, while Zelinger scored two and Drown notched the first of six points, with a free position goal. Drown led the Minutewomen with six points, and the trio combined for all 11 Massachusetts goals.

"It's never part of our game plan to designate one person to get the ball all the time, but today [Zelinger] showed up," UMass coach Carrie Bolduc said. "All our attackers are threats and they made some nice plays for us, but [Zelinger], Bubeck and Drown did all the damage."

The Wildcats opened the second half with a pair of goals at 26:39 and 25:37 by Kelly Blaney and Katie Leland, respectively, but Drown extended the lead back to two with an unassisted goal and a free-position goal to make the lead 9-7 UMass.

UNH proceeded to capitalize on two free position shots and an unassisted goal by junior Sarah Hutchinson. A goal by Zelinger was not enough to maintain a half-time lead that disappeared into a 10-10 tie at the end of regulation.

TIM ROSKE/ ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bearing it all

Maine players celebrate a 2-1 overtime win against Wisconsin in the NCAA East Regional final in Albany, N.Y. on Saturday. Maine moves on to the Frozen Four, where it will take on Boston College on April 8.

Jack's career best punches Yellow Jackets' dance ticket

By NANCY ARMOUR
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Even if it takes a little something extra, Georgia Tech finds a way to get it done.

And the Yellow Jackets got a sweet reward for their perseverance: their second trip to the Final Four and their first since 1990.

With leading scorer B.J. Elder hobbled by a badly sprained ankle, Jarrett Jack scored a career-high 29 points to lift the Yellow Jackets to a 79-71 victory over Kansas in overtime of the St. Louis Regional championship Sunday.

No team has had more tight games on its road to the Final Four than the third-seeded Yellow Jackets. Georgia Tech's first three games were decided by a total of 13 points.

Solid all day, Jack was unstoppable in overtime. After little Will Bynum hit a 3-pointer to break a 71-all tie, Jack went 4-for-4 from the line in the last 47 seconds to seal the win.

Jack finished 8-of-12 from the floor, and also had nine rebounds and six assists. Luke Schenscher added 15 points and Clarence Moore had 14 for the Yellow Jackets (27-9).

As the final seconds ticked off the clock, coach Paul Hewitt threw his hands in the air in triumph and a wide grin spread across his face. The Yellow Jackets ran onto the court when the buzzer sounded and piled together for a group hug. Elder's teammates tried to lift him up, but they couldn't get him off the ground as the impromptu mosh pit bopped around.

The Yellow Jackets will now face second-seeded Oklahoma State on Saturday in San Antonio. Kansas (24-9) could do nothing but watch the celebration with disappointment, denied a third straight trip to the Final Four.

But these Jayhawks didn't play like a Final Four team. They shot 40 percent from the floor and turned the ball over 15 times. Wayne Simien, who'd been averaging 20 points in the tournament, was held to 11 on 4-of-14 shooting. Keith Langford scored 15 on 4-of-11 before fouling out in overtime.

It was the Jayhawks' first loss in a regional final since March 26, 1996, when they lost to Syracuse. Though Georgia Tech was seeded one spot better, it came into the game as an underdog. The Jayhawks had the experience and the momentum, having won their first three tournament games by 22 points.

They even had a domeful of fans, playing just five hours away from their campus in Lawrence, Kan.

As if that wasn't enough, the Yellow Jackets were playing with a gimpy Elder. Elder, who averaged a team-high 15.8 points, suffered a severely sprained ankle in Friday night's regional when Nevada's Kirk Snyder fell on him.

He started, but was visibly limping and couldn't run close to full speed. He played 12 minutes, going 0-for-2 with an assist.

But the Yellow Jackets have bragged all year about their depth, always finding someone to step up and get the job done. Sunday was no different.

The Yellow Jackets had their away with the Jayhawks early, smothering them defensively and holding Simien and Langford to a combined four points on 0-for-10 shooting. The Yellow Jackets led by as much as 11 in the first half and were up 40-33 with 16:39 left in regulation.

But Simien and Langford finally broke loose, and Kansas came roaring back.

Langford scored on a driving layup — his first field goal of the day — and Simien ran off five quick points to give Kansas a 43-42 lead, its first, with 13:04 to play. The pro-Kansas crowd went wild, and the Jayhawks' bench sprinted onto the floor when a time-out was called seconds later.

Jack was fouled by Langford on a driving layup, and he converted the three-point play to start a 7-0 run that gave Georgia Tech a 65-58 lead with 3:56 to play.

But the Jayhawks weren't done — not by a long shot. Langford converted his own three-point play to pull Kansas within 65-61 with 3:03 left in regulation.

After Miles and Jack traded steals, Miles fouled Jack with 39 seconds left.

Jack made the front end of a one-and-one, putting the Yellow Jackets up 66-63. But he missed the second and Simien grabbed the rebound. Simien missed a short hook at the other end, but Jeff Graves came up with the ball in the scramble and kicked it out to the freshman J.R. Giddens, who calmly drilled a 3-pointer to tie the game at 66 with 16 seconds left.

Amherst Laser & Skin Care Center
"Because you are worth it"
Laser Hair Removal
Both Men and Women
Any Area of the Body
Bikini * Face * Chin * Lip * Underarm * Leg * Back
Facials, Massages, & Microdermabrasion
Laser treatment available for acne and facial veins
Call Now for a free initial physician consultation.
Student Discounts available with a valid Student I.D.
Amherst Laser and Skin Care Center
Bob Weitzman MD- Medical Director
196 NORTH PLEASANT STREET - SUITE 11
AMHERST, MA 01002 - 413-253-2214 - FAX 413-253-2216
www.amherstlaser.com

Lundburg, Schell lead UM past Pride

MEN'S LAX from page 8

was ruled to have scored while in the crease. That didn't deter the Minuteman offense, however, as junior Chris Doyle scored his 13th goal of the season on an extra-man opportunity with 7:58 to go in the third. Sophomore Tony Ventiquattro netted his second of the year with a nice move from behind the net to make it 6-2 UMass with 5:41 left in the third quarter.

Hofstra's Don Scott scored off a drive toward Schell's net with five minutes left in the third, but that's as close as the Pride would get.

Schell made one of his finest saves with 4:27 to go in the fourth, when the Pride's Athan Ianucci got a feed in close, but was stifled by Schell's quick stick. Ianucci was stoned again 20 seconds later off a fast break, before the Minutemen went into shutdown mode, content to give the towering Lundburg the ball in the offensive zone, where he held off defender after defender to retain the three-goal lead.

The win, combined with their 12-4 defeat of Sacred Heart on Tuesday, gives the Minutemen a little momentum heading into the second — and toughest — half of the season. Their next three games are against unranked Penn State (4-3) Manhattan (2-3) and Yale (4-1), before they finish up against No. 6 Georgetown (4-1), No. 5 Syracuse (4-1), and No. 8 Rutgers (4-1).

"It was a very big win," Cannella said. "Coming out of last weekend into Tuesday, we had some confidence, and today we were able to go out there and play 60 minutes of lacrosse.

"We talked about [turning it around] a lot this week. You get to .500, and then it's 0-0, it's a new season."

The Minuteman defense, backed by Schell, was particularly solid, highlighted by the play of sophomore Steven Byrnes, who on at least four occasions stuck his longpole into a passing lane to make a steal that sent the Minutemen back on attack.

"Our defense was really outstanding," Cannella said. "We cleared the ball very well in the fourth quarter. That's something we really concentrated on."

STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND
Hot Nights? Cool Trips? Killer Deals?
This ain't your parents' travel agency... it's yours.
London $245
Amsterdam $245
Rome $245
Brussels $245
Miami $740 · 6 nights
Vegas $646 · 6 nights
BOOK IT BEFORE THE THRILL IS GONE.
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
Room 224 Campus Center
(413) 256.1261
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

GOLD'S GYM
NOW OPEN!
Bring in this coupon and receive:
$100 OFF OR FREE TRIAL
COMPETITION, PLEASE!
THERE'S A REASON WHY WE'RE #1
BEST EQUIPMENT, BEST RESULTS
COME CHECK US OUT!
GOLD'S GYM
10 UNIVERSITY DR.
(413) 549-6565

Busa throws one-hitter in trifecta

SOFTBALL from page 8

Two runs were all the Minutewomen would need in the first game, as Busa took care of the rest. Busa walked four, struck out two, and has now pitched 19-1/3 innings without allowing an earned run.

UMass completed the sweep of the Explorers in game two, routing the Blue and Gold 8-1.

Kelley and Cahalan hit two home runs each in the affair, setting a new school record for most team home runs in a game with four. It was Cahalan's first career multi-homer game, and Kelley's second.

"They did very well, they stepped up in some tough situations," Sortino said. "They waited for the right pitch to come, and [the home runs] was the result."

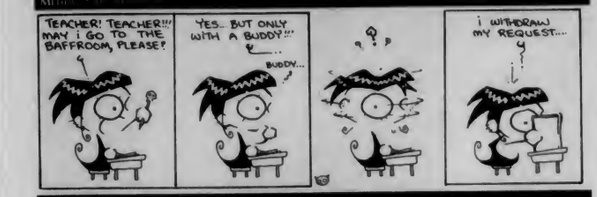
The Minutewomen again got on the board quickly. Kelley led off the game with a monster shot into the wind and over the right-center fence, to make it 1-0.

UMass would not strike again, however, until the top of the fourth, when Cahalan hit her first dinger of the game. It was another solo shot, this time to left, to broaden the lead to two.

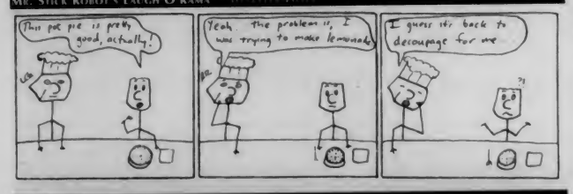
The Explorers cut the led back to one on an unearned run, and threatened to take the lead with runners on the corners and two outs. Arnold was cool as ice, however, easily retiring Amanda Clark to retain the lead.

The Minutewomen then blew the game wide open in the top of the sixth with six runs. Kelley led off the inning with yet another solo shot, this time to left-center.

Cahalan then drove in two runs with a homer to center. Puglisi rounded out the scoring with a two-run triple off the right field fence, before eventually coming home on a wild pitch.

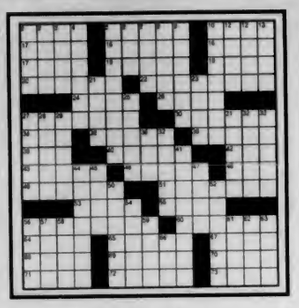


Change your mind this summer:
stay.
• Get the Gen Ed courses you need
• Enjoy smaller class-sizes
• Keep on track for graduation
• Choose from over 200 courses and degree programs
• AND take 6 credits or more and we'll waive the registration fee!
Watch for our money-saving coupon in your mailbox
umass.edu/continued
413-545-2414
UMassAmherst Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind



Fabulous Gift!
CLINIQUE Bonus is here!
With your Clinique purchase of $19.50 get this 7-piece gift, Free. Quantities are limited. Now thru Sun., April 4th
Spring Gift
7-piece Gift
• Deluxe-size Rinse-Off Foaming Cleanser
• Dramatically Different Moisturizing Lotion
• New Repairwear Day SPF 15 Intensive Cream
• Lash Curling Mascara - Black
• Soft-Pressed Powder Blusher Duo w/Brush - Pink Blush/Chestnut Blush
• Long Last Soft Shine Lipstick - All Heart
• Cosmetics Bag
Cedar Chest
ARTFUL FURNISHINGS QUALITY LINENS
Thornes Marketplace - 150 Main St., Northampton, MA - 413-585-0000

Interested in writing for Sports in 2004-05? EMail us at sports@dailycollegian.com, or visit us in the Campus Center Basement.



TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Salty snack
5 Comic-strip Viking
10 Flue
14 Actual
15 Old Greek market
16 Kind of dog
17 Knock out
18 Wynonna's mom
19 Breezy greeting
20 Talked on and on
22 Creamy candies
24 Bottle-cap openers
28 Harness part
27 Minded's kid (rhym.)
30 Leave nearby
34 Bowl over
36 Snowy-white bird
38 Keys in class
39 401(k) cousin
40 Wedding-dress fabric
42 Boise's st.
43 Sharpie or cold sores
44 Grandson of Seth
48 Soothing at all
49 Baseball bio
51 Dental filling
53 Piccadilly attraction
56 Clothier — Strauss
58 Was important
60 Tied securely
64 Medicinal plant
65 Go nowhere
66 Traditional fire
68 Train for boxing
69 Marina birds
70 Imported cheese
71 Coal scuttles
72 Youngsters
73 Ricky Ricardo

DOWN
1 Guns
2 Monsieur, in Berlin
3 Deadlemona s enemy
4 Pumas
5 Bullies
6 Turkish honorific
7 Blunder
8 Knight's attire
9 Dictated
10 Motel sign
11 A Walton daughter
12 Bullfighter
13 Train near Santa Fe
21 Dexterity
23 Eat less
25 Thong
27 Creepy covering
28 Slugger Hank — 29 2 x 5
31 Speaking
33 TV and radio
35 Church reading
36 Bastille Day
37 Kind of wave
41 Unknown
44 Grumbles
46 North-forty unit
47 Volcanic emission
50 Bull s-eyes
52 Said "yes"
54 Happy-go-lucky
59 Cream pudding
61 Mighty Dog rival
62 Warty critter
63 Cold and wet
67 Jekyll's other half
68 Memorable times
69 Prefix for hot
66 Kiki or Joey

3-31-04 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

"Go Hyang" KARAOKE/Singing Rooms
·Individual KARAOKE rooms equipped with TV, KARAOKE machine, speakers, microphone, and sofas.
·Choice of English, Chinese, Japanese, and Korean songs
Business Hours:
Sun.-Thurs.: 6PM to 12 AM
Fri. & Sat.: 3 PM to 2 AM
115 Russell St (Rt 9), Hadley
(Next to Go Hyang Korean Restaurant and oriental grocery)
413-587-7976 or 413-218-4905
We welcome all meetings or birthday parties!

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Pizza Casserole
- Santa Fe Chicken
- Cuban Red Beans (vegan)

DINNER
- Fried Shrimp
- Szechuan Beef & Broccoli
- Madras Tofu Curry (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 55
- Low: 28

TUESDAY
- High: 53
- Low: 35

WEDNESDAY
- High: 50
- Low: 36

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andy Tamulynas
COPY EDITOR
Andy Vogt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Russell Silva/ Diana Mogilevsky

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Spend your weekends watching old romantic comedies.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Don't cut your onions if you're not ready to cry.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Why don't you just call him?

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Speak loudly and don't mumble.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Sometimes the positives are less than the negatives.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Skate across campus, but watch out for the cracked pavement and loose gravel.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Give it a shot, you may actually be successful.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Go see "Hidalgo". Viggo Mortensen is a hottie.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
People get so excited, only to be let down. Just be numb to it all.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
When Scott's glasses come off, you better run.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Did you lose your cat? You better go find it.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You look like a charcoal leopard.

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Constantly talking is not necessarily communicating."

-Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$450 Group Fundraiser
Scheduling Bonus Fraternities /Sororities-Student Groups: 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

4 Bedrooms, Main Street, Available 6/1 256-8138

AUTO FOR SALE

$500!!! Police Impounds, Cars from $500 Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. for listings, 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Internships:
Enterprise Rent-A-Car is the #1 rental car company in North America. Due to our fantastic growth, we have opportunities available this summer in our Management Internship Program for the greater Boston area, including Worcester and Cape Cod. Our ideal candidate will be a rising junior or senior at a 4-year college, and have a professional image. Through hands-on training, our interns learn every aspect of our fast-paced business, and experience the autonomy and challenges similar to that of an entrepreneur. We offer competitive pay and a fun and friendly work environment. For more information and to apply online, please visit our website at www.enterprise.com/careers or call us at (508) 427-1003. Enterprise is an equal opportunity employer.

EMPLOYMENT

ATTENTION LAX PLAYERS Play & Coach – Have fun – Make $$$ Top Boys Sports Camp in Maine looking for staff to instruct & coach LAX. Awesome Summer! Work with kids! Top salaries, FREE rm/bd/trvl allow. Apply online ASAP: www.campcobbosee.com

SUMMER JOBS! Help new students get off to a good start. Peer advisors needed for Summer Orientation. Competitive salary. 20hrs/week Mid-May to mid-July. Applications in Pre-Major Advising 615 Goodell. Deadline April 16

Play sports! Have fun! Save Money! Sports Camp in Maine. Coaches needed: Tennis, Basketball, Baseball, Water-sports, Ropes Course, Golf, Archery, and more. Work Outdoors and Have a Great Summer! Call Free: (888) 844-8080 or Apply: www.campcedar.com

Bartending Trainees Needed $250 a day potential. Local positions 1-800-293-1985 Ext 516

Local Business is hiring marketers Part Time $10-15/hr Call Alison @413-627-9043

EMPLOYMENT

Life Guards and Swim Instructors The Town of Amherst seeks qualified lifeguards and swim instructors. Lifeguards must hold current certifications including: Life Guard Training First Aid, and CPR. 58 16-9 48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week. Applications available from Amherst Leisure Services, Bangs Community Center, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

Two job opportunities on Nantucket Island beginning in May. Office assistants with decent typing, computer and telephone skills. Some errand running. Salary + housing. Tele. 508-228-3942 or send resume to PO Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 or fax resume to 508-228-8778

SUMMER INTERNSHIP Excellent Advertising, Sales, and Marketing opportunity. Earn $3000 to $7000+ and gain valuable business experience working for the UMass Official Campus Telephone Directory. GREAT RESUME BOOSTER! Call Kiersten at Around Campus, Inc. 1-800-466-2221 ext.272. www.aroundcampus.com

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors-Town of Amherst Day Camps The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, exp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. Old; $ range for both positions: $8.19 - 9.48 hr, 35-40 hrs per week. June 21 to Aug. 20. Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept., Boltwood Walk, Amherst. (413) 256-4065 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer

Get hands-on legal experience with a legal assistant internship this fall. Work directly with attorneys and clients and earn 9 to 15 credits. No experience required. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office for an application, due 4/2. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

FOR RENT

Moving off campus? Meet area rental agents at apartment complex fair. Thurs April 1 10-3 on the CC Concourse. Sponsored by Commuter Services www.cshr.org

FOR SALE

Like New 4 Eslee, crome rims 18" 5 Lug nuts, 4 Ventus HR11, Low Pro tires- Asking $1100 Tom 413-527-2886

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes start soon!!! Call for information 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female roommate, 1 large bedroom, very quiet, very clean, on bus route. 1 1/2 miles from UMass, in Amherst $430 a month including heat, hot water, and Cable tv, available April 1st Call (413) 687-3333

SERVICES

Resumes and Cover Letters Professional and Customized offering to market your skills. Affordable prices, timely service. By email, phone, or in person Call 413-467-7440

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst. Philosophy@alcyone.net

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9892

SUMMER SUBLET

1 bedroom Brandywine apartment starting June 1 or sooner. $755/month negotiable - includes HT/WT, 549-9489

ROOMMATE WANTED

SUMMER SUBLET

Looking for 1 bedroom apt. for summer, around $600 per month. hlazyk@student.umass.edu

TRAVEL

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe $169 one way. Book on-line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

Spring Break 2004. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

887-4 CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipvacation.com 877-4-cancun.

To place your own ad visit us in the Campus Center Basement or call (413) 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 29, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen swallow Pride

Three-goal 3rd dooms Hofstra

By ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

What a difference a week can make.

Eight days after its ugliest loss of the 2004 season, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team submitted one of its finest performances of the year, beating the visiting Hofstra Pride 6-3 at Garber Field yesterday.

The Minutemen never trailed in the game, and senior attackman Neil Lundburg scored the game-winner, opening up the second half with a working-man's goal. The 6-foot-4 attacker from Michigan worked his way toward Hofstra goaltender Matthew Southard's net, with a defender holding him off. Lundburg fired a shot over the defender's head, and beat Southard low to give the Minutemen a 4-2 lead four minutes into the third quarter.

Hofstra	3
UMass	6

From there, UMass shut the Pride down, and goaltender Bill Schell didn't allow a single Hofstra goal in the fourth quarter, to bring the Minutemen (4-4) back to .500. The No. 13 Pride falls to 2-5.

The victory is the second straight convincing win for the Minutemen, who beat Sacred Heart 12-4 on Tuesday, and it helps to put a positive note on the first half of UMass' season after a dismal three-game slide.

"This is huge, playing Hofstra, a ranked team," said UMass goalie Bill Schell, who made 13 saves in the game. "We just came out hard, and we were doing the right things, not making mistakes in the field."

Schell made a number of big saves to stifle the Hofstra attack, including four in the fourth quarter to shut the Pride out.

"It's huge, anytime you have a scheme in a game where you're trying to defend a team like Hofstra, with some pretty big guns, you know you're going to give up shots," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "To have Billy have a good day, that just gives us more confidence."

Lundburg's tally was part of a three-goal outburst by the Minutemen in the third quarter. Junior Gene Tundo had an apparent goal just 10 seconds after Lundburg's, but it was waved off when Tundo

See MEN'S LAX on page 6

AMELIA LINDENDOLL/COLLEGIAN

Senior Neil Lundburg scored the eventual game-winning goal, his second this year, just four minutes into the third quarter. The Minutemen allowed one goal in the third period, and shut out Hofstra in the fourth quarter, to even their record at 4-4. They will visit Penn State on Saturday.

Softball earns trifecta

By BRENDAN HALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team (12-11, 2-0 Atlantic 10) was hitting on all cylinders over the weekend, downing Vermont (3-13) Friday and sweeping a doubleheader at LaSalle (4-16, 0-2 A-10).

In Friday's home-opener, the Minutewomen received stellar individual performances from all aspects of the game en route to a 6-0 downing of the Catamounts. Kelli Arnold (4-5) threw a four-hit shutout in the win.

"I thought we got a good game out of Kelli," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "I'm okay with it. I'd like to have seen a few less hits on the board, but it was good enough to get the job done."

The Maroon and White took advantage of the weak Catamount defense right from the get-go, when Amanda Morin reached second base on an overthrow. Morin stole third before being brought home by a Hilary Puglia sacrifice fly for UMass's first run on the day. Puglia also recorded all three outs in the top of the first.

The second inning featured more of the same. Denise Denis started UMass off with a single. She was then brought home by an RBI triple from KC Budrewicz, who slid home just one batter later when Kristi Stefanoni hit a sacrifice fly to centerfield.

Candice Molinari stole home after Michea Holness was thrown out at first, to make it 4-0.

Kara Massey (2-7) was pulled after the inning, having given up four runs on two hits. Replacement Sara Burke would never find her stride, giving up two more runs on five hits.

The bleeding started almost immediately for Burke when Aisha Franke reached first on an overthrow, and stole second before being brought home by an Amanda Morin triple. Franke made it 6-0 in the bottom of the fifth inning, hitting an RBI single up the middle to bring Stefanoni home from second.

While the Minutewoman offense scored almost as many runs (six) as it did hits (seven), it was the defense that really shined against the Catamounts.

"I think our defense has been pretty solid this whole young part of the season," Sortino said. "I think we've got a lot of depth this year, and we have some kids that can really play the ball well."

ANDY TAMULYNAS/COLLEGIAN

Senior Aisha Franke had six hits, two runs, and one run batted in this weekend. The Minutewomen won all three games, bolstered by strong pitching from sophomore Jenna Busa.

The Minutewomen opened their A-10 season Saturday in Philadelphia by sweeping the doubleheader with LaSalle, 2-0 and 8-1.

In the first game, Jenna Busa pitched a one-hitter after coming just one bloop into center from marking her second straight no-hitter.

"Jenna's really coming into her own," Sortino said. "She's coming along on what could be a very brilliant career. She's very young ... every day that she gets out there, just gets better and better."

The Minutewomen scored their only runs in game one on two unearned runs in the top of the first. Molinari led off the game with a single, and then stole second. Katie Jo Kelley's single moved her to third, and Molinari finally came home when Pam Sulick reached first on an error. Michea Holness, who pinch ran for Kelley, followed Molinari home on Jamie Cahalan's fielder's choice.

See SOFTBALL on page 6

Yankee Cup cancelled due to high winds in Kingston

By MATT BARSTOW
COLLEGIAN STAFF

High winds and stormy weather throughout Rhode Island on Saturday were to blame for the cancellation of the Yankee Cup, a rowing competition that was supposed to feature the Massachusetts women's crew team in its season opener.

The Yankee Cup was slated to be the first stop for the UMass crew team on its quest to defend the Atlantic 10 title, which it has owned for eight consecutive seasons. Connecticut, New Hampshire and Rhode Island were among the New England state schools invited to the Yankee Cup.

After capturing victories at the A-10 and ECAC championships, UMass finished last season ranked 23rd in the country. Over the summer, the team competed in the prestigious Henley Women's Regatta in England, and captured a gold medal on the final day of rowing against the University of Ireland. UMass was invited to the Regatta because of an impressive 2003 record, and raised enough money to send its winning first and second varsity eight boats to the competition.

During the fall, Massachusetts took part in the Head of the Charles, an annual race that features over fifty boats filled with rowers on collegiate, Olympic, and national teams. UMass placed 19th overall in the Open Division, its best finish ever.

With five rowers from last year's first varsity eight returning, the Maroon and White were favorites to win the Yankee Cup. Eager to start the season is a group of veteran rowers predicted by coach Jim Dietz to be the most successful in the program's nine-year history.

No make-up date has been scheduled for the Yankee Cup. The Minutewomen will hit the water for the first time on Sunday, April 4, when they travel to Pelham, N.Y. for a tri-meet against Columbia and Holy Cross.

UNH edges UMass

By MATT BARSTOW
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In heartbreaking fashion, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team fell to New Hampshire on its home turf Saturday 12-11, in double overtime.

Sixteen seconds into sudden death, Lauren Dosdall of UNH was awarded a free position shot, upon which she sprinted towards the net and fired home the game winner past Massachusetts goaltender Joey Rubin.

The loss drops Massachusetts to 1-5 on the season while improving UNH to 5-4. Despite its record, the four UMass losses have come by a total of eight goals, and as a team the Maroon and White is only minus-five on the season.

UNH	12
UMass	11

UMass entered the first overtime period locked in an 11-11 tie, after Jess Burnap of UNH scored her fifth goal of the game, 3:47 into OT. Since the first overtime period is not sudden death, Massachusetts was given a chance to answer.

After midfielder Jackie Nesbitt rang a shot off the crossbar near the two minute-mark, UMass didn't find another scoring opportunity until tri-captain Tracey Drown found herself face-to-face with Wildcat goalie Stacy Plati. Drown took advantage of the opportunity by tucking a shot under the crossbar for her fourth goal of the game.

On the ensuing draw, UNH retained possession and set up Katie Leland with a golden opportunity coming off a doge to the left of Rubin. Leland chose to go five-hole, but Rubin was ready and smothered the shot to force sudden death.

"It's tough, we're our four starters due to injury," UMass coach Carrie Bolduc said. "I told [the team] before the first overtime that if we made smart decisions and didn't give up then we would win."

UMass got off on the right foot, when Brianna Bubeck netted her first of three goals (1:43) to start the game. The lead was short-lived however, as UNH

See WOMEN'S LAX on page 6

STAFF PHOTO

Junior Maura McGarrity is third on the Minutewoman scoring list with seven goals, but only managed one shot in UMass' loss to UNH.

Sweet Honey in the Rock brings the Civil Rights Movement back
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

UMass softball set to play Blue Devils
SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 108

Mass. takes step to ban same-sex marriage

By JENNIFER PETER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Legislature took the first decisive step toward banning gay marriage and legalizing civil unions yesterday, giving final approval for the year to an constitutional amendment that would strip same-sex couples of court-mandated marriage rights.

Within moments of the historic vote, Governor Mitt Romney told reporters he would ask the state's highest court to block gay marriages, now scheduled to begin May 17 under the court's landmark November ruling, until the amendment process has run its lengthy course. But Attorney General Tom Reilly, whose job it is to represent the state in court, said he would not seek the delay on Romney's behalf.

The final version of the amendment, approved 105-92 yesterday afternoon, must be affirmed again during the 2005-06 legislative session before going to the voters in the fall of 2006 — two and half years after the court-ordered legalization of gay marriages in Massachusetts.

"I believe the Supreme Judicial Court has an obligation to the constitution and the people of Massachusetts to withhold this decision, to stay this decision until the people of Massachusetts can make a final determination for themselves," Romney said.

But Reilly said he would not interfere with the court's ruling.

"It was very clear to me as attorney general that the majority of the Supreme Judicial Court have made up their minds," he said. "Do I agree with their decision? No. Absolutely not. But that is the law of the state."

If the measure is ultimately approved by voters, Massachusetts would become just the second state — after Vermont — to legalize civil unions. But that was little consolation for gay-rights advocates who had been awarded full marriage rights by the high court only to see lawmakers seek to water it down.

"I believe many of them are going to feel very ashamed of what they've just done today," said Arline Isaacson, co-leader of the Massachusetts Gay and Lesbian Political Caucus.

Conservatives also weren't quick to embrace the compromise, calling it blackmail to force citizens to approve civil unions as part of a marriage ban.

Baby safe havens

State senate faces 'hotly contested issue'

By S.J. PORT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Texas Baby Moses law was the first of its kind in 1999 when then Governor George W. Bush signed the bill into law.

PART ONE OF TWO-PART SERIES

The bill, according to the Baby Moses project Web site, was meant to discourage mothers from leaving their unwanted babies to die.

First proposed by pediatrician John Richardson of Fort Worth, Texas, the law allows parents to give up their unharmed baby to designated emergency infant care providers (mostly hospitals) without being questioned. Since 1999, 45 more states have followed suit by enacting similar state-level bills, also known as baby safe haven laws.

As of today, only five states, and the District of Columbia, have not passed or enacted baby safe haven laws. Those five states are Nebraska, Hawaii, Vermont, Alaska and our Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Despite an ongoing push for and debate of baby safe haven

See SAFE HAVEN on page 2

Five states (three percent of the U.S. population) remain without baby safe haven laws in place.

Hawaii, Alaska, Nebraska, District of Columbia, Massachusetts and Vermont

ANDREW TAMULYNAS/COLLEGIAN

Russell Plato, secretary of diversity of affairs and organizer of the roundtable, listens in at the SGA's diversity roudtable yesterday afternoon.

Improvements in community focus at diversity roundtable

By MICHELLE RIVERA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Members of the University of Massachusetts community and the Community Diversity and Social Justice Team gathered yesterday afternoon during the Student Government Association's diversity roundtable to highlight key points and initiatives of the team's role on campus.

Mike Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life, was in attendance at the meeting, as well as representatives from the Student Activities Center, Hillel House and University Health Services, among others.

Grant M. Ingle, director of the Office of Human Relations, led a power-point presentation, outlining a new approach to community issues of diversity and social justice.

Conservatives also weren't quick to embrace the compromise, calling it blackmail to force citizens to approve civil unions as part of a marriage ban.

"The CDSJ initiative is to improve the quality of the UMass learning community," said Ingle.

The CDSJ team plans to make their changes by using what is called a systemic change.

Ingle said the systemic change is information driven, result-oriented and locally instigated and responsible. It will be focused on policies, practices, climate and culture and will be championed by leadership.

The CDSJ Team is branched into five executive areas to facilitate the CDSJ effort: academic affairs, student affairs, administration and finance, University advancement and the chancellor's area.

The CDSJ Team provides coordination, planning and support.

"Most of the action is taking place within the five executive areas," said Ingle.

Students have been involved by becoming members of the CDSJ Team in the past, but the challenge of the CDSJ Team now is how to collaborate with the SGA to coordinate the appointment of student team members.

The presentation was further continued with a showing of surveys, graphs and charts taken by UMass employees and UMass undergraduate students.

At one point of the presentation, a general informational graph was shown that randomly

See ROUNDTABLE on page 2

ANDREW TAMULYNAS/COLLEGIAN

Grant M. Ingle, director of the Office of Human Relations, delivers a power-point presentation on the CDSJ Team's plans.

Forum on reproductive rights today

By CASEY NOVAK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Everywoman's Center presents the forum "Reproductive Rights: What You Need To Know" today from 4 to 6 p.m. in room 917 of the Campus Center.

There will be a panel presentation addressing current challenges to women's reproductive rights, in addition to the latest information about the March for Women's Lives, which is being held on April 25 in Washington, D.C.

"[The forum] is called 'Reproductive Rights: What You Need To Know' because it is coming down to a real crucial time if women want to defend their rights," said Sandy Mandel, associate director for special events at the Everywoman's Center.

Specific issues on emergency contraception, as well as U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft's subpoenaing of women's medical records will be discussed by panelist at the forum.

The Food and Drug Administration recently considered the allowance of emergency contraception to be sold over the counter; however, letters from conservative members of congress forced the FDA to go back and review the proposal. Furthermore, the Virginia Legislature is considering a bill that would take emergency contraception out of health clinics at public universities.

Ashcroft launched an aggressive campaign against the right to choose and doctors who perform abortions when he recently subpoenaed hundreds of women's confidential medical records from at least six hospitals in major cities.

Mandel said although most students are aware of the current erosion of women's reproductive rights, the information isn't offered in main stream media or on the front page of newspapers often enough, even though it is historically significant.

"The panel is going to be both policy, availability of services, and information for women who are interested in knowing opportunities for activism," Mandel said.

Panelists include: Marlene Fried, director of the Civil Liberties and Public Policy program, professor of philosophy at Hampshire College and founding president of the National Network of Abortion's Funds; Emily Mentin, an organizer for the March for Women's Lives; Amanda Collings, director of the Women's Health Project at University Health Services and Health Education; and Christine Rutkoski and Julia Becker from VOX: Students for Choice, a UMass pro-choice organization.

Expert to lecture on health issues and weight management today

Dr. Deborah Riebe from the University of Rhode Island addresses "Healthy-Lifestyle Approach to Weight Management" today at 4 p.m. in the University of Massachusetts Amherst Campus Center, room 1001.

Dr. Riebe has conducted research on the role of exercise in disease prevention, as well as methods of weight control.

Learning about effective ways to manage one's weight is important because obesity is a major crisis in the United States, said Dr. Priscilla M. Clarkson, UMass professor of exercise science and associate dean for the school of public health and health sciences, or SPHHS.

"There's no doubt that people in the U.S. are getting larger," Clarkson said. "We are becoming a nation of super-sized people."

Obesity is associated with health problems, such as cardiovascular disease and diabetes, said Clarkson. She said children growing up in an increasingly sedentary world, where drive-thru windows are ubiquitous and it is common to spend hours basking in the glow of the television screen or computer monitor, may not live as long as their grandparents do.

"Predictions are being made that this new generation of overweight kids will likely have a shorter life span compared to previous generations because of the health risks of obesity," said Clarkson. "We are looking to researchers like Dr. Riebe to help solve our country's battle against obesity."

Preceding Dr. Riebe's lecture, UMass graduate students will present their research in the fields of health and the health sciences at the SPHHS seventh Annual Poster Session at 1 p.m. in Campus Center room 1001. Topics include research on diabetes, exercise, nutrition and pregnancy.

SPHHS and the Rho Chapter of the Delta Omega Honorary Public Health Society are co-sponsoring the SPHHS Poster Session and Dr. Riebe's talk.

—Michelle Dozois

Berson to speak on human eye research

By GABRIEL LEHNER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Dr. David Berson, from the department of neuroscience at Brown University, presents the lecture "Strange Vision: What the Eye Tells the Brain's Clock," tomorrow at 4 p.m. in Morrill Science Center, room 319.

In his presentation, Dr. Berson will describe his recent research on how the human eye and brain respond to light and how the eye signals information to the brain. He'll include details about a recently discovered type of cell in the retina that is sensitive to light stimulation. Called "photosensitive ganglion cells," these newly discovered cells, when stimulated, produce a light-sensitive protein called "Melanopsin."

These ganglion cells play a key role in resetting the biological clock, and may provide new biomedical therapies related to the retina and visual system.

Within the retina of the eye, Melanopsin ganglion cells make connections with the region of the brain that controls circadian rhythms, which are biological events that repeat themselves at regular intervals, such as the sleep-

See STRANGE VISION on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Feundao
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Stroub
CAMPUS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reisl
FEATURES EDITOR S. J. Port
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Sulsiker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merrett
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Puppas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagetic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCES Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATING Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS JaeJun Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kiggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORS Paige Crum
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morra Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilie Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC YEAR. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED THROUGH ON ADVERTISING AND PAID SUBSCRIPTIONS. FOUNDED IN 1890 THE PAPER BEGAN AS ACORN LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGIAN MONTHLY IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN RECOGNIZED SINCE 1990 FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

Roundtable discusses diversity displayed the levels of sexual harassment by faculty and staff from 1983 to 1989. The graph had shown that sexual harassment was reduced by nearly 50 percent in 1989.

ROUNDTABLE from page 1

"This is about how you can change climate on a campus," said Ingle. "There are also racial issues and violence out there. If we can lower it with some of them, we can do it with others."

In April 2003, the CDSJ Student Life Survey was conducted to examine 765 undergraduate student experiences at UMass.

The survey consisted of student opinions on racial issues, employment satisfaction, opportunities and diversity in the classroom.

The results helped and will continue to help facilitate the CDSJ Team to better enhance the campus community and climate as a whole.

"I think it's critical that we recognize areas of strength in our community, and that we apply the lessons that have been learned in the past to the challenges we face as a university today," said Russell P. Plato, secretary of diversity affairs.

Debate over safe haven bill continues in Massachusetts laws in Massachusetts since 1999, the legislature has yet to approve any such bill. Recently, however, the newest Massachusetts baby safe haven bill, House 4325, was approved by the House of Representatives and sent to the Senate.

SAFE HAVEN from page 1

Lobbyists pushed hard in 2002 for the first Massachusetts baby safe haven bill following several state cases of deceased abandoned newborns.

Among these tragic cases, Jennifer Paluseo's is the one case that stands out for the University of Massachusetts community. The discovery of Paluseo's deceased infant son in her dormitory's trash room on May 2, 2002 sent shivers through the community and across the state to her hometown of Plymouth. Paluseo recently pled guilty to manslaughter and removing a dead body and will face sentencing tomorrow in Greenfield Superior Court. Legislators promoting baby safe havens have used Paluseo's case as an example of the type of incident they believe the laws could help to prevent.

The new baby safe haven bill, reported by the House committee Human Services and Elderly Affairs on Nov. 17, 2003, H4325, was finally approved 137 to 21 by the House on March 11, 2004 — following delays, amendments and second and third readings. The bill is an amended version of the 2002 House bill, which never gained Senate approval. For bill H4325 to become law, it must now be approved by the Senate and then be signed by Governor Mitt Romney.

> "You cannot deny that we will, at some point in time because of this law, save lives. We don't want to see any child die. We have babies having babies, and they're not thinking in a rational way."
>
> - STATE REPRESENTATIVE STEPHEN P. LEDUC

Following approval on March 11 by the House, H4325 was referred to the committee on Senate Ways and Means. Even if approved by the Senate, the bill includes a provision that would automatically repeal the law on Jan. 1, 2006 (at the end of the current legislative session) unless the Legislature as a whole votes to continue it.

Dan O'Sullivan, general council for the Senate Ways and Means committee, said the Senate's "analysis of the issue is not yet complete," adding that baby safe havens have been a "hotly contested issue" in the Legislature. O'Sullivan said if the Ways and Means committee reports favorably on the bill, it will then be sent for discussion to the Senate body. O'Sullivan was unsure if the last baby safe haven bill had even been reported to the Senate for a vote because of an unfavorable report by the Ways and Means committee.

"The session ends on July 31, so it has to be done by then," said O'Sullivan, when asked approximately when the Senate decides on the bill. "There has been a lot of research done on it by the Senate Council's Office."

While H4325 sits awaiting further discussion and report by the Senate Ways and Means committee, communities in the Commonwealth beginning with the city of Boston in March 2003, have begun filing a petition with the state to request home rule on baby safe haven issues. Westfield, Ludlow, Framingham, Natick, Lexington and Fall River are just a few of the 22 communities who passed baby safe haven home rule petitions in town meetings during the 2003 year. The state has yet to rule on whether to grant these communities the right to decide on baby safe haven laws for themselves. Until the state approves either community home rule of baby safe havens or passes a uniform statewide law, it remains illegal to abandon children anywhere in Massachusetts.

State Representative Stephen P. LeDuc (D-Marlboro) told Metro-West Daily News that he supports a uniform statewide law saying it is preferred over ordinances in some communities but not others. LeDuc added that he believes the new baby safe haven bill, now in the hands of the Senate, includes changes from the last bill that should allow the bill to pass through the Senate.

"You cannot deny that we will, at some point in time because of this law, save lives," LeDuc told Metro-West Daily on March 12. "We don't want to see any child die. We have babies having babies, and they're not thinking in a rational way."

The Department of Family and Protective Services in Texas reports that between 2000 and 2003, 182 infants were illegally abandoned but found alive while only 15 have been legally surrendered in Texas under the Baby Moses law, according to the Associated Press. Though the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services has no official count they say that babies continue to be found abandoned and deceased.

Under the Baby Moses law, parents are not required to give their name or any information when they hand over the infants. However, the Texas Department of Family and Protective Services has been criticized, according to the Associated Press, for seeking out the infant's parents or family to garner this information, and, if possible, place the child with someone in the family.

The pending bill, H4325, is modeled after New York's law, according to Baby Saving Times, an online newswire which tracks baby safe haven legislation. New York has had the most success with baby safe haven law. Since the bill was enacted by New York, 29 babies have been legally surrendered, almost twice as many as within the state of Texas. Baby Saving Times has specific reports of 183 babies that have been surrendered in just 19 of the states since 1999.

The majority of baby safe haven laws enacted require the infant to be surrendered unharmed and within the first 30 days of life. The Massachusetts version currently in question would only allow parents to leave the infant at a hospital, police station, or 24-hour fire station within seven days of the child's birth. Parents, unless the child shows signs of physical abuse, would not be required to identify themselves and could not be charged with a crime of abandonment. If passed into law, the state Department of Social Services would be responsible for custody of the abandoned children. However, parents who surrender their infants would not automatically be giving up their parental rights. The Commonwealth would have to obtain a court order to terminate those parental rights.

Those who oppose the bill, like State Representative Kay Khan (D-Newton) believe the bill will lead to an increase in child abandonment cases.

"This 'don't ask' approach has unintended consequences," Khan told Metro-West Daily. "It implies that deserting a child is socially and legally sanctioned behavior."

Around the nation

CALIFORNIA

Kerry and Cheney spar

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — John Kerry lashed out at Vice President Dick Cheney yesterday, accusing Cheney of distorting his Senate record on taxes as the Democrat sought to shift the debate to President Bush's stewardship of the economy and spiking gas prices.

With gas averaging a record high of $1.80 per gallon, Kerry was calling for the government to stop pumping oil into the Strategic Petroleum Reserve until prices return to normal levels. The White House has said there would be no halt to filling the government stockpile.

"This administration has one economic policy for America — 3 million jobs lost and driving gas prices towards $3 a gallon," the presumptive Democratic nominee told students at a job training center in Sacramento.

Hours after Cheney called him "one of the most reliable pro-tax votes in the Senate," Kerry delivered a sharp rebuke, faulting the Bush administration for waging a campaign of "half-truths."

—Associated Press

RHODE ISLAND

Trial set for nightclub

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A federal judge ruled yesterday that civil suits stemming from a nightclub fire that killed 100 people will be heard in federal court, relying on a relatively new, untested federal law.

U.S. District Judge Ronald Lagueux resolved the jurisdiction issue, which has been holding up the lawsuits, but extended a stay in the cases until Sept. 1 to allow others time to file their claims.

Lagueux said the court will exercise jurisdiction under a federal law that gives the federal court system authority in cases involving an accident in which at least 75 people died and a defendant resides in a different state than where the accident occurred.

His decision also indicated the court intends to consolidate all nightclub fire lawsuits for the discovery phase of the trial, in which lawyers for both sides exchange information. One lawyer involved in the litigation said because of the complexity of the cases, they are unlikely to remain consolidated for trial.

At least four suits have already been filed in the courts in Rhode Island, and others were filed out-of-state and transferred here. All have been on hold while Lagueux considered the issue of jurisdiction. More suits are expected.

—Associated Press

FLORIDA

New study on cancer

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Getting modest amounts of exercise, even just an easy half-hour walk a day, appears to substantially improve women's chances of surviving breast cancer.

Staying active has long been thought to lower the risk of getting cancer, but a new report says it may also be an important prescription for recovery.

The study, released yesterday, found that women who exercised after breast cancer reduced their chance of dying from the disease by one-quarter to one-half, depending on how active they were.

"We know that physical activity has been shown to improve the quality of life for women with breast cancer," said Dr. Michelle Holmes of Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. "We conclude it may also help them live longer as well as better."

Just how exercise might do this is still unclear, though experts have several theories. Whatever the biological explanation, the researchers say moderate exercise is an undeniably safe recommendation that can improve cancer survivors' health in many ways.

Holmes presented her findings yesterday at a meeting of the American Association for Cancer Research, a gathering of 13,500 researchers in Orlando.

—Associated Press

Lecture on Wednesday

STRANGE VISION from page 1

wake cycle. They also connect with several other brain regions that control functions related to the amount of light present in the environment, such as the constriction or dilation of the pupil depending on lightness or darkness.

Because Melanopsin ganglion cells appear to have a direct connection to synchronization mechanisms that enable humans to overcome the effects of time shifts, further research of Melanopsin ganglion cells and their function may yield a better understanding of the negative consequences of working different time shifts and therapies for light-related mood disorders such as seasonal affective disorder or physical disorders like jet lag.

Dr. Berson's current research concerns the structural and functional organization of retinal ganglion cells, which exhibit a broad range of responses to light stimuli, as well as specifying the total number of ganglion cell types that exist, the distinguishing characteristics of each type, and the intra-retinal mechanisms that shape their stimulus selectivity.

In past research Dr. Berson has been able to conclude that each ganglion cell type appears to send information to a corresponding set of central visual nuclei, which suggests that the ganglion cell has evolved to provide each visual center in the brain with preprocessed representations of the visual scene targeted at a specific biological counterpart.

In his research, Dr. Berson used retrograde labeling of retinal ganglion cells, a method that labels cell bodies that give rise to the released chemicals that coordinate with cells in a particular region. Dr. Berson also used an extra-cellular recording of ganglion cells and whole-cell patch clamp recording of ganglion cells in isolated retinas, which are both ways to track nerve activity in a living organism.

Dr. Berson is a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the Society for Neuroscience, has served as the director of the Neuroscience Graduate Program at Brown University, and has been published most recently in the Journal of Comparative Neurology and Trends in Neuroscience. He received his doctorate degree in Neuroscience at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

LAUNCH YOUR CAREER
UMass
Apply now for a
Legal Assistant Internship
at the Student Legal Services Office
*Serve the campus community while enhancing your resume
*Earn up to 15 credits working 36 hours a week
or 6 to 9 credits working 26 hours a week
Student Legal Services Office
922 Campus Center
(413) 545-1995

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✓ Taught by Working Bartenders
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
Credit Cards Accepted
SPECIAL OFFER Only $199 Before April 2nd
Learn to bartend in a weekend!
Call now! Space is limited!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

GOLD'S GYM.
NOW OPEN!
Bring in this coupon and receive:
$100 OFF OR FREE TRIAL
COMPETITION, PLEASE!
THERE'S A REASON WHY WE'RE #1
BEST EQUIPMENT, BEST RESULTS
COME CHECK US OUT!
GOLD'S GYM.
10 UNIVERSITY DR.
(413) 549-6565

NEW ON TUESDAY!
BROTHER BEAR
HOUSE OF SAND & FOG
SOMETHING'S GOTTA GIVE
TEXAS CHAINSAW MASSACRE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NASA advances offer glimpse of the future

Did you hear it?

On Saturday a jet engine flew faster than seven times the speed of sound in a test over the Pacific on Saturday. The remarkable jet is being called a milestone in developing the "Holy Grail" of space travel, said NASA scientists.

The 12-foot-long X-43A research vehicle that resembled a winged surfboard, went over 5,000 mph for 11 seconds and then plunged into the ocean.

This represents yet another astonishing development in science and in the aeronautics field. Conducted in California, the test marked the first time a "scramjet," or supersonic-combustion ramjet, has powered a vehicle at such a high speed.

Scientists say this technological advancement is necessary to enter space in the most efficient way possible. Scramjet engines carry only hydrogen fuel and pull the oxygen needed to burn that fuel from the atmosphere. Conventional rocket engines carry both the fuel and oxygen for acceleration.

The new technology should alleviate many problems that have faced NASA in the past. The faster aircraft can also be developed much faster than the old models. In addition, the cost of launching payloads will be significantly reduced.

The jet set a world speed record for a craft powered by an air-breathing engine.

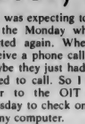
As Lawrence Huebner, lead propulsion engineer, pointed out, referring to the Wright brothers, "a little over 100 years ago a couple of guys from Ohio flew for 120 feet in the first controlled powered flight." We've come a long way since.

The new technology will enable astronauts to get to space and come back to Earth — several times a month.

Also, the advantages that this technology can bring to the military are vast. The propulsion system can be used to quickly get an aircraft to a designated point in a short amount of time.

But despite making such a big advancement in the field, the explosion of the Columbia space shuttle last year serves a chilling reminder about being scrupulously careful about the limitations NASA has.

The first test of the X-43A in June 2001 failed. An error in the booster rocket attached to the test vehicle forced NASA scientists to blow up the plane.



Scientific advancements are always welcome, especially when we can learn more about our origins and our surroundings. The Mars Rover, for instance, is one of the most impressive, if under-appreciated, event of the new millennium that can offer us both a look into the past and can hold the key to our future.

NASA has done good work in the past, and this latest example of a jet reaching a whopping speed of 5,000 mph shows a promise of continued success. NASA researchers hope to test the engine at Mach 10, or about 7,000 mph, as part of their Hyper-X program later this year.

Information from Reuters was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

My computer, the hostage

Molly Eggleston

College students are dependant on their computers — at least I am. I have papers to type, OWLs and WebCT work to complete, e-mails to check, research to do and online notes and syllabuses to refer to. And that's just for my actual classes.

I am an Instant Message addict. I use my computer as a stereo, a DVD player and as my main form of communication with my friends down the hall, my parents, and my friends abroad in Australia.

To my horror, the Tuesday before Spring Break, my computer had a melt down. It froze up and wouldn't let me reboot it. After trying repeatedly to fix the problem myself, I admitted defeat and lugged my laptop across campus to the Office of Information Technologies.

What a mistake.

I had been warned the OIT staff wasn't very helpful — that they were incompetent and didn't care what was wrong and just repeatedly gave a machine-like answer of "update your virus scan." I ignored the warning, and naively put my most prized possession into the hands of an apparent idiot.

Like any scared mother, I worried all over break about my computer and awaited the call from OIT to tell me that they had started on my computer. They told me it would take a week to fix, so I checked my voicemail as soon as I got back from Spring Break. The call hadn't come.

I had dropped it off the Thursday before Spring Break, so I was expecting to pick it up on the Monday when classes started again. When I didn't receive a phone call, I thought maybe they just hadn't remembered to call. So I headed on over to the OIT office on Tuesday to check on the status of my computer.

I filled out my little slip, rang the bell and handed my slip to the woman behind the desk. She took it back behind the wall and came back out with one of the "technicians."

After trying repeatedly to fix the problem myself, I admitted defeat and lugged my laptop across campus to the Office of Information Technologies. What a mistake.

He looked up my name and told me they couldn't find my computer. I, of course, got very upset. He then explained that one of the full-time staffers must have taken it to work and that I shouldn't worry. He then told me I would receive a call when it was done. I should have taken the missing computer as a warning.

A week later and I still hadn't received a call. Spending Spring Break without my computer wasn't so bad. While home, I had full access to my parent's machine, and being without mine was a mere inconvenience. Being on campus without my computer is an entirely different story.

I am out of touch with my friends because I can't go online. I have to ask my neighbors and friends to use their computers to check my e-mail or do online assignments. I have become a regular at the computer lab in the library where I have to go to type and print my assignments for class. Being dependant on the campus computer labs prevents me from being able to get my work done when I want to. It's great that computer labs are available to students, but they don't replace the convenience of having your own computer in your room.

I had three papers to write yesterday, but only time to write one while the labs were open. I had to skip one class to finish a paper for another. I finally lost patience and headed back to OIT. After waiting in line and explaining my problem to the staff, my computer and I were reunited. It was a bittersweet reunion for me. Although I finally had my computer back in my possession, I still couldn't use it. After a long two and a half weeks, the "technicians" at OIT hadn't even looked at it yet.

The story I got from them was that someone forgot to register it properly and that essentially they didn't even know it was there until I came in and asked for it back. My computer was held hostage for two and a half weeks because of the complete and utter incompetence of the OIT staff.

Molly Eggleston is a Collegian columnist.

The dizzying bookshelf

Yousef Munayyer

It's been said you can learn much about a person by looking at their bookshelf. This is true to an extent, assuming of course the person actually reads those books. Supposing they do, you can learn what a person has interests in, what they have learned, and get a general idea of what they are reading.

When I visit bookstores, and I tend to focus more on metropolitan/or non-college area bookstores, I like to take a look at what books are on display. This is in a sense America's bookshelf. So upon venturing into one of these Borders and Books or Barnes and Noble stores, I walk directly past the ever-present Starbucks directly to the "current affairs" or "politics" section. My hope is to get an idea of what America is reading when it comes to these issues, who America is listening too. Of course not all Americans shop at these book stores. Some may choose not to read; some may just not have the time; or some may read other sources. Still, many Americans make these bookstores into the giant prosperous corporations that they are today.

> America's bookshelf has deteriorated into a zoo of nothing but donkeys and elephants.

In the store, there are always some books set right in front, placed purposely to catch your eye. These are marketed in a certain way to get the readers attention; many times, these can be best sellers, anticipated best sellers, or books on popular issues. Over the past few years since I have been monitoring America's book shelf, particularly since Sept. 11, but also before that, I have noticed a disturbing common denominator. Almost none of these books were academic. By this, I mean many of the books on America's shelf are merely authored by pundits blaming the other side for everything wrong that has happened since the beginning of time.

When I first noticed this, I began to pay closer attention. I studied the authors, their education and read what the books were about. Shamefully, I must admit I've bought and read these never-to-be-classics. Yes, Sean Hannity has a cozy spot on my bookcase. Sure, he is on the lowest shelf, but he is there.

You may witness such brilliant titles such as "Blinded by the Right," "Why the Left Hates America." Blame the left; blame the right. It will just make you dizzy. You may see a book claiming the media is liberal placed next to books that claim the media is just the opposite. America's bookshelf has deteriorated into a zoo of nothing but donkeys and elephants. Sometimes I wonder what the workers in the bookstore think about while stocking the shelves like this. I like to picture them placing book after book on the shelf while singing, "He likes Bush, and she likes Gore, Do Dah, Do Dah, she likes Bush and he likes Gore OOOOOHH-HH Do Dah Day!"

What ever happened with competent people writing competent things? Not all these pundits are incompetent but having a talk show, or wanting one, does not make you an authority on a subject. Books written by insiders like former politicians or ambassadors, or academic works by PhDs, or even journalists are better than some random left or right wing pundit who likes to complain. However, those books, though you may find them at the bookstore, will never be on display in front. Rather those books will likely require you to search the back or lowest shelves in the area for one simple reason: They don't really sell.

I blame much of this on American culture. We live in a society where we want things, and we want them fast. If we are going to take the time to read a book, we want answers fast. It is the same reason we live in a society fed by fast food franchises. We hate to have to wait for anything.

The reality is though that knowledge is not something we can buy off the dollar menu at a fast food place. It is not something we can imagine getting from one or two books even though that's how those books seem to be marketed. Knowledge on any issue can only be attained through careful study of many factors, academic study. This is not the kind of stuff you are going to find discussed on your evening news program. Still, books like Al Franken's make it to the best sellers list. People buy books to read someone's opinion on an issue then think they have learned it all.

When you think about it, not many people read in general. Of those who do, not many read current affairs. In fact, I have always found that the politics and current affairs sections of these bookstores are the slowest sections, with the cooking, travel and self-help being the busiest.

Sometimes I wonder if it would be possible to arrange a celebrity death match between Michael Moore and Ann Coulter to settle the score once and for all. As ridiculous as that sounds, people in this society would most likely watch it.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

Ignoring the obvious

Jeffrey Napolitano

It is nearly two weeks since the anniversary of the death of Rachel Corrie, an American who was killed by Israeli Defense Forces in Palestine. Rachel was there because the United States, against worldwide opposition, continues to support the Israeli occupation of the Palestinian people. Consequently, she felt that it was her responsibility to try to stop it, and the best way to do so was to actually go to Palestine and stand, nonviolently, with the Palestinian people.

She hoped that the Israeli military would be less likely to perpetrate its ongoing brutality if there were more white faces in the crowd. She hoped that the Israeli government would inflict less violence if it risked harming a citizen of the United States. She wrote, in a letter which is posted at www.guardian.co.uk/israel, "I'm witnessing this chronic, insidious genocide and I'm really scared, and questioning my fundamental belief in the goodness of human nature. This has to stop. I think it is a good idea for us all to drop everything and devote our lives to making this stop."

Unfortunately, while trying to non-violently prevent the demolition of the house of a pharmacist, his wife, and three children, Rachel was killed by an IDF bulldozer.

In the United States, when terrorist attacks occur in Israel, the issue of its ongoing, brutal occupation of the Palestine people and land are never in question. The blame, espoused by fanatic supporters of the Israeli government, is either the inherent violent nature of Arab people, incitement of anti-Semitism by crazed Hamas leaders, or the fact that some Palestinian, 60 years ago, had an affiliation with Hitler. If the same logic of one Palestinian who belonged to the Nazi party is used to justify 35 years of brutal occupation of Palestine, then surely Germany, who had quite a few more members in the Nazi party, should be nothing more than a smoking hole in the ground. The reason why no one makes the comparable argument against Germany is because it is ridiculous and vengefully genocidal.

The violence against Israel is the result of a brutal occupation of a land that is not theirs, and of a people which it oppresses every day.

Anyone who says Israel is wonderful is at the same time utterly ignoring this fact. They simply dance around the single most important fact about the trouble in Israel: It has been carrying out, and continues to carry out, a harsh military occupation of a land and a people.

No country is perfect, not even Liechenstein or Luxembourg. But neither Liechenstein nor Luxembourg has violated over a hundred U.N. regulations, quite a sight more than Iraq. Neither Liechenstein nor Luxembourg militarily beset any of their neighbors, driving them into refugee camps. Let's imagine that Luxembourg invaded Belgium, drove the Belgian people into 30 percent of the country, and started constructing and handing out settlements for its own people in the other 70 percent. Would we talk about how considerate the Luxembourgs would be if they bothered to construct road signs in Belgian? Would we say, "Sure, Luxembourg isn't perfect, but which country is?" Yet somehow, maniacal people masquerading as intellectuals can make the same statement about Israel without being laughed out of publication or stoned to death for condoning international aggression.

Neo-nazis and pro-Israeli government supporters have one thing in common. They both purport there is no difference between the views of Jews and of the Israeli government. It is through this deception that the allegation of anti-Semitism is too often flung. Supporters of Israel's current government would like nothing more than to insist that the occupation of Palestine is religious doctrine, a necessity to preserve the survival of the Jewish faith and culture.

Zionism used to mean securing an internationally recognized home for the Jewish people, but now it is declared as being synonymous with the occupation of Palestine and seizure of the area's resources. Those who call themselves "pro-Israel" do not mean they support a Jewish state. Rather, they mean they support and condone the Israeli government's violence and defiance of basic precepts of international law. Such people, ironically, instead of helping to ensure the survival of the Jewish way of life, only encourage the escalation of atrocities and drive it closer and closer to self-destruction.

Jeffrey Napolitano is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

STUDENT ADVOCATES FOR SAME-SEX MARRIAGE

I do not now and may never have the chance to marry someone I love. It's ironic, considering Britney Spears gets married for 15 seconds, shows like The Bachelorette receive top ratings, and Las Vegas gives out marriage licenses with hamburgers.

The struggle for marriage equality needs to be more then just acknowledging basic human rights for same-sex couples. We, as Americans, need to re-learn something we are all too often taking for granted. It is my secret hope that in this time of skyrocketing divorce, some husband will see the wife he hadn't noticed in a week, who was beginning to blend in with the living room furniture. Perhaps he'll turn off the TV and realize how lucky he is to be alive and married to the women he still loves. Perhaps when a wife sees pictures of "queer" people being attacked on the streets for fighting for an institution that she barely notices, she will forgo the peroxide treatment to spend an hour with someone she loves instead.

John Galbraith says, "The happiest time in any man's life is just after the first divorce." I wouldn't know because I can't even get married. But if I ever do, I will never take one day for granted, and I will never wakeup in the morning without telling the person beside me that I will love her forever.

If you care, please go to www.masse-quality.org and sign the petition. Marriage is something worth fighting for.

Susan Whitehead
UMass student

STUDENT RALLIES SUPPORT FOR UMASS MARIJUANA FACILITY

With a population of over 24,000 voters and the political clout that comes with these numbers, UMass students' power to effect change shouldn't be underestimated. Right now, UMass is at the forefront of the medical marijuana issue.

For those not aware, a professor in the Plant and Soil Sciences Department is fighting the Drug Enforcement Agency to establish a growth facility here to supply the Food and Drug Administration with high-quality marijuana for research on its possible medicinal use.

The National Institute on Drug Abuse has a monopoly on being able to legally grow by the government, and the quality of their cannabis is deplorable at best. Any scientist can tell you that poor materials lead to poor science. The product being used for research is a terrible representation of the typical marijuana that could be bought on the black market and would ideally be given to patients for medicinal use. Its quality causes distortions in the results of health studies.

The National Institute on Drug Abuse has refused several times to supply marijuana for FDA-approved studies that it does not condone. The DEA has stonewalled the application for over two years now, breaking legal procedure. The Bush administration has called for more research on the drug before it can be considered for rescheduling. At the same time, they are preventing that research.

We here at the Cannabis Reform Coalition are trying to get the word out, but words don't work without action! Whether you are for medical cannabis or not, you should support this measure to establish a basis for sound research that can provide evidence for either side. Do as both our senators have and write to Mitt Romney and urge him to endorse the application, or petition the Drug Czar's office. The Cannabis Reform Coalition has pre-made letters to the governor. Tell the Bush administration to grant the professor's application. Anything less would be sheer hypocrisy.

Justin Sawyer
UMass student
Cannabis Reform Coalition

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sweet as Honey

A cappella group brings spirit of Civil Rights Movement to Fine Arts Center

By Meghan Healy
Collegian Staff

AMHERST — Oftentimes the real purpose of music is lost. Behind smoke machines, lighting effects and elaborately choreographed stage shows, the point of singing the songs is rendered meaningless. Thankfully the purpose can still be found in a cappella group Sweet Honey in the Rock.

Formed in 1973, Sweet Honey in the Rock came together in a time of strife and quickly joined the ever-evolving ranks of the Civil Rights Movement. Seven women strong, Sweet Honey has been touring ever since and Saturday night the group made a stop at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Prophetic and profound, Sweet Honey brought to the stage powerful songs with politically charged messages. As the crowd filed in to take their seats, the stage was empty, save seven chairs arranged in an arch and a few small percussion instruments. As the lights dimmed the sound of voices echoed from off stage and soon the concert hall was filled with the voices of Aisha Kahlil, Louise Robinson, Carol Maillard, Arnae, Nitanju Bolade Casel, Ysaye Maria Barnwell and interpretive signing by Shirley Childress Saxton. From the moment Sweet Honey entered the stage, the power in their voices and colorful dress stirred the audience.

Sweet Honey describes their musical style as "a stunning vocal prowess that captures the complex sounds of Blues, spirituals, traditional gospel hymns, rap, reggae, African chants, Hip Hop, ancient lullabies and jazz improvisation." Audience members present on Saturday got to see the blending of all of these genres into something bigger than any one label could hope to define. Among the numbers performed by the women were original compositions by members of Sweet Honey past and present, poetry of greats such as Langston Hughes set to music and a medley to the revisited songs of protest and inspiration that flavored the Civil Rights Movement.

Subject matter of Sweet Honey's songs ranges from drug use to self-image to the challenge of surviving the vigors of life. One song, "No Mirrors in my Nana's House," Ysaye Maria Barnwell explained, told the story of a girl who lived without mirrors, but knew her appearance by the description her Nana would give her every morning. The lyrics struck a chord with the crowd, as the song confronted the problem with self-perception and the need to recognize inner-beauty first.

Among the show's many highlights was the moment when the group's newest member, Arnae, took center

See HONEY on page 5

Smith exchanges Silent Bob for 'Jersey Girl'

COURTESY PLAYLIST.COM

PETER MORRIL/ ASSOCIATED PRESS (2)

Ben Affleck and Liv Tyler (top) star in "Jersey Girl." Director Kevin Smith (bottom, left) gives the actors instruction during the filming of the movie.

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Writer/Director Kevin Smith has proven in "Jersey Girl" that not only can he make a poignant love-letter to his family, but also that he can still retain his trademark intelligence and humor — even without Jay or Silent Bob.

This shouldn't be that much of a surprise, though. Smith already proved he could 'grow up' with 1997's "Chasing Amy," which featured perhaps the finest performance of Ben Affleck's career as well as Smith's most heartfelt writing. "Jersey Girl," which follows in the same spirit as "Amy," is no doubt even more heartfelt, although Affleck's performance does not quite reach the tremendous peak it did in "Amy."

That's not to discredit Affleck though — his role as Ollie Trinke, a widower and father of newcomer Raquel Castro's precious and precocious Gertie Trinke, is one of his best. Affleck, and Castro for that matter, gracefully hit all the emotional bases, even if the trip can be a tiny bit predictable at times.

This is Smith's first PG-13 film and, combined with the premise Smith, opens himself up for criticism and calls of 'sell-out' from his fanbase who might be fearing that the filmmaker is headed into sappy, Hollywood-tearjerker territory. However, sentimentality does not equal 'sell-out' nor does it mean 'bad.'

Affleck's Ollie is a powerful music publicist in New York who finds love in Jennifer Lopez's Gertrude Steiney. They get married. Gertrude gets pregnant. Then tragedy befalls the happy couple. Gertrude dies during childbirth, leaving Ollie to raise the child, named Gertie after her late mother. Ollie falls back on assistance from his father, Bart, played by George Carlin who gives the best performance in the entire film. (Carlin does such an amazing job that the audience will leave wondering why he hasn't been taking dramatic roles his entire career).

Bart lives and works in the small town of Highlands, New Jersey (Smith's own hometown) and Ollie almost entirely leaves the responsibilities of the child to Bart so he can continue going to New York City to work. One day, though, Bart gets fed up with Ollie's neglect, leaving him to care for Gertie. In one of the film's stand-out scenes (and there are many) Ollie gets overwhelmed with Gertie's needs while waiting for his client, Will Smith (who, in the movie's mid-90s setting, is still just known for being a small-time rapper and TV actor), to arrive at a press conference. With a crying baby in tow and agitated journalists waiting, Ollie goes off on the mob of writers and the absent Fresh Prince. Needless to say Ollie loses his job and finds himself moving back in with his father. Flash-forward seven years, and "Jersey Girl" focuses on Ollie working with his father, trying to reclaim the glory of his publicist days on the side, and raising Gertie.

Sounds a little too Hollywood for Smith, doesn't it? The film does hit standard beats such as the pretty love interest that Ollie's not sure he wants and the father-daughter fight, but Smith's film is smarter and funnier than typical Holly-wood fare. Thus "Jersey Girl" doesn't feel like part of a generic pack, rather it does feel like a Kevin Smith film, just a bit kinder and gentler. The love interest, played by a bookish Liv Tyler, is a video store clerk who meets Ollie, renting porn, with daughter in tow. Add in cameos by the great Jason Lee and the excellent Matt Damon and numerous jokes about coke-and-whores and masturbation, and "Jersey Girl" suddenly sounds a lot more like a Kevin Smith film now, doesn't it? Fans shouldn't fear that the profane Smith has tamed himself for a PG-13 rating; the language still feels real, not as if swears were strategically removed to obtain a better rating (a common practice that Smith has thankfully avoided).

'Jersey Girl'
Directed by Kevin Smith
Starring Ben Affleck George Carlin
Miramax Pictures
Rated PG-13
103 mins.
Grade B+

The aforementioned father-daughter fight isn't traditional fare either; it is one of the most powerful scenes in the film that gives more depth to Affleck's character, rather than making him a one-dimensional generic single-father type. "Jersey Girl" is, actually, home to many of Smith's most memorable characters. Ollie, Gertie and Bart are all amongst Smith's best, perhaps because they are so close to Smith's heart, and his dialogue crackles and snaps just as freshly as it did in "Clerks," Smith's first film. "Jersey Girl" isn't just extremely well written; it also looks great. Chalk that up to Vilmos Zsigmond, best known for shooting "The Deer Hunter".

The film's one real misstep is the way that Gertrude's death is handled. The character is rushed in and out of the movie so quickly that when she dies, it does not quite carry the emotional weight that it would if the audience got to know her and Ollie a bit better. In "Amy,"

See JERSEY on page 5

Ghostface and Budden to play Student Union

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

This week, seven of the top 10 singles on Billboard's Hot 100 chart are from the hip-hop genre ...

... Another piece of evidence that not only has hip-hop found a home in the popular music arena but it has come to dominate its competition.

So it's no coincidence there will be an immense amount of popular hip-hop showcased in the Pioneer Valley during this prosperous time for the genre in the next few weeks. As of press time, beat guru Pharrell and N.E.R.D. is slated to play April 14 at Smith College while consciousness rapper Kanye West will perform at Mount Holyoke April 25.

But the slew of hip-hop's best acts coming to the Five College Area kick starts Wednesday night when Wu-Tang Clan member Ghostface Killah and budding New Jersey lyricist Joe Budden hit up the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts.

"Hip-hop music is all over the [music] business right now," said Sam Wilson, University Productions and Concerts production director. "This show is a sign of the times."

UPC, the on-campus group that organizes the Spring Concert, among other events, is presenting a full night of hip-hop with Budden, Ghostface, up-and-coming Boston R&B singers XL and Pioneer Valley rappers Mass State Committee.

DJ Clinton Sparks from Hartford's Hot 93.7 will be spinning before the acts perform.

The headliners are Ghostface and Budden, and while their time in the game spans in years, they do share the fact that they are both in transitioning moments of their careers.

Staten Island native Ghostface Killah, aka Toney Starks, has made the transition from Epic to Def Jam records and has released his first solo LP with new material in three years titled "The Pretty Toney Album."

Ghostface got his start in 1993 when Wu-Tang emerged with "Enter the Wu-Tang: 36 Chambers." Like all the members of the Staten Island-based group, his rhymes and vocal patterns gave him a unique sound in the mid-'90s. His verses on "Ice Cream" and "Can It Be All So Simple" set the groundwork for a potential successful career.

He made his solo debut in 1996 with "Ironman" behind the power of a slow jam with Mary J. Blige about growing up in poverty called "All That I Got is You."

Rather than switching record labels, Budden's transition consists of moving from the underground to the mainstream level.

The 22-year-old Jersey City MC smashed onto the scene with his hit single "Focus" in the fall of 2002. His self-titled debut was released in June 2003 and since then Budden has been donned as a promising star.

The doors open for the festivities tomorrow night at 6:30 p.m. Tickets can be purchased on the day of the show at Tix Unlimited in the Student Union. Prices are $8 for Five-College students and $15 for general admission.

Ghostface Killah, Joe Budden, XL, Mass State Committee
Tomorrow
Student Union Ballroom
UMass
$8, $15

TuesdayMarch30

BOOKS

Eve Weinbaum, associate professor at the Labor Center at the University of Massachusetts, will discuss "To Move a Mountain: Fighting the Global Economy in Appalachia." The novel tells the story of a group of men and women who are faced with the disaster of the closing of their local plant. They become unlikely political activists in the Tennessee statehouse and protest in Seattle.

The reading will begin at 7 p.m. and will be held at the Odyssey Bookshop of South Hadley. This reading is free and open to the public.

WednesdayMarch31

PERFORMANCE

The 11th annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival will show "Piccadilly," staring Anna May Wong as Shosho, a beautiful young Chinese scullery maid at a Piccadilly nightclub who becomes a Cinderella-story dance sensation and the toast of London.

The showing will begin at 7:30 p.m. in room 137 of the Isenberg School of Management on the University of Massachusetts campus.

BOOKS

Ruth Pzeki, Smith College alumnus, author of "My Year of Meats" and winner of the Kiriyama Book Prize, will read from her latest novel, "All Over Creation." The reading will take place at 7 p.m. at the Odyssey Bookshop of South Hadley. The reading is free, but attendees are asked to reserve a space ahead of time and to have read the book in advance. Seats are limited to 12. The bookshop can be reached at 413-534-7307.

ThursdayApril1

PERFORMANCE

Student choreographers from Mount Holyoke College will present "EMotion: The MHC Spring Student Dance Concert." The event will run through April 3 at 8 p.m. in the Studio Theater of Kendall Hall on the MHC campus. Tickets are $3-5 and reservations are recommended and may be made by calling 413-538-2648.

FridayApril2

MUSIC

John Hammond and Susan Angelettil will grace the stage of the Iron Horse Music Hall tonight at 7 p.m. Tickets are $17.50 in advance and $20 at the door.

SaturdayApril3

MUSIC

More than 120 students, faculty and community musicians will perform in the Mozart Requiem Concert at Abbey Chapel on the Mount Holyoke College Campus starting at 4 p.m. The MHC Concert Choir and Orchestra, conducted by Mark Bartley, will be joined by the WPI Men's Glee Club. Solo performers will include Rochelle Bartley, Stacie Prozzi, Charley Blandy and Aaron Engebreth. This event is free of charge and open to the public.

For more information about this or other MHC ensembles contact them via the Internet at www.mtholyoke.edu/acad/ensemble/choral/.

weeklypinup

COURTESY LIZ LINDER

JOHN BROWN IN NOHO

John Brown's Body will be at the Pearl Street Night Club. Based out of Ithica, N.Y., JBB has been fastly becoming a force in American-bred reggae music. The performance begins at 8:30 p.m. and doors open at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are on sale for $12.50 or $15 at the door.

Missy, Alicia and Beyonce: first ladies of Boston

ROBERT E. KLEIN, ASSOCIATED PRESS

Missy Elliott (left) performs at Boston's Fleet Center Wednesday. Joined by R&B's leading pianst Alicia Keys (center) and Destiny's Child's Beyonce Knowles (right), Elliott came to town as part of the Ladies First Tour.

Affleck shines in 'Jersey'

JERSEY from page 4

the audience is given nearly half the movie to get to know the characters, so that when the more powerful scenes come around it actually means something. Later on in "Jersey Girl," in scenes like the father-daughter fight, or the absolutely heartbreaking line that Carlin gives at the end of the film, emotion does set in. Smith accomplishes everything he has set out to do, making that slight mistake at the start easily and happily forgivable.

Not all of Smith's fans are going to love, or even like, "Jersey Girl," particularly on first viewing. Smith himself has noted that the film might take multiple viewings to fully understand and appreciate. Regard-less, "Jersey Girl" is still a great film, more then worthy to stand next to Smith's other films and certainly superior to the majority of films in recent years, even on first impression. Smith has shown that he can apply his humor, wit and first-rate dialogue to a movie that is also full of cutesy, occasionally mainstream stuff, which is a true testament to his skills as a writer and director.

While it would be great if Smith continues to make more films in the vein of "Amy" or even "Clerks" as he gets older (and if he wants to throw in some more like "Jay and Silent Bob Strike Back" that would be nice too), but if he wants to continue to flex his wings in the future this next film is going to be an adaptation of the comic book "Green Hornet"), Smith has proven he is more then able to. With "Jersey Girl" Smith has proved he really has the goods, no matter what context he is working in.

Sweet Honey brings 30 years of music to UMass stage to sign a stirring rendition of gospel-Blues writer Thomas Dorsey's "I Was Standing by the Bedside of a Neighbor." With the other five vocalists creating the effect of a full band and chorus simply by using their voices and Saxton conveying the anguish and intensity of the words through her expressive signing, Arnae's performance was easily one of the evenings most powerful.

HONEY from page 4

Sweet Honey in the Rock brought to Amherst more than a powerful performance, they brought with them the spirit of a movement that has yet to end. In their 30 years as a group, the lineup may have changed, but after Saturday' show, it is clear that the vision of Sweet Honey has not. Though it has been three decades, the women of Sweet Honey are prepared to go three more; to the group who's mission has been to achieve political equality through vocal prowess, their long standing mantra still rings true — "we who believe in freedom cannot rest until it comes."

Information from www.sweethoney.com was used in this article.

Bartenders Have More Spirit!
Why not be a bartender?
BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
Call TODAY! (413)747-9888

GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
For appointments or questions, call 577-5244
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS club
90 Gatehouse Road
Off Rt. 9 Two miles East of Amherst Center • On the Bus Route
Hampshire Fitness Club has it all for you
www.hampfit.com
• Full size Indoor Pool
•Aerobics
• Aqua Aerobics
• Cybex Nautilus Circuit
• Indoor Tennis
•Jacuzzi/Saunas
• Yoga/Pilates
• Cybex Free Weight
• Full Court Basketball
• Volleyball
•Step Aerobics /Bosu
• Cardio-Vascular Equipment
SPRING SPECIAL 6 WEEKS $109 STUDENT MEMBERS FREE H.F.C. T-SHIRT
Open 6am to 10pm Mon-Fri 8am to 9pm Sat-Sun
Tel 256-6446

Wakefield forgiven for Boone's homer

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) — Johnny Pesky, the former Boston shortstop and manager who knows too well how merciless Red Sox fans can be, thinks he knows why the city has spared pitcher Tim Wakefield from the offseason sport of finger-pointing that claimed Grady Little's job.

"Let me tell you something about young Mr. Wakefield," Pesky said Monday at the team's spring training field. "He's a classy professional. He'll accept responsibility when things go wrong. The guys like him, and they're not blaming him for what happened."

Mention "Bill Buckner" in Boston and you will likely get an earful about curses. Saying "Bucky Dent" will get you the curses themselves. Talk about Little and a Red Sox fan is as likely to burst into tears as rage.

But it was Wakefield who gave up Aaron Boone's game-winning home run that kept the Red Sox from making the World Series last year. So when the knuckleballer took the podium in front of 1,200 fans this winter at an award dinner, he wasn't sure what to expect.

"It was huge," he said last week of the standing ovation he got from the packed ballroom at the Boston Baseball Writer's annual dinner. "It shows you the character of our fans, and the passion of our fans. It gives me chills."

The Red Sox were five outs from reaching the World Series last season before Pedro Martinez tired. Little failed to do anything about it and the New York Yankees rallied from a three-run deficit to send Game 7 of the AL championship series into extra innings.

Wakefield pitched a perfect 10th inning, then Boone hit the first pitch of the 11th for the game-winning homer.

"The fact that he was put there shows you what the ballclub thinks of him," current manager Terry Francona said. "Guys like him make my job so easy. They just show up and they do their best. Win or lose, they show up again the next day and try to do it again."

New York advanced to the World Series, and the Red Sox returned to Boston for another offseason of parceling out the blame. Little was let go, and most of the winter was spent rethinking his decision to leave Martinez in the game.

"It's unfortunate what happened last year," Wakefield said. "But that was a good season. They beat us. I don't really think you can put a finger on what went wrong. That's what baseball's all about."

The longest-tenured player on the Red Sox, Wakefield has become a well-respected leader in the clubhouse. He has bounced in and out of the rotation and suffered career setbacks and organizational insults — like being left off the 1999 playoff roster — without becoming discouraged or malcontented.

Asked if he needed to have a talk with Wakefield this spring to make sure his confidence wasn't damaged, Francona said, "Truthfully, I never gave it a thought. Didn't think I had to.

"He's about as much as a pro as you're going to find," the manager said. "No, I haven't given it a thought. He probably hasn't either."

It turns out, Wakefield did think about it — but only for a couple of days.

"It stinks getting on the bus and knowing we're through," he said. "But you start to reflect on it and think, 'Wow, we were part of one of the greatest series ever.' "

CHARLES KRUPA/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Boston Red Sox starting pitcher Tim Wakefield delivers a throw to Baltimore Orioles Javy Lopez in the second inning of their game in Fort Myers, Fla. yesterday.

NFL flirts with idea to bulk up playoffs by two more teams

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A proposal to let two more teams into the NFL playoffs could have a chance at passing at the league meetings after all.

The Kansas City Chiefs will propose an increase in postseason qualifiers from 12 to 14 at this week's meetings. The NFL Competition Committee is against it, and the committee carries much sway.

But several team officials said Sunday they would like to see more playoff teams.

"I'm for anything that gives my team a better chance to make the playoffs," San Francisco 49ers coach Dennis Erickson said.

"I think two more teams in the playoffs would increase the excitement in those cities," added Miami Dolphins president Eddie Jones.

Bob Kraft, owner of the Super Bowl champion New England Patriots, co-sponsored the proposal a year ago, when it was voted down. He's indicated he still favors it.

But Rich McKay, co-chairman of the competition committee and general manager of the Atlanta Falcons, doesn't expect passage of the proposal.

"We feel like the current system has worked very well," McKay said. "The playoff number at 12 is a good number and, for competitive reasons; we don't recommend expansion."

The biggest concern is that with 14 teams, only the team with the best record in each conference would get a first-round bye.

"Yes, that would create a potential unreasonable advantage for the No. 1 seed," McKay said. "When you look at the advantage for the bye of the one and two seeds, certainly you see it. To then give it to the No. 1 seed alone definitely is a concern to all of us."

Increasing the playoff field requires 24 of 32 votes. So does making permanent instant replay to aid officials, which also is on the agenda.

That is considered more likely to happen then adding two playoff berths. If it doesn't pass, well ...

"There's always plan 1-B," said John Mara, executive vice president of the New York Giants. "We think we have more than enough votes to get it in permanently, but if we feel there's enough opposition, we're open to compromise."

B.C. punter charged

BOSTON (AP) — A Boston College football player who allegedly refused to let a woman leave his dorm room during the weekend was charged on Monday with domestic assault and battery and kidnapping, and suspended from the school and the team.

Jeffrey A. Gomulinski, 20, a sophomore punter for the BC Eagles, pleaded innocent at his arraignment in Brighton District Court. Gomulinski, who is free on $250 bail, was required to take random Breathalyzer tests and report to a probation officer once a week.

The 18-year-old woman, who was dating Gomulinski, told campus police that when she tried to leave Gomulinski's dorm room early Sunday morning, he refused to let her leave for two to three hours, according to District Attorney Daniel F. Conley's office.

She left about 6:30 a.m. and ran to her car, with Gomulinski allegedly chasing her outside. The two argued, Gomulinski outside the car and the woman locked inside, according to Conley's office. Police arrived about 20 minutes later after getting a call reporting an argument.

BC spokesman Jack Dunn said Gomulinski has been suspended from the school, pending the outcome of the court proceedings. Coach Tom O'Brien also suspended him indefinitely from the football team, Dunn said.

"We have a zero tolerance policy for this alleged behavior and have acted according," Dunn said. "That's a severe sanction but an appropriate sanction."

An e-mail to Gomulinski's school e-mail and a message left at his parent's home in Naugatuck, Conn. were not immediately returned.

During the 2003 season with BC, Gomulinski started at punter in all 13 games, and finished the season with 66 punts for 2,630 yards.

—Associated Press

GEORGE RIZER/ASSOCIATED PRESS/POOL

Former New York Yankees Jeff Nelson, left, and Karim Garcia, center, listen to Garcia's attorney, Gerard F. Malone, during a court appearance yesterday in Boston. A judge has scheduled a May 25 pretrial hearing for Nelson and Garcia, who are accused of assault and battery in a brawl at a Red Sox playoff game last year.

Garcia, Nelson set for hearing

BOSTON (AP) — A judge has scheduled a May 25 pretrial hearing for baseball players Jeff Nelson and Karim Garcia, who are accused of assault and battery in a brawl at a Red Sox playoff game last year.

Roxbury District Court Judge Edward Redd is expecting to set a trial date at the May hearing, Suffolk district attorney's spokesman David Procopio said Monday. Attorneys for the players, who appeared Monday in court for the five-minute hearing, didn't immediately return calls seeking comment.

Nelson and Garcia are charged in connection with a fight that broke out in the New York Yankees bullpen on Oct. 11, during Game Three of the American League Championship Series between the Yankees and the Sox. Garcia now plays for the New York Mets, while Nelson plays for the Texas Rangers.

Paul Williams Jr. of Derry, N.H., a part-time Fenway Park groundskeeper and a special education teacher, is also facing charges in a cross-complaint of assaulting Nelson. He is due back in court for a pretrial hearing on April 5.

Williams has sued Nelson and Garcia for more than $33,000 for medical bills and lost wages, claiming Nelson attacked him because he was cheering for the Red Sox in the Yankee bullpen.

—Associated Press

Rejuvenate
WITH OUR Spring $PECIAL
Restore the fullness and shine and replenish the moisture to your hair with our patented Color Touch conditioning treatment...that lasts four to six weeks...a $55 value
~ AND ~
Soothe your dry hands with our Citrus & Aloe Paraffin treatment...a $20 value
ALL FOR ONLY $35 a $75 value including FREE all-nutrient hand & body lotion! offer expires May 1, 2004
PATRICK & Company
Open Tues. thru Fri., 9:30-7:00
Sat., 9:30-4:30
102 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley • 586-7477

More Movies! More Copies! More Fun!
CUBA GOODING, JR. ... THE LEGEND IS ...
RADIO
Inspired By A True Story
A DEFINITE MUST FOR THE ENTIRE FAMILY!
Captain VIDEO
2 LOCATIONS TO SERVE YOU
BEHIND BRUEGGER'S - DOWNTOWN AMHERST
19 MONTAGUE ROAD - NORTH AMHERST

Looking For Off Campus Housing?
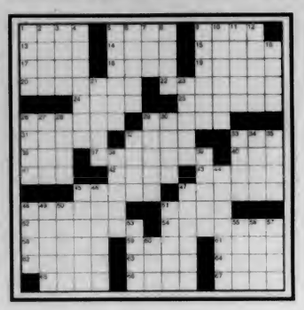
We Found IT!!!
12th Annual Apartment Complex Fair
Thursday April 1, 2004
10am - 3pm
Campus Center Concourse
Join With Rental Managers From:
Alpine Commons, Aspen Chase, The Boulders, Brandywine, Mill Valley Estates, Puffton Village, Rolling Green, Southpoint, Townehouse, Cliffside, Sugarloaf Estates, Squire Village, Kaynes Real Estate, Lincoln Real Estate, Jones Rental Property
Sponsored by:
Commuter Services
and
Housing Resource Center (Off Campus Housing)
http://www.cshrc.org
428 Student Union 545-0865

UMASS Campus Recreation
Still Time To Enter:
Swim Meet (M/W).....A.S.A.P.
Weekend Flag Football (M/C)....A.S.A.P.
Weekend Lacrosse (W).....A.S.A.P.
Get Those Forms In By:
Tennis Doubles (M/W/C).....4/20
Quickball, Diamond Derby(M/W)....4/20
World Cup Soccer(M/W).....4/20
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: www.umass.edu/umim

QUOTE FOR THE DAY



"Yeah. Uh, did you get that memo?"

-Dom Portwood (Joe Bays), "Office Space"

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Nuggets
- Sloppy Joes
- Curried Vegetables (vegan)

DINNER
- Grilled Boneless Pork Chops
- Turkey Divan
- Grilled Portabella Mushroom Steaks (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 55
- Low: 33

WEDNESDAY
- High: 54
- Low: 36

THURSDAY
- High: 51
- Low: 32

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andy Tamulynas
COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Glen Straub/ Nikolas P. Markantonatos

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
March Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"start your own tradition"

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Always order double.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Remember you came from humble beginnings. Don't let your head get too big.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Get some highlights in your hair. Spring is just around the corner.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Stop fake baking to keep your Spring Break tan; it's a bit extreme!

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Try eating some rice cakes. They taste like Styrofoam ... what fun!

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Don't worry too much. You'll get premature wrinkles that way.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Change the ring on your cell phone. It's annoying.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Show your true talents by performing some karaoke. Come on; you know you want to!

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Stop acting like you're better than everyone else, but know in your mind you really are!

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Get out and dance like Britney Spears. It's good for the soul.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Cover up that rancid smell in your room by burning some candles.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Make sure to wash your hands after you use the bathroom.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus
Fraternities-Sororities-Student Groups: 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

4 Bedrooms, Main Street. Available 6/1 256-8138

AUTO FOR SALE

$500!!! Police Impounds. Cars from $500 Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. for listings, 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

EMPLOYMENT

$10-$14 per hour delivering telephone directories in the Pioneer Valley area Must have reliable transportation and must be able to read a map. Call 888-258-5961

Bartending Trainees Needed $250 a day potential. Local positions 1-800-293-3985 Ext516

Life Guards and Swim Instructors. The Town of Amherst seeks qualified lifeguards and swim instructors. Lifeguards must hold current certifications including Life Guard Training First Aid, and CPR. $8.16-9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week. Applications available from Amherst Leisure Services, Bange Community Center, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Internships:
Enterprise Rent-A-Car is the #1 rental car company in North America. Due to our fantastic growth, we have opportunities available this summer in our Management Internship Program for the greater Boston area, including Worcester and Cape Cod. Our ideal candidate will be a rising junior or senior at a 4-year college, and have a professional image. Through hands-on training, our interns learn every aspect of our fast-paced business, and experience the autonomy and challenges similar to that of an entrepreneur. We offer competitive pay and a fun and friendly work environment. For more information and to apply online, please visit our website at www.enterprise.com/careers or call us at (508) 427-1003. Enterprise is an equal opportunity employer.

Get hands-on legal experience with a legal assistant internship this fall. Work directly with attorneys and clients and earn 9 to 15 credits. No experience required. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office for an application, due 4/2. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors- Town of Amherst Day Camps. The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, esp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. Old. $ range for both positions: $8.19 – 9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week, June 21 to Aug. 20. Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept., Boltwood Walk, Amherst. (413) 256-4065 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer

Local Business is hiring marketers Part Time $10-15/hr Call Alison @413-627-9043

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Play sports! Have fun! Save Money! Sports Camp in Maine. Coaches needed: Tennis, Basketball, Baseball, Water-sports, Ropes Course, Golf, Archery, and more. Work Outdoors and Have a Great Summer! Call Free: (888) 844-8080 or Apply: www.campcedar.com

Two job opportunities on Nantucket Island beginning in May. Office assistants with decent typing, computer and telephone skills. Some errand running. Salary + housing. Tele: 508-228-3942 or send resume to PO Box 2607 Nantucket, MA 02584 or fax resume to 508-228-8778

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc., Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

FOR RENT

Moving off campus? Meet area rental agents at apartment complex fair. Thurs April 1 10-3 on the CC Concourse. Sponsored by Commuter Services www.cshrc.org

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes start soon!!! Call for information 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com

MISCELLANEOUS

Jack Schit for President! If you are a college student truly concerned about the future check out what Jack has to say right away. www.jackschitforpresident.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Quiet, Comfortable, Furnish, Reasonable. For male Grad/Professional 15 min. walk to UMass. Avail. June 1 – Sept. 1 Fall option 413-549-1578

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female roommate. 1 large bedroom, very quiet, very clean, on bus route, 1 1/2 miles from UMass, in Amherst $430 a month including heat, hot water, and Cable tv, available April 1st Call (413) 687-3333

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst. PhilosophyDale@ve.net

SERVICES

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $30.00. 413-584-8857

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SUMMER SUBLET

Looking for 1 bedroom apt. for summer, around $600 per month. bklark@student.umass.edu

1 bedroom Brandywine apartment starting June 1 or sooner. $755/month negotiable – includes HT/WT. 549-9489

TRAVEL

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included. Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe $169 one way. Book on-line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

Need a room for next year? A roommate? Maybe you're looking for a place to sublet over the summer. The Collegian Marketplace is the place to advertise! Just call 413-545-3500.

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED; Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.robertnichols.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen have mixed results against GW

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Despite its top three starters on the mound and a week off following a .500 Florida trip, the Massachusetts baseball team saw a promising opening weekend of Atlantic 10 play go from bad to worse, as the team dropped two of three to George Washington and also reportedly lost second baseman Cullan Maumus for the remainder of the season with a broken arm.

Now sitting at 6-7 overall and 1-2 in the A-10, coach Mike Stone's squad will return to action today against struggling Sacred Heart team (1-17 0-3) in Fairfield, Conn.

Unavailable for comment, Stone did not confirm a starting pitcher for the contest nor the severity of Maumus' injury.

In losing 9-4 Sunday afternoon, Crane was roughed up for eight runs, all earned, on eight hits and threw 104 pitches in just five innings, and remained winless at 0-2 on the year.

GW meanwhile got six solid innings from hurlers Dan Pfau and Derrick Lutz and two and 2/3 innings of perfect relief work from left-handed reliever Avi Rasowsky to overcome an early 3-2 deficit.

Sophomore catcher Frank Curreri led the offensive charge for UMass, as the Boston College High School product banged out three hits and drove in three runs in four at-bats.

Leading 3-1 after four innings on RBI singles by Curreri and Maumus, Crane surrendered five runs and staked the Colonials to a 6-3 lead they would never relinquish.

The Minutemen scratched across a run in the seventh, but couldn't more than a pair of hits against Rasowsky.

Saturday's latter affair marked another fine performance by Torra, who struck out nine, scattered eight hits and allowed just one run in six and 1/3 innings to pick up his third victory of the season. For his performance, he was also named UMass/Dinn Brothers Athlete of the Week.

It was not the only impressive performance on the mound for UMass however, as closer Scott Ratliff entered a 2-1 game with one out, one in and the tying run on third and struck out the final two batters of the seven inning contest to earn save.

Josh Wilkie was the tough-luck loser, surrendering just three hits and two unearned runs in a complete game effort.

The Minutemen scored their only runs of the game in the first inning, as senior captain Mike Athas walked, stole second and advanced to third on a groundout. He then scored on an error by GW shortstop Geoff Milson off the bat of Maumus, who followed Athas home following a pair of wild pitches.

In Saturday's first game, GW's Dan Sullivan tossed a seven inning complete game to earn the win. He allowed just a lone Minuteman run, which came in the sixth when senior first basemen Matt Reynolds singled in Athas.

Chown was tagged with the loss, allowing four runs on seven hits over the full seven innings as well.

Taurasi leads UConn to fifth straight Final Four

By Chuck Schoffner
Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Diana Taurasi turned in one last stellar performance in front of the home fans and helped Connecticut add one more sterling accomplishment to its already glittering legacy.

Taurasi scored 27 points and Connecticut blew open the game in the second half to beat Penn State 66-49 Monday night and earn an unprecedented fifth straight trip to the women's Final Four.

Barbara Turner matched Taurasi almost shot for shot in the East Regional final and added 26 points as the Huskies (29-4) stayed in the running for a third straight national championship and fourth in five years. Only Tennessee has won three in a row, from 1996 through 1998.

It will be a Connecticut double at the Final Four because the men's team qualified on Saturday, making the University of Connecticut the fifth school to send both teams in the same year. The women will play the winner of Tuesday night's Duke-Minnesota game in the national semifinals in New Orleans next Sunday night. Duke would have teams in both Final Fours if the Blue Devils win that game.

When it was over, Taurasi didn't even bother donning her Final Four cap, instead flinging into the stands.

Top-seeded Penn State (28-6), seeking its second Final Four trip, buckled under Connecticut's intense defensive pressure in the first half, but recovered to make a run at the second-seeded Huskies after they opened a 21-point lead midway through the second half.

The Lady Lions got the lead down to nine before Turner and Taurasi combined for nine straight points to return the momentum to UConn, which had the backing of a boisterous crowd at its second home, the Hartford Civic Center.

While Taurasi is a two-time All-American, Turner looked the part in this one, shooting 8-for-11 and adding six rebounds and three assists. She was 4-for-5 from 3-point range, including one she banked in from the top of the key in the first half.

Tanisha Wright led Penn State with 16 points and All-American Kelly Mazzante finished with 14 after scoring only two in the first half. Mazzante, the Big Ten's career scoring leader, missed eight of her first nine shots and finished 5-for-17.

Penn State was 6-for-30 in the first half and shot 28 percent for the game.

Connecticut led 21-13 after the choppy opening half, then got it going in the first few minutes of the second half. Turner had a 3-pointer, two three-point plays and two free throws in a 16-6 run that made it 37-19.

Taurasi hit a fadeaway for a 43-22 lead and Ashley Battle's layup made it 47-26 with 11:57 remaining. Penn State then managed its only threat, drawing to 51-42 when Mazzante converted a three-point play off a leaning shot.

But Taurasi hit a wide-open 3 from the left corner after a UConn timeout and the Huskies soon were back in control.

Connecticut had plenty of rough moments offensively in the first half, but its defense never wavered.

Any Penn State player who got the ball anywhere near the basket was surrounded by a swarm of UConn bodies and arms. Passing lanes were clogged and almost every perimeter shot was contested. Twice in the first half Mazzante had to heave the ball from beyond 30 feet to try to beat the shot clock.

With the score tied at 11, UConn ran off 10 straight points and was ahead the rest of the way despite going scoreless the final 6:43 of the half.

UMass prepares for Devilish affair

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Freshman Candice Molinari slides home in the Minutewomen's 6-0 victory over Vermont on March 26. UMass heads to Central Connecticut State today for a double-header starting at 2:30 p.m.

ANDY TAMLYN/MASS COLLEGIAN

Some softball players can brag about their numbers as being higher than others. Not many can say their numbers are higher than an entire team.

Such is the case with Massachusetts catcher/third baseman KJ Kelley, who through Saturday was batting .288 with a .695 slugging percentage, 10 runs and 17 hits. Her team-high seven home runs and 18 runs batted in are more than today's opponent, host Central Connecticut State Blue Devils (2-14), have amassed as a team all season (0 HR, 16 RBI).

Coming off a weekend in which she went three for six for the Minutewomen (12-11, 2-0 Atlantic 10) and had her second career two-homer game in an 8-1 rout of LaSalle, Kelley has been coming on strong as of late.

"I think she's doing what she should be doing," coach Elaine Sortino said. "She doesn't go to the plate with the mindset of hitting a home run, and I wouldn't want her to. I think if you go to the plate looking to drive through pitches and hit line drives, everything else takes care of itself.

"Her swing is a lot faster than it was a year ago. At the end of [last] season, as good of a hitter as she was, I'd say she's probably three times better right now."

She eclipsed the fence twice for the first time in her career back in 2003 against CCSU, en route to a 7-2 thumping of the Blue Devils for a doubleheader sweep. With some tremendous play coming from the plate as of late, one has to wonder if the magic can happen again.

Whatever the end result is this afternoon, it's a moot point. Kelley is just fine with a base hit. Anything to benefit the team.

"To be honest, I'm really not thinking about [hitting any home runs]. I'd be happy with just getting hits. You know, shots to the outfield, infield, whatever, just getting a hit ... I don't need a home run to be satisfied," Kelley said.

Those hits could quite possibly be the difference in today's doubleheader in New Britain, C.T., as the last several meetings between these teams were not decided until the waning innings of the game.

Last season, Kaila Holtz's RBI single helped the Minutewomen nip the Devils 4-3 in game one, while Kelley's two-homer effort sealed a 7-2 victory in game two. In 2002, it was the strength of back-to-back no-hitters by Kaila Holtz and Jen Hadley (that allowed the Maroon and White to sneak by the Devils 1-0 and 3-0.

"Three out of the last four ball games have been one-run ball games," Sortino said. "The records don't matter, they're always tough for us, and I don't know why."

After dropping to .218 at the beginning of last week, centerfielder Aisha Franke has quickly rebounded. She is up to .281 after last weekend's campaign, and leads the team in runs (11) and ranks third in hits (18). With just two RBIs to her name, it's been sound defense and good base-running skills that has made her a player to watch.

With the team's only .300-plus average at .338 and a team-high 22 hits, it's hard to believe outfielder Candice Molinari is just a freshman. She will be looking to have another stellar performance when she steps to the plate.

For the Blue Devils, all eyes will be on Heather Mills. With a .308 average to go along with her team-high five runs and eight hits, she may very likely be the one that will keep UMass from escaping CCSU's crosshairs.

Talented Atlantic 10 gets stronger

LON HORWEDEL/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Charlotte's Curtis Withers, right, and Texas Tech's Michael Marshall battle for the ball during the first half of their NCAA men's basketball championship first round game March 18 in Buffalo, N.Y.

Bob McGovern

Year in and year out the Atlantic 10 is considered a second-tier college basketball conference. It continually puts one or two teams in the NCAA tournament who quickly bow out when faced with one of the big guns in the national spotlight.

Not anymore.

This season seven of the 12 teams in the A-10 made the post season with Xavier, Richmond, Dayton, and St. Joseph's making the Big Dance, and Rhode Island, Temple and George Washington getting an invite to the National Invitational Tournament (NIT).

Not only did these teams make it to the show, but also for the first time since the mid-'90s, the A-10 had teams that had a legitimate shot at running the gauntlet.

Granted Dayton and Richmond bowed out in the early goings, but what about Xavier and St. Joseph's? Both teams made it to the Elite-8, and for all intents and purposes, put up a fight to the bitter end.

Now that powerhouse Duke has smashed Xavier's glass slipper, and St. Joseph's had its best season ever ended by Oklahoma State, the A-10 must now wonder if this is a sign of things to come or whether it was one of those fluke years that happen once a decade.

There is much talent being lost, most notably St. Joseph's poster-boy Jameer Nelson and Xavier's Ramain Sato. With this the A-10 can settle back into mediocrity, or it can pick up two more solid programs to add to its already intimidating roster.

Oh wait. It did that already.

Next year, St. Louis and UNC-Charlotte will be making the trip to the A-10 from Conference USA, another conference known for being a step below the big boys. Both of these squads were in post-season play this year with Charlotte making the NCAA tournament and the Billikens ending their season in the second round of the NIT.

These teams are no strangers to intense inter-conference competition. This past season there was a five-way tie for first place at the end of the regular season. C-USA also had a good showing in the tournament, placing six teams.

When next season starts, the A-10 will have a total of nine teams that made it to the post-season and another handful reloading with incentive. It is no longer the same old gang, but now it is a conference with an edge.

Aside from the Big East, and the always-dominant ACC, the other major conferences are on the decline. The Big 10 was a non-factor for most of the season, the SEC had to rely on Alabama's feel-good story and the Big 12 was a disappointment aside from Oklahoma State.

So now the A-10 is quietly legitimizing itself among the ranks of college basketball's finest. And for all of us out here in Western Mass this is a sign of good things to come.

As in any sport, a team tends to improve with its conference. If UMass doesn't want to get left in the dust, it will not only rebuild, but will solidify. Sure rookie sensation Rashaun Freeman is a good start, but there will be some tough times in the Pioneer Valley before this program is at the level it was almost a decade ago.

Those were the days when Temple and UMass owned the conference every year, and the A-10 was no more than a blip on the college basketball map. Now Temple and UMass have suffered a changing of the guard, but that's what happens in college sports. What goes around comes around.

It is going to be quite the ride next year, one with new rivalries being formed and old ones solidifying their in-conference prominence. Whatever the case, it is sure to be worth the while.

So next year when the snow melts and the scent of March Madness is fresh in the air, the A-10 will no longer be the surprise conference with a couple of Cinderella teams that back down when the going gets tough.

It will be one of the conferences to beat.

Bob McGovern is a Collegian columnist.

'Scooby-Doo 2' a more monstrous film than the first
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 6

Minutewomen sweep Blue Devils in afternoon doubleheader
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 109

SGA holds hearing on voting

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Staff

The judiciary branch of the Student Government Association held a hearing on the constitutionality of the Instant Runoff Voting in last week's SGA elections last night.

If the justices find it to be constitutional the senate will debate the election results at tonight's meeting. If it is found unconstitutional Speaker of the Senate Jared Nokes will become president.

Nokes and Attorney General Mark Morrison petitioned against Chancellor of Elections Steve Hoeschele's use of the IRV ballot in last week's Selections as constitutional. Nokes filed his petition for the hearings on March 5.

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Chancellor of Elections Steven Hoeschele

IRV has been proved constitutional in other cities, states and countries. Throughout the hearing, both sides mentioned a case from Ann Arbor, Mich., where IRV was proved constitutional. It is currently used in Australia, Ireland, San Francisco, and Vermont.

IRV allows for voters to rank their candidates in order of preference. This allows a candidate to be elected with more popular votes than the current system. However, Morrison and Nokes gave several situations where the Election Commissioners would make arbi-

See SGA on page 3

ACLU leader pans Patriot Act

By Danielle Henry
Collegian Correspondent

Opposition to the USA Patriot Act — the Bush administration's law for fighting terrorists — has created "strange bedfellows" ranging from ardent civil rights activists to arch conservatives, said Anthony Romero, head of the leading civil liberties group on Monday.

Speaking at a packed hall at Amherst College, Romero, director of the American Civil Liberties Union, said opposition to sections of the act, which was passed 45 days after Sept. 11, "cuts across political lines."

Romero cited the five most cherished aspects of the constitution that are under attack by the Bush administration; identifying free speech, the government is by and far for the people so it should be visible to the people, the core commitment to due process rights, the importance of checks and balances and the difference between dissent and debate.

He stressed that free speech is critical now more than ever in order to make the marketplace as vigorous as possible. Romero cited the ACLU's stance against free speech zones created by the Bush administration for airports, political conventions and other places where Bush speaks.

Bob Barr, Republican U.S. Senator from Georgia, has even shown support for the ACLU's stance, Romero said. Barr is a populist leaning conservative who supports an anti-flag desecration amendment, is pro-life, anti-gay marriage and anti-affirmative action.

See PATRIOT on page 3

Nearing a decision

Jennifer Paluseo faces sentencing two years after newborn's death

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

A female custodian works steadily through her morning routine in the James Hall dormitory of Southwest. As she removes the full trash bags, in the second floor trash room, one feels unusually heavy. It is approximately 7:30 a.m. when the custodian opens the plastic trash bag. Inside she discovers the corpse of a nine-pound three-ounce male newborn.

Part two of two-part series

The custodian's discovery began the case of Jennifer Paluseo, a 19-year-old freshman in 2002, who will face sentencing in Northampton's Hampshire Superior Court today for charges of manslaughter and conveying a dead body. Paluseo had originally pled innocent to the charges but changed her plea to guilty on Feb. 25.

In the two years since Paluseo, now 21, was charged with the May 1, 2002 death of her newborn son, few questions have been answered.

From Plymouth to Amherst

A resident of Plymouth, Paluseo left home to attend the University of Massachusetts in the fall of 2001, separating her from both her boyfriend and family, and fraternal twin sister. Once an active member of Plymouth South High School's varsity soccer team, and member of the National Honors Society, Paluseo came from a sturdy and respectable family; according to a high school friend and fellow UMass student.

Friends knew her to be quiet and shy, socializing mostly with her twin sister and teammates. Senior year, Paluseo met current boyfriend, and father to their now deceased son, William Barrus.

A town hockey star, Barrus stayed at home in Plymouth to pursue minor league hockey while Paluseo attended UMass. According to one friend — who requested anonymity and will hereafter be referred to as Jane — Barrus and Paluseo began dating during the spring of their senior year after a long-time friendship.

According to an affidavit signed by State Trooper Sgt. Robin Whitney,

See PALUSEO on page 3

COURTESY PHOTO/THE S.S. DEBOER

Jennifer Paluseo will be sentenced today.

Professor's study suggests that calorie cutting may not be solution to America's obesity issue

COURTESY OF RALPH LING

Dr. Deborah Riebe speaks at the Campus Center about the benefits of a healthy diet and regular exercise as part of a day long health science event.

By Michelle Dozois
Collegian Staff

Counting calories may not be the answer to weight loss, said Dr. Deborah Riebe yesterday in her lecture on "Healthy-Lifestyle Approach to Weight Management."

Riebe, a professor at the University of Rhode Island, says taking a "non-diet" approach to dieting may be a successful way to lose weight. Riebe presented findings from two URI studies to a gathering of students, faculty and alumni at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center, as part of a day-long health sciences event.

Riebe discussed the methodology and findings of one of the URI studies, a two-year study called "Weight Management." In the study, obese participants who averaged 50 years of age, were encouraged to set goals limiting their fat grams, keep a food log four days per week, and exercise at least 150 minutes per week. Calorie counting was not a focus.

"The focus was on healthy eating rather than dietary restriction," Riebe said.

At the end of the study, participants had lost an average of six percent of their body weight. Riebe said that this loss was less drastic than what it would have been, had the participants been given a specific diet to follow. However, after two years, participants had maintained 48 percent of their weight loss.

A unique aspect of the study was that it implemented the Transtheoretical Model of Behavior Change, developed by Dr. James Prochaska of the University of Rhode Island. The model categorizes participants according to their stage of action and motivation. For example, a participant whose attitude was "I don't exercise and I don't intend to start" would be placed in the first stage, "Precontemplation".

Riebe said that many people are well aware of the importance of eating healthfully and exercising, but they still choose not to.

"There's that difference between 'knowing' and 'doing,' which I find fascinating," said Reibe. "[People say] 'Oh, I know you're not supposed to do that, but I do it anyway.'"

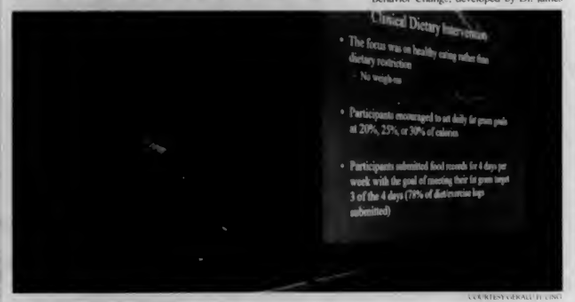
One unexpected point of praise the study received from participants was the fact that there were no mirrors hanging in the exercise lab.

Riebe acknowledged that a major limitation of the study was the participant dropout rate. The study began with 190 participants, but dropped to 144 by the six-month mark, and ended with 102 at the end of the two-year study.

"There is no doubt that our results are skewed," Riebe said. "A certain percentage won't come back because they gained weight and are embarrassed."

Riebe also presented research from the second URI study, a study done on seniors. "Older adults tend to count activities of daily living as structured exercise," said Riebe.

For example, when asked what specific exercises they do, older adults will cite going to church or playing with their infant grandchildren. Unlike the "Weight Management" study, researchers managed to keep a very high retention rate in the senior study — 87 percent returned. Riebe said that using methods such as sending birthday cards and hosting holiday parties are an incentive for the seniors to continue participating.



Obesity has become much more prevalent in the United States in the last 30 to 40 years, Riebe said.

"The genetics of people haven't changed," she said.

Although obesity is a complex issue, and biological and genetic factors are certainly involved, lifestyle factors have largely contributed to the rapid expansion of waistlines. Some experts have estimated that obesity-related deaths may eventually surpass smoking-related deaths, Riebe said.

Riebe's future research plans include investigating the link between healthy eating and exercise.

The UMass school of public health and health sciences and the Rho Chapter of the Delta Omega Honorary Public Health Society co-sponsored the event.

COURTESY OF RALPH LING

Dr. Riebe explains two studies that studied a group of obese 50-year-olds and a group of senior citizens. The study suggests that calorie counting is not the most effective method for long-term weight maintenance.

Forum says reproductive rights are threatened by Bush

By Casey Novak
Collegian Staff

"It is a really bad time for reproductive rights in the United States," said Marlene Fried, director of the Civil Liberties and Public Policy program to a crowd of 25 women yesterday.

The "Reproductive Rights: What You Need To Know" forum was directed toward people learning about the current attacks on reproductive freedom. Panelists at the forum discussed policies recently put into place by the Bush Administration that threaten women's reproductive freedom, as well as the resources provided by the University of Massachusetts to students in need of health care and abortion services.

Fried is a professor of philosophy at Hampshire College and the founding president of the National Network of Abortion funds. "I think of reproductive rights as both the right to not have children when you don't want to and also the rights involved in having children when you do want to; on both sides of that we are seeing incredible attacks."

Fried said that although this may be a depressing picture, it leaves huge opportunities for political action and organizing.

"With respect to abortion, it is the goal of the anti-abortion movement to re-criminalize abortions, to make them illegal for all women all the time," Fried said.

Trials began yesterday in three separate courtrooms, challenging the Partial-Birth

See RIGHTS on page 2

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Christine Rutkosk of VOX Students for Choice, left, Marlene Fried, director of civil liberties and public policy program, center, and Amanda Collings, director of Women's Health project at University Health Services attend a reproductive rights forum yesterday.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
FEATURES EDITOR S. J. Port
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salzniker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldredge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Mercier
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagstic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCES Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS JaJynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kiggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISER Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTING EDITORS Paige Crum
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Emilin Duggan
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY RUN AND OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN RECOGNIZED SINCE JANUARY 1988. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500. OFFICE HOURS: 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT

DC DESIGN

News meeting at 6 p.m. on Mondays

Weekly Calendar

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

March 31 - April 6 2004

Today

Amherst Books will hold a party in celebration of the publication of the book "Identity Matters: Schooling the Student Body in Academic Discourse" by University of Massachusetts Professor Donna Lecourt at 5 p.m. Refreshments will be served.

Smith College — At 7 p.m., multimedia artist Zoe Beloff will present a projection performance entitled "Claire and Don in Slumberland" in Stoddard Hall Auditorium. The film guides Claire and Don through America's post-war fear and anxieties using 3D imagery; sounding from the 1949 psychology films Hypnotic Behavior and Unconscious Motivation.

Hampshire College — Folk Musician Mike Seeger will perform old-time Southern folk music at 8 p.m. in the Recital Hall of the Music and Dance Building. Seeger, along with Tom Paley and John Cohen, formed The New Lost City Ramblers , which brought the music of the Southeastern United States to the nation in the 1950s.

Tomorrow

Smith College — Vampire Dreams, a new play Written by Suzy Mckee Chamas and directed by Andrea Hairston will show at 7:30 p.m. in Earle Recital Hall of Sage. The play is a contemporary comedy this work tells the story of a modern, successful psychoanalyst who finds herself strangely attracted to her patient, a renowned anthropology professor who claims to be a vampire.

Hampshire College — From 7 to 11 p.m., there will be a reggae performance by Jo Black Sekou and Sekouba Diakite in Red Barn. Jo Black Sekou fuses African roots, reggae, dancehall and traditional West African elements in his music. The performance is part of the "Liberated Voices: Looking Beyond the Chains of Oppression" symposium, which will run through April 2.

Friday 2

Mount Holyoke College — At 5 p.m., CAUSE will host a Hunger Awareness Banquet in the Betty Shabazz Cultural Center. Entertainment for the Banquet will include a lecture by guest speaker Professor Holly Hansen and a concluding performance by the M&Cs.

UMass — Minnesota's Guthrie Theatre will perform Othello at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. This is Guthrie Theatre's first national tour in 20 years. Tickets cost $15 for Five College Students, $15 - $40 for the general public. There will be a second performance at 8p.m. on Saturday, April 3.

Hampshire College — Project 2050, a multi-year exploration of the year when it is projected that people of color will become the majority in the United States, will host a "Project 2050: Poets in Action and Open Mic" at 8:30 p.m. in Prescott Tavern.

Saturday 3

UMass — From 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., there will be a conference "Othello with the Guthrie Theatre" held at The Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies. Pre-registration is required. Register by calling 413-577-3600. The Center is located at 650 East Pleasant Street in Amherst.

UMass — The Friends of UMass Amherst Library will host its second annual "Dinner with Friends" at 6:30 p.m. in the University Club.

The evening will include a four-course meal "Far East Feast," a Yankee book swap, an autographed book raffle, and conversations with authors Jeannine Atkins, children's literature; Elinor Lipman, fiction; Ron Welburn, poetry; and Barry Werth, nonfiction. The goal of the event is to raise support for the UMass library. Tickets cost $100. For information and reservations contact Susan McBride at 413-545-3974.

Sunday 4

The Shambhala Meditation Center will host its monthly Open House Dharma Gathering starting at 9 a.m. Sitting meditation will be held from 9 to 11 a.m. followed by a discussion on "Demons: Working with Negativity." The discussion will be followed by a complimentary lunch and socializing. Admission is free but contributions are welcome. The Shambhala Meditation Center is located at 102 Russell Street on Route 9 in Hadley.

UMass — The Opus One String Ensemble will perform under the directors Stanislas Renard and Marcos Arakaki at 4 p.m. in the Bezanson Recital Hall. For further details contact 545-2227.

UMass — At 8 p.m., there will be a performance entitled, "Infinity on Tour: Destination Russia Infinity Brass" featuring Eric Berlin and Thomas Bergeron on trumpet, Laura Klock on horn, David Sporny on trombone and John Manning on tuba in the Bezanson Recital Hall.

The program will include pieces by Viktor Ewald, Alexander Arutiunian, Mussorgsky, and Stravinsky. Tickets cost between $5 and $10.

Monday 5

Smith College — Luis Adolfo Cardona, Colombian Unionist, will speak on the difficulties of forming a union and how he escaped the corporate death squads of Coca Cola in Colombia at 7 p.m. in Carroll Room, Campus Center Room 208.

UMass — At 9 p.m., Chabad will host a Passover Seder to celebrate Passover. The Seder is free for all 5-College Students. Students are asked to please RSVP to Rabbi Adelman at 413-549-4094 or rabbi@chabadumass.com. Drop-ins are welcome.

Tuesday 6

UMass — The Department of Music and Dance will present Jazz Lab En-semble with big band music by undergraduate and graduate students in the Bezanson Recital Hall at 8 p.m. Tickets are $3 for students and $5 general admission.

E-mail listings to news@dailycollegian.com

Doctors attack Abortion Act

RIGHTS from page 1

Abortion Act, which Bush signed into office in 2003.

"There is no medical procedure that is called a partial birth abortion," Fried said. "The terminology was created by the anti- abortion movement."

Fried and many other pro-choice activists argue that the act is unclear and could basically refer to any abortion after 14 weeks.

Panelists at the forum also discussed the issue of Emergency Contraception being sold without the prescription of a doctor.

"Although the advisory panel of experts at a recent Food and Drug Administration hearing voted 23 to 4 that EC should be sold over-the-counter, the matter is being reviewed by political appointees," Fried said.

The Bush Administration has altered websites and fact sheets on sex education, taking off information about properly using condoms, in addition to focusing on abstinence-only programs.

Last year, the Bush administration blocked $34 million of U.S. funding, which Congress had already approved, for the United Nation Population Fund. That money went towards abstinence-only programs instead.

According to the Sexuality Information and Education Council of the United States, abstinence-only education programs do not include any information about contraception or disease prevention.

Amanda Collings, director of the Women's Health project at University Health Services and Health Education said that these programs are not scientifically proven to work and that people who go through show higher rates of unprotected sex.

"There needs to be a balance of comprehensive sex-education as well as abstinence-only education," Collings said.

Most students on campus are not aware of the resources available to them through University Health Services.

Emily Mentin, a UMass senior and organizer for the March for Women's Lives said that although she has been here for four years, she was never informed of all the services provide by UHS.

"We live in such a misinformed, uneducated society," said Christine Rutkoski, one UMass student involved with VOX: Students for Choice. "If we focused more on sex and reproductive education more people would be able to live life to the fullest."

NEED A SUMMER JOB IN AMHERST?

University Conference Services is currently accepting applications for FULL and PART TIME SUMMER EMPLOYMENT for Summer Conference Housing

Pick up an application package at Conference Services Office, 918 Campus Center, or online www.aux.umass.edu/conferenceservices

Completed applications are due by 5pm, April 9, 2004

Rice approved to testify on 9/11

By Jennifer Loven
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush agreed Tuesday to do what he had insisted for weeks he would not: allow National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice to testify publicly and under oath before an independent panel investigating the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

The White House also agreed that Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney would answer questions — together, in private — before the entire commission.

The turnabout reflected administration concern that the president's strongest point with voters — his leadership in the war on terror — could be eroded if the high-publicity dispute over Rice's testimony lingered.

"I've ordered this level of cooperation because I consider it necessary to gaining a complete picture of the months and years that preceded the murder of our fellow citizens on Sept. 11, 2001," Bush said.

"Our nation must never forget the loss or the lessons of September the 11th, and we must never assume that the danger has passed," he said in short remarks in the White House briefing room. He took no questions.

The commission's Republican chairman, former New Jersey Gov. Thomas Kean, welcomed the decision and said the White House shouldn't be concerned that the testimony would violate the principles of executive privilege or separation of powers.

"We recognize the fact that this is an extraordinary event," Kean said. "This does not set a precedent." He said there was still no time set — either for Rice's public testimony or for Bush and Cheney's private appearance. Administration officials said her appearance probably would come at the end of next week.

Bush is staking much of his re-election bid on his performance as president after the 2001 attacks.

But former Bush counterterrorism adviser Richard Clarke _ in a best-selling book and testimony before the Sept. 11 commission last week _ contended the president had been slow to act against al-Qaida before the attacks and compromised the anti-terror battle afterward by going to war in Iraq.

Opinion polls suggest support for Bush's handling of the war on terror has declined. Two surveys out this week show the president's approval ratings on that issue are now in the high 50 percent range after being in the mid-60s for months.

Although the erosion has not hurt Bush in one-on-one polling against Democratic rival John Kerry, the White House saw a brewing problem.

It waged a vigorous counterattack on Clarke's credibility. But the many hours Rice spent rebutting Clarke in the news media only raised anew the criticism of the White House refusal to let her testify publicly.

Even Republicans began saying the administration's argument on separation of powers should be tossed aside.

Commissioner Slade Gorton, a former Republican senator from Washington state, said he was delighted at Bush's change of heart, but he added: "I think the White House would have been better off if it had made the agreements sooner."

Bush has reversed himself in the face of political realities on several previous occasions, especially on the subject of the Sept. 11 commission.

Most recently, the administration, which had wanted to restrict any access to the president by the panel to just one hour, relaxed that limit. At the same time, the White House had continued to insist that Bush and Vice President Cheney would meet only privately and only with the commission chairman and vice chairman.

The new agreement set several conditions.

White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales, in a letter to the panel, stipulated that the commission must agree to seek no more public testimony from any White House official and that Rice's appearance would not be viewed as a precedent.

Rice appeared before the panel in February, in a private meeting of which no transcript was made.

As for Bush, he and Cheney will appear before all 10 commissioners in a single, joint session, with one commission staff member present to take notes, Gonzales wrote.

Bush said he agreed to the change "so the public record is full and accurate" and because "the circumstances of this case are unique."

Fabulous Gift!
CLINIQUE Bonus is here!
With your Clinique purchase of $19.50 get this 7-piece gift, Free. Quantities are limited. Now thru Sun., April 4th
Spring Gift
7-piece Gift
• Deluxe 2oz Rinse-Off Foaming Cleanser
• Dramatically Different Moisturizing Lotion
• New Repairwear Day SPF 15 Intensive Cream
• Lash Curling Mascara - Black
• Soft-Pressed Powder Blusher Duo w/Brush - Pink Blush/Chestnut Blush
• Long Last Soft Shine Lipstick – All Heart
• Cosmetics Bag
Cedar Chest
ARTFUL FURNISHINGS QUALITY LINENS IMAGINATIVE GIFTS
Thornes Marketplace • 150 Main St., Northampton, MA • 413-584-3060

Voting issues spark concern

SGA from page 1

trary decisions in cases of ties. This would violate the right of the Senate to break ties in campus elections.

In last week's elections, this did not occur, but the petitioners worry that these problems with IRV concerning the SGA constitution and bylaws may occur in future elections.

The debate also considered how students were informed about IRV. The petitioners called Russell Plato, secretary of diversity issues, as a witness.

"I think that someone who goes to every Administrative Affairs committee meeting and SGA meeting, shouldn't be confused," Plato said of his own experience. "My understanding was that it would produce a majority."

Fifty-one percent was the majority that Plato thought the elections would produce. However, the petitioners pointed out that Bustamante, the winner of the presidential elections, won with only 44 percent of the vote.

Additionally, concern was brought up over the ballot itself.

"I had to spend a minute familiarizing myself," Plato said.

A second witness, Senator Brian Roberts, who is also the student director of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, told a story of a student who was allowed to vote twice.

He said that the student realized that instead of writing the candidates down in order on the blanks provided, he wrote numbers by the list of candidates' names. Roberts said that the student was given a second ballot even though the first ballot made it into the ballot box.

Hoeschele said that he had spent time informing the students before the elections. He said he printed up 500 informational pamphlets to be distributed by SCERA and the Public Policy and Relations committee. He also held an informational session on IRV the night before the elections, and an article appeared in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian the day of the elections. Chief Justice Marina Grulon pointed out how few informational pamphlets were made.

"I find it funny that you printed hundreds of pamphlets for thousands of voters," she said.

Despite the number of pamphlets, 2,688 students voted for president.

Hoeschele asked the Justices not to be distracted by informing the students because that was not the point of the petitions.

"The Commissioners and I have acted 100 percent behind the confines of the SGA Constitution and By-laws," he said.

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

SGA Attorney General Mark Morrison, left, and Speaker Jared Nokes, both petitioners against Instant Runoff Voting, watch the proceedings.

Paluseo faces sentencing of up to 12 years in prison

PALUSEO from page 1

Paluseo acknowledged, during a discussion with police following her arrest that she began to take oral contraceptives in September 2001, shortly before leaving for her freshman year. However, by December, the affidavit says, Paluseo believed she was likely pregnant.

When Paluseo went home to Plymouth for winter break in December her mother, Elizabeth Paluseo, and Barrus asked her if she was pregnant, according to the affidavit. Paluseo denied the possibility to both her mother and boyfriend. At the end of January, Paluseo returned to school for her second semester.

Paluseo says that she told no one of her pregnancy, including her twin sister, Kristen Paluseo. She denied the pregnancy to inquiring friends, peers, and her dormitory resident assistant. In February, Paluseo's then roommate, Loukisha Hyman also asked Paluseo if she was possibly pregnant. Again, according to court documents, Paluseo hid the pregnancy.

Even during a heat streak in mid-April 2002, Jane recalls that Paluseo wore over sized sweatshirts with shorts.

Today, according to Jane, Paluseo and Barrus remain a couple.

A son born

Paluseo awoke to cramping in her abdomen on May 1, 2002. However, according to court documents, Paluseo did not think the cramps could be related to having a baby. Paluseo told police that around 7 p.m. that evening she gathered three towels and her toiletries to take a shower.

In the shower stall of the second floor dormitory bathroom, Paluseo allegedly admitted to police in her affidavit that blood began to run between her legs, and she felt a weight pushing down on her abdominal area. According to the affidavit, she then allegedly sat down on the floor, with the water still running and "everything came out."

Paluseo then allegedly wrapped "whatever was on the floor of the shower" in one towel, and her self in another. Back in her dorm room, she put both towels, and their contents, into the trash bag, emailed her sister and a friend, ate a bowl of cereal and took the trash to the trash room.

The next morning, the discovery of Paluseo's son by the custodian would shock the campus. However, before the rest of campus heard, Jane says that friends from home became aware of Paluseo's actions through a quick grape-vine of phone calls and instant messages.

Immediately upon discovery, the custodian told her supervisor, who called the authorities. By 8:15 a.m. the University of Massachusetts police and State Police from Troop B, Northampton barracks, arrived at the scene. Resident assistants were notified, and housing administration and University counselors were sent to James Hall to strategize how to proceed.

While administration worked to prevent further disturbances for students, State Police taped off the second floor bathroom after determining the infant had been delivered in one of the shower stalls. Residents in the all-female dorm headed for their morning shower were averted by troopers.

Police asked who, if anyone, on the floor or in the dormitory, had been pregnant. Residents immediately pointed fingers at 19-year-old freshman Jennifer Paluseo.

Police, found Paluseo in her dorm room, typing on instant messenger, according to court reports.

Paluseo was taken to an area hospital for medical attention before being charged by police.

According to an affidavit signed by State Trooper Sgt. Robin Whitney, Paluseo acknowledged her Miranda rights and spoke cooperatively with police.

Paluseo's lawyers, Terry Nagle and Frederic Bartmon of Amherst, contested the affidavit, saying Paluseo was not given a Miranda waiver form to sign and the conversation between Paluseo and police was not recorded.

Outside of James Hall, the press and curious students huddled under a mist of cold spring rain, asking incoming residents what they knew. Several students responded to press questions by spitting on reporters. Resident assistants and administrators asked students to avoid the press, saying there would be a meeting for residents later that evening at which students could ask questions and seek advice. And maintenance workers, including the unfortunate worker who had discovered Paluseo's baby, were sent home for the day.

Javier Cevallos, then Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, declined to comment on the incident that day, saying that the issue was in the jurisdiction of the State Police. The University news office would not be able to release a press statement until the following day. In the meantime, a community waited for answers.

An autopsy was done on the corpse of the baby to determine whether the child had been stillborn or alive at birth. District Attorney Renee Steese told The Collegian during a phone call that day that with an autopsy investigators could determine if the child had air in its lungs, telling that it had drawn its first breath and was therefore not stillborn.

The next day Steese, at a press conference at the Hampshire Superior Court House, reported that the autopsy determined the nine-pound three- ounce newborn male had drawn its first breath. Steese went on to announce that Paluseo had been charged.

Discussion and prevention

A meeting was held at 8 p.m. that night for James and Emerson residents to be informed of the event, and advise them on how to handle the attention they might possibly receive from press and other students. The University would later come under fire for not offering more counseling, and for not having being able to prevent the situation. Questions arose, and continue to circulate on how a University can intervene when a student appears to be in trouble, as Paluseo had. Lobbyists too would get in on the debate, bringing to the state legislature a bill to create baby "safe haven" laws in Massachusetts. The bill did not pass in 2002, however an amended version recently passed the House of Representatives and is being considered by the Senate Ways and Means committee.

At the meeting were Trunzo, St. John and resident directors from each of the dormitories in Southwest-North, with resident assistants and residents from James and Emerson. In addition, staff from Mental Health Services, Health Services, and the Assistant Dean of Students — then Merle Ryan — were in attendance to assist any student with questions on how to get help for themselves or others in need.

Students at the meeting discussed their view of the event and how it had thus far affected them.

One resident broke into tears as she described her confusion and astonishment as she emerged from her room across from the bathroom to find police blocking her from entering the bathroom to take a shower. Although the bathroom had been taped off, the door had not been closed, allowing residents to witness the crime scene.

A friend of Paluseo's spoke up during the meeting to ask that residents not speak with the press, or help to further rumors regarding the incident and what may or may not have happened. She hoped that if the press did not receive further information they would "drop the story."

Other residents spoke to the importance of creating a more educated atmosphere, especially in an all-female dorm such as James, on how to find help if a resident did become pregnant.

Paluseo pleads

Following a change to a guilty plea on charges of manslaughter and removing or conveying a dead body in February, Paluseo faces up to 12 years in state prison or as little as two and a half years in a house of corrections, according to Judge Judd J. Carhart. Paluseo has been released on $25,000 bail.

Paluseo first pled innocent to the charges under an Alford plea. The Alford plea says that the person while in a state of confusion, remembered being present at the time of the crime, but not committing it. Her court-appointed lawyers Nagle and Bartmon of Amherst turned in the plea following a failed attempt to suppress Paluseo's alleged statements detailed in the affidavit signed by Whitney. The plea, Nagle and Bartmon, hope will contribute a lighter sentence.

"I remember taking the things from the bathroom and putting them in the trash," said Paluseo during her last court hearing.

According to previous Collegian reports, Judge Carhart then asked her if she remembered putting the baby in the trash, which Paluseo denied.

Paluseo cried, according to court reports, as the prosecutor explained the background of the case to the judge.

Romero opposes USA Patriot Act

PATRIOT from page 1

The ACLU's opposition to the Patriot Act rests in the fact that the most cherished aspects of the Constitution are under attack by this administration. Romero said he couldn't believe they would want to desecrate such an amazing document with an amendment that takes rights away.

"No one person should have the power to summarily restrict the rights of someone else," he said.

He also spoke out against the Act's late-notice searches.

"This power extends to any and all criminal investigation," Romero said.

He used this as an example to illustrate that most of the American public does not know that the Patriot Act has to do with a lot more than terrorism.

Romero urged the 150-person audience to remember "what it is we're fighting against and what it is we're fighting for."

The Victor S. Johnson Lectureship Fund sponsored his speech.

Romero kept the speech lighthearted. At one point, the lights turned off for a moment, to which he smiled and replied "John Ashcroft" humorously blaming the U.S. Attorney General and enforcer of the Patriot Act. This response was met with a unanimous laugh from the crowd.

There are 274 communities that oppose sections of the Patriot Act, and four statewide resolutions against it. "That says we beg to differ. We have the right and responsibility to differ," said Romero.

The grassroots movement against the Patriot Act was started in Northampton. Northampton and Amherst were part of the first five communities to pass resolutions.

Romero has been executive director since September 2001, and has recruited 75,000 new members to the ACLU. Romero is also a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and the New York State Bar Association. He is the first Latino and openly gay man to lead the organization.

Kendo club prepares for tournament

By Joseph Padell
Collegian Correspondent

The Five College Kendo Club gave Northeast residents a unique experience Monday night, as four of its members prepared for an upcoming tournament by practicing on the grass of the Northeast quad.

"We usually practice on a wooden floor, so practicing outside is quite a change" said David Spina, Kendo Club president and a senior at the University of Massachusetts.

Kendo is a form of japanese martial arts. About 15 students were on hand when the practice began at 7:30 p.m. outside Dwight residence hall, drawing an audience of several students as the practice proceeded. Another outdoors practice session was planned, weather permitting.

As practice continued and interactions between the club members became more intense, Tom Hooper, the club's instructor, stressed to the club members that the primary focus of Kendo is mental, not physical.

"Kendo is equally or even more importantly philosophical," Hooper said. "It applies to school, work, and how we relate in our friendships."

Spina said that though portions of the practice might look like spurring "we do not like to use the term as it implies just going at each other."

Hooper has been practicing Kendo for the past 30 years. Before moving to the Amherst area, he taught the traditional japanese art in New York City. His decision to move to the Amherst area was greatly influenced by previous meetings with Spina, who had spent time training and competing in the New York area. Hooper praised the dedication of Kendo Club members.

"Without serious students a teacher is meaningless," he said.

Joseph Andelman, a sophomore at UMass and Kendo club vice-president, along with Jean Gao, a student at Amherst Regional High School, also participated in Monday evening's demonstration.

Members of the Kendo club hope for a strong showing in this Sunday's tournament.

Tired of the Dorms?

NYC TRIP
April 18th 1 Day
Details: Leave @ 6:15 a.m.
Home @ 10:30 p.m.
Pick up and Drop-Off at Haigis Mall
• Statue of Liberty, 5th Ave
• Times Square, Broadway
• World Trade Center Memorial
• Metropolitan Museum of Art, MOMA
• Shopping in the Village
• Rockefeller Center
• http://www.brozam.com for info!

$34 per ticket!
Sponsored by Brozam a student run business
www.brozam.com
or
(413) 695 - 6929

Looking For Off Campus Housing? We Found IT!!!
12th Annual Apartment Complex Fair
Thursday April 1, 2004
10am - 3pm
Campus Center Concourse
Join With Rental Managers From:
Alpine Commons, Aspen Chase, The Boulders, Brandywine, Mill Valley Estates, Puffton Village, Rolling Green, Southpoint, Townehouse, Cliffside, Sugarloaf Estates, Squire Village, Kamaty Real Estate, Lincoln Real Estate, Jones Rental Property
Sponsored by:
Commuter Services and Housing Resource Center (Off Campus Housing)
http://www.cshrc.org
428 Student Union 545-0865

Change your mind this summer:

• Get the Gen Ed courses you need
• Enjoy smaller class sizes
• Keep on track for graduation
• Choose from over 200 courses and degree programs
• AND take 6 credits or more and we'll waive the registration fee!
Watch for our money-saving coupon in your mailbox.
umass.edu/contined
413-545-2414
UMassAmherst Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bustamante must unite student body

Over the course of the school year, the University of Massachusetts student body and its government have been plagued by a wide variety of problems, and many of them are not going away any time soon.

Students face recommendations made to curb alcohol that could potentially restrict student rights, the possibility of more violent riots in the future, reverberations from the last round of budget cuts, and a continuing battle between ALANA students and more conservative members in student government.

As the new student body president-elect, Eduardo Bustamante knows all of these things. The SGA needs to make huge strides next year if it is to even approach the level of progress that many of the SGA candidates saw as essential to the success of the University and its students.

As SGA president, Bustamante's first challenge is to reunite the student body — it's as simple as that. Politics within the SGA this year have been worse than they have been in recent memory, thanks in no small part to harsh dialogues that transpired following SGA Senate Speaker Jared Nokes' decision to not recognize appointed ALANA caucus seats on Sept. 10. Student government politics have begun to increasingly resemble the type of partisan politics that plagues government at so many other levels in the United States.

With the Office of ALANA Affairs' charter still in flux, those politics don't promise to quiet anytime soon, either, and it could be the first of many issues where Bustamante's leadership will be questioned based on his close association with the Office. It isn't necessarily fair, but it's reality. Bustamante will have to prove to other SGA leaders that he is committed to the betterment of the campus as a whole.

Another challenge he faces soon is the appointing of his Executive Cabinet. Bustamante made a splash this year as an outspoken, fresh and straight-shooting individual. People have usually known where they stand with Bustamante, and that's a good thing.

Bustamante, however, also represents change, and that's something that scares people. As Bustamante selects his potential cabinet members, much of the student government will look on it as the first example of how he will handle his tenure as president. It will be interesting to see whom Bustamante chooses.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian hopes Bustamante realizes these issues, and encourages him to continue the outspoken ways that helped to land him in office. We believe Bustamante could lead the student government in a better direction if he can help end the polarization of student government politics. The key will be to see if he can.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The sad trend of Hollywood

Johnny Donaldson

I'm a movie nerd. I admit as much. As part of my daily routine, I surf the various movie news websites to get the scoop on the newest of Hollywood news. One such site I regularly attend, joblo.com, had an interesting tidbit of information: Anne Hathaway, the good-girl star of kiddie flicks "The Princess Diaries" and "Ella Enchanted," reportedly has a sexual graphic, full-nudity requiring role in an upcoming indie called "Havoc." The piece said that she took the role to break away from the goodie-two-shoes image she has built for herself since the short-lived television family drama "Get Real."

All I thought was "another one bites the dust."

As an aspiring actor myself, I can understand Hathaway's need to stretch beyond the confines she's been trapped in. No actor wants to do the same roles over and over again, and when you get typecast into family flicks than it's a natural desire to get some respect and take on an adult challenge.

But nowadays, way two many young actresses and singers have confused growing up with going bad. Call it the "skankization" of young Hollywood.

It's become apparent that being a good girl is out; prostitution and porn is now in. With the limelight so focused on the barely clothed ilk of Britney and Christina, is it any wonder that desperate starlets are grabbing at the media by disrobing for the cameras themselves?

Talent is no longer a commodity that hopefuls trade in for fame; it's sex. Michelle Branch is no longer the sweet, guitar-slinging folkie that she began her career has – she's a topless sex kitten on the cover of Maxim. She was once a girl who didn't need to trade in on her body to be famous and respected. But now here she is, wearing a handcloth and nothing else and talking dirty to her interviewers.

It's a disheartening sight to behold. Branch has betrayed herself and her audience by letting herself be exploited by handlers under the guise of female empowerment and embracing her sexuality.

Honestly, is it really empowerment to pose like a Barbie doll on a cheap, inconsequential magazine "read" by 14-year-old boys who aren't interested in studying the articles? I've read a couple of these interviews and they aren't exactly deep — they are often piffle that seem overly concerned with the ladies' sex lives than their movies or music. So you got these lovely young ladies, brimming with ambition and talent, and what are they reduced to: porn stars providing sexualized soundbites for horny male interviewers.

Honestly, is it really empowerment to pose like a Barbie doll on a cheap, inconsequential magazine "read" by 14-year-old boys who aren't interested in studying the articles?

And that's the problem: the so-called empowerment is really these ladies pandering to the lowest common denominator audience (in other words, frat boys). Respect is thrown out the window (along with intelligence, talent, and anything else that doesn't involve bikinis) in favor of naked or near-naked breasts. The girls are reduced to flesh, pretty faces to be ogled, used and replaced with the next pretty face. The Paris Hiltons, Jamie-Lynn DiScalas, Anne Hathaways — they blur into one another, like some generic wide-eyed pop tart harping on about her "embrace of her sexuality." (When did embracing your sexuality mean dressing like a member of the Pussycat Dolls?)

The sad thing is that a double standard has been floating around these career moves that no one has bothered mentioning.

When male actors decide to go for the glory and demand respect as thespians do they have to parade half naked on magazines and in movies? No. Not unless they really, really want. Josh Hartnett doesn't have to do a full frontal nude scene to prove he's a grown-up actor. Why does Anne Hathaway? Justin Timberlake got respect and platinum sales when he delivered "Justified" to stores and he didn't have to pull out his penis to do it. Janet Jackson, in the era of Paris and her sex tape, decided that the best way to promote her new "Damita Jo" was to flash a breast.

And that's what's demanded of our female celebrities nowadays. It isn't an explicit demand, but it's there, in the proliferation of men's magazines, in the abundant (and unnecessary) media coverage of Britney and Christina's antics, in the misogynistic vocabulary of hip-hop music. It isn't enough to be good at what you do; you have to be naked while you do it (even if it's done badly). These women allow themselves to be exploited to "further" their careers, but at least half these D-lists starlets disappear into the sands of time. So much for their plans to get ahead.

The only thing that these career moves help perpetuate is the idea that the only way for a girl to grow up and get respect is to lose their clothes, while men don't. They say sex sells — but only if women are the products.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian columnist.

Abusing executive privileges

Scott Eldridge II

This past weeks issue of the Valley Advocate reported, in its "Ejection 2004" feature, that access to president George Bush's National Guard records, or any related records, have been cordoned off.

This is wrong.

When a reporter called from the Spokane, Wash. Spokesman-Review to the National Guard Bureau, the reporter was told that the chief historian, Charles Gross, could not speak about the president's records and that all queries were to be referred to the Pentagon.

The thing about Bush is that he is an elected official, sort of. At least the office of the President is an elected one, and by that description, the president serves at the pleasure of the public. Bush, however, has adopted a tight-lipped, closed-records policy regarding military service, energy consults and even his past arrest records in Texas and has invoked "executive privilege" around every bend.

Public information laws are some of the greatest doorways for citizens and really, reporters and journalists are just glorified citizens. Whether it is something as simple as checking the zoning districts in your neighborhood, or as complex as employment records, the records of the public sector are meant to be open. And the president acts within that sector. Or, at least he is supposed to.

For the president or any of his hand-selected employees to close the books, or sneak them away when these records have been of national interest (in the case of the National Guard) goes against the idea of freedom of information and public access.

While it could be said that Bush's service should not be called into question (political fighting, bickering etc...), there can be no efforts made to prove or disprove his Texas Air National Guard time with locked records. This runs parallel to the Sierra Club's complaint about a secret meeting of Veep Dick Cheney and the undisclosed membership of an energy task force.

And all the while, "executive privilege" has been the reason. Executive privilege is necessary for many things involving national security. Certainly there are security issues that come across executive office desks, military secrets and threats where it could be argued, it is better that the public does not know, and even some of these are a stretch. But for decades-old National Guard records to be sealed, it looks like more politics and personality differences than security or important secrets.

Breaking down the president's arguments can be difficult because they are already intensified by national politics, media attention and an upcoming campaign, but compared to any other elected leader it becomes clear that the president's situation is excessive.

As an example, a mayor is elected to a city's top elected seat. Under him or her there are also, usually, elected councilors. These are individuals who are chosen by the public to serve the public. A mayor serves, as a president does, at the mercy and pleasure of those who elect him or her into that seat.

Were it to ever come up that a mayor had some dealing in land, or business that was crucial to a current event in a town, those records would be available. Land ownership is one of the many open-access records in the country. Tax-worth of a property, tax payments, municipal and school employment records and salaries are all on this list as well.

But say a mayor was elected on the premise that the city would benefit from dealing with a company and that company's ownership records were sealed, or the tax payments that company owned locked up, or the properties owned by that company hidden. This would cry foul to even the greenest beat reporter in the most podunk towns, so why should it be any more acceptable nationally?

Magnified again, the president's records are sealed as far as his here-again gone-again National Guard service. Were it something as simple as tax payments, business ownership or what partnerships Bush is proposing for the country, the hidden records would be just as wrong. Over the past few years what has been sealed has been borderline or entirely unnecessarily hidden.

The issue has made it to the U.S. Supreme Court docket for a reason: it smells funny. Cheney met with energy leaders, a task force, but the public does not know who they are. The Sierra Club has done right to complain, and ask that the privilege of a president and his closest colleagues be made available, in certain circumstances.

The point is, the president is first and foremost a public servant and this will likely come up time and time again over the campaign season. John Kerry is too, and is applying to be an even more noticeable one and to the same degree, any records he would have sealed probably shouldn't be and any efforts to seal them equally egregious.

Scott Eldridge II is a Collegian columnist

How to get your groove back

The world has stopped turning: Mindy and Ell broke up. Six years running, high school sweethearts, made it through college together, and now it's over. He feels she hasn't paid enough attention to him lately, and has taken him for granted.

S.J. Port

The hall is spinning: Rigney's boyfriend back home loves her — but says they just can't be together right now. He needs to be alone — with his baggage: the bottle. Pablo down the hall is psyched — he'd like to show Rigney some 'love.' Rigney isn't having it. It'll be months before she's ready to love again — and only a little less until she's ready for rebound rejuvenation. Pablo can't wait, he needs to get laid (he's getting grouchy) so while nursing Rigney, he's working on his other neighbor Sally, and the Amazon across the hall. But the Viking downstairs may beat Pablo to the Amazon...and Sally — well she's too smart for any of them, plus, she's secretly a lesbian.

Certainly, you can't make pain go away; we all learn to live with open wounds. It is the reality of life.

Kerri, across campus, is openly a lesbian, but can't find any other lesbian to spoon, so she's gone back to boys — she especially likes the slightly tubby swimmers with a bit of padding on the pectoral, and shaved legs.

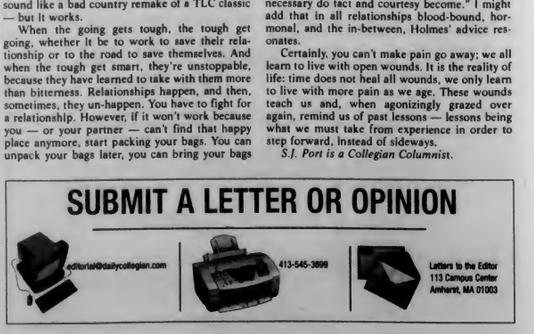
Jackson got burned ... three years ago. He's decided relationships aren't worth his time right now. He's a 23-year-old virgin, constantly flirting over AIM and expensive dinners, afraid to take the next step, as far as he's run the ghost of his first love continues to haunt him. Jackson's roommate, Kevin wears his heart on his sleeve. He's had his heart broken a myriad of times, a myriad of ways, and never gets the girl. But the kid keeps trying, you got to give him that. If only he'd learn to try a different way, and take something with him from the experience.

And in the middle there's me. And, although, I can't break-dance, I'm gonna get my groove back before any of these other folks figure out what hit them. Why? Because I'm not taking it. You can step on me, you can cheat on me, you can use me, and you can make me miserable for only so long, because, baby, nobody can break me. It may sound like a bad country remake of a TLC classic — but it works.

When the going gets tough, the tough get going, whether It be to work to save their relationship or to the road to save themselves. And when the tough get smart, they're unstoppable, because they have learned to take with them more than bitterness. Relationships happen, and then, sometimes, they un-happen. You have to fight for a relationship. However, if it won't work because you — or your partner — can't find that happy place anymore, start packing your bags. You can unpack your bags later, you can bring your bags back, you can chuck your baggage and return empty handed but full of heart, the point being space is not always a bad idea. If you are important enough to each other, you return to one another.

(Yeah, that's right. Now that I've got your attention with the funny opening, I'm going to get serious. Kind of like the cute girl in the boob-shirt who, while you were staring at her chest, goes and sells you on a relationship, instead of a quick — ahem — didley.)

However, before you run off in a blaze of melodrama, take a few lessons with you. Don't run empty handed (or with the ex's entertainment system). Walk, because as you walk you will notice things you won't see running (away from the last thing and to the next fling). That way, the next time around it just might be better. That time may also make you better, stronger, faster, more independent, or sure of how desperately you need to run home again — home being wherever the heart is.



It's true: move on, move up, move out, move in again, move out, just remember to do it all with respect for yourself and care for your would-have-been partner. How you treat a person is a reflection on what you think of yourself. Admittedly, I have a tendency to think the worst of myself, and therefore think the wofst of the people closest to me. No I'm not talking about my friends, more my loves, the ones you expect the most of, supposedly trust the most and give the most to.

My lesson this time around: treat the people you love with gentility and kindness. When my mother heard me say this an evil curl of her lip became a mischievous smirk and she replied, "But if they take your shit, and stick around, you know they're in it for the long haul." Most people would agree my mother's view is unhealthy and twisted. As archaic as it sounds, Oliver Wendell Holmes, perhaps, said it best, "Don't flatter yourself that friendship authorizes you to say disagreeable things to your intimates. The nearer you come into relation with a person, the more necessary do tact and courtesy become." I might add that in all relationships blood-bound, hormonal, and the in-between, Holmes' advice resonates.

Certainly, you can't make pain go away; we all learn to live with open wounds. It is the reality of life: time does not heal all wounds, we only learn to live with more pain as we age. These wounds teach us and, when agonizingly grazed over again, remind us of past lessons — lessons being what we must take from experience in order to step forward, instead of sideways.

S.J. Port is a Collegian Columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

Europe's oasis of tranquillity

World Perspectives

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz

One thing that I love about Brussels is the seemingly insurmountable number of parks, fountains, and general open grassy areas that compose an essential piece of the city landscape.

Every few days I turn a new street corner and find myself face to face with a unique oasis of tranquillity in the midst of a town constructed with world politics and international business. Delightful.

The phenomenon is neither exclusive to certain neighborhoods nor characteristic of Brussels alone.

Other major cities that I have found noteworthy in this regard during my travels include Copenhagen, Luxembourg City, Munich, and Prague. The air seems cleaner in these places than in other cities I've been to and it even almost tastes fresh.

Perhaps most impressive, however, is Oslo, a capitol city, which, rather than incorporating green into its expansion scheme, is itself an almost unobtrusive presence respectfully nestled into its natural surroundings.

In fact, native rivers still flow past the downtown area and trees that have never felt the blunt chop of an axe overlook the hustle and bustle of many a city square. At only three bus stops from the town hall, one may find themselves in the middle of a field with no inkling as to where a large city might be!

Nor is an appreciation for nature limited to city planners and zoning board members: indeed, the average European possesses, at the very least, some degree of environmental awareness and some sense of societal responsibility for ecological protection.

As opposed to the United States, where the Bush administration both systematically denies the existence of global warming and consistently passes mislabelled legislation that actually increases the severity of existing environmental externalities, the sheer quantity of civil society and public discourse built up around the environment in Europe far out measures any other place I have ever been.

Aside from cutting down on air pollution, petroleum consumption, urban noise pollution, and traffic congestion, the bicycle keeps its user fit and in complete control of their arrival time. Along a similar vein, the public transport networks are both much more highly and effectively integrated and more utilized in European cities than elsewhere. In fact, there are annual continent-wide events organized to raise environmental awareness and encourage bike and public transportation use.

With respect to automobiles themselves, Europe also seems quite advanced compared to other regions of the globe. Firstly, there is a distinct lack of inefficient, noisy, and impractically large vehicles such as the infamous Sport Utility Vehicle. Actually, even normal family or personal cars are smaller and more fuel-efficient than, say, the United States. Perhaps more significant, still, is the fact that alternative energy research is a mainstream discussion on this side of the Atlantic.

Europe has also pleasantly surprised me in other ways: every country I've been to has separate bins for rubbish, paper, and metal/glass in many places, for example. No duty that, but the majority of the people seem to respect this system. The Belgian fast-food chain, Quick, donates between five and 10 percent of its profits to environmental protection, recycles its paper products, and advertises to its customers that they do the same. The popularity of "bio products" — that is, food and generally kitchen related products that are organically grown, processed, and packaged in accordance with European Union standards – has further left me with a fine impression and a good taste in my mouth, literally.

What accounts for this disparity between the rest of the developed world and Europe? First, there's the culture. Particularly in northern European nations there exists a tradition of ecological appreciation and preservation, which manifests not only in the form of household action but also results in relatively stringent environmental legislation. Thus, the 1995 accession of Austria, Finland, and Sweden to the European Union greatly bolstered E.U. environmental policy.

Second, there's the political climate that allows for a great variety of interests to mold into autonomous political parties, most notably, the green party. In this manner, significant European Union (at the time called the European Economic Community) environmental legislation began to emerge in the early 1970s.

Finally, and most importantly, is Europe's pragmatism in information gathering and policy formulation and implementation. Many may remember the peculiar heat wave that killed an estimated 35,000 people and caused over 13 billion euros in property damages across Europe last summer. This catastrophe indeed lends more than enough credence to the global warming "hypothesis" to shatter the Bush administration's illusion of "science" and demand preventative policy measures. Others may recall the flooding of two summers ago that ravaged much of the Czech and Polish countryside, inundating the northern half of Prague a several smaller southern Polish cities. How's that for a first-hand demonstration about the dangers of forest clearing and unsustainable soil management?

To those nations for whom fishing is a substantial portion of GDP revenues, water quality is of utmost importance. Therefore, de-acidification of northern lakes and clean up of the North Sea and the Mediterranean have become projects of interest. There exist numerous additional reasons for environmental awareness in Europe that are both sensible and politically relevant, such as legal stipulations in successive E.U. treaties and long-term predictions that global warming will eventually convert Europe into one big glacier, but suffice to say that Europe has realized that the well-being of their persons and their economy hinges upon the pursuit of sustainable development and ecological balance.

It is increasingly clear that US ecosystems and economic capabilities are more similar to those of Europe than different. It is along these lines that I urge my fellow colleagues to realize that our sustained economic viability and, indeed, our personal welfare, are contingent upon our ability to more efficiently and respectfully utilize those resources at our disposition. I am quite pleased to hear about programe such as the new "Cash for Trash" strategy at UMass that seeks to pay students for recycling old mobile phones and inkjet printer cartridges.

This is merely the beginning, of course, but it is precisely the manner in which an environmentally conscious civil society will emerge in the United States and slowly bring our policy into line with our long-term interests and with that of our European counterparts.

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz is a Collegian columnist living in Brussels.

The kindergarten cop

Erika Lovley

An 8 a.m. wake-up call. The first taste of Antonio's pizza. A two-hour walking tour of campus in the sweltering humidity. The first horrific UCard picture. Making the friends of a lifetime. Freshman orientation is the first taste of college life that incoming students have at the University of Massachusetts. It is exciting and liberating, allowing many of us to experience what life on our own would be like. However, this coming summer, the invitations to summer sessions are being extended to more than just newly accepted high school seniors.

That's right kids. This summer, Mommy and Daddy will be crashing freshman orientation.

It seems that freshman orientation is no longer solely focused on the student, according to UMass administration. Parental satisfaction is quickly climbing to the top of the priority list. Freshman parents will be invited to attend information sessions, tour the campus, and even stay overnight in luxurious University accommodations. But where does that leave the students? Forget the late night campus romps, co-ed room parties, and walks to Antonio's. The development, growth, and outright fun that freshman orientation is supposed to entail will now be squelched under watchful eyes of Moms and Pops.

The idea is the brainchild of Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life, the Office of Parent Services and the New Students Program is inviting parents to attend the full two days of orientation with their college-bound child. "[The parents] will actually become engaged," said Gargano at the Faculty Senate meeting on March 11.

Engaged in what, is the question.

According to Gargano, one answer is "skits." Part of the new orientation process will include the planning and performing of three to four minute parent-student skits, which will address issues commonly faced by college students, such as eating disorders, roommate conflicts, campus security, and the code of academic integrity.

"We hope [the skits] will set expectations for student conduct and behavior," said Gargano.

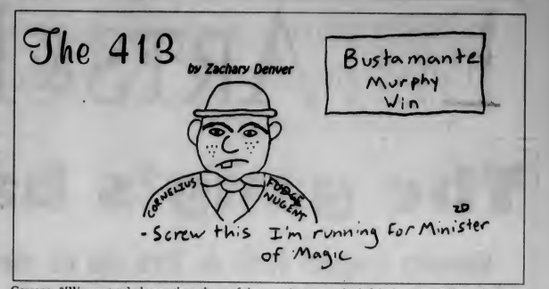
Gargano believes that by engaging parents in the college experience, it will help prevent the chronic problems the University has been suffering from, such as alcohol abuse.

"This is not just an alcohol problem," said Gargano. "[We want to] change the culture of the institution and the student behavior of the institution. It didn't begin overnight and won't go away overnight."

Now this idea is very warm and fuzzy — in a group therapy sense. What better a way for the University to demonstrate it does not expect its new students to handle adult responsibilities? Force them to convey ideas by using the same tactics they used to learn about puberty in middle school. Alcohol abuse has never been prevented through interpretive dance.

Granted, the parental groups at orientation are supposed to be distracted by University informational sessions as students register for classes and have advisor meetings — but what about the other 23 hours of the day?

If the UMass administration expects students to consider its code of conduct seriously, it will promote its expectations in an adult manner —the same that students expect to receive while paying for an adult education.



Perhaps Gargano's idea does have a few reasonable points. Parents who are shelling out big bucks for a college education want to be involved in the new life of their financial investment — their kid. Granted, the parental groups at orientation are supposed to be distracted by University informational sessions as students register for classes and have advisor meetings — but what about the other 23 hours of the day?

It seems doubtful that the Office of Parent Services ever actually polled the parents of students. If they had, they would most likely learn that many parents pay UMass to take away the nuisance that has brought a good deal of pain and suffering into their lives for the last 18 years. Parents do not want to take time off of work, vacation, and life come to a summer orientation at the non-air conditioned University, to babysit a group of 18 and 19 year olds.

It's an old hat folks. If you subject a group of people to stringent regulations and constant monitoring, the more likely they are to rebel — possibly in the form of alcohol abuse, violence, and riotous behavior. And while Gargano prepares to play kindergarten cop, his ideas to prevent student revelry may eventually become his own undoing.

Perhaps Office of Parent Services administration should take the time to enroll in a few psychology department courses. They'd learn that at the age of 18, the ideals and morals of an individual are more or less set in stone. Convincing parents to give a week out of their lives to give a pre-college lecture about drugs, sex, and rock 'n' roll will not prevent another Super Bowl riot.

Erika Lovley is a Collegian columnist.

Putting religion back where it belongs

Bright-n. A person who has a naturalistic worldview, free of supernatural and mystical elements. The fundamental principle of this worldview is that the universe is governed by natural laws and that there are no supernatural forces (Macmillan English Dic-tionary).

Barak Sered

Religion worries me, and I am not alone. There are a large and growing number of Americans who declare themselves non-religious, and are concerned about the religious direction to which our public lives are oriented. Additionally, these people suffer from extreme stigma and are uniformly alienated from public service. I would like to establish some reasons why someone might choose to lead a godless life, and, hopefully, to also empower people who share my views to be more outspoken. The stigma against "Brights" will only persist so long as we accept it.

The 19th century Enlightenment brought about a completely new way of seeing religion. No longer was religion deemed necessary in order for society to function in an organized way, and ethical systems emerged that did not rely on a supernatural god figure to dictate the rules of behavior. Most importantly, ideas were formulated that implied the possibility that life on our planet emerged through completely natural processes with no intervention from an outside source. These ideas were later expanded into scientific theories that provide answers for nearly all of our questions about the state of the world.

There are a large number of Americans who declare themselves non-religious, and are concerned about the religious direction to which are public lives are oriented.

However, not everybody subscribed to these new ideas calling them dangerous and subversive. Yes, these ideas were subversive, but I would argue that their merit lies in subverting outdated notions that were no longer necessary in order to explain the world in which we live.

On Tuesday, March 10, a new Political Action Committee was formed in Washington. This committee is called GAMPAC (godlessamericans.org), and was created by concerned American citizens who believe that religion plays too great a role in politics. They cite examples all over the world and throughout history where religion was a direct cause of horrendous acts (the Crusades, 9/11, the Kashmir, Palestine, Nazi Germany, and the list goes on...), and they claim that our country is also experiencing a dangerous mix of religion and politics (gay marriage, abortion, education, etc.).

During the inaugural press conference of the PAC, Douglas Campbell (one of the PAC's founders) stated that America has not been at all successful in implementing the separation between church and state mandated by the constitution. To illustrate this point he recollected an interview recorded during Senator Joseph Lieberman's presidential campaign in which he stated, "freedom of religion does not imply freedom from religion." Lieberman is withholding the right to choose to not be religious. He sees America as a fundamentally religious nation, and believes that leaders of this nation must share these religious values. Campbell was deeply disturbed by this comment, as am I.

I believe it is time for Brights to "come out of the closet" and admit their belief in a naturalistic interpretation of the universe. The most alarming reason for a public statement of this kind is that we have been desensitized to a culture that asserts religious affiliation as the norm. The zoologist Richard Dawkins raises an interesting example with the indoctrination of children into oppressive belief systems: We would shudder upon hearing of a three-year-old Neo-Marxist-Seynesian. "How can someone so young have adopted such a complex belief-system? She must have been brainwashed," we would accuse. The same should go for a three-year-old Christian, Muslem, Jew, Hindu, or Buddhist.

It is time for us to put religion back where it belongs: in our homes, our churches, and our private ritual practices, and nowhere else.

Nietzsche declared that God was dead, why can't religion follow in his footsteps?

Barak Sered is a UMass student.

New exhaust system law is not the answer

Ladies and gentlemen, there might be a new law coming into Massachusetts. Is it a law making harsher punishments for drunk-driving? No. What about a law with stiffer drug penalties? Nope.

It's a law limiting how loud the exhaust on my car can be. Wonderful.

Matt Elder

The bill is trying to ban the sale or installation of "an exhaust system which has been modified in a manner which will amplify or increase the noise emitted by the exhaust." Even though these exhausts are better for the environment, since most of them are newer than the older cars they are put on, our government is trying to make me get rid of it.

Please tell me why this is a priority on any lawmakers list. It's not even like these parts make the cars go faster, they just make them louder. So then, if we are limiting the noise of my car, I am demanding a quieter Massachusetts as a whole.

Lawnmowers are much more annoying than a loud car. Think about it. If I drive by you in a loud car, you hear it for three seconds. If I am your neighbor and I'm mowing my lawn for six hours, starting at 7 a.m. on a Saturday, I think that is a little more annoying.

Get rid of those pesky snow blowers. They are too loud also, and the same thing applies to them that apply to lawnmowers.

There are emissions laws that are extremely strict in Massachusetts that other states don't even have. Here, for example, you can't change the location of our catalytic converter. In other states, like most of them, you can do whatever you want to your exhaust. So why are we so tough?

Now, I am annoyed by the sounds of certain cars. I drive fast cars, not little Honda Civics with a six-inch fart pipe. I find those extremely annoying, but to each his own. I drive American muscle, and I love it, just like thousands of other people.

In Canada they are trying to ban the use of all aftermarket parts, regardless of if they make the car safer or not. Now there's a great idea. My old car had about $10,000 of work in it, and half of it was to make the car safer for me to drive and better for the environment.

If Massachusetts passes this law, you know that the ban of all aftermarket parts is right around the corner. Now that'll only cost companies millions of dollars and thousands of jobs. But hey, at least it's for the betterment of our society.

I don't get the connection between an aftermarket exhaust and idiots racing their cars on the street, and I know that's why they want to ban all aftermarket parts. The streets are filled with races because there isn't a legal drag strip in Boson, and that teenagers think they are invincible.

If you go to any of those races, you will notice that the large majority of the people participating are under 20-years-old. So why must they make laws that will hurt law abiding citizens like me?

They are making these laws because someone came to the brilliant conclusion that cutting down all aftermarket parts would then cut down on street racing. And when there was prohibition, no one drank any alcohol, right?

Nothing will stop street racing, and no movie is at fault. Aftermarket parts aren't the problems, movies aren't the problem, and my loud exhaust certainly isn't the problem. I don't know exactly what the problem is, but I'm sure it falls somewhere between teenagers driving like idiots and the closest drag racing track over an hour away.

Different states are tackling this issue in different ways. Some are well aware that a loud exhaust isn't the problem, and then some states are like Massachusetts. I have a solution.

Build a legal drag racing strip near Boston. It would cut down on street races, create hundreds of jobs and put a lot of money in the surrounding areas. But I don't see that happening because of the fact that drag racing has received such a bad image recently that a lot of places don't want to be associated with it.

Bet hey, my car is too loud, so we need to solve that first.

Matt Elder is a Collegian columnist.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

CO-ED BATHROOMS HAVE A PRECEDENT

I recently returned to the University of Massachusetts to give a lecture at one of my former professor's classes and spent the afternoon on campus. While reading through the March 11 edition Daily Collegian, I saw Gilad Skolnick's column, "A Plea for Bathroom Reform."

I just thought I would send you an historical data point. I graduated from UMass in 1983. I spent my freshman year in Grayson on Orchard Hill and my sophomore and junior years in Van Meter in Central. During that time, our floors had co-ed bathrooms. If I am not mistaken, many of the dorms on campus that had co-ed floors also had co-ed bathrooms.

And, you know what, it was never a problem. In fact, our bathrooms were generally cleaner than bathrooms on all-male floors because the guys didn't want to look like slobs. Van Meter also had a row of showers and if you wanted to go to any of the stalls except the first one, you had to pass in front of the other showers. There was only a plastic curtain between you and someone of the opposite sex. But, not once, did I ever hear about someone accosting or peeping in on somebody. Of course, the co-ed bathrooms did allow you to take your girlfriend into the same stall whenever you wanted, but, hey, it was fun without hurting anyone.

It was comical at times during Parents' Weekends. In Van Meter, we put a "Ladies Room" sign on one door and a "Men's Room" sign on the other. None of the parents figured out they were connected until one couple went down the hall together and through the different doors, only to meet up again on the inside. Oops.

So, there is precedent for your plea. I don't know when or why the co-ed bathrooms were eliminated. Either the University became more conservative or the students became more uncivil.

Michael Mahoney
UMass graduate

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The gang's back in action

Scooby sequel fails to live up to mediocre standards set by first film

By JOHNNY DONALDSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Did the filmmakers really think they were making another round of "Ghostbusters" when they decided to turn Hanna-Barbera's lovable mutt Scooby-Doo into a live action movie? Did they really think that their bulbous, cartoonish, rubbery looking Doo was a fitting replacement for the simple, two-dimensional charms of the original dog? Did they really think there was a burning need to release a sequel to the original "Scooby-Doo" movie?

These are the kinds of questions that floated through my mind while watching "Scooby-Doo 2: Monsters Unleashed," a loud, annoying, colorful and wholly unnecessary follow-up who's existence at least gives a definite answer to that last question. (Like last year's dud "Tomb Raider" sequel, it proves that just because a film makes money doesn't mean it deserves a sequel.) The movie is a gaudy, hyperventilating eyesore with flashing colors and frenetic action that may keep little ones diverted for an hour and a half. But there's precious little wit here to distract the adults escorting their kids to the crime-solving canine's adventures. For anyone over the age of five, sitting through "Doo 2" is like being detained in cinematic prison.

The movie begins with the Mystery, Inc. gang celebrating the opening of a new

See SCOOBY on page 7

'Scooby-Doo 2: Monsters Unleashed'

Directed by Raja Gosnell

Starring Freddie Prinze Jr. Sarah Michelle Gellar

Warner Bros

Rated PG

88 mins

Grade B+

Daphne Shaggy Scooby Fred Velma

From left: Sarah Michelle Gellar as Daphne; Matthew Lillard as Shaggy; Scooby Doo; Freddie Prinze Jr. as Fred; Linda Cardellini as Velma. The cast of the original Scooby Doo film returns for this sequel, "Scooby Doo 2: Monsters Unleashed."

A dose of reality for Sci-Fi Channel

Magic Picture Box

Ryan Aubert

The Magic Picture Box is a column about that invention we all have and some us actually watch – the television.

Reality television has been all the rage on television the past few years. It seems that every channel, including cable, has at least one or two of these forays into fake reality.

The Scl-Fi channel is the latest to try and offer up a new plate. This dish is surprisingly different and interesting, albeit funny at times. "Mad Mad House" debuted March 4, and its premise is relatively simple. Ten average citizens live in a souped up mansion with five people from the alternative lifestyle community for a chance to win $100,000 (Hey, it's cable – what were you expecting? A million dollars?) One houseguest is voted off by the five "Alts" every week; usually it is whoever is the least open-minded or has completed their learning experience.

What is meant by alternative lifestyle? Well, first there is Don Henrie, the vampire. By a show of hands, who knew there are actually real vampires? Don drinks blood and has fangs which he employs while he has a grand time freakin' out the houseguests with his dark humor.

There is Fiona Horne, the witch of the group. Fiona has practiced witchcraft for more than 16 years and is a best selling author, journalist, musician, and radio/TV personality. The beautiful, blonde Australian can have an effect on the male houseguests (if you know what I mean). Fiona exploited this in last week's

See SCI FI on page 7

'Movie-oke' gives fans the opportunity to make their own version of 'American Pie'

By CAMERON J. WOODS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The "American Pie" movie trilogy has saturated the contemporary comedy world for the last three years. The cast of young stars have entertained audiences by graduating high school, attending college, and even getting married. Undoubtedly these films will withstand the test of time on the comedy section shelves of Blockbuster. For those who are not yet ready to stop beating these movies for all of their comedic juices, there is now "Movie-oke."

"Movie-oke" or movie karaoke is just like singing normal karaoke with text you have to follow along with on a screen. This new phenomena is spreading like a sick wildfire, people are playing it in bars and at parties, trying to put their voice over their favorite movies while reading along with the subtitles.

If this is something that you are into and you are tired of botching your lines before your fourth Sammy then maybe The American Pie Movie Karaoke set is for you. The idea here is that instead of making a complete fool of yourself in public you have the comfort and security of just being a boob in your own home.

Movie Karaoke — Revolve Studios — Grade D

The software is essentially idiot proof: disk goes in, screens pop up, you click yes a couple of times and then it is time to become Stiffler, Jim, or even Eugene Levy. At first it is quite strange putting your voice into American Pie, American Pie 2 and American Wedding but after a few tries it gets to feel just a bit goofy.

Unfortunately there is a limited range of scenes to choose from, 17 in total from the three films. This could be a problem if you had your heart set on a particular scene, but they did an all right job with selecting the more hilarious clips from the trilogy.

I must admit, there are some hilarious scenes from all three movies in this game. Watching the clips are funny enough alone, wait till you try putting your voice over the existing ones. The problem is in the limited amount of things to do; personally after a few scenes I turned American Pie II into a badly-dubbed fighting film. Making Levy mutter death threats to his son got old fast though.

Perhaps the biggest flaw to this game lies in its near instant staleness. That and the fact that it is choppy at times and a very needy bit of software make this game more of a novelty than a high quality entertainment tool.

COURTESY UNIVERSAL

Eugene Levy (left), Jason Biggs and Alyson Hanningan (right) star in the "America Pie" trilogy. Users of the "American Pie Movie Karaoke" set can add their voices to scenes from these popular films.

This place is a 'Mad Mad House'

COURTESY SCI-FI CHANNEL(S)

Among the 'alts' living in Sci-Fi's "Mad Mad House" are fang-wearing Vampire Don Henrie (top, left), Art Aguirre (center), a professional boy piercer, Avacado (top, right), the nudist, Iya Ta'Shia Asanti (bottom, left), a practicing Voodoo Priestess and Fiona Horne (bottom, right), a self-proclaimed witch.

SCI FI from page 6

episode to test the houseguest's respect of her.

Avocado is not only the name of a fruit, but is also the name David Wolfe prefers. He is a naturist, who enjoys nudity and eats only raw foods. In addition, Avocado is a best selling author and is respected in his field.

Iya Ta'Shia Asanti is a Voodoo Priestess who has spent 10 years studying and training in the tenets of Voodoo. She is also a civil-rights activist, teacher, poet, and journalist.

The fifth and final Alt is named Art Aguirre. Art is a modern primitive, as well as he is a professional piercing artist and body-modifier. A modern primitive practices yoga and meditation along with ritual suspension and other traditions.

Each Alt chooses one houseguest to be their roommate for the week, which enables both parties to further get to know each other better. Moreover, these five Alts test each of the houseguests each episode with a trial of each of their practices. One week, as one of Don's trials, the houseguests were diving in a pool of blood; another week, the houseguests participated in a Voodoo ritual in which Iya Ta'shia became possessed and covered the houseguests in animal parts. Good old family fun if you ask me.

At the end of each episode, the Alt's enter the deliberation room to discuss who will be kicked out. The houseguest who won the trial also gets to sit on the chit-chat. Finally, at the stroke of midnight (wow, how original), a houseguest is voted off and the tribe has spoken . . . whoops, wrong show.

"Mad Mad House" is like "Big Brother" meets "Survivor" meets "Fear Factor." The show provides many humorous moments, while still being entertaining.

"Mad Mad House" airs on the Sci-Fi Channel. Thursdays at 9 p.m.

Ryan Aubert is a Collegian Columnist.

Artist with rock roots on show

Worcester welcomes exhibition of local painter

By NANCY SHEEHAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WORCESTER – Lawrence Strauss is the father of two small sons. He is also an artist, which makes him different from other dads in ways you might think of right away.

"I was making some digital prints of my oil paintings and when I got the proofs back from the printer I hated them," said Mr. Strauss, of Worcester. "I just thought they looked totally dead. They weren't something I would actually want to show so I said to my kids, 'Do you want these?' And my older son said, 'These would be great to color on!' I said 'They would? Give me those back!'"

It was an epiphanic moment. He decided to vivify the lifeless prints himself. Why should a 6-year-old have all the fun? So Mr. Strauss began drawing over his digital images and enjoyed it so much he's been doing it ever since, albeit with pastels rather than the crayons his kids would have used if he had let them keep the proofs. Several of his later pastel-enhanced digital images can be seen in "On the Wall Comics," an exhibition at Worcester Artist Group at 38 Harlow St., Worcester, a converted old factory building off Lincoln Street.

The components of each of Mr. Strauss' pieces are arranged sequentially, like comics. He made the pixels of the underlying digital images huge, like looking at comics under a magnifying glass, and stayed with pure inkjet colors – which, like comics, are cyan, magenta, yellow and black. The result is a pleasing sort of photo improvisation inspired by the local jazz and classical musicians whose performances became his photo sessions.

Five other artists are included in the exhibit, which runs through Wednesday: Sam Lalos, Giorgio Frat'Antonio, Kate Mills, Ferdinand Nazario and former WAG director Joey Mars, who makes a triumphant return visit to Worcester.

Originally, Worcester photographer Nancy MacDonald also had been part of the show, but she withdrew her work after artistic differences arose between her and Mr. Strauss, who also served as curator for the exhibition.

In spite of that bit of dissention, the show evinces an underlying unity. The theme is the artistic influence of the lowly comic book, with a nod to the medium's masters, past and present. For more than 30 years, pop artists such as Andy Warhol and Claes Oldenberg have drawn inspiration from the comics. The idea for this show, from Mr. Strauss' exhibition announcement: "Each generation of artists experiences the form differently. Come see how the current generation has integrated the comic idiom into their paintings, sculpture, photography and more."

If Warhol et al. were the parents of pop, the current generation sees itself as its sons and daughters.

"I kind of view myself as a fine artist with a cartooning style," Mr. Mars told the Telegram & Gazette in an interview a few years back. Of all the artwork in the WAG show, Mr. Mars' stay truest to the comics core. His energetic, technicolor creations seem as if they could be freeze-frames from one of the more well-rendered Saturday morning TV cartoons. "It's a Beautiful Day," pen and ink with watercolor on paper, features a maniacally grinning head of a rabbit popping up out of a rabbit hole in a desert while a flying saucer hovers in a blue, cloud-puff populated sky.

Perhaps best known for his rocker art appearing on T-shirts, posters and tour stickers for performers such as Aerosmith and the Grateful Dead, his work combines a futuristic vision with wry commentary on present-day conditions.

Furthest from the comics quintessence were the sculptures of Mr. Frat'Antonio, which have more of a sci-fi feel to them. A photographer and illustrator, he said he chose the 3-D medium specifically for this show. He hadn't done any sculpture since 1982, when he was in college. Once the decision was made, sculpting filled his days, nights, dawns, dreams and twilights. "I decided to step out and experiment so I took three weeks off from work and I did seven pieces," he said.

In just that time?

"I get totally, totally absorbed in my work," he said. "It's like surfing. You ride the wave and when the wave's gone, you do something else. You catch another wave."

It might be the technology wave that he rides next. He uses computers at only the most elementary level, but he wants to go digital with his photography and that will require a considerable upgrade in his skills. "I know I really need to do it," he said.

For now, he doesn't use computers for his artwork, he uses them as artwork. A sculpture at WAG called "Computer Virus" shows a flat black, melted-down mass of innards oozing out of one obviously very ill computer. Another tall sculpture resembles a mainframe gone mad.

"I've got two Macs, the scanner and the modems. I've got the whole works," he said. "But I gut them out and use them for artwork. I hang them from my ceilings. I take the guts out and I put lights in them. I have wires coming out that light up but it's hanging so it's kind of like a hanging light."

Many viewers will find they have an appetite for the appealing work of Leominster artist Kate Mills.

"People get hungry looking at my paintings. I hear that a lot," she said. And it's not just that two side-by-side WAG paintings are straight on, outsized views of a cup of coffee and a piece of cake, respectively. It is their warm colors that lend them flavor.

"It's all in the color theory," Ms. Mills, said. "If you look at McDonald's and Burger King, what colors do they use on their signs? Hungry colors. I don't actually utilize it for the sake of making people hungry. It just happened that way. Orange, brown, red and yellow make people hungry. It's been shown in tests and groups."

Her tasty colors pop against bold black lines that outline each of the paintings' components, in a classic style reminiscent of her comic book idol, J. Scott Campbell.

"Inking is really important," she said. "The black lines in my paintings and a hand-inked comic book go hand in hand. In my head I have so much respect for inkers of comic books and he (Campbell) does it. He has that grasp."

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256.0753
145 Main St. Northampton 586.0155

Jewish, Black communities unite for 'Freedom Seder'

By GLEN STRAUB
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two different peoples; two different stories; one concept threading everything together.

While the cultures may differ and conflict has arisen between the two groups in the past, the people of Jewish and African decent have shared a similar history — one of diaspora.

Rarely though have the two ostracized groups found a common ground on this historical notion. As a result, a potentially powerful relationship is not as strong as it could be.

However, Sunday night, four on-campus organizations attempted to take a step towards unity.

On the top floor of the Campus Center, the Black Student Union, Delta Xi Phi Multicultural Sorority, Office of Jewish Affairs and Student Affairs and Campus Life, unified a small but intrigued group of Jewish and Black students at University of Massachusetts students in their sixth annual Freedom Seder.

"Whenever people from different communities come together in an atmosphere of mutual respect and friendship, the world becomes a better place," Larry Goldbaum, director of the office of Jewish affairs, told a 45-person crowd seated at Seder plate decorated dinner tables. "The Torah — the Jewish Bible — teaches us to treat 'the stranger' in our midst as if she or he were a member of our family. In a very real sense, we are members of the same family."

Although the Seder plates used during dinner were somewhat similar to the traditional Jewish custom — with African-Americans and native Africans in the audience — the content of the Freedom Seder strayed from the traditional.

The Haggadah, a Jewish prayer book used to direct the Seder, symbolized the atmosphere of the night. Normally filled with songs, prayers and stories of the Jews fleeing slavery in Egypt in biblical times, the Freedom Seder Haggadah celebrated "unity and liberation."

Sprinkled with such Black liberation staples as "Lift Every Voice and Sing" (the Black National Anthem), rhymes from hip-hop's most socially conscious MC's, poetry from some of the most acclaimed Black writers and the song lyrics to Bob Marley's "Redemption Song" and "War," this Haggadah proved to be a new wave for intertwining two people histories that are strikingly similar.

The 45-minute long collaborative-run Seder was concluded with an scrumptious meal that included soul food like fried chicken and traditional Jewish food like noodle kugel.

Nia Taylor, a UMass student and member of the Freedom Seder 2004 Planning Committee, was pleased with how the night turned out.

Taylor who is of African-American and Jewish decent said it best when she stated, "This is a great way to bring the two cultures together."

'Scooby Doo' sequel disappoints

SCOOBY from page 6

exhibit at Coolsville's Coolsonian museum dedicated to all their past exploits (all the costumes that their foes ever used are on display.) The cast from the last "Doo" all return for there second go around: Freddie Prinze Jr. as pretty boy Fred; Sarah Michelle Gellar as girly-girl Daphne; Linda Cardellini as bookish Velma and Matthew Lillard as ever-afraid stoner Shaggy. Once again, Cardellini fares best, nailing Velma's vulnerable nerdiness with dead-on aplomb. Lillard is quite possible the single best choice for Shaggy, whether that's a good or bad thing depends on your tolerance for Lillard himself.

The opening night is a disaster; a black clad bad guy comes in riding a real Pterodactyl Ghost and steals away with all the old costumes. Soon, a trash-TV news reporter (Alicia Silverstone) has discredited Mystery, Inc. on TV and the gang is left to battle a coterie of real ghosts, all controlled by the masked villain.

Who is the baddie? Is it Silverstone, so obsessed with demeaning the gang on television? Is it the museum's curator (Seth Green) whom Velma develops a crush on? Or is old time nemeses Jonathan Jacobo (Tim Blake Nelson) and Old Man Wickles (Peter Boyle)? Let me assure you, dear adult reader, that you will have the culprit figured out even before director Raja Gosnell's name appears on the opening credits.

This is the kind of movie where a Crayola box full of blinking, flashing colors is used in place of humor, soul and energy. The writer, as on the first one, is James Gunn who wrote one of the year's best films in "Dawn of the Dead;" here he flips around to write one of the dumbest. The few times that Gunn and Gosnell make an attempt at appeasing the grown-ups with adult humor, the jokes seem weak and half-hearted. (There's only one chuckle-worthy Shaggy-as-stoner gag.) The movie seems more intent on underlying its waterfall of pulsing colors with fart jokes then with smart jokes. Just because you are making a movie for the kids doesn't mean you can't be sophisticated. "Shrek" and "Finding Nemo" have proven this already.

Much of the cast (Gellar, Green, Nelson, Boyle) are beyond this films' league and deserve more than what this one-dimensional piffle as to offer (Prinze, no stranger to bad movies, just seems at home here.) This year has already hosted "Agent Cody Banks 2" and "Confessions of a Teenage Drama Queen;" we don't need to condescend to the family audience with this.

COURTESY WARNER BROS.

Linda Cardellini and Seth Green (top) do their best to make "Scooby Doo 2: Monsters Unleashed" a bearable experience to watch, but to no avail. Cardellini, Sarah Michelle Gellar, Freddie Prinze Jr. and Matthew Lillard (bottom) all reprise their roles from the original 'Scooby Doo' flick but this time around the cast seems a bit too mature for Mystery Inc.

WRITE FOR ARTS & LIVING

Every Wednesday is COLLEGE NIGHT
at
The Waterfront
In Holyoke
FEATURING:
$1 DRAFT
$2 SHOOTERS
$2 WELL DRINKS
Hosted by: DJ KT
Spinning Hip-Hop & Reggae all night long
NO Cover Charge
21+ Only 10-2AM
920 Main St. Lower Rd. to Holyoke
413-532-2202

Pubs in London. Clubs in Spain. Sleep it off on the train.
This ain't your parents travel agency. It's yours.
London.....$316
Paris.....$377
Guatemala.....$429
Air, accommodations & transfers.
LONDON
5 nights, Beaver Hotel
From $714
JAMAICA
Point Village in Negril, twin occup.
From: $782
One stop. No hassles.
We've got everything you need for your next trip.
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
Room 224 Campus Center Way
1 Campus Center Way
University of Massachusetts
(413) 256.1261
STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND
ONLINE >> ON THE PHONE >> ON CAMPUS >> ON THE STREET

Tagliabue's contract extended

PALM BEACH, Fla – All 32 NFL owners voted to extend commissioner Paul Tagliabue's contract for up to three years because the league is facing several key decisions.

Pittsburgh owner Dan Rooney, head of the committee that oversees league operations, said he proposed the extension in light of impending issues such as new TV deals, a new labor agreement, new stadiums and possibly putting a team back in Los Angeles.

Tagliabue's current contract expires in May 2005. He has been commissioner since 1989, when he was elected after Pete Rozelle retired.

HOCKEY

ATLANTA – The NHL approved the sale of the Atlanta Thrashers, and the new owners expect to take over in the next few days.

A nine-man group headed by Boston businessman Steve Belkin agreed to buy the Thrashers, the Atlanta Hawks, and Philips Arena for $250 million from Time Warner in September. The NBA gave its approval on the Hawks' deal two weeks ago.

Belkin's new partnership – known as Atlanta Spirit LLC – also includes Turner's youngest son, Beau Turner. Ted Turner owned the teams and baseball's Atlanta Braves but lost control through a series of corporate mergers. The Thrashers joined the NHL as an expansion team in 1999.

BASKETBALL

HOUSTON – Hall of Fame guard Calvin Murphy surrendered to authorities after being charged with sexually abusing his daughters more than a decade ago.

The former Houston Rockets star was charged with three counts of aggravated sexual assault and three counts of indecency with a child.

The charges involve five daughters who were under 17, the Harris County district clerk's office said. The daughters said Murphy sexually abused them between 1988-91, according to an affidavit by Drew Carter of the Texas Rangers.

The 55-year-old Murphy was released from jail after posting a $90,000 bond. Murphy had no comment.

CLEVELAND – Mateen Cleaves signed a 10-day contract with the Cleveland Cavaliers, who need help at point guard while Jeff McInnis is on the injured list.

Cleaves, who helped Michigan State win the 2000 NCAA championship, participated in a shootaround with the Cavaliers in San Antonio.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

ATLANTA – Saint Joseph's Phil Martelli and Tennessee's Pat Summitt were honored as the Naismith College Basketball Coaches of the Year by the Atlanta Tipoff Club.

Last week, Saint Joseph's point guard Jameer Nelson was selected the Naismith College Player of the Year, along with Diana Taurasi of Connecticut, who won for the second year in a row.

MIAMI – Florida International hired former assistant Sergio Rouco as its new basketball coach. Rouco, an assistant at Texas-El Paso last season, replaces Donnie Marsh, who was fired earlier this month after the Golden Panthers finished 5-22, the worst record in school history.

GOLF

PONTE VEDRA BEACH, Fla. – John Daly will get another crack at Augusta National.

Daly, who picked up his first PGA Tour victory in nine years last month at Torrey Pines, was among the final five players who qualified for the Masters by finishing in the top 10 on the money list or the top 50 in the world ranking.

Daly dropped only one spot to No. 10 on the money list. He was only safe when Adam Scott won The Players Championship, and none of the players behind Daly on the money list finished second.

NFL owners vote in favor of retaining instant replay system

REPLAY from page 10

ardships not seen anytime before in any league," retiring Ravens owner Art Modell said of the Rozelle-Tagliabue years.

Several other rules changes will be voted on either Tuesday or Wednesday.

Changing overtime to allow both teams a possession is unlikely to be approved. The competition committee doesn't favor it.

The committee also recommended instituting 15-yard penalties for choreographed celebrations and suggested some minor changes to the fair catch rule that will eliminate any returns by the receiving team once the signal is made.

An expansion of the playoffs from 12 to 14 teams won't be on the agenda after Kansas City withdrew the proposal. Although many coaches said they favor the idea, the Chiefs felt there wasn't enough support among the owners, and the competition committee was strongly opposed.

Concern about the disparity in cash flow between the 32 teams has been a main topic of the meetings. Rooney, Buffalo's Ralph Wilson and Indianapolis' Jimmy Irsay expressed their concerns Monday.

"With our stadium and ticket pricing and market, we are 32nd out of 32," said Irsay, who went into his own pocket to pay a record $34.5 million signing bonus to quarterback Peyton Manning, last season's co-MVP.

"There has to be some way to create a shift there, and it's the issue in the NFL right now, revenue sharing."

Tagliabue predicted renewal of the NFL Trust, through which teams share revenues from the sale of licensed merchandise. That amounts to about $4 million per team a year. Washington's Daniel Snyder and Dallas' Jerry Jones want to market their own products without cutting in others, although neither has indicated opposition to the NFL Trust. They do seek modifications.

That concerns small-market owners.

"I can't see why we're talking about selling a few more bobblehead dolls in Buffalo," Wilson said. "And I wonder how many Cowboy hats Jerry is going to sell there. There's a far more fundamental issue: the money disparity that will end up making it a league of haves and have-nots."

Where Will You Live This Fall?

Housing Assignment ... www.housing.umass.edu

Process:	Timeline:
Reserve your same room on SPIRE:	March 22-March 25 & April 2 - April 7, 2004
Displaced Student New Room Selection in Same Hall: For students displaced from their current floor or room due to academic or lifestyle programs.	Tuesday Evening April 13, 2004 › Look for information about time and location posted in your residence hall.
Displaced Student New Room Selection New Hall: For students displaced from their current building due to academic or lifestyle programs.	Thursday, April 15 - Friday, April 23, 2004 › Apply online @ the SPIRE website.
New Room Selection in Same Hall: For all continuing students.	Wednesday Evening April 14, 2004 › Look for information about time and location posted in your residence hall.
Housing Lottery: For all current on-campus students wishing to change buildings and students displaced from their building.	*Thursday, April 15 - Friday, April 23, 2004 › Apply online @ the SPIRE website.
Roommate Pull-In: For students with a confirmed vacancy and a mutual roommate request	Tuesday, April 20 - Friday, April 23, 2004 › Come together to the Housing Assignment Office.

*On-campus students who do not participate in the room choosing process by April 23 must apply through the late process and may be assigned temporary housing. Juniors and Seniors who miss the April 23 deadline may not be housed or may be assigned to temporary housing if space becomes available. Visit www.housing.umass.edu for more information regarding late application dates and deadlines.

SHIZUO KAMBAYASHI/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tampa Bay catcher Toby Hall, left, and closer Danys Baez congratulate each other after the Devil Rays downed the defending American League champion New York Yankees.

Yankees blown out by lowly Devil Rays

YANKEES LOSE from page 10

At the sushi stands and sake bars in the Big Egg, the talk was about baseball's most famous club. Yet after circling halfway around the globe, all those All-Stars fell flat against one of baseball's least-known teams.

"I'm sure that there are a lot of people driving to work right now saying, 'Who are those guys?'" Devil Rays owner Vince Naimoli said.

In the second opener played by major league teams in Japan, Mussina looked as if he would have rather been back home in Montoursville, Pa. Trying to become the 100th pitcher with 200 wins, he gave up a broken-bat, two-run single to Toby Hall in the fourth, then let Cruz tie it 3-all in the sixth with his homer.

Martinez, Julio Lugo and Toby Hall followed with consecutive doubles for a 5-3 lead and chased Mussina, who took the loss.

Paul Quantrill got three outs on three pitches to end the inning, but left after his fourth pitch, when Rodriguez banged into his right knee trying to field Rocco Baldelli's bunt single leading off the seventh.

Felix Heredia let the game spin away, making a wild pickoff throw for a two-base error before his first pitch, then allowing a single to Aubrey Huff and a two-run homer to Martinez, playing his first game for his hometown team.

"Obviously, to beat the Yankees is great," said Martinez, who helped New York win four World Series titles from 1996-00. "The fans here love them, but we made them cheer for us, too."

Victor Zambrano got the win for the Devil Rays, who have finished last in all six seasons they've been in the majors. He allowed three runs and six hits in six innings.

The hosts did their best to duplicate the atmosphere of games back home, with some twists, of course.

Even though New York was the visiting team, the Yankees wore their famous pinstripes – the Hall of Fame couldn't find any records of them having done that before. Both teams had ads on their uniform sleeves and helmets, a repeat of what baseball did during the Mets-Cubs series here four years ago.

Actor Billy Crystal wished Yankees manager Joe Torre good luck in a pregame telephone call, and former New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani and Japanese Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi threw out ceremonial first pitches.

Women in pink-and-green kimonos presented Torre and Devil Rays manager Lou Piniella with bouquets. Many of the ads on the outfield walls were in Japanese kanji script, and women vendors walked through the aisles selling whiskey.

Flashbulbs popped whenever Matsui walked to the plate. During 10 seasons in this ballpark with the Yomiuri Giants, he became Japan's biggest baseball star.

Fans saw two teams at major league extremes. New York, flush with cash, opened the season with a major league-record payroll of $182.8 million, more than six times that of Tampa Bay, among the two lowest in the majors at $29.2 million.

Nine of New York's 10 starters were former All-Stars – the only All-Star in the Devil Rays' lineup was Martinez.

After the game, New York's clubhouse was subdued. Special adviser Reggie Jackson thought about how owner George Steinbrenner, who did not make the trip, would react.

"He won't be happy," Jackson said in perhaps an understatement.

In the other clubhouse, Piniella mentioned that the players of the game were rewarded.

"They gave Lugo a check and Toby a check," he said.

"Where's the check for the manager?"

Notes: Kevin Brown pitches for the Yankees against Jeremi Gonzalez on Wednesday. ... The rest of the major league teams start opening Sunday. ... Dropped to the ninth spot in the Yankees' lineup, Kenny Lofton tripled his first time up and flied out to the warning track in his second at-bat. ... Quantrill told Torre he should be OK, but the Yankees won't know for sure until Wednesday. ... Yankees CF Bernie Williams played six innings in the outfield and went 2-for-6 with two RBIs in a minor league game Tuesday in Tampa, Fla. It was the second time Williams has played in the outfield since having his appendix removed Feb. 26. "It's real positive," Williams said. "I've got two good days under my belt playing the outfield and getting some decent at-bats. I'm a little inconsistent (hitting), but I'm seeing the ball well." The Yankees have not ruled out Williams returning for the North American opener April 6 at Tampa Bay. ... New York 1B Travis Lee (left shoulder) hit off a tee and took grounders. He could resume batting practice in the next couple days.

Coaches to shine in Final Four

COACHES from page 10

the Terps.

That's not to say there aren't great players in college.

Just last season, Syracuse won a national championship largely on the strength of freshman Carmelo Anthony. Orangemen coach Jim Boeheim knew Anthony might leave when he recruited him, but there were no regrets.

"I knew he would help us," Boeheim said last year. "I knew he'd be a special player. We were talking about him being the player of the year in college basketball. We weren't talking about being the freshman of the year. We thought he honestly had a chance to be the best player in college basketball."

Krzyzewski, meanwhile, has been a master of keeping players around for longer than many people expect. The last time Duke was at the Final Four, in 2001, the Blue Devils won it all largely on the shoulders of Shane Battier, who stayed for his senior year when he had the game to leave early.

Coach K doesn't have a perfect track record of keeping players – who does these days? – but his is better than most. And that could explain why the Blue Devils have reached this stage in 10 of the last 19 seasons.

Krzyzewski said it's not a matter of "selling" a player on staying.

"It's a shared vision," he said.

"It's what's best for the player. I believe getting a taste of college is important."

Thus, for every Corey Maggette – the star who left after his freshman year in 1999 – Krzyzewski gets lots of guys like Duhon, a gritty senior who is gutting it through a painful rib injury in the tournament in hopes of capping off his career with another title.

"He's my first option. He conveys what I would like to have out on the court really well," Krzyzewski said.

Likewise, for every Okafor at Connecticut – an All-American who could leave with degree in hand after just three years – there are many other guys like Jarrett Jack, a "signature recruit" of Hewitt's who stepped up with 29 points for the Yellow Jackets in the regional final when Elder barely played because of injury.

"Don't call them role players," Hewitt said. "They're all outstanding players in their own right. I give them a lot of credit for maybe accepting on some nights lesser minutes than they could be getting somewhere else."

The key, then, just might be the ability to work as a team without depending on a star.

It's why Calhoun, Krzyzewski and Sutton probably will be better known than many of their players. But it also might explain why those coaches, along with Hewitt, have made it this far this year.

GOLD'S GYM

NOW OPEN!

Bring in this coupon and receive:

$100 OFF OR FREE TRIAL

COMPETITION, PLEASE!

THERE'S A REASON WHY WE'RE #1

BEST EQUIPMENT, BEST RESULTS

COME CHECK US OUT!

GOLD'S GYM

10 UNIVERSITY DR.

(413) 549-6565

New This Week!

BROTHER BEAR

HOUSE OF SAND & FOG

SOMETHING'S GOTTA GIVE

TEXAS CHAINSAW MASSACRE

Captain VIDEO

15 COWLES LANE

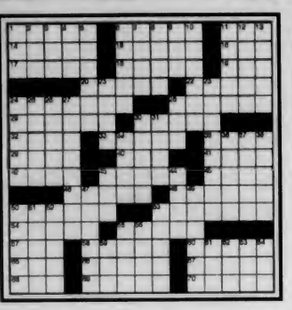
Behind Brueggers

Downtown Amherst

19 MONTAGUE RD.

North Amherst

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



ACROSS
1 Walked in line
6 Web surfer's need
11 Vil doubled
14 Turn aside
15 Hill in Crete
16 Ambient Tokyo
17 Rubbish
18 Runnerless
19 Mean
20 Make shy
22 Decided on 24 Intrigues
28 Accepts
29 Public speaker
30 Trounces
32 Spins
33 Forest clearing
35 Sauce ingredient
38 Ruin shade
40 Nonexist — Pond
41 Wheel rail
42 Wave away
43 Take an oath
45 In the buff
46 Type of oasis
48 Instant
50 Pat on the back
53 Mouths stang
54 Sound marshals
55 Kind of watch
57 Citrus drink
58 Drive ornery
60 Natural impulses
65 Collar
66 Source
67 Repairs
68 Bikini half
69 Grassy areas
70 Process ore

DOWN
1 Workout center
2 Small child
3 Hercules, to Pedro
4 Ex-Bruin
5 Bobby —

9-30-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

6 Generator
7 Popes' mates
8 Heavy burden
9 Place for saucer
10 Rivers, summer
11 Destruction to a degree
12 Inert gas
13 Ø + words
21 Goes to the polls
23 Freighter hazard
25 Some spouses
26 Soft drinks
27 Hit the sack
28 Must (2 wds.)
31 Modern
34 Sandpiper
36 Bulky — West
39 Hooded
41 Partner of "Show Boat"
44 Croquet site
46 Daze out
47 Tribal adviser
49 Theyre almost green
50 Hire a lawyer
52 Basketball stats
56 Pay
58 Campaign
59 Ages
60 Fallback strategy (2 wds.)
61 Point's end
62 One called animal
63 Plaid garments
64 Railroad siding
66 Proceed
67 Frighteners' kind
81 Tatlerhelder's
70 Ballpark
71 Energy measurement
72 Cougar
74 JFK visitor

THE HARP Irish Pub

413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst

Just north of the apartments

Great new deck!

WED. · Reggae Night
THU. · Special Brew
FRI. · Open Irish Seisiun
SAT. · All Butter Pound Cake

March Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Burrito
- Hungarian Noodle Bake
- Garden Vegetable Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Extra Crispy Fried Chicken
- Meatloaf with Gravy
- Native American Stew (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 46
- Low: 37

THURSDAY
- High: 48
- Low: 33

FRIDAY
- High: 51
- Low: 36

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Glen Straub
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln
COPY EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Molly Eggleston/Jen DiMeglio/Dave Pessah

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
A picture lasts forever, be careful.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Always bring an extra shirt to work with you, things may get messy.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
People tend to rely on stereotypes to make judgments, don't let them.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Be nicer to those low-life bastards.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Wow you look hot today.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Don't lend out movies, they won't get returned.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Give yourself options.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Wear some pink today. It's happy and bright.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Amazingly enough you have done well.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
One day you may be awarded a brain.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Eat more jello, who needs vegetables?

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Don't have fun if it's at the expense of others.

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"It's been pretty, pretty, preeeetttty, preeeeeeeeettttty good."

-Larry David

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus
Fraternities-Sororities-Student Groups: 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

4 Bedrooms, Main Street. Available 6/1 256-8138

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town 1, 2, 3 Bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

AUTO FOR SALE

$500!!! Police Impounds. Cars from $500 Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc. for listings, 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

EMPLOYMENT

INTERNSHIPS: Last chance to apply! Get hands-on legal experience with a legal assistant internship this fall. Work directly with attorneys and clients and earn 9-15 credits. No experience required. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office for an application, due 4/2. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

$10-$14 per hour delivering telephone directories in the Pioneer Valley area Must have reliable transportation and must be able to read a map. Call 888-258-5861

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers and Kitchen help wanted Apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst

Summer Internships: Enterprise Rent-A-Car is the #1 rental car company in North America. Due to our fantastic growth, we have opportunities available this summer in our Management Internship Program for the greater Boston area, including Worcester and Cape Cod. Our ideal candidate will be a rising junior or senior at a 4-year college, and have a professional image. Through hands-on training, our interns learn every aspect of our fast-paced business, and experience the autonomy and challenges similar to that of an entrepreneur. We offer competitive pay and a fun and friendly work environment. For more information and to apply online, please visit our website at www.enterprise.com/careers or call us at (508) 427-1003. Enterprise is an equal opportunity employer.

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

EMPLOYMENT

Play sports! Have fun! Save Money! Sports Camp in Maine. Coaches needed: Tennis, Basketball, Baseball, Water-sports, Ropes Course, Golf, Archery, and more. Work Outdoors and Have a Great Summer! Call Free: (888) 844-8080 or Apply: www.campcedar.com

Bartender Trainees Needed $250 a day potential. Local positions 1-800-293-3985 Ext 516

Life Guards and Swim Instructors The Town of Amherst seeks qualified lifeguards and swim instructors. Lifeguards must hold current certifications including Life Guard Training First Aid, and CPR. $8.16-9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week. Applications available from Amherst Leisure Services, Bangs Community Center, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors- Town of Amherst Day Camps. The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Past camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, exp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. Old. 5 range for both positions: $8.19 – 9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week. June 21 to Aug. 20 Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept., Boltwood Walk, Amherst. (413) 256-4065 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer

Local Business is hiring marketers Part Time $10-15/hr Call Alison @413-627-9043

FOR RENT

Moving off campus? Meet area rental agents at apartment complex fair. Thurs April 1 10-3 on the CC Concourse. Sponsored by Commuter Services www.cshrc.org

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

INSTRUCTION

University Partending Classes start soon!!! Call for information 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com

MISCELLANEOUS

Jack Schit for President! If you are a college student truly concerned about the future check out what Jack has to say right away www.jackschitforpresident.com

ROOM FOR RENT

Large, Quiet, Comfortable, Furnished, Reasonable. For male Grad/Professor 15 min. walk to UMass. Avail. June 1 – Sept. 1 Fall option 413-549-1578

SERVICES

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst, Philosophy@aol.com.net

Math/Physics tutor available; $30/hour; $20/hour (travel); Call Dr. Kline (413-552-1805)

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00 413-584-8857

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SUMMER SUBLET

Looking for 1-bedroom apt for summer, around $600 per month. bluejk@student.umass.edu

1 bedroom Brandywine apartment starting June 1 or sooner. $755/month negotiable – includes HT/WT. 549-9489

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

887-4-CANCUN Best price. UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. 13+ not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. $$$ campus reps earn $$$. Flipnation.com 877-4-cancun.

WANTED

Video footage of any UMass riot, will pay money for footage. Call 413-687-3902

Need a room for next year? A roommate? Maybe you're looking for a place to sublet over the summer. The Collegian Marketplace is the place to advertise! Just call 413-545-3500!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 2004

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen dominate

UM allows one hit in two-game sweep

BY BRENDAN HALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two games, nineteen runs, one allowed hit.

In the past several years, UMass and Central Connecticut State have been going neck-and-neck, down to the wire in their matchups. That certainly wasn't the case yesterday, as the Minutewomen went on to thump the Blue Devils 13-0 in the first game and 6-0 in the second game for the series sweep.

UMass	6
CCSU	0

UMass	13
CCSU	0

The difference this time around, as opposed to years past? Hits, and lots of them.

"We hit the ball very well," coach Elaine Sortino said. "There were a lot of hits for us in both games. The pitching created a lot of opportunities for us, and we took them."

For CCSU, the bleeding would start with a four-run second inning, when Jamie Cahalan blasted a one-run home run to open things up at 1-0. The solo shot made it three straight at bats in which she had at least a solo homer, going back to Saturday's doubleheader with LaSalle. Amanda Morin followed up with an RBI single. Kristi Stefanoni then hit an RBI double down the left field line and crossed home on a Hilary Puglia fielder's choice to make it 4-0.

"She's done a good job at the plate," Sortino said. "She's got a good rhythm, and she's good at waiting for things to come to her."

Pam Sulick blew the game wide open in the fourth with her first career grand slam. Candice Molinari then hit a two-RBI single in what was a six-run fourth inning. KJ Kelley opened things up even further in the fifth when she nailed a three-run shot that ricocheted off the nearby baseball dugout, her eighth of the year to extend the lead to a 13.

Kelli Arnold and Barbara LaFogg combined for a no-hitter in this one. In five innings, Arnold did not allow a hit. It was merely one error that kept her from having a perfect game.

LaFogg then stepped in during the top of the sixth and did the rest, striking out the remaining six batters to complete the shutout.

The second game saw even more of the same spark from the plate, with a few less runs scored. Again, adequate pitching made for some opportunities on offense for UMass, and they wouldn't fail.

Jenna Basa pitched a complete game on the mound for the Minutewomen, allowing two walks and one hit while striking out three. The one hit came in the bottom of the fifth, when Sarah Mardis sneaked one by the infield with two outs for a single.

But the Devils' offense was outmatched by another Maroon and White attack. Stefanoni began the campaign with an RBI single in the second to make it 1-0.

Then Cahalan struck again. Coming just a few feet from her fourth dinger in three games, she slid into third after hitting a triple off the fence. She was sent home on the next play by an RBI double by Pam Sulick, and soon it was 2-0.

Kelley made her presence felt again in game two with yet another three-run shot to make it 5-0. In the two games, Kelley accounted for nearly one third of the runs scored on the day.

All in all, the sophomore catcher has been stellar as of late. In the last three games, she has tallied four home runs and four RBIs.

"KJ's much better hitter than she was a year ago. She's very patient now, and she's been a tough out. She makes you play her," Sortino said.

The Minutewomen will finally return home after four games when they put the nation's longest home winning streak up to the test against a formidable Maine Black Bears squad tomorrow in a doubleheader.

Like CCSU, the past several games between these two squads have been decided by one run.

The Maroon and White will be up against some powerful bats, led by the likes of Jessica Brady, Lauren Dulkis, and Brittany Cheney.

"I'm looking forward to [this game]," Sortino said. "They are a good challenge and have a good record, and it should be a great game for us to play in."

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore Katie Jo Kelley connected on a pair of three-run homeruns on the afternoon to pace the Minutewoman attack.

NFL will keep instant replay for five years

BY BARRY WILNER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PALM BEACH, Fla. – NFL owners voted to keep instant replay for at least five more seasons, and they added a twist yesterday: A team successful on two challenges in a game will get a third.

Only once last season did a team have two successful challenges.

The vote at the NFL meetings was 29-3, with Cincinnati, Kansas City and Indianapolis against the five-year extension on replay.

The owners were given several proposals on instant replay, including one that would have made it permanent. They chose to go with the five-year option and the extra challenge.

"It's time for voting on it permanently," competition co-chairman Rich McKay said. "This rule has been tried and tested in our minds. I think we should be a league of permanent rules."

The owners also made it clear they want commissioner Paul Tagliabue around for the next few years.

Tagliabue will be offered a contract extension of as long as three years, Steelers owner Dan Rooney said. The 32 owners agreed unanimously to lock up Tagliabue, 63, beyond the May 2005 expiration of his current contract, which pays about $5 million a year.

He's expected to get about $8 million a year under the new deal.

"He's taken the league to a new level," Rooney said of Tagliabue, who replaced Pete Rozelle in 1989. "The television situation is phenomenal, the relationship with the players' union is great. We're entering an important period, and we want him to continue to lead us through it. It's obvious what we think of him."

Upcoming matters the league faces are negotiations for a new network television contract – the current eight-year, $17.6 billion deal expires after the 2005 season – and an extension of the collective bargaining agreement with the NFL Players Association.

"We've had back-to-back stew-

See REPLAY on page 8

Coaches make the difference for Final Four squads

BY EDDIE PELLS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Looking at Duke's roster, it's easy to find a number of good players, but only one household name.

That would be the coach, Mike Krzyzewski.

Over the past decade or so, college basketball has slowly turned into a showcase more for big-name coaches than superstar players. That reality will be seen clearly this year at the sport's biggest event, the Final Four.

With apologies to Chris Duhon, Emeka Okafor, B.J. Elder and the rest, the coaches will be more recognizable than most of the players this week when Duke (Krzyzewski) plays Connecticut (Jim Calhoun) and Oklahoma State (Eddie Sutton) plays Georgia Tech (Paul Hewitt, the only relative unknown).

"What people like seeing is the teams," Calhoun said. "The name on the front of the jersey is more important than the name on the back of the jersey. I think people still relate to that."

Good thing, because dwindling are the days of Bird vs. Magic, the Fab Five, and the great four-year college stars like Patrick Ewing, Steve Alford, Christian Laettner and Mateen Cleaves.

There are many factors in play, although the prime reason for the shift is the large increase in players who leave school early to go pro. It forces coaches to adjust – not only their Xs and Os, but the way they recruit, too.

"I'm a big believer in developing depth," Hewitt said. Indeed, more and more coaches are trying to recruit solid players – not stars, necessarily, but guys who can contribute for three or four years.

Florida's Billy Donovan gets praised for routinely collecting top-five recruiting classes, but many of those recruits leave early and some, like Kwame Brown, never enroll. The Gators haven't made it out of the first weekend of the tournament in four years.

On the other hand, there are examples like Maryland's 2002 championship team. Two key players – Juan Dixon and Lonny Baxter – were seniors, and forward Chris Wilcox was a junior who left a year early. None were considered big-time stars at any point in their college careers.

"They developed depth, played eight, nine players, had a solid inside game and a very, very solid team," Hewitt said of

See COACHES on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Back in the swing of things

Behind RBI hits from six different players, including third baseman Adam Stojanowski (above), the Massachusetts baseball team rebounded from a pair of weekend losses to thump Sacred Heart 9-2 yesterday afternoon in Bridgeport, Conn. Freshman Devin Barnett earned the win after surrendering six hits and two runs while striking out five over seven innings.

Mussina shelled as Devil Rays whip Yankees in season opener

BY RONALD BLUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO – Fans in the Tokyo Dome seemed surprised. The ones back in New York must have been shocked.

On the other side of the world, playing when the rest of baseball was in bed, the New York Yankees looked lost.

Devil Rays	8
Yankees	3

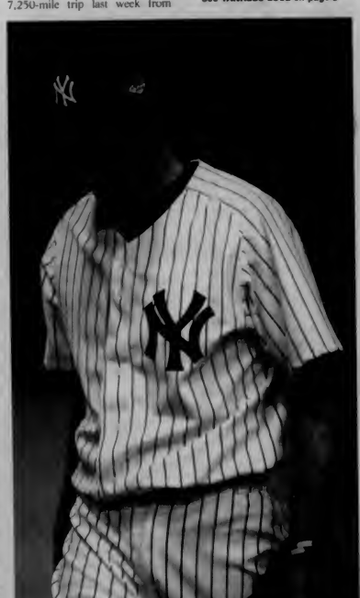
Jose Cruz Jr. hit a tying home run that sparked a comeback, Tino Martinez put away his former team with his 300th career homer and the lowly Tampa Bay Devil Rays roughed up Mike Mussina for an 8-3 victory Tuesday over the Yankees in the major league season opener.

People back home got up in the middle of the night to see this?

"Hopefully, it's 5 a.m. and not many people were watching," Alex Rodriguez said, thinking of when the game began, New York time.

The team that dominates the AL East couldn't do much in the Far East, getting outhit 15-7 and playing sluggishly in the field.

A-Rod's first game in pinstripes won't be remembered fondly in the Bronx. He took called third strikes his first two times up before doubling and popping out. But he did make three sparkling defensive plays at third base, the position he switched to when Texas traded him to New York last month.



Hideki Matsui had the first hit of the major league season, a first-inning double in front of the fans who adore their homegrown hero, and he scored on Jason Giambi's two-run homer to left.

Gary Sheffield also had a checked-swing RBI double in his first game for New York.

Aside from that, the defending American League champions seemed jetlagged against the younger Devil Rays.

"We don't look like we're that alive, yet," said Mussina, who hasn't slept well since making the 7,250-mile trip last week from Tampa, Fla. "We need a little life, and we just didn't have it."

See YANKEES LOSE on page 8

SHIZUO KAMBAYASHI/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Yankees ace Mike Mussina walks off the Tokyo Dome mound a loser after being touched for five runs by Tampa Bay in five-plus innings.

APRIL

Weezer reissues classic album and new DVD

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Garciaparra begins 2004 with stint on the disabled list

SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 2004 | NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 | VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 110

Paluseo receives 2.5 year sentence

By AMANDA KOECK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Former University of Massachusetts student Jennifer L. Paluseo was sentenced yesterday to 2.5 years in the Hampshire Superior House of Corrections for the murder of her 9-pound, 3-ounce baby boy, Cameron Barrus, in May of 2002.

Paluseo, 21, of Plymouth, faces a full year in the House of Corrections, pending probation for the remainder of the sentence. She will be on probation and will receive counseling for 10 years after her jail term is completed.

On Feb. 24, 2004, Paluseo was charged with manslaughter and removing a dead body. Renee L. Steese, the Assistant Northwestern District Attorney asked that Paluseo be sentenced to seven to nine years in state prison. Paluseo's lawyer, Terry S. Nagel, suggested 2.5 years in the House of Correction.

Steese introduced the baby's paternal grandparents, William and Cynthia Barrus, to the judge; they each had a statement to read to the court. The father of the baby was not present. William Barrus was shaking while reading his statement.

"I've waited two years to speak my mind," he said. "She should serve as much time as possible, myself and especially my son have served enough time."

"She murdered my grandson and should be held accountable," said Cynthia.

"Paluseo was completely alone, a lot of people saw she was pregnant and left her alone. It took them in as it took Jennifer in. This has terribly damaged Ms. Paluseo and the people around her," Nagel said. "Anything I say will not change the feelings of the grandparents."

According to Steese, Paluseo had a support system of friends and family.

"That support system was available when the early pregnancy test revealed that she was pregnant but she did not go to that support system."

According to Nagel, Paluseo's current probation officer recommended that she be given probation instead of jail time.

Steese said the probation officer was probably not aware of the facts of the case.

"Justice demands a punishment," she said.

More than 30 letters were sent to Judge J. Carhart from friends, family, employers and

See PALUSEO on page 3

EMILIE DOUGANIS/COLLEGIAN

Jennifer L. Paluseo is handcuffed after her sentencing at Hampshire County Superior Court yesterday. Paluseo pled guilty to manslaughter.

"The campus voice has been heard. The people spoke, and this is the result."
-STEVEN HOESCHELE, CHANCELLOR OF ELECTIONS

"There are no elections to be ratified."
-MARINA GRULON, CHIEF JUSTICE

EMILIE DOUGANIS/COLLEGIAN

Cries for justice

SGA elections declared unconstitutional

By MELISSA BLANKSTEEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In what turned out to be the most heated meeting of the year, the student Senate chose not to ratify the elections last night, inciting protest and leading to the swearing in of Jared Nokes as president. Nokes was previously the speaker of the senate.

The vote was 21 for the ratification, 24 against, with no abstentions.

The crowd of more than 100 students, supporting Eduardo Bustamante who had won the now voided elections, went silent after the vote.

When Nokes was sworn in, the student crowd consisting of ALANA students, students from the Radical Student Union and others booed. They chanted "Eddie, Eddie," in support of Bustamante.

After Tuesday night's Judiciary hearing, the seven Justices found in a preliminary ruling that the elections were unconstitutional and they would throw them out officially tomorrow. They said that Nokes would become president for three weeks until new elections could be held. In the meantime, he could only perform basic functions. They scheduled the new elections for April 28 and April 29. The same people who ran on the ballot would be the only ones to run again.

Dave Carr and Mark Morrison said they would not run again because of time restraints. Patrick Higgins and Timothy Daly are still undecided.

During the course of the meeting, the student government took a break at 8:30 p.m. to eat their annual banquet. They adjourned until 10 p.m.

At the banquet, the students attending the meeting in support for Bustamante held a silent protest. While Senator Gladys Franco spoke at the microphone, they linked arm-in-arm to block the Senators from the food. They believed that student funds were paying for this delay in the meeting.

Nokes explained to The

See SGA on page 2

Early Childhood lab forced to close

Preschool program serving 31 children to vacate current location

By MICHELLE RIVERA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Officials of the University of Massachusetts announced last week that the Early Childhood Laboratory School, a morning preschool program that serves 31 children and benefits 12 student-teaching interns, will suspend its operations at the end of May.

The preschool, located in the basement of Skinner Hall, is being forced to shut down so that the building can be renovated this coming academic year to provide a new home for the School of Nursing and the School of Public Health.

It was March of last year that the Early Childhood Laboratory School first received any word that they would be shut down.

Dorothy A. Meyer, the director of the Early Childhood Laboratory School for 10 years, said that relocating to another building had been the original plan.

Andrew Effrat, the dean of the school of education, which oversees the program, said the school has been forced to vacate its current space, and there is no other appropriate location for it.

"Under the circumstances, we could not guarantee the families a complete academic year," Effrat said.

In addition, Effrat said that the program needs restructuring so it "relies less on the shrinking pool of state resources."

"There are exciting opportunities in other high-need areas that would have to be explored and developed in order to put the lab school on a firmer long-term footing," he said.

University officials say that the closing of the lab school will mean a loss of the positions of three graduate assistants and a dozen undergraduate education student interns.

Effrat said between $50,000 and $100,000 will be saved by closing the preschool in addition to avoiding the cost of renovations.

Meyer said that with the University's facing of budget cuts, officials feel that with only 12 student interns a semester, the 70-year-old program is small enough to be sacrificed.

Meyer said that the closing of the school will be a terrible loss. Not only is the school a preschool that is excellent for the children, but it is also a training site for Early Childhood Education majors, she said.

"The most important mission of the lab school is all about our work with the students on campus — both undergrads and grads," he said. "It is an exemplary teacher-training site which

> "The most important mission of the lab school is all about our work with the students on campus — both undergrads and grads. It is an exemplary teacher-training site ..."
>
> -DOROTHY A. MEYER, DIRECTOR OF EARLY CHILDHOOD LABORATORY SCHOOL provides jobs for three graduate students and valuable opportunities for pre-service as well as in-service teachers to come and learn."

According to Meyer, there were 253 lab schools in 1989. Presently, there are an estimated 71 lab schools left in the United States.

The lab school is inspired by what is called the Reggio Emilia approach, which originated in Italy in 1963. This educational approach for children of three months to six years is based on the image of a child who has great potentials for development and is the subject of rights; a child who learns and grows in relation with others.

This approach is the subject of interest, research, and exchange on the part of teachers, teacher educators, researchers, administrators, and political and cultural figures from all over Italy and throughout the world.

According to the official Early Childhood Laboratory School's Web site, the first and most fundamental guiding principle in the Reggian approach to early education acknowledges that children are "rich, powerful, and competent."

"The Reggio Approach is a way of learning that isn't like any other preschool. The child and the teacher are partners, as well as the parents," Meyer said.

Meyer said that the lab school is cutting edge, and that the curriculum comes directly from the children instead of a regular day-by-day-based approach.

The preschool children live in Amherst and other surrounding communities, and vary in age from 2 years and 9 months old to 5 years old.

The lab school also has one-way, mirrored windows that permit parents and education students to monitor and observe the children.

The school has a rich history, said Meyer, and was established in the 1930's. Then, it was called the Human Development Lab School. The Laboratory School was established as part of an extension service to help women with their domestic responsibilities.

In the early 1970s, the Skinner Laboratory School became the School of Constructivism. At this school, children created their own knowledge through play. Various learning equipment that designed at the school of constructive play is still utilized at the lab school.

In 1988, Meyer was hired as an afternoon teacher for the preschool program. She was hired to be the director of the lab school in 1992. She became intrigued by the Reggio Approach, and started to implement it into her teaching methods.

"The school absolutely is a special place and will truly be a loss," Meyer said.

"It was the only building that was really built for children with children in mind," she said.

Expert shares research on human eye

By GABRIEL LEINER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Dr. David Berson spoke yesterday at the Morrill Science Center on his research and discoveries about the relationship between eye cells, called ganglion, and the biological clock, a mechanism in living organisms that controls the periodicity of circadian rhythms.

"For about 150 years, our understanding of the brain was dependent upon the traditional view of how light is handled in the eye," said Berson. "Our previous understanding was that only two kinds of light-sensitive cells are present in the eye — rods and cones — which were thought responsible for sending light-induced signals to the region in the brain, as well as responsible for setting the body's biological clock."

But after collaborating on research with other scientists, in which animals were found able to set their biological clocks without rods or cones, but unable to set their biological clocks without their eyes, Berson decided to conduct some of his own experiments after theorizing that another part of the eye may be responsible for the setting of the biological clock.

"When retinal photoreceptors degenerate, when rods and cones are lost, animals are functionally blind, but they still set their biological rhythms according to the day and night cycle," said Berson. "But if the eye is lost, this clock-setting response is lost, too. So we thought there had to be some other type of cells in the eye that was sensing light."

Berson further theorized that a third type of receptor in the eye, the ganglion cell, might be the cells that encode and transmit information from the eye to the brain about the biological clock. To find out whether the ganglion cells reacted to light, Berson isolated them so they had no contact with rods or cones and monitored

See BERSON on page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
Features Editor S. J. Port
News Editor Ferron Saltsaker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marry Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagarto
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kuguna
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Rachael Bruno
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Steiger
Assistant Photo Emilie Duggan
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenues. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became The Collegian Siftings in 1903, The Weekly Collegian in 1914 and The Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1958. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been incorporated since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call 545-3500 or fax 545-3698 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Collegian
Collegian
Collegian
Collegian
Collegian
Collegian
Collegian
Collegian
Collegian

Students protest elections ruling

SGA from page 1

Jared Nokes

David Carr

Massachusetts Daily Collegian that the money for the banquet was actually taken out of money the student government raises throughout the course of the year.

As the protest continued, the students, remaining linked, walked around the room. Many had duct taped their mouths with black tape. Others held signs declaring that the SGA had silenced them. They remained in the room for 45 minutes.

The Senate and the Executive branch kept eating.

In frustration, several protestors spoke at the microphone. One suggested that the protesters take the empty seats and speak with the senators.

One student sat down next to Nokes and told him he needed to treat the students at the meeting with more respect.

Several students talked with Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs, who was present the entire time.

"I did not vote for [Nokes] and I don't want him representing me," Malavika Bandani, a student in attendance at the meeting, told the Senate.

Steve Hoeschele, the chancellor of elections, is waiting for the Judiciary's final ruling to file an appeal.

Hoeschele submitted the election report too late to be placed on the agenda. When the Senate first voted to hear it, it failed. After a round of debate, the Senate reconsidered and put it on the agenda.

The Judiciary announced that they would wait to install whoever the Senate voted to be president, either by ratifying the elections and allowing Bustamante to be president, or by not ratifying and allowing Nokes to become president. Otherwise, the term ended at midnight. The Senate did not vote until after 1 a.m.

After the meeting, Nokes was escorted out by building security and a few senators. He told the Collegian that he does not have an agenda for the 35 days he will be in office, but needs to install a cabinet.

"I'm only in it for a little but, but I don't want to lose too much of the process," said Nokes.

The main thing he will do, he said, would be to make sure the next elections will be funded. During the debate, it was brought up several times that Nokes was not popularly elected.

"Bottom line: three times as many students came out than we needed for ratification," Bustamante said. "The students voted. We represent the students and who they voted for. Twelve-hundred students put my name on. Look me in the eye and tell me that 1,200 votes and I'm not the president, and Jared, who got one vote, is the president."

One of the arguments of those apposed to ratifying the elections was that Berkshire Dining Commons was not open either morning of the two-day election, disenfranchising the 3,000 Southwest South residents.

Senator Michael Sheridan is from Southwest South and could not believe that Berkshire was closed.

"I am going to stand for 3,000 Southwest South students and fight for their right to vote," he said. "This isn't the fault of the senate. This is the fault of the elections commission. We need to place the blame where it belongs."

Many argued that the Senate is the governing body that represents the students. They argued that the Senate's job was not to deal with whether the use of Instant Run-off Voting was constitutional, their job was to listen to the 2,688 students who came out to vote for the presidency.

"There are three branches to the Student Government," Yousef Munayyer, former chancellor of elections, and also a Collegian opinion columnist told the senate. "This is the room that represents the people. Deal with that. You have a job to do."

Additionally, there was some debate over the counting method used for determining the trustee.

"The fact of the matter is, we counted the trustee once, there was one winner," Senator Dan Pomeroy said. "We counted the trustee twice, there was another winner. We did not count it a third time. I think that matters."

Because the position of Student Trustee continues until July 1, Hannah Fatemi is still the trustee.

Eduardo Bustamante

Brian Long

Where Will You Live This Fall?

Process: Reserve your same room on SPIRE	Timeline: March 22- April 7, 2004
Displaced Student New Room Selection in Same Hall: For students displaced from their current floor or room due to academic or lifestyle programs.	Tuesday Evening April 13 > Look for information about time and location posted in your residence hall.
Displaced Student New Room Selection in New Hall: For students displaced from their current building due to academic or lifestyle programs.	April 15- April 23, 2004 > Apply online @ SPIRE
New Room Selection in Same Hall: For all continuing students.	Wednesday Evening April 14 > Look for information about time and location posted in your residence hall.
Housing Lottery: For all current on-campus students wishing to change buildings and students displaced from their building.	*April 15-April 23, 2004 > Apply online @SPIRE.
Roommate Pull-In: For students with a confirmed vacancy and a mutual roommate request.	April 20- April 23, 2004 > Come together to the Housing Assignment Office.

* On-campus students who do not participate in the room choosing process by April 23 must apply through the late process and may be assigned temporary housing. Juniors and Seniors who miss the April 23 deadline may not be housed or may be assigned to temporary housing if space becomes available. Visit our website at www.housing.umass.edu for more information regarding late application dates and deadlines.

Berson speaks on eye research

BERSON from page 1

their electrical activity.

"What I have been able to conclude is that ganglion cells in the eye which contain melanopsin [a light sensitive protein] are the precise cells which control the biological clock," he said.

Melanopsin is found in a small number of ganglion cells in the retinas of mice, monkeys and humans. These ganglion cells project to the suprachiasmatic nucleus, a region of the brain that sets the body's clock, Berson said.

Berson also established the distinction that the types of visual systems he has been working with are very different than those managed by rods and cones.

"The surprising thing about the ganglion cell is that in our experiment in which the cells were made to react to light, nothing happened for almost a second. What we are trying to learn about here is not the visual system that reacts in a split second to a softball coming at you, but a visual system that is accountable for a slower but perhaps more significant change in the brain."

Berson also uncovered information specific to the body's biological clock and biological cycles of the body.

"A Circadian rhythm is generated by the brain in the SCN, which is a very accurate and sustaining pacemaker, independent from other body functions. The SCN acts like a clock in your brain, always keeping time. One of the ways SCN gets a point of reference is through visual entrainment, and we may be able to induce a change in a circadian rhythm by modulating these processes in the eye and brain," said Berson.

Understanding exactly how ganglion cells function and relate to vision, the total number of ganglion cell types, and the distinguishing characteristics of each type, such as knowing how the eye sends signals sent to the SCN, is the focus of Berson's current research. Berson said he strongly believes that with this information, new treatments for "disorders that involve the retinal mechanism which shape certain stimuli," which are disturbances of the body's internal clock, will be found.

Berson says it's very likely that these cells play the same role in humans, and may someday be involved in controlling the sleep cycle.

Paluseo sentenced to 2.5 years in prison

PALUSEO from page 1

former schoolteachers on behalf of Paluseo, the most common words used to describe her were gentle, caring, loving, honest, and kind, according to Nagel.

The letters are important artifacts of evidence, Nagel said. They prove that Paluseo did not commit the crime in cold blood.

The courtroom was silent while Carhart made his decision. "This is an important case," he said. "It will disappoint someone. Both sides think their's is the fair case."

According to Carhart, the letters do make a difference.

"I got an overall picture of the person, most [of the letters] asked for probation. [But] there has to be a term."

Paluseo's family and friends who were present began to weep after they heard Carhart's decision.

"As a mother, you hope to teach your children right from wrong. You worry if you push them too much or not enough. You hope you are always there for them and know they can always come to you no matter what the problem may be. I feel that I fell short for Jennifer," stated Paluseo's mother, Elizabeth A. Paluseo, in a letter to Carhart.

The letter from Paluseo's father, David J. Paluseo stated, "She was a trusted, hardworking, responsible part of our community. ... What makes this difficult to understand is that Jennifer is a truly good person. If we had only known Jennifer was pregnant we would've been able to help her, but we didn't know."

According to court papers, Paluseo and Bill Barrus began dating when she was a senior in high school.

"Jenn apparently became pregnant one of the first times she and Bill were intimate," the papers stated.

The papers also stated that educated adults who were her friends and family simply accepted her flat denial and left it at that.

According to papers submitted to the Hampshire Superior Court in December 2002, Paluseo, who was 19 at the time, gave birth to the baby in the shower of James Hall, an all-women's dorm in the Southwest Residential Area, on May 1, 2002.

At around 7 p.m. on May 1, 2002, Paluseo said she felt cramps and went to the shower with her toiletries and three towels. She said that while she was in the shower she started bleeding, then she sat down on the floor and "everything came out."

Paluseo then wrapped herself in one towel and wrapped "whatever was on the floor" in another towel. She went back to her room and put everything in a trash bag and e-mailed her sister and friend. She then ate a bowl of cereal and took the trash to the trash room because her sister was coming to visit for the weekend.

The next morning, a maintenance worker found the baby wrapped in a trash bag in the trash room of the dorm.

Paluseo was dressed in a green sweater and khaki pants, as she entered the courtroom. She was wringing her hands. She cried as the sentence was announced and was handcuffed and taken out of the courtroom.

Bigger isn't always better...
But this time it is!
darts
ping-pong
ABC's fresh brews & unique bottled beers
AMHERST
foos-ball pool
"Upstairs" at the ABC

Looking For Off Campus Housing? We Found IT!!!
12th Annual Apartment Complex Fair
Thursday April 1, 2004
10am - 3pm
Campus Center Concourse
Join With Rental Managers From:
Alpine Commons, Aspen Chase, The Boulders, Brandywine, Mill Valley Estates, Puffton Village, Rolling Green, Southpoint, Townehouse, Cliffside, Sugarloaf Estates, Square Village, Kamuts Real Estate, Lincoln Real Estate, Jones Rental Property
Sponsored by:
Commuter Services and Housing Resource Center (Off Campus Housing)
http://www.cshrc.org
428 Student Union 545-0865

Summer Employment
Glacier National Park
Montana
Apply Today!
The Resort at Glacier, St. Mary Lodge
1-800-368-3689
Apply Online @ www.glacierparkjobs.com

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
POTTERS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

Where are YOU living next semester?
CHECK OUT
PUFFTON VILLAGE!
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.
PUFFTON VILLAGE
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413-549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Amherst Laser & Skin Care Center
"Because you are worth it"
Laser Hair Removal
Both Men and Women
Any Area of the Body
Bikini * Face * Chin * Lip * Underarm * Leg * Back
Facials, Massages, & Microdermabrasion
Laser treatment available for acne and facial veins
Call Now for a free initial physician consultation.
Student Discounts available with a valid Student I.D.
Amherst Laser and Skin Care Center
Bob Weitzman MD- Medical Director
196 NORTH PLEASANT STREET - SUITE 11
AMHERST, MA 01002 - 413-253-2214 - FAX 413-253-2216
www.amherstlaser.com

LAUNCH YOUR CAREER
Apply now for a
Legal Assistant Internship
at the Student Legal Services Office
*Serve the campus community while enhancing your resume
*Earn up to 15 credits working 36 hours a week or 6 to 9 credits working 26 hours a week
Student Legal Services Office
922 Campus Center
(413) 545-1995

QUEEN OF JEAN
THE ONE YOU WANT.
THE WAY YOU WANT IT.
jeans by Citizens of Humanity
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
THIS SATURDAY!
7PM
From NBC's "The Tracy Morgan Show," co-starred in the "Friday" movies and played 'Pops' on "The Wayans Brothers Show"
JOHN WITHERSPOON
APRIL 10TH GREG PROOPS
APRIL 18TH DAVE ATTELL
Call for Tickets!
APRIL 24TH RICKEY SMILEY
MAY 15TH MIKE EPPS

University of Hartford
Summerterm 2004
Earn 3 credits in 3 weeks
Open to students attending any college or university
Get ahead and graduate earlier
• Two convenient sessions
• Small, focused classes
• Choose from 400+ courses
call today 800-234-4412
Sessions begin...
Wednesday, May 19
Monday, July 5
(class start and end dates vary)
Register Online
www.hartford.edu/summerterm

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tragedy underlines society's bigger issues

Almost two years have passed since the unimaginable, unforgettable events of May 2, 2002, when a newborn's body was found in the garbage can of a James Hall bathroom. Since that time, the story and those involved in it have rotated in and out of the public eye, most notably in the last few days surrounding the mother's sentencing. Whenever the incident reenters the public conscience, the emotions are interwoven with the memories of that day.

There are lessons to be learned from what happened that day in James. For those of us who were not directly affected by the events, those lessons are the lasting legacy of that morning. For those who were somehow involved, from the mother to the James residents on her floor, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian continues to extend its sympathy for what must be an incredibly difficult chapter in their lives.

The society and culture of UMass has been forever changed by this case. No one who attended this University, worked here, or visited here during the tragic days surrounding May 2, 2002 should ever have to experience anything like it ever again. The life that was taken was not the only loss experienced, though it was certainly the most poignant and tragic. What was also lost was the sense of innocence that becomes null and void when we realize that "it" could happen here. Stories of newborns being left on church steps dot the news every year, and even more instances of children being criminally and fatally neglected often capture our attention, even if only for a day.

Yesterday, a measure of closure came with the sentencing of Jennifer Paluseo, but in reality, it must be only the beginning.

There are two separate parts to the tragedy of Paluseo's case. The first is the actual incident, the death of a child and the terrible circumstances that surround it. Two years later, when many of those involved have tried to move on, there is little point in drudging up those emotions again.

The second part of the tragedy is one that permeates our culture today, and will continue until more responsible measures are taken to prevent what happened that day. It is frightening and sad that in an age of advanced medicine, where we have perfected childbirth to the point that parents can know the baby's sex just months after conception, a child's life can fall through the cracks, with no support system to guide and nurture it.

That Paluseo was in the position of deciding that the best step she could take would be to discard her newborn child should give a rude awakening to those who think we are doing a perfect job of child care in this country. Paluseo's decision was certainly not an easy one, and it will likely haunt her for the rest of her life, but the real weight of it must be felt by us all as a society.

Teen pregnancy has reached epidemic proportions in America. In a 2000 study conducted by the Alan Guttmacher Institute, there were 85.6 pregnancies for every 1,000 women under 20 years old, and 24.8 of those pregnancies ended in an abortion. There is no statistic listed by the Guttmacher Institute for instances of babies being born and then discarded as Paluseo's was, but the numbers are alarming alone.

We must understand that this can happen here. A woman like Jennifer Paluseo, who has been brought up the same as many of us at UMass, can find herself alone, without a choice. This is not isolated to UMass, and it is not an indication of any failure of character in Paluseo. In reality, it is a failure of our society, and the system of care that is so hotly debated in higher levels of government, but often ignores the people who depend on it most.

Baby Safe Haven Laws are only the beginning — we must rid our culture of the possibility of this sort of incident, through creative, proactive means that don't just hold water in a debate, but truly reach out to each and every person in need. The change must start with our consciousness, and as a community, UMass must use the result of this tragedy as the first step toward achieving that goal.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Collegian Editorial Board.

A most unnatural logic

Gilad Skolnick

I don't understand the mentality of the people of Tibet. Much of the population lives in poverty, and they have been victims of a cultural genocide over the past 50 years, while millions of Chinese have been moved into their country, which is under Chinese control.

This has forcibly and completely altered the demographics, according to Tibet.com. But for some odd, strange reason, the Tibetans don't go about blowing themselves up. They don't find crowded discos or schools and explode. They're oppressed, they're desperate, yet there are no Tibetan suicide bombers. They must not realize that blowing oneself up to kill civilians is a way of defending themselves because they sure are in a desperate terrible situation.

Another interesting group of people are the Kurds. Their nation of Kurdistan is occupied by several different nations and no world power seems to care about them. For 70 years, the Kurds' existence has been denied and their language, identity and culture banned in several nations that make up parts of Kurdistan, according to the BBC.

This has involved into rural depopulation and destruction of Kurdish villages and their traditional society. In fact, Turkey's human rights minister acknowledged that in the past two years, the army has evacuated and destroyed at least 1,390 Kurdish villages. This has resulted in some two million Kurds being displaced, a dozen towns depopulated and also five to six million Kurds forced into western Turkey because of Turkeys actions. Just two weeks ago, Syria sent troops to massacre dozens of Kurds.

So how many suicide bombings have the Kurds been responsible for? Not one. Sure, they're pissed off and they have a right to, but for some reason, they haven't figured out that the best way to deal with their problems is to blow themselves up in crowded university cafeterias and buses full of school children and commuters.

Another strange situation is that of Biafra. The Igbo-Biafrans declared independence in the late 1960s, only wanting to live in peace with their neighbors. Nigeria proceeded to invade the country, creating millions of refugees, killing tens upon tens of thousands of Igbo, and destroying their cities, according to biafra.info.

Biafra has been under Nigeria's rule since, oppressing the native Igbo. They've suffered so much, yet I was unable to find any record of an Igbo blowing himself up, no record of an Igbo going into a crowded restaurant to see how many whole families he or she could wipe out. I mean, the Igbo have no other way to defend themselves, and they're pretty desperate. Perhaps they don't want independent that badly. Perhaps they are happy being ruled by Nigeria.

Then we get to the Palestinians. They've had over a hundred suicide bombings, killing almost 1,000 civilians, according to www.pmw.org.il. Unlike the Kurds, Tibetans and Igbo-Biafrans though, the Palestinians have been offered a state a few times over the past 50 years and have turned it down every time. They didn't even start suicide bombings until Israel started negotiating with them in the 1990s, according to aish.com.

Now imagine that you find the most popular disco on the beach and you wait in line with other teenagers and people in their 20s to get inside. All of the sudden, you see a cute girl in a short skirt and a tight shirt that stops just above her navel. Suddenly, you see nothing but pain. You feel for your face, but all you can feel is shrapnel. You lie on the ground in pain, the bodies of everyone in front of you torn apart into tiny pieces of flesh spread across the pavement. A piece of an eye in one place; a piece of a tongue is somewhere else.

Thirty people are dead, hundreds maimed, and within minutes, the ambulances arrive and a special crew of volunteers called Zaka start scraping off flesh and skin from the pavement so that there will be something to bury. Paramedics take out the rusty nails, which were added to increase damage, that have been lodged into your body.

A Palestinian suicide bombing has just taken place, one of 100 over the past three years that were supported by Arafat, according to haaretzdaily.com, and carried out by one of the many terrorist organizations in the West Bank.

You see, this happened because the Palestinians are desperate and this is their only means of defense. Sure, you could argue that Palestinian suicide bombers could go after Israeli army targets instead of civilians, or you could argue that they could curb terrorism and come back to the negotiating table with Israel, but do you have any idea how threatening a dancing teenager with her friends in an Israeli night club is?

Some people believe that Palestinian suicide bombings occur because of deeply rooted hate and brainwashing by Palestinian political and religious leaders. They say this is why Palestinian teenagers and kids, male and female, are constantly trying to kill as many civilians as possible.

Some people think that the problem is a deeply rooted hatred in the Palestinian culture that is being ignored. Some people think it is bloody acts of terror that are being accepted or brushed away, rather than being dealt with.

A recent BBC article reports that seven out of 10 Palestinians still support suicide bombings.

The real question is though, why aren't all those other unhappy people across the globe blowing themselves up?

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

To all the kids who stand out

Sanam Hakim

My manager looked me strangely for a minute, then broke the silence by saying, "you are one of the weirdest people I have ever met." It's a sentence I have heard a lot in my life, and it is one that I have been raised to deny. Weird is bad, they say. It's everything you don't want to be.

The dictionary definition of weird is, "of a strikingly odd or unusual character." These include the outcasts in the world, the people no one picks for soccer teams, the people no one wants to be seen in public with, the people no one wants to sit with at a table or talk to for five minutes. These are the people that grow up, wear trench coats and have a creepy "I have candy, get in my van" look on their faces. Most of these weird people end up getting professional help at some point in their lives, or even end up in jail.

On the other hand, "usual" is described in the dictionary as "commonly encountered, experienced, or observed." These are the people who know what's going on around them, who know how to behave, who know the right things to say and when to say them. They are the socially acceptable ones.

But when I think about the world and the people that are remembered, who are they? I can't imagine flyers for a presidential candidate for the United States declaring the message, "I am just another commonly encountered person. Vote for me!" In fact, it seems more like the message is the opposite. Candidates for the presidential election go around declaring, "I have a strikingly unusual character, that is WHY you should vote for me." They gather lists of what makes them special, and use that toward the race to win.

In fact, it seems ironic to me that people don't get more offended by the word "normal," because its connotation is quite offensive. If you saw 12 flowers in a flower arrangement, 11 daisies and a rose, you'd probably get offended if someone told you "Wow, you are just like one of those daisies," unless they came up with a great reason why "this particular daisy" is special. (On a side note, daisies are a lot prettier than roses anyway, but just because roses are "weirder looking" people think they look better. They're actually pretty ugly flowers, they're expensive, AND they have thorns. I don't think it gets worse than that.)

The people you remember in your life are the weird ones, and the only reason you remember them is because they did something that stood out.

Anyway, think about it — the people you remember in your life are the weird ones, and the only reason you remember them is because they did something that stood out ... something strikingly odd and unusual, which encompasses a lot more than just "creepy" people. "Weirdness" increases variety in the human race, which is something we need more of in a world that pushes people toward conformity.

This article isn't making fun of people who consider themselves "normal" by any means, but rather a shout out to all the kids who stand out: the people of a strikingly odd or unusual character, the people I will always remember without ever knowing their names. This article is a thank you to that girl in eighth grade who always drew on her arms during class; to the guy in eleventh grade who pronounced the "L" in "salmon" on purpose and made sure it always came up in conversation; to that woman who goes to the Solomon Pond Mall everyday, wearing the same long jean skirt, holding the same empty bag, and never buying anything; to that blonde guy on campus who actually rides a unicycle to class; to that guy in the Worcester Dining Commons who wears shorts everyday, regardless of the weather.

This article is a thank you to the people that I will never know, but will always remember. Weird people aren't creepy people; they're the people with strikingly unusual character; the people who stand out; the people who lead nations. So to all the people out there who call ME weird, thank you. It's refreshing to know that in 30 years, you'll remember me. To everyone else, I encourage you to be as weird as possible: this world relies on weirdoes, or at least I can keep telling myself that.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian columnist.

Spring Break road rules

Matt Brochu

It's been an entire week and no one has written a Spring break article yet. Let's face it. Israel will always be a mess, Bush will always be a quote-unquote idiot, and MTV's "I Want a Famous Face" will always be controversial (I'd be on that show in a second, because as any of my close friends know, I'd pay a ridiculous sum of money for those plastic surgery artists to turn me into Seal). But only once in my life will I be single, 21 years of age, completely hammered, and on the beach with 2,500 beautiful girls — all at the same time — for seven straight days.

Not only that, but I'm writing the majority of this thing scrunched up like an illegal immigrant in the back of a Jeep Cherokee on our return trip from Florida. I've puked up the remnants of last night's over-priced crab dinner in four different states, and I haven't had feeling in my left butt cheek since mid-Virginia.

But I'll be honest; if you're one of those people who tends to get bitter about hearing spring break stories because your sorry rear end went home to Worcester for the week, stop reading. For some odd reason, the entire week is a bit hazy for me, so there's no way in hell I'm going to string together a coherent thought. Thus, the following are some random observations from Spring Break in Panama City, Florida: the land of sun, sand, and 10 a.m. wet T-shirt contests.

Traffic wouldn't happen without cars, and cars wouldn't be cool in Panama City without rims. But to the owner of the '91 Dodge Caravan we saw at the gas station with the spinning rims: wake the (expletive) up.

But first I need to go on a post-Spring Break tangent, OK, so a poor orphan girl approached you in Jamaica, and because you felt bad, you let her put cornrows in your hair for the American equivalent of 37 cents. If you want to look stupid on Spring Break, this is fine by me. Everyone is wasted anyway, so chances are you even looked cute (to some people) by 2:30 each night. But guess what, I haven't heard of many people doing a Power Hour before their 10:10 Ethics class, so your cover has officially been blown. Spring Break is over, everyone else around you is now sober, and your under-13 girls' basketball team isn't in the state finals. So give the cornrows a rest. If I had Hello Kitty painted on my face at the carnival and left it there for 3 weeks, I'd hope you'd have the decency to tell me I looked like a tool. OK, now onto the observations ...

I hate traffic. My roommates and I basically adopted the motto: If there's traffic, someone better be dead. Seriously, if my car is idling along at the speed of my Aunt Alba's rascal, by the time I reach the source of the traffic jam, I better see ambulances, the Jaws of Life, and Stone Phillips covering the scene live via satellite.

Traffic wouldn't happen without cars, and cars wouldn't be cool in Panama City without rims. But to the owner of the '91 Dodge Caravan we saw at the gas station with the spinning rims: wake the (expletive) up. Your van is the same vehicle that brought me to see "Beethoven" after playing mini golf on Billy Wise's tenth birthday. G-Unit wouldn't drive your van. Old Dirty Bastard wouldn't drive your van. I wouldn't drive your van.

Hey Southern States, take the confederate flags down from the rear windows of your Ford F-150's. There's a reason you don't see people in the U.S. flying British flags in the back windows of their Minis: because they're smart enough to know they lost the war, and that losing isn't something people generally brag about.

And while you're at it, scratch off the bumper sticker of Calvin and Hobbes pissing on something random. It's not like you can actually read the words in the comic strip anyway, and I'm sure if Bill Watterson knew that his cartoon characters would be the poster children for white trash everywhere (just like if I had known "What she doesn't know will kill you" would make me the poster boy for losers with no social skills everywhere), then he probably would've taken his own life.

To the car full of dudes with: WANTED - COLLEGE GIRLS written on the windows of your SUV; this is what you're saying to me. Every guy in your car is a virgin, and you made some queer "American Pie" pact to get laid by the end of senior year. Now, after three and a half years of video games, you've still managed to come up empty (SOCOM is like every white trash chick on "Jerry Springer"; it just seems to attract losers). But here's a heads-up. Panama City isn't a quick fix, so there was no need to buy that box of condoms at the first gas station you could find in Florida. The only way they'll get used is when you get hammered and blow them up like balloons.

To conclude this, I'll leave you with the four most important things I learned on this trip: 1) If I lived in the South, I'd feel as out-of-place as Rudy Huxtable looks in that Chingy video. 2) Dunkin Donuts ceases to exist about halfway through Virginia, and I'm going to be honest, so does modern civilization as we know it. 3) Never stay at a hotel that necessitates holding the toilet handle down 8 to 12 seconds before it flushes. 4) Don't blink. Not because you should enjoy every single moment of your trip, but because you never know when a boob might come out to say hello.

Matt Brochu is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Solvent makes listeners go 'Ga Ga' for music

By Timothy Gabriele
Collegian Staff

Don't let the title of the two remix EPs simultaneously released by Suction Records-founding guru Jason Amm, aka Solvent, fool you. You'll find no glacially hypnotic synthpop covers of old Queen classics redefined for ecstatic noveau disco fiends still reeling over the hot heat of Scissor Sisters's raunchy electrofied take on Pink Floyd's "Comfortably Numb." The EP does perhaps wield an aesthetic and lyrical kinship with the 1984 classic Freddie Mercury lament, but Solvent's latest, thankfully, reaches further than the dull comfort of a novelty single.

Solvent — 'Radio Ga Ga Pt. 1,2' — Ghostly International

The title actually refers to the year-old Solvent track "My Radio," one of the many highlights off Ghostly International Records' excellent neo electro smorgasbord "Tangent Noveau." On that compilation, Solvent shocked his loyal listeners by investing in something that he had previously not attempted on his three studio albums: vocals.

Sure, those vocals were done with a vocoder, but for Solvent, the change was revolutionary. The premature posturing for Warp Records executives that filled his first two albums had been completely dropped and the man was now free to focus completely on magnanimously gorgeous synthpop. Only fitting that he should mark this transitional phase with a love song to his radio, yearning for the days when his heroes in Yaz, OMD, and the Human League could be heard with regularity across the airwaves. In "You've Changed," a genuinely perturbed Asimov robot sings.

Solvent followed the song with a contribution to the Morr Music Slowdive tribute "Blue Skied an' Clear," a cover of the legendary dreampop ensemble's "When The Sun Hits." Competing against a separate cover by indie darlings Mum, Solvent fired up an achingly melancholy track that owed much of its appeal to its fragile, organic and subtly inflected robot intonations (for those that think a robot cannot make you cry I suggest you get your hands on this track and DMX Krew's "The Glass Room").

Solvent appears to be laying the groundwork for his much awaited follow-up to 2001's "Solvent City." Since the time of that last full-length release, the electronic musical landscape has increasingly swayed in Solvent's favor (with practically no recognition being directed his way). Unfortunately, electroclash too absolved the mutant android voice to the point where it has come to be seen as a cliché within the genre. European and urban American DJs have coopted the sonic device as an automatic dancefloor hook. Popularized by '80s electrofunk and early hip-hop, the now omnipresent low-end vocoder vocal heard in cuts like Debasser's "Fat Girls" is the arbiter of much Zapp and Roger styled mindless boogie, and very little soul.

COURTESY SUNSETTOWN
Jason Amm, aka Solvent

Anyone familiar with Solvent's back catalogue will find this no cause for alarm whatsoever. With his new romantic sensibilities and his first-class grasp of melody, Amm's decidedly loyal penchant for the timeless ensures that him and the six remixers that appear on these thematically bonded releases stay the hell away from anything resembling disposability.

"My Radio" gets the royal treatment by Solvent's contemporaries in the form of some succulent new wave remixes. Part 2 boasts another single, the equally enchanting "For You," which receives two remixes of its own.

The remaining two unreleased Solvent tracks are both solid, analogue templates, though they hardly occupy the same stratosphere as the dynamically minimalist headliners. Each contains the signature robotic voices, albeit here they are a bit more abstractly employed. It's hard to make out what Amm is trying to say in "Radio Goo Goo" (which completes the Queen reference), but it gestures an elegant conclusion to the first EP with its cascading squarewaves, soft strings and pulsating heartbeat. The trickling dew of those squarewaves may remind the 8-bit minded listeners of the Koji Kondu score during Mario's majestical fall through the stars after completing each castle in "Super Mario 3."

Video games have always been a soundbase for Solvent's approach. One can imagine the city of the "Solvent City" EP being nothing less than a lush technotopia, wherein pinball wizards and knob twiddlers come together in the great arcade in the sky. Solvent's music is perpetually caught in a daydream, an immortal Elysium wherein the playfulness of childhood is immutably sustained. I've always said that if I have children, I'd play them Kraftwerk before Brahms as lullabies. Ditto Solvent.

Except for Legowelt's scramble of "My Radio," which is a paranoid, dark rush, the remixers maintain this airy attitude. Lowfish and ISAN take on "For You" in their own styles. Lowfish's personal style just happens to be a lot like Solvent and therefore, he stays relatively close to the original. This is partially forgivable since Lowfish is the co-founder of Suction Records along with Solvent. Regardless of how radical it is, Lowfish's "For You" sways like a Postal Service single and would prove an equally powerful single.

ISAN's mix drops the beats altogether and swivels the song along on glitchy snips and ambient hums. It is one of the weakest tracks on the double EPs. However, looking at the track in the context of the entire double EP set, it does effectively wind down the pace and lead nicely into "Radio Goo Goo." The mix is not even that bad, just a tad understated.

Schneider TM, perhaps best known for putting a forlorn robot Morrissey atop his cover of The Smiths "There is a Light That Never Goes Out," actually chooses to scrap the vocoded vocal and dub his own human vocals over his remix. In addition, he swaps some analogues for backwards sweeps, samples and twangy detuned guitars. The bouncy outcomes of the experiment come out sounding like some of the stellar material that has come out of the Notwist and Her Space Holiday camps.

See SOLVENT on page 6

BACK IN BLUE

Nerdy alternative rockers Weezer re-release classic blue album

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

IT WAS A LITTLE under 10 years ago when Weezer, a California-based band that seemed more fit (and willing) to play Dungeons & Dragons than rock a stadium, inauspiciously released their debut work.

The self-titled album, which has come to be referred to as "The Blue Album" (after the color of the artwork) introduced, with the help of the hit singles "Undone (The Sweater Song)," "Buddy Holly" and "Say It Ain't So," the band to an audience of over 3 million enthralled listeners.

Weezer is now practically an alt-pop-rock institution. It's had the two of the best albums of the 1990s: "Blue" and their 1996 follow-up "Pinkerton." Also under its belt are the equally great 2001 self-titled effort, referred to as "The Green Album," and the not quite as outstanding, but far above average 2002 release, "Maladroit." Now, the band is being honored with a double-disc reissue of their debut and a packed DVD that traces every step to where they are now.

Weezer — 'Weezer: Deluxe Edition' — Geffen

Ten years ago all this fanfare wasn't even imaginable, as "The Blue Album" barely sold at all when it was first released.

"Nobody was shocked that ['The Blue Album'] only sold 90 albums [in its first week]," recalled Karl Koch during a phone interview with The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Koch is the band's friend, photographer, Web master and archivist. He has been with the band since before they were signed and also assembled its DVD.

"Nobody knew about the band," Koch continued. "They had never toured outside California. I just remember ... living in an apartment with Rivers [Cuomo, the band's frontman]. One night, we were [listening to a college radio station] and we heard 'The Sweater Song.' We were freaked out — like 'Holy crap, there it is!'...

"It could've died there, but then we heard Rodney Bingenheimer, the big KROQ DJ, ... play it on his show. Usually when he plays something, the station will pick it up. It took off. MTV put it in their 'buzz bin.'

"That moment was the real moment."

The special edition of "The Blue Album" is a true testament that, even though Weezer is still a relatively young band, it has had a great impact on the world of rock music.

The first disc of the deluxe edition features a remastered version of the already-classic album, although the difference is barely audible. The second disc contains 14 tracks, including all the b-sides for "The Blue Album" singles.

There're also some early, pre-Geffen demos from what is known as "The Kitchen Tapes" (named because the drums were recorded in the kitchen of the band's rented house) and the original mix of "Say It Ain't So." Even two previously unheard songs, "I Swear It's True" and "Lullaby For Wayne," find a place on this collection.

The tracks range from cool-for-completists ("My Name Is Jonas," live) to songs that are amongst Weezer's best ("Susanne" and "Jamie"). "The Kitchen Tapes" are interesting, but diehards will be upset that only three of the five songs made the cut.

All in all, the set is a welcome addition but not a necessity.

"I actually wrote a huge story about making 'The Blue Album,' which did not appear in the liner notes just because of space," Koch said of his help in putting the anthology together.

For track selection, it seemed everyone weighted in with thoughts.

"It was really a compromise between my vision, and the band's vision, and Todd's vision [the band's A&R man]," Koch explained. "They really wanted to be more cautious with the selection. I wanted to blow it out and put tons of stuff in there. I kinda lost."

Luckily on the DVD, titled "Video Capture Device," Koch was the person behind the project. He culled over a decade's worth of footage to show studio sessions, live performances and everything in between (including hysterical footage of the band attempting, and failing, to shoot promos for a Yahoo sponsored tour). The DVD contains all of the band's videos: even the rarely seen "Photograph" and "Slob" clips, both directed by Koch. It includes commentary on every video, alternate cuts and behind-the-scenes footage for many of them.

"There are numerous intents going on at once. I wasn't shooting a documentary like the way you'd shoot something for The History Channel — you interview people after the fact," Koch said. "I'm just putting together actual vintage footage. I really slanted it toward fans that would want to eat it up."

Koch added that if the viewer is to watch the DVD straight through, they might find themselves running into the same thing over and over.

"We wanted it to be in chronological order," he said. "In doing that, there were things that repeated themselves ... it's not a film ... there's no way to get around that."

"One night, we were [listening to a college radio station] and we heard 'The Sweater Song.' We were freaked out — like 'Holy crap, there it is!'..."

-Karl Koch, friend, photographer and archivist

Weezer is backed on the famous self-titled album

PHOTOS (3) COURTESY GEFFEN

See WEEZER on page 6

'Eve' realizes what's worth keeping is right in front of her face

Advice from Eve:

Q: I really like this guy who is completely my opposite in personality. I am a lot more outgoing than him, and I think I might intimidate him at times. I don't really think he would ever assume I would like him because of our differences. I have given him the chance to see I am interested, but I am still not certain he understands. What can I do to actually let him know I want more than just friendship? - K.L.

A: Your first step is to ask him out. See what he says and from there you can know if he's interested also. I believe when it comes to guys and intimidation, they seem to play more games. If he wants to feel as though he has some sort of power, he may act as if he's disinterested. If he seems unsure of what he wants, maybe he realizes there is a possibility of personality clashes in the future. But you must initiate your interest first.

Q: One of my closest friends and I started dating a month ago. He has everything I have been wanting in a guy, and I feel so comfortable when we are together.The only problem is that I don't get butterflies when I see him. It is just a different kind of nice feeling. I still look around at other guys, hoping there might be better. But I already know there isn't. I don't even know if I want to commit fully to him. What is wrong with me? -L.J.

A: Well, it seems as though you might not be ready to settle down. You want all of the feelings that don't normally happen when you truly love someone. Butterflies are innocent, flirty and exciting feelings that people have when they are not so comfortable. You seem to have a mature, realistic partnership with this person. Isn't that enough? If you realize you aren't completely sure about being with him, then don't. You need to figure out what you want, and everything will eventually seem right..

Original Sin

Eve

The most wonderful aspect of growing up is the security of knowing what we want, getting it ant and ultimately keeping it.

But when do we really know what we really want? And how do you know if what you want would truly be satisfying? Somewhere, there lays a fine line between thinking we want something and actually getting it. If knowing comes with maturation, then I have certainly regressed ...

... My friend had pleaded to me to come home this weekend and accompany her on a small adventure. I agreed without question.

Usually, home is Boston. But nowadays home has become Allston — as it is to so many other students. And as we dolled up for another night in my new home, she suddenly smiled and said, "We're crossing the river!"

I don't remember smiling, but somehow we both understood that it was time to fish in the sea and say goodbye to the sewers for a while.

Now it was time for Harvard.

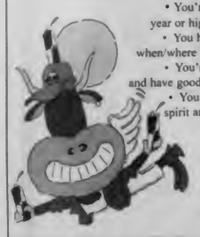
As we entered the square, we couldn't help but notice a change in atmosphere. It was so quiet, so dark and so new. We had completely neglected this part of our home for nearly our entire college experience. But as we walked toward our destination bar, I suddenly realized why.

We looked absolutely ridiculous. I think there is an unspoken ban in Cambridge that prohibits fashionable nightwear. Only later did two Harvard men reconfirm my thoughts. As we ordered our drinks, they approached our table with utmost confidence and sat down. They introduced themselves like perfect gentlemen, asked if they may join and treated us to a drink.

As the conversation began, the inevitable question was asked; "So, are you girls from the other side?" I almost choked on my drink. I didn't know if this was an insult or a complement. And so I asked them.

Apparently, girls from the other side are materialistic, they go to unimportant schools and don't think enough. And apparently, guys from this side generalize too much, need to go shopping, and are slightly hypocritical. I wondered why they came to us, rather than the girls they claim to appreciate more. Maybe because we were more appealing to the eye? Maybe because they generally do prefer outer beauty? Maybe once they realized we were not like those girls across that gigantic, unseen river, they could become philosophical: "What do girls like you want?"

I would think a Harvard grad student would know something like that ... I mean if he doesn't, why would I? And for some very odd reason, I became hot. Terrified that he might see I have no idea.



I knew I did not want this guy, this bar and this conversation. I wanted to leave. And we did. We went straight back into our comfortably, trashy home of Allston. And loved every minute of it.

Eve is pen name for a love guru attending UMass who knows the ins and outs of every relationship. You can ask Eve for advice by e-mailing her at eve_originalsin@yahoo.com. "Original Sin with Eve" runs every Thursday in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

RED BULL GIVES YOU WIIINGS. OH, AND A GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

Red Bull is on the lookout for a Student Brand Manager (SBM). An SBM is a reliable and motivated student whose responsibilities include brand development on campus, market analysis and having a great time.

Our expectations from you are the following:

- You're going into your second year or higher at this school.
- You have a good knowledge of when/where things are happening.
- You're interested in marketing and have good communication skills.
- You have an entrepreneurial spirit and are outgoing.

Does this sound like you?
If so, go to:
www.redbullu.com

NYC TRIP

April 18th 1 Day

Details: Leave @ 6:15 a.m.
Home @ 10:30 p.m.

Pick up and Drop-Off at Haigis Mall

- Statue of Liberty, 5th Ave
- Times Square, Broadway
- World Trade Center Memorial
- Metropolitan Museum of Art, MOMA
- Shopping in the Village
- Rockefeller Center
- http://www.brozam.com for info!

$34 per ticket!

Sponsored by Brozam, a student run business

www.brozam.com
or
(413) 695 - 6929

Vocoder prevalent on 'Ga Ga'

SOLVENT from page 5

Legowelt also adds his own vocals, but rather than emphasize the dejected feeling that the radio has "changed" Legowelt gets mad. He calls the radio "crap" and proceeds to waft through a stomping Neu! Beat and a keyboard line ripped from DAF's classic "Der Mussolini." It's fun enough to break the thematic harmony for a few minutes and goofy enough to not scare listeners out of their analogue paradise.

Solvent and friends have created another hallmark statement of intent. These unapologetically nostalgic synthpoppers rival LL Cool J and Queen in their passion for the power of radio. If only it could find its way onto the radio — and it certainly deserves to — it would surely negate its own lament. In the age of Clear Channel though, I wouldn't hold my breath.

The 'Blue' LP just reissued

WEEZER from page 5

If that is the biggest problem with the disc, then it's still not that bad. And it is its biggest problem. Aside from the occasional inconvenience of the same song repeating, the set is flawless and should leave no Weezer fan complaining. The disc, which runs over three hours long, is something fans will be watching over and over and over.

But is there anything more on the way?

"[Doing a straight documentary] would be quite a challenge," Koch said. "[As for future deluxe edition,] I don't know what Universal's criteria are ... I really think it's what they think is worthy of a second look ...

"I certainly think 'Pinkerton' deserves that ...

"With 'The Blue Album,' there's so many different demos and tracks that could or could not go in there, it's not really like there's a wrong answer. But "Pinkerton" would be very delicate. But I would support [a properly done special edition]. I think the album deserves it."

As for the more immediate future, the band is recording their fifth album with producer Rick Rubin. The release is estimated for later this year, or early 2005.

Koch does note a summer excursion is still an open possibility, though no plans have been considered. Until then, Weezer fans have a solid reissue to honor one of their best albums and a superlative DVD necessary to add to any fan's collection.

Sponsored by The River 93.9, Florence Savings Bank, Health New England and Hampshire Hospitality Group

MULINO'S TRATTORIA
Brasserie 40-A
ACCEPTING GRADUATION RESERVATIONS NOW!

FEED YOUR HEAD.

BRING YOUR I.D. & DINE FROM OUR SPECIAL STUDENT MENU EVERY TUESDAY & WEDNESDAY

MUSIC 7 NIGHTS A WEEK IN THE LOUNGE

41 STRONG AVENUE, NORTHAMPTON
BRASSERIE 40-A RESERVATIONS 413.585.9200
MULINO'S TRATTORIA RESERVATIONS 413.586.8900
FOR MENUS & INFORMATION VISIT WWW.MULINOS.COM

NEW ON TUESDAY!
BROTHER BEAR
HOUSE OF SAND & FOG
SOMETHING'S GOTTA GIVE
TEXAS CHAINSAW MASSACRE

Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Brueggers
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors

Beer:	Wine:	Liquor:
Samuel Adams 2/12 pk btl...$20.99*	Foxhorn Chardonnay or Merlot 6 bot./750ml...$15.00	Belvedere Vodka 750 ml...$23.99
Bud & Bud Light 24 pk cans...$15.99*	Canyon Road Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1.5 lt...$10.99	Wyborowa Vodka 1.75 lt...$20.99
Busch & Busch Light 30 pk cans...$13.99*	Talus Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot, P. Grigio 1.5 lt...$10.99	Bombay Sapphire Gin 750 ml...$19.99
Keystone 30 pk cans...$13.49*	Corbett Canyon Chardonnay, White Zin, P. Grigio 3.0 lt box...$7.99	Jagermeister 1 lt...$19.99
Millwaukee's Best 30 pk cans...$10.99*	Wyndham Estates Merlot, Cabernet, Shraz 750 ml...$7.99	Sauza Tequila 1 lt...$16.99
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl...$10.99*	Jacobs Creek Chardonnay, Cabernet, Shiraz, Merlot 750 ml... $6.99	Goldschlager 750 ml...$15.99
Heineken 12 pk btl...$10.99*	Vendange Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 750ml...$6.99	Jim Bean Bourbon 750 ml...$10.99
Long Trail 12 pk btl...$9.99*		Cruzan Flavored Rums 750 ml...$10.99
Saranac 12 pk btl...$8.99*

*all beer prices plus deposit

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 4/1 THROUGH 4/7
Now Open Sundays Noon to 11pm

Syracuse looks to reload

Boeheim proud of defending champs

By JOHN KEKIS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — The Syracuse Orangemen aren't the defending national champions anymore. Nevertheless, they still impressed their coach by fighting through a difficult season.

"This team accomplished just as much if not more than last year's team, given what we had," Jim Boeheim said following the Orangemen's 23rd NCAA tournament appearance in his 28 years as head coach. "I am just as proud of this year's team, if not even prouder."

For good reason. Not only did the Orangemen lose Carmelo Anthony to the NBA after his stellar freshman year and Kueth Duany to graduation.

They also lost sophomore point guard Billy Edelin, a key member of last year's title team.

Edelin sat out all but one of the last 11 games of the season for "personal reasons" and did not play in the postseason at all.

Syracuse still finished the season with five straight wins, upsetting Pittsburgh on the road and Connecticut in the Carrier Dome in an eight-day span.

The Orangemen also made the round of 16 in the NCAA tournament before losing to the University of Alabama to finish at 23-8.

That's pretty heady stuff for a team that seemed destined to not even earn the chance to defend its title after losing five of six games at midseason and struggled.

And the future looks bright, with the roster still sprinkled with six players who were on the championship roster last April.

The only senior scholarship player the Orangemen lose is backup center Jeremy McNeil. Meanwhile, two top-notch prospects with the same last name.

Six-foot-2 point guard Josh Wright from Utica-Proctor High School and 6-7 forward Dayshawn Wright of Syracuse, who played for undefeated Oak Hill Academy in Virginia this season — will enter school in the fall.

Most promising, however, will be the return of the team's top two scorers. Forward Hakim Warrick (19.8 points and 8.6 rebounds per game) will be a senior and said prior to the season finale against Connecticut he was not contemplating jumping to the NBA.

Guard Gerry McNamara (17.2 ppg) will have the whole summer to mend.

McNamara, who will be a junior, suffered a hobbling injury to his left groin in a loss at Seton Hall in January and admitted before the NCAA tournament he had been playing in pain since.

Despite the injury, McNamara, who shot 38.9 percent from long range and hit 105 3-pointers, was a force in the NCAA tournament, scoring 43 against BYU in the first round and 24 in the loss to Alabama in the season's final game.

Warrick and McNamara proved an inside-outside threat hard to defend in the tournament, combining for 147 of the Orangemen's 223 points in the three tournament games.

Also returning are 6-6 swingman Josh Pace and 7-foot center Craig Forth (both will be seniors) and four freshmen who received quality playing time this season:

6-5 guard Louis McCroskey, who missed all of preseason practice and the first three games because of academic problems, played 395 minutes and averaged 3.9 ppg in 28 games;

6-8 forward Demetrin Nichols played 441 minutes in 26 games and averaged 4.5 points;

6-9 forward Terrence Roberts played 236 minutes and averaged 2.1 points in 26 games;

6-11 center Darryl Watkins played 85 minutes and had 15 blocks in 12 games.

As for Edelin, who averaged 13.8 points and 4.2 rebounds in 17 games, he remains enrolled in school.

Boeheim's main concern next season again promises to be finding an outside threat to complement McNamara and help ease the double teams that constantly hounded Warrick this season.

Boeheim had hoped Nichols and McCroskey would help fill the void, and although each hit several key shots they'll have to improve a lot.

Of the 121 shots Nichols attempted, 72 were from long range and he made only 17, or 23.6 percent. McCroskey fared even worse, hitting 13-of-57 3-pointers, or 22.8 percent.

The Orangemen also hit only 64.3 percent of their free throws and 32.8 percent of their 3-pointers, but they did shoot a solid 46.4 percent from the field.

If anything, they have some extra motivation because the season ended prematurely.

"We got to the sweet 16, but I don't think that was enough," Pace said. "This is something we are going to have to deal with."

"We are not satisfied because we wanted to go to the Final Four," Nichols added.

"Overall, we did some good things as a team, but we are not satisfied."

Yankees rebound to pound Devil Rays

By RONALD BLUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Hideki Matsui and the New York Yankees came through for their fans.

Matsui rocked the Tokyo Dome with a two-run homer, Jorge Posada hit three-run shots from both sides of the plate and the Yankees calmed their jittery supporters back home by routing the Tampa Bay Devil Rays 12-1 Wednesday night.

Yankees	12
Devil Rays	1

"It was truly a happy moment for myself," Matsui said, allowing himself a rare moment of public emotion.

A day after Tampa Bay turned baseball upside down by winning the season opener 8-3, the Yankees restored the old order — appropriate for a country tied to tradition — in another game that started just after 5 a.m. in New York.

Kevin Brown recorded his 198th career victory in his first start for the Yankees, allowing six hits over seven innings, and Tom Gordon and Mariano Rivera finished with hitless relief.

Tony Clark, playing first base because of Jason Giambi's ailing knee, hit a tiebreaking two-run homer for the Yankees, who made sure they didn't return from Japan in last place.

Owner George Steinbrenner took the first loss calmly, saying, "It's not where you start, it's where you finish," but an 0-2 trip might have led to a different tune.

"It wouldn't be fun. In fact, I made a comment when we were down 1-0 in the first," Yankees manager Joe Torre said. "I felt a little tenseness in there. I said, 'Guys, what's the worst thing that can happen? We lose 162 games, big deal. We can still eat, and you're still going to get paid.'"

Alex Rodriguez came a few feet short of a grand slam but had another quiet night, going 0-for-5 and dropping to 1-for-9 with no RBIs. Derek Jeter finally got his first hit, an RBI single, after going hitless in his first seven at-bats.

"I was in there saying, 'I'm the last one without a hit,'" Jeter remembered.

Tampa Bay, coming off six straight last-place finishes, was pretty much overlooked during its five days in Japan. Devil Rays manager Lou Piniella understood that.

"We came to play a team that was very popular here," he said. "If we can play .500 against New York all year, I'll be very, very pleased."

The night — if not the whole week — belonged to Matsui, Japan's biggest sports star.

After starring for 10 years with the Yomiuri Giants, he signed with the Yankees before the 2003 season. In his first game back, he homered against his old team in Sunday's exhibition game.

That didn't count. This one did.

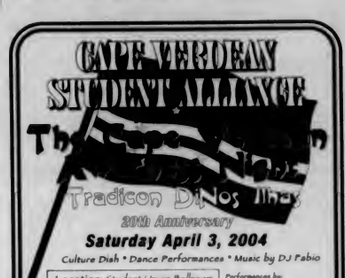
He repeatedly was greeted by flashbulb-popping fans thrilled to see him in the flesh, and he rewarded them with two big hits. After Aubrey Huff's RBI single in the first put the Devil Rays ahead, Matsui tied it in the fourth with a run-scoring single off loser Jeremi Gonzalez.

Clark's homer in the fourth put New York ahead 3-1. In the fifth, Matsui teed off on a belt-high pitch, sending it deep into the seats in right-center.

NFL votes to clamp down on touchdown celebrations

CELEBRATIONS from page 10

mittee to look at all aspects of revenue sharing.



No one questions the concept of apportioning income, particularly from the eight-year, $17.6 billion television contract.

But owners such as Dallas' Jerry Jones and Washington's Dan Snyder want wider marketing rights for their teams' products. Owners in smaller markets, including Buffalo's Ralph Wilson, Indianapolis' Jim Irsay and Pittsburgh's Dan Rooney, are concerned about what they consider an increasing disparity in cash flow between teams.

Tagliabue, 63, indicated there will be no problem in negotiating an extension of his contract, which expires May 2005. The owners voted unanimously Monday to give him as many as three more years beyond that date.

The owners heard more on the proposal to build a new stadium for the New York Jets on the West Side of Manhattan. Tagliabue said there would be further discussion but emphasized no commitment was made by the league for a future Super Bowl there.

CAPE VERDEAN STUDENT ALLIANCE

Saturday April 3, 2004
Culture Dish * Dance Performances * Music by DJ Fabio

Location: Student Union Ballroom
Time: 7 pm -2 am
Price: Student w/ ID - $6
General - $10
Dress Code: Semiformal
(NO jeans, sneakers, boots, or hats)

Performances by:
Tchesco, The Nomads, and Djedje
After Party at The X

CAPE VERDEAN STUDENT ALLIANCE
also Presents
Awareness Conference
Community Empowerment
Education, Domestic and International Politics, Clash of Cultures, Investment for the Future Workshops and Panel Discussions
Saturday, April 3, 2004
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Campus Center
11:00 am - 6 pm
Register Online Today: http://www.umass.edu/rso/capeverd
Sponsors: UMass Alumni Association, SAA, EOP, Enrollment Services, Arts Council, SGA, Office of Alana Affairs, Undergraduate Admissions Office, and BSAC www.umass.edu/rso/capeverd

GOLD'S GYM.
NOW OPEN!
Bring in this coupon and receive:
$100 OFF OR FREE TRIAL
COMPETITION, PLEASE!
THERE'S A REASON WHY WE'RE #1
BEST EQUIPMENT, BEST RESULTS
COME CHECK US OUT!
GOLD'S GYM.
10 UNIVERSITY DR.
(413) 549-6565

SMITH COLLEGE REC COUNCIL PRESENTS...
n.e.r.d.

TUESDAY, APRIL 20TH // 8PM
JOHN M. GREENE HALL, SMITH COLLEGE
$17 W/ 5 COLLEGE ID
$20 GENERAL PUBLIC
TICKETS ON SALE NOW
TICKETS AVAILABLE AT TIX UNLIMITED, FOR THE RECORD IN AMHERST, NORTHAMPTON BOX OFFICE, TICKETMASTER LOCATIONS AND TICKETMASTER ONLINE

Need help with your Resume?

Come to a Workshop
Today!
3 pm - 104 Career Services

Can't come today?
Call a Career Counselor to make an appointment for help

Tommie Joyner Jr. • 577-0417

Ginger Goldsbury • 545-6011

CareerServices
For more information, go to www.umass.edu/careers or call us at 545-2224

Clarett case to be reviewed

NEW YORK — A federal appeals court will hear the dispute over whether Maurice Clarett can enter the NFL draft less than a week before it takes place.

The NFL tried to convince a three-judge panel of the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals that it should block Clarett's entry by staying the effect of a lower court judge's ruling he be allowed in the April 24-25 draft, even though the former Ohio State running back is only two years out of high school.

The appeals panel instead agreed to set oral arguments for April 19 and suggested it might immediately rule whether Clarett can enter the draft, with a written ruling to follow explaining its reasoning

PALM BEACH, Fla. — The NFL once again compromised on instant replay, deciding to continue it for five more years rather than putting it in permanently.

The owners did decide, however, to add an extra challenge for teams who have successfully used two challenges. Since replay was reinstituted in 1999, teams were limited to just two challenges, except for the last two minutes of each half, when a replay official could order a review.

The vote on replay was 29-3, with Kansas City, Indianapolis and Cincinnati voting against, but Arizona voting for it for the first time in the two decades it has been considered.

WASHINGTON — Receiver James Thrash returned to the Washington Redskins in a trade that sent a 2005 fifth-round draft pick to the Philadelphia Eagles.

Thrash began his NFL career with four seasons in Washington before signing a five-year deal with the Eagles as a free agent in 2001. He joins a crowded Redskins receiving corps and could be the No. 3 wideout behind Laveranues Coles and Rod Gardner.

WAILEA, Hawaii — Bills cornerback Troy Vincent was elected president of the NFL Players Association.

Vincent, who left the Eagles as a free agent this year and signed with Buffalo, replaces Trace Armstrong, the union president for the last eight years. Armstrong, who is considering retirement, did not run for re-election.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

BROOMFIELD, Colo. — The head of a rape crisis center said that two more women have come forward in the past three months to say they were sexually assaulted by University of Colorado football players.

Janine D'Anniballe made the new allegations during a public meeting of the panel investigating football recruiting practices at the university. Members of the panel said their investigation has confirmed underage recruits had access to alcohol and one said there was a "strong indication" university officials knew what was going on.

D'Anniballe, executive director of Moving to End Sexual Assault in Boulder, said confidentiality rules barred her from disclosing details of the latest assault claims, including whether the players are still on the team.

BASKETBALL

PHILADELPHIA — Allen Iverson is out for the rest of the regular season.

The Philadelphia 76ers announced their All-Star guard will miss the final eight games because of persistent pain in his right knee, the same injury that kept him out of 13 of the last 19 games.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

OMAHA, Neb. — Laura Spanheimer scored 20 points to lead Creighton to a 73-52 victory over UNLV in the WNIT championship game.

Christy Nenemann the tournament MVP, added 17 points and nine rebounds, and Dayna Finch had 16 points for Creighton (24-9), which won the title after losing to Auburn in the semifinals last year.

-Associated Press

Final Four features marquee programs

By Jaime Aron
Associated Press

Based on pedigree, this should be a great Final Four.

The teams left chasing the NCAA championship include the preseason No. 1, the winner of the top preseason tournament, a perennial power that spent a month at No. 1, and a top conference's regular season and tournament champs.

Further proof that there are no sleepers: The lowest seed left, No. 3 Georgia Tech, already has beaten Duke and Connecticut, the teams the Yellow Jackets could play in the finale if they get past Oklahoma State on Saturday night.

"Whoever wins the championship, I think, will really be the true national champ this year," UConn coach Jim Calhoun said Wednesday. "I think most years they are, but this year I can clearly say you have to win two great basketball games."

Seeing the cream rise to the top doesn't always make for a memorable NCAA tournament. Fans love stories of underdogs' pulling off upset after upset to reach the final weekend, or one star player carrying his school to a string of victories.

Yet there's something to be said about the way it's worked out this season. Especially when players who could dominate in college are instead going to the NBA straight from high school or after one year of school.

These clubs still have their marquee players, but the common denominator is that they earned their way to San Antonio by becoming well-rounded teams capable of rising to challenges.

"The continuity of college basketball is not what it used to be," said Georgia Tech coach Paul Hewitt, the only Final Four newcomer among this year's coaches. "You no longer have to have guys play together for one or two seasons. Now maybe half a season, three-quarters of a season might be enough to have them become a cohesive unit and then get hot at the right time walking into the tournament."

The Yellow Jackets and Cowboys, who meet in the early game Saturday, were long shots six months ago because of uncertainties.

Georgia Tech was trying to overcome the loss of freshman sensation Chris Bosh, now with the Toronto Raptors. Even with him, the Jackets missed the tournament last year. Then practices began, and Hewitt quickly believed his team could be among the nation's best.

He even told them so. They responded by winning the preseason NIT, going 27-9 and tying for third in the ACC. They've kept winning in the tournament even with leading scorer B.J. Elder hobbled by a sprained ankle.

"Because we play so many guys, it's a different (star) every night," Hewitt said. "People may get lulled into thinking that they're not very good, that the sum is greater than the individual parts. But the individual parts of this team are very, very good."

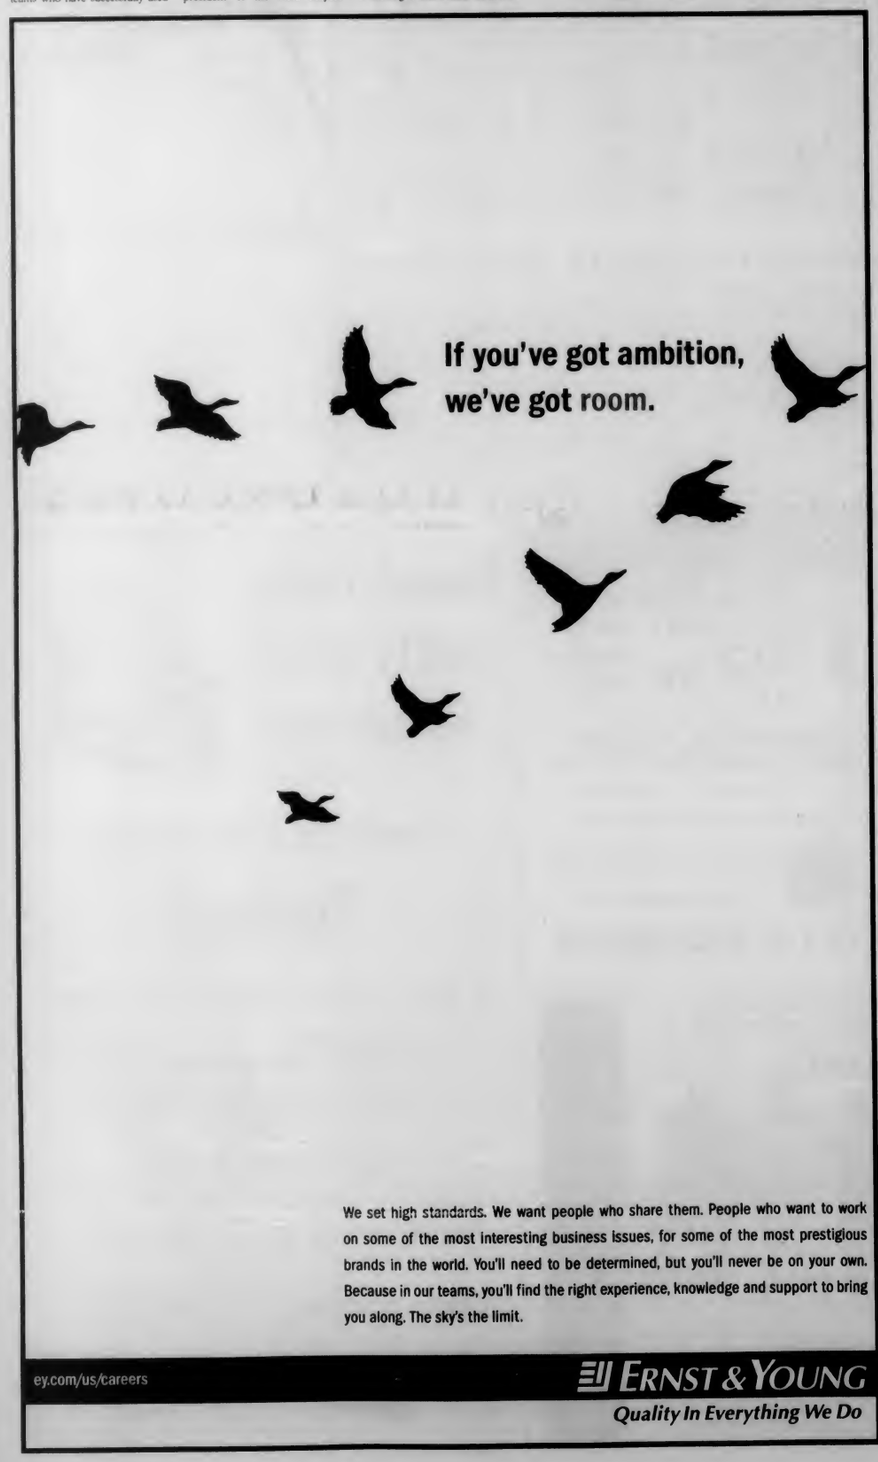
The Cowboys came into the season trying to blend five transfers with three holdovers. They got their growing pains out of the way early, and then breezed through the Big 12. They entered the NCAA tournament having won 17 of 18 games, with the only loss by one point in double overtime on the road against Missouri.

The other national semifinal features teams whose fans probably marked this weekend in ink on their calendars back in October.

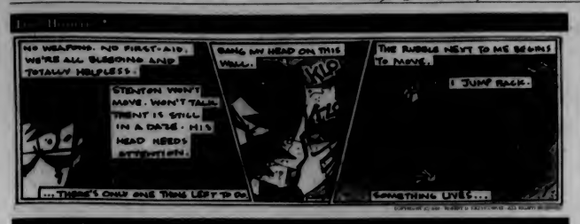
Connecticut started the season ranked No. 1, lost its fourth game — to Georgia Tech — and dropped five more, mostly after star center Emeka Okafor was injured. The Huskies' talent and depth carried them through rocky times, and Ben Gordon has taken over the scoring load in the tournament. They've won each of their tournament games by at least 16 points.

Now UConn gets Duke, the team it beat in the 1999 championship game. Although Blue Devils coach Mike Krzyzewski showed his team tape of victories that sent previous teams to the Final Four, he dismissed that title game as having "little relevance in our game Saturday."

"No relevance, to be quite frank with you," he said, "because ... none of these kids played in that game."



Perhaps more relevant is this: Duke senior Chris Duhon is the only player at this Final Four who has been there before. He was a freshman when the Blue Devils won it all in 2001.

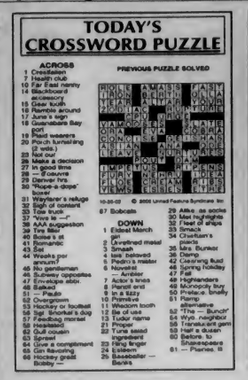


With Stillwater, Okla., about 500 miles from the Alamodome, Oklahoma State is the geographic favorite. The Cowboys also could become the sentimental pick.

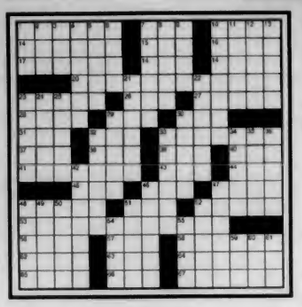
Their story lines include John Lucas' arrival from Baylor after that program was rocked by tragedy and scandal, plus coach Eddie Sutton's attempt to shed the label of owning the most wins without a national title.

There also are the memories of 10 people who died in a plane crash while returning from a game three years ago. Starter Ivan McFarlin and reserve Terrence Crawford were on the Cowboys' roster that season.

"There's not a day goes by that I don't think about one of those 10 people," Sutton said. "I'm not sure there's ever complete closure. I think it's always going to be in your heart and in your mind."



Quote for the Day



"April 1. This is the day upon which we are reminded of what we are on the other three hundred and sixty-four."

-Mark Twain, "Pudd'nhead Wilson," 1894

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Oriental Beef & Vegetables
- Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
- Spicy Black Bean Burger (vegan)

DINNER
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells (vegetarian)
- Rain Forest Black Bean Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 49
- Low: 53

FRIDAY
- High: 46
- Low: 36

SATURDAY
- High: 50
- Low: 36

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Emilie Duggan
COPY EDITOR
Erika Lovely/ Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Scott Pihl/ Cory Rosenberg/ Samantha Nielsen/ Meghan Healy

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Just leave your anger at the door.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Be paranoid. People have been trying to trick you all day.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Lock your door today.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Everything is better when it's on wheels.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Regrettable, but you are not worth the effort.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Where did your morals go?

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Why are you wasting your time reading this?

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't fall for the old: "Hey your shoe's untied."

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your jokes aren't funny. Just stop.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Yuck, never use the word "leakage."

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Get a smoothie from the Blue Wall.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Forget all you ever learned. Take this as an opportunity to start over.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

$450 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus
Fraternities-Sororities-Student Groups: 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $450 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

Mill Valley Estates now Renting 2 bedrm $1050/1100, 3 bedrm $1350/1400 No last months rent, free heat, hot water, 2 full baths, AC On busline Mon-Fri 10-5pm 253-7377

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood flrs, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Apartment for Rent

4 Bedrooms, Main Street. Available 6/1 256-8138

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms, hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Auto for Sale

$500!!! Police Impounds, Cars from $500 Hondas, Chevy's, Jeeps, etc., for listings, 1-800-319-3323 Ext. 4554

Employment

ATTENTION LAX PLAYERS Play & Coach – Have fun – Make $$$ Top Boys Sports Camp in Maine looking for staff to instruct & coach LAX Awesome Summer! Work with kids! Top salaries, FREE rm/bd/trvl allow. Apply online ASAP: www.campcobbossee.com

Mowing: Local mowing company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413) 584-4746

Drivers and Kitchen help wanted Apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst

Employment

INTERNSHIPS: Last chance to apply! Get hands-on legal experience with a legal assistant internship this fall. Work directly with attorneys and clients and earn 9-15 credits. No experience required. Training provided. Contact the Student Legal Services Office for an application, due 4/2. 922 Campus Center, 545-1495.

Summer Internships!
Enterprise-Rent-A-Car is the #1 rental car company in North America. Due to our fantastic growth, we have opportunities available this summer in our Management Internship Program for the greater Boston area, including Worcester and Cape Cod. Our ideal candidate will be a rising junior or senior at a 4-year college, and have a professional image. Through hands-on training, our interns learn every aspect of our fast-paced business, and experience the autonomy and challenges similar to that of an entrepreneur. We offer competitive pay and a fun and friendly work environment. For more information and to apply online, please visit our website at www.enterprise.com/careers or call us at (508) 427-1003. Enterprise is an equal opportunity employer.

Local Business is hiring marketers Part Time $10-15/hr Call Alison @413-627-9043

Employment

Camp Counselors and Special Needs Camp Counselors-Town of Amherst Day Camps The Town of Amherst seeks Camp Counselors for its day camps operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Part camp counseling experience, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in elementary education highly desirable. Also seeking camp counselors to work one-on-one with special needs campers, esp. working with special needs population preferred. Must be 18 yrs. Old. $ ringe for both positions: $8.19 – 9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week, June 21 to Aug. 20 Applications available from Town Hall, Human Resource Dept., Boltwood Walk, Amherst. (413) 256-4065 Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Employer

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.huuepromotions.com

"Bartending" $250/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Employment

Life Guards and Swim Instructors-The Town of Amherst seeks qualified lifeguards and swim instructors. Lifeguards must hold current certifications including: Life Guard Training First Aid, and CPR. $8.16-9.48 hr; 35-40 hrs per week. Applications available from Amherst Leisure Services, Bangs Community Center, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Equal Employment Opportunity / Affirmative Action Employer

Bartender Trainees Needed $250 a day potential. Local positions 1-800-293-3985 Ext516

For Rent

Moving off campus? Meet-area rental agents at apartment complex fair. Thurs April 1 10-3 on the CC Concourse. Sponsored by Commuter Services www.oohrc.org

House for Rent

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

Instruction

University Bartending Classes start soon!!! Call for information 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com

Miscellaneous

Jack Schit for President! If you are a college student truly concerned about the future check out what Jack has to say right away www.jackschitforpresident.com

Room for Rent

Large, Quiet, Comfortable, Furnished, Reasonable For male Grad/Professor 15 min. walk to UMass. Avail June 1 – Sept. 1 Fall option 413-549-1578

Services

Philosophical Counseling, Amherst. PhilosophyDialogue.net

We do laptop and desktop computer repair starting at $39.00. 413-584-8857.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Summer Sublet

Looking for 1 bedroom apt. for summer, around $600 per month bkeyk@student.umass.edu

Summer Sublet

2 bedrooms, fully furnished apartment. 1 full bath
Available June 1st - September 1st. Call Rachel Seyman @ 781-264-1512

1 bedroom Brandywine apartment starting June 1 or sooner $755/month negotiable—includes HT/WT. 549-9489

Travel

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included
Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe $169 one way. Book on-line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

Spring Break 2004 Travel with STS, America #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1 800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com For more information contact STA Travel at 413-256-1261

887-4 CANCUN Best price, UMASS VENDOR selling spring break packages. Do not get scammed. Cancun, Negril Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida $55 campus reps earn $$$ Flipmania.com 877-4-cancun

Wanted

Student photographer needs models. Free headshots 413-486-2555 or JonathanNesterak@hotmail.com

CHINESE/ASIAN EGG DONOR NEEDED. We are a loving, committed couple seeking a woman age 21-30. Reasonable compensation and expenses paid. Please contact our attorney, Robert Nichols, at (781) 769-6900 or rnichols@rlnlaw.net

Young leaders wanted! Come for marketing, teaching, or public speaking, flexible hours, full training contact (866)598-6674

Video footage of any UMass riot, will pay money for footage. Call 413-687-3902

EGG DONORS NEEDED. Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.adoptmybaby.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Nomar bound for DL

Shortstop expected to miss three weeks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP) — Red Sox shortstop Nomar Garciaparra will start the season on the disabled list with an injured right Achilles' tendon and is expected to be out at least three weeks.

The All-Star slugger said Wednesday that doctors told him to rest. Pokey Reese will be at shortstop when Boston opens the regular season Sunday in Baltimore, and Mark Bellhorn will fill in for Reese at second base.

"I don't like missing more time than I anticipated, but the good thing is we know we have a structured program to be able to talk to all the doctors and get everyone on the same page," Garciaparra said after the team placed him on the disabled list.

"My body will tell me when I'm ready. Once that happens it shouldn't take me long to get back in the lineup," he said.

Garciaparra was examined Wednesday in Florida by Mark Slovenkai, an ankle and foot specialist from New England Baptist Hospital.

No structural damage was found in the tendon, but the injury was diagnosed as a bruise in the cartilage that covers the tendon. The only treatment is rest.

Garciaparra was injured March 5 when he was hit by a ball during batting practice. He has been limited to just eight at-bats in spring training.

He is the second Red Sox starter to go down this spring. Right fielder Trot Nixon is expected to be out until early May with a lower back problem.

General manager Theo Epstein doesn't plan to trade for temporary replacements.

"It's never a good time to have guys hurt," Epstein said. "We're going to have to wait until they're 100 percent, but we're going to be OK."

With Garciaparra out, David Ortiz will bat cleanup in Boston's lineup.

"I'm disappointed for us and for him," manager Terry Francona said. "The hope is that we have a good team surrounding him and we don't let it affect our wins and losses. But he's a very good player right in the middle of our lineup. So to say that we wouldn't miss him, we would be lying."

Garciaparra hit .301 last season, with 28 home runs and 105 RBIs.

The two-time American League batting champion was the subject of trade rumors during the offseason, when the Red Sox tried to acquire AL MVP Alex Rodriguez from Texas and considered sending Garciaparra to the Chicago White Sox to make room in their infield. But trade talks with Texas broke down, and Rodriguez went to Boston's biggest rival, the New York Yankees.

Garciaparra said he will fly to Boston on Thursday.

Nixon and righthanders Byung-Hyun Kim and Reynaldo Garcia have been placed on the 15-day disabled list retroactive to March 26. Nixon began a rehabilitation program at the University of Miami Spring Institute on Monday.

Kim, who is recovering from a right shoulder strain, has been sidelined since last pitching in a game on March 10. Garcia had bone

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nomar Garciaparra will begin the 2004 season on the DL.

Burks, Ortiz drive in runs as Sox tie Bucs

By Alan Robinson
Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla. — For at least one day, the Boston Red Sox had plenty of offense without Nomar Garciaparra. Just not enough to win.

David Ortiz, the Red Sox's cleanup hitter until Garciaparra mends from a right Achilles' tendon injury, hit a wind-blown two-run single ahead of Ellis Burks' two-run homer Wednesday in an 8-8 tie with Pittsburgh called by mutual consent.

Red Sox	8
Pirates	8

With both teams nearly down to their opening day rosters and not carrying the extra pitchers they did earlier this spring, they chose not to play extra innings.

"You can tell everybody is getting anxious to get this over with," Red Sox manager Terry Francona said. "I'm sure when we get to Atlanta (Friday for two exhibition games), our feet will feel a little lighter."

The Red Sox learned earlier in the day that Garciaparra will be out at least three weeks — a period in which they play the AL East rival Yankees seven times. Until now, Garciaparra had not been expected to be sidelined so long.

"He's a very good player in the middle of our lineup, so to say we're not going to miss him, we'd be lying," Francona said.

The small-budget Pirates don't have a lineup resembling Boston's, but rookie Jose Castillo and Bobby Hill are staging a down-to-the-final cutdown race to become their starting second baseman.

Castillo homered for the second straight day — he hit a game-winning shot in the ninth Tuesday against the Phillies — and Hill matched him with a solo drive among his two hits.

Castillo, an excellent fielder who has never played above Double-A, is hitting .290 with three homers. Hill has a .354 average, the highest among the Pirates' remaining position players, yet could start the season on the bench or in Triple-A if Castillo wins the job.

"I love what these guys are doing," manager Lloyd McClendon said. "I've always said competition should make you better."

Pirates right-hander Kip Wells turned up for his opening day start Monday against the Phillies, allowing five hits and five runs over five innings. His pitching line would have been better if shortstop Abraham Nunez hadn't let Ortiz's popup fall for a two-run single in the fifth, leading to Burks' homer in the four-run inning.

"I'm not making any excuses, but I never saw it," Nunez said. Wells had a 9.00 ERA in his five starts, which would be more alarming to the Pirates except that he is traditionally a slow starter.

"I feel good about where I am, but at times I continue to fight myself and opposing hitters," he said.

Red Sox starter Bronson Arroyo gave up two runs and five hits over four innings.

Notes: Curt Schilling starts the Red Sox's final spring game in Florida on Thursday against the Twins. ... The Red Sox drew a spring-record 118,548 for their 16 games in Fort Myers.

Former Rockets star Murphy declares his innocence in child molestation case

By Pam Easton
Associated Press

HOUSTON (AP) — Tears streaming down his face after appearing in a courtroom Wednesday, former Houston Rockets star Calvin Murphy declared he is innocent of charges he molested five of his daughters.

"I am not guilty of these charges," Murphy said, at times blotting tears with a white hand towel. "I can't emphasize that enough."

The initial court appearance was to make sure Murphy understood the charges against him and he wasn't required to enter a formal plea.

Murphy, 55, was a guard for the Rockets from 1970 to 1983 and was inducted into the Basketball Hall of Fame in 1993. He has taken a leave of absence from his analyst duties on Rockets telecasts while he fights three charges of indecency with a child and three charges of aggravated sexual assault of a child.

"Obviously, I am missing being the flamboyant commentator that I was before all this happened, but that is not important right now," he said. "What is important right now is what I am doing ... to defend myself, try to get myself exonerated and put my family back together."

Murphy has 10 daughters and four sons with nine women, Harris County prosecutor Lance Long said.

"You have got to remember this involves my family — the family that I so dearly love — and to be put in a situation like this, and to have a lot of time to think about what has occurred is a travesty for my family," Murphy said.

The five daughters, now adults, claim the abuse occurred from 1988-91, according to an affidavit filed by the Texas Rangers. Murphy contends the claims by his daughters stem from family discord related to a battle over money.

"My heart aches — of course for me because I am in the spotlight — but it really aches for my daughters, because there are reasons behind this kind of thing that will be brought out later," he said.

Long said at least one daughter said she was as young as 6 when Murphy took her to a hotel room and performed oral sex on her. On another occasion, Long said, Murphy fondled one of the girls after she had moved in with him following her stepfather's death.

Long said he plans to take the case to a grand jury to secure the formal indictment needed to send the case to trial, but wasn't sure how soon the case would be presented. Murphy's next court date is April 27.

"Any time someone is charged with sexual abuse of a child, it is disturbing," Long said. "I think because he is well-known, or if someone is not well-known, it shouldn't make a difference. Lots of things happen in people's lives that the public doesn't always know about."

Fort Bend County District Attorney John Healey said Wednesday his office has joined the investigation into Murphy, who lives in the county just southwest of Harris County.

Children's Protective Services spokeswoman Estella Olguin said her agency was called to Murphy's $350,000 home March 2 to investigate possible abuse and neglect of two children who live with him. The children have not been removed from the home, but the investigation is continuing, she said.

Murphy, an unlikely star from Niagara University because of his 5-foot-9 frame, averaged 17.9 points and shot 89.2 percent from the free throw line in his pro career.

He was a high school star at Norwalk, Conn., before moving on to Niagara, where he was a two-time consensus All-America and led the school to a 22-7 record and an NCAA tournament berth in 1970.

Niagara athletic director Mike Hermann said Wednesday that the school had been considering expanding Murphy's prominence in its marketing campaign next year, but has put those plans on hold.

Murphy was drafted in the second round in 1970 by the San Diego Rockets, who moved to Houston the following season. Murphy quickly became a fan favorite despite playing on several bad teams. His 17,949 points were a franchise high until Hakeem Olajuwon passed him.

Murphy, known as the "Pocket Rocket" because of his small stature, missed just nine free throws — and made 78 straight in one stretch — in 1980-81 for a record single-season percentage of .958.

His number hangs retired in the Toyota Center rafters.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Former NBA star and current Rockets television analyst Calvin Murphy wipes away tears at his initial court hearing yesterday. Murphy is accused of molesting five of his daughters between 1988-1991.

NFL will penalize for excessive celebrations

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press

PALM BEACH, Fla. — NFL owners adopted a 15-yard penalty for excessive celebrations Wednesday after being embarrassed by Joe Horn's hidden cell phone trick and Terrell Owens' end-zone autograph.

The penalty will be in addition to fines previously in place for choreographed and multiplayer celebrations.

The infractions are considered unsportsmanlike conduct penalties. The yardage will be marched off from the spot at the end of the previous play or, after a score, on the ensuing kickoff. If the infraction is flagrant, the player will be ejected.

"The players know they will be hurting their team," lets coach Herman Edwards said.

The vote was 31-1, with the Raiders the lone dissenter.

In December, Horn made an end-zone call after a teammate handed him a phone that had been stashed under the goal-post padding. The season before, Owens pulled a pen from his sock to sign the football after a touchdown catch.

The owners on Wednesday also: increased the size of practice squads from five to eight players; allowed head coaches or any player to call a timeout; extended the five-day period immediately after the season ends for interviewing assistant coaches to seven days, or the conclusion of the wild-card round. The policy also will now cover high-level front office positions; made a punt or missed field goal untouched by the receiving team a dead ball once it touches the end zone or touches a kicking team player in the end zone; modified free kick, fair catch and personal foul rules; allowed wide receivers to wear Nos. 10 through 19 even when numbers in the 80s are available.

Commissioner Paul Tagliabue also said it was possible the new NFL Network could carry games live in the next television package. The current $17.6 billion contract with ABC/ESPN, ABC and CBS expires after the 2005 season.

"I don't think it's likely, but anything in life is possible," he said. "The NFL Network is in the long term."

NFL Network is carried by satellite and by two of the major cable carriers.

On Tuesday, hours after league owners approved a five-year extension of instant replay, adding a third coaches' challenge if the first two are successful, the NFL succeeded in a federal appeals court in New York.

The court agreed to hear arguments days before the draft to overturn the ruling allowing Ohio State sophomore Maurice Clarett and other underclassman and high schoolers into the draft.

NFL chief counsel Jeff Pash thinks there's a strong chance the court will grant a stay of the lower court ruling before the April 24-25 draft. That means Clarett, Southern California sophomore Mike Williams and seven others would not be included in the draft.

"I think there is a very substantial chance he will not be in the draft," Pash said.

Should that happen and the NFL subsequently loses the appeal, a supplemental draft for those players would be held within 10 days of the court decision.

Alan Milstein, Clarett's agent, said that would harm his client. Milstein said Clarett would lose leverage to negotiate a contract, as well as practice time and time to learn his new team's playbook, if he were not drafted in April.

"They did not issue a stay," Milstein told The Associated Press. "They set forth an expedited briefing schedule. Nothing happened today that was unexpected. The court is just doing what it needs to do to work hard and get Maurice in the draft — and with plenty of time to do it."

Pash said the hearing will be April 19 or 20.

The vote on replay was 29-3, with Kansas City, Indianapolis and Cincinnati voting against. Arizona — for the first time, according to Tagliabue — voted for the five-year extension with the additional challenge.

Twenty-four votes were needed from the 32 teams to keep replay. Tagliabue said some teams were reluctant to put it in permanently in fear it would be too difficult to remove.

In a key financial move, owners renewed for 15 years the NFL Trust, which provides $4 million per team in licensing revenue for merchandise with team logos. But there was enough sentiment from teams such as the Cowboys, Redskins and Dolphins to investigate modifying it, and Tagliabue will appoint a nine-member com-

See CELEBRATIONS on page 7

J.Lo and G-Unit keep it poppin'
DRUGS & TRIPPING, PAGE [illegible]5

Steinbrenner looses his friggin' marbles
SPORTS, [illegible]8

The Daily RIOT!gram

APRIL FOOL'S DAY COVERING ALL DRUNKEN DEBACLES VOLUME [illegible] ISSUE 6

Romney's modest proposal

By Dyloris Clytoris
RIOT!-gram staff

In his 'Modest Proposal for the University of Massachusetts,' announced yesterday, Governor Mitt Romney dismisses all unionized maintenance and custodial workers. Romney's proposal would replace these workers with undergraduate students found guilty of destructive behavior on campus.

According to Erik A. Kriss, Romney's secretary of finance, the use of students as indentured servants will save the University $70 million a year.

"Unionized workers are a major drain on the Commonwealth's economy," Kriss said. "Blue-class workers, unionized workers, and the like abuse the vast system of social services available from the state. Maintenance workers at UMass are a perfect example: I mean, they obviously don't do any work, look how awful that campus looks!"

Romney said that he is certain his proposal will, "cure the cancer of riot-

See FREE LABOR on page FOOL2

Minuteman and Otto the Orange announce marriage plans

State legislature boos, Republicans hiss, Bush bombs

By Skirt Overpants
RIOT!-gram staff

The University of Massachusetts Minuteman has come out of the closet, announcing his plan to wed Syracuse University's Otto the Orange, and igniting uproar from Amherst to the nation's capitol.

The announcement has sparked intense dialogue on the University of Massachusetts campus, as well as caused threats to Sam the Minuteman's safety.

Last night, while the couple was out choreographing a unified mascot dance, an explosion ripped through Minuteman's house, completely demolishing it. Homeland Security's new task force, H-PROBE, admitted they were responsible for the bombings. It was announced at a White House press conference this morning that the Bush administration had substantial evidence that the building housed weapons of mass destruction and possibly even Bin Laden himself.

With the ongoing controversy over legalizing same-sex marriage in Massachusetts, the Minuteman decided it was imperative for him to speak out, despite the repercussions he faces. "I've kept it a secret for over thirty years, after I met Otto I knew it was a sign, I was no longer just experimenting," he said as he wiped the sweat from underneath his tri-corner hat.

The two met during last year's lacrosse game, when UMass defeated Syracuse for the first time in 22 years.

"He had always been a little jealous of me, especially after my men's basketball team won the championship last year," said Otto. "That day, I guess he was able to put it behind him, and make a move."

"His robust figure, the electric color of his skin, those shining blue eyes matching those delicate blue hands and feet, and that curvaceous orange body, I put everything behind me. I knew it was love," said the Minuteman.

"We're in love," said the Minuteman yesterday. "Sure we have our differences we love to compete. But when it gets down to it, we just want to get married and settle down together. Is that so wrong?"

"He came over, and we traded hats, just for fun," said Otto. "I'll let you in on a little secret ... he has a mullet! I was embarrassed for my baldness, but ever since then he's kept the mullet just to compensate for my Carrier Dome head lack of hair, he's such a sweetie."

Numerous organizations in the Five College system have since come out in

See MARRIAGE on page FOOL2

"UMass has a big, bouncy, energetic group of students for me to work with and guide."
-Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life

Gargano enjoys the company of several Southwest students Saturday night at Peking Garden.

Gargano hopes to pack in curvy chicks at Gala

By Boobylicious
RIOT!-gram staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts are being offered an alternative activity to attending the Hobart Hoedown this May.

Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life, along with Chancellor John V. Lombardi, announced yesterday that the UMass administration, along with several student groups, will host a party in the Blue Wall for students who wish to celebrate spring in a responsible, safe, faculty-supervised environment.

"I love springtime at UMass," said Gargano, who was recently spotted sharing his spring spirit by making out with Max, the canine UMPD officer. "This year, I decided, why not join the fun?"

Gargano's spring party, called the "Gargano Gala", will take place in the Blue Wall on the evening of the Hobart Hoedown. The event will include food, games, and a raffle, as well a live showing of the Hobart Hoedown televised by UVC-19.

Raffle prizes will include a free night in the Campus Center Hotel with a personal visit from the vice chancellor himself. The vice chancellor highly encourages students to enter the raffle, primarily blondes with B-cups or bigger.

"The younger the people are around me, the perkier I feel," said Gargano. "UMass has a big, bouncy, energetic group of students for me to work with and guide — hopefully onto my lap."

Contests will include a wet T-shirt contest, courtesy of the Amherst Fire Department, and a funneling contest organized by Lombardi.

"I've been practicing all year," said Lombardi. "I routinely take shots before faculty senate. I hate listening to those old craggy hags complain. All they talk about is some sort of alcohol abuse problem. I want to show the students that I'm not just some old man with outdated glasses and a receding hair line."

Representing the student body at the

See SPECIAL PARTY on page FOOL2

Controlling the SAC

Gargano rolls up his sleeves, chalks his hands, and prepares for the SAC

By Swiss Miss
RIOT!-gram staff

Michael Gargano wants everyone to know that everything will be OK. After all, he's got a firm grasp on the SAC.

Originally the Campus Activities Office, the Student Activities Center (SAC) opened this semester with a new name and theme.

"You've got to put students first, that's my motto," said Gargano, vice chancellor of

See HAIRY SAC on page FOOL2

ORIGINAL PHOTO BY [illegible] STAFF; CHANGES BY THE MINUTEMAN

THE KICKER

Southwest meathead, number 42, yells at riot police during last night's engaging game of Red Rover. The police team beat the meatheads after horses lost control and trampled the team's captain, D.C. Jumper.

Bush delays elections to fight terrorism

Patriot Act DCLXVI cracks down on anti-Americanism

By Geraldo Rivera
RIOT!-gram staff

In an emergency meeting last night, the U.S. Congress approved the U.S.A. Patriot Act DCLXVI in a frantic effort to combat global terrorism.

"The world is under an extreme terrorist threat, and it is imperative that the United States have stable leadership and the ability to combat the danger," press secretary Scott McClellan told reporters during a press conference yesterday morning.

The U.S.A. Patriot Act DCLXVI states that the presidential election be postponed until the terrorist threat is nullified, grants enforcement authorities increased surveillance over the public and allows the authorities to arrest and detain anti-war activists for aiding in anti-American propaganda.

George "the little wooden boy" Bush

Sun Child, a Massachusetts liberal activist who was arrested with 72 other protesters at yesterday's press conference, agreed with other critics that the act infringes on freedom of speech, presidential term limits and privacy rights.

"Can't you see what Bush is doing ... he's taking away people's rights ... he is trying to undermine the constitution, and take over the world, said Child.

CIA director George Tenet said that if this act were in place a month ago the United States would have prevented the subways bombings in Madrid.

"With the Patriot Act DCLXVI we have the ability to monitor communication of a potential terrorist for two weeks without a court issued warrant," Tenet said.

President Bush responded to allegations that this act was put in place to avoid a failing election campaign, by telling reporters he knows and listens to what Americans want.

"This campaign not only hears the voices of the entrepreneurs and the farmers and the entrepreneurs, we hear the voices of those struggling to get head," Bush said.

With the war in Iraq dragging out longer than expected and the economy lagging, American's are beginning to lose confidence in the president's agenda. Bush said the public cannot see his logic.

"They have miscalculated me as a leader," Bush said. "[Right now] ... more and more of our imports are coming from overseas."

Bush still stands by his decision to enact the U.S.A. Patriot Act DCLXVI and said that war is the best route to peace. He told the press that he understands the hypocritical personalities of dictators, and hopes for a better world.

"I am a person who recognizes the fallacy of humans ...," Bush said. "I know the human being and fish can coexist peacefully."

Gargano handles SAC well

HAIRY SAC from page FOOL1

Student Affairs and Campus Life. "Looky here! I even have these neato pins to give everyone! They say 'Students First' on them!"

Gargano said to make his relationship with the SAC a closer one, he will from here on be known as the Notoriously Undersized Toombah of the Student Activities Center, or NUTSAC, for short.

"I just feel it brings me closer to the students," Gargano said. I feel that having a SAC is the most important thing in my life, and that it should be in many others. I'd be lost without mine."

Students and office workers have concerns that with the new name, things with the SAC could get hairy.

"The new theme worries me," said Johnny Weismuller, a freshman male. "I love a good SAC just as much as any other boy, but once they get hairy, they're just not the same. We need to keep that office running like it was before the NUTSAC took over."

Gargano says the key to making the SAC a happy place will require him playing with it every so often.

"Listen, if you don't play with your SAC every so often, things will just get backed up," he said. "Every SAC is different. I believe ours needs some gentle nurturing and caressing, and that's what I'm going to do with it."

A growing faction of students on campus displayed their desire for a SAC of their own, saying Gargano spends too much time with his. At a rally last month, students said they'd prefer Gargano to spend some of his time on other campus groups, particularly the Campus Life Initiation Team and the Native Integration of Political Perseverance and Life Exchange System. Some went so far as to vandalize the Campus Center spelling out Gargano's new NUTSAC title to mean "Notoriously Undersized and Terrifying Supreme Asshole Commander" in grape juice on the outside of the building.

"Gargano needs to be fair!" said J.T McBiglickker, a MassPIRG activist. "He's been spending so much time playing with his SAC that he's lost track of the big picture. Everyone knows the CLIT and the NIPPLES need more attention!"

Gargano and his supporters, including SGA Senate Speaker Jared Nokes, SGA-presidential candidate Cornelius Nugent and Collegian Ballbuster Rene Gonzalez, say the accusations are ridiculous. The group coincidentally also makes up the musical group G-Unit.

G-Unit has received support from neighboring colleges, including Hampshire and Amherst. Smith and Mount Holyoke declined, with representatives from both schools saying that since they have no SACs on campus, they did not understand the issue.

Gargano will hold an informational session tomorrow in the Campus Center Auditorium at 10:15 a.m. He plans having his whole SAC and its one full-time member on display.

"The member is just as important as the SAC," Gargano said. "But primarily, I want students to see how hairy the SAC will get if we don't take care of it."

Mascots set to exchange vows

MARRIAGE from page FOOL1

support or opposition of the Minuteman. Female students at Smith College have changed their regular dress of large pants, men's shirts and mullets to the dress of the Minuteman: large pants, a man's shirt and a mullet with a tri-cornered hat.

Earlier yesterday evening on the Minuteman's walk home from cheerleading practice, members of the UMass Republican Club sang "Rugged Cross" while chasing after him, threatening to beat him with wooden crosses.

"We should have kept the Redman," yelled Olaf Aprans of the Republican club, referring to UMass' former mascot, which was abolished because of its racial connotations. "At least the Redman isn't a misrepresentation of an important figure in American history."

Luckily, Chancellor John V. Lombardi stumbled down the steps of the Old Chapel, threatening to hit the attackers with an Old English 40 in his hand, and scared them away.

"I support you, man, Minuteman," mumbled Lombardi as he placed his arm around Minuteman and sparked a blunt. "Ha, ha ... I do want a minuteman, naa na na naa."

But Lombardi's support for the Mascot stands alone amongst high-ranking officials.

"Marriage is between a man and a woman, he should marry a minutewoman, not some fruit," said Gov. Mitt Romney. "With all the financial support the state has been piling into the University, this is a disgrace to Massachusetts. It really shows that Sam's interests do not represent UMass students."

The Massachusetts Senate, after taking Monday's step towards banning same-sex marriage and legalizing civil unions, called an emergency meeting to discuss the announcement. The Senate concluded with a unanimous boo on the wedding.

Despite little support and ongoing threats, the couple has set a date and place for the wedding.

"Garber field of course, and we'd love to have the reception in the Blue Wall," said Otto. "Gin and juice for all."

The couple was still unsure of who will participate in the ceremony, but mentioned that Jared Nokes, speaker of the student senate, has offered to be the lead flower girl, with former Syracuse basketball star Carmelo Anthony as maid of honor.

Around this crazy campus

UMASS PARKING LOTS

'Let's paint each lot its own color!'

The University of Massachusetts was recently granted $6.2 million from the National Society for Last Chance Losers. The money came to UMass with one condition: It would be spent on much needed facility maintenance repairs across campus.

